Questions concerning the practice of 'Brahmacharya' to know the self, & the means required are dealt with here.
The term 'Yoga' is a derivative of the Samskruth verb 'Yuj' which refers to union. 'Yoga', also called 'Brahma vidyâ' is the eternal dissolution of the individual 'Aham' (Ego) into the Atman (self) for 'Mukti' (liberation). Mere indulgence in 'Âsana' or physical postures is not Yoga. Âsana is only one limb or 'Anga' of Yoga. The eight limbs viz. Yama, Niyama, Âsana, Prânâyâma, Pratyâhâra, Dhârana, Dhyâna and Samâdhi are the means to Yoga.
Brahmacharya or spiritually based continence is one of the important components of 'Yama'. 'Brahmacharya':- "Brahmani charyathey ithi" - "To surrender one's Ego and go with the will of the Almighty."

Basically, brahmacarya means celibacy.

The broader meaning of brahmacarya is brahme carati iti brahmacarya: “To act on the spiritual platform.”

The Benefits of Bramacharya:

ayus tejo balam viryam
prajna sris ca yasas tatha punyata satpriyatvam ca
vardhate brahmacaryaya

“By the practice of brahmacarya, longevity, luster, strength, vigor, knowledge, beauty, fame, piety, and devotion to truth increase.” (-Cited from Practice of Brahmacharya by Shivananda Swami; original source unknown.)

Practice of brahmacarya gives good health, inner strength, peace of mind, fortitude, and long life. It helps to conserve physical and mental energy. It augments memory, will-power, clear thinking, power of concentration, and ability to grasp philosophical subjects. It bestows physical strength, vigor, vitality, courage, boldness, and strength of character. To one who practices brahmacarya, divine knowledge comes as if naturally. His words convey meaning and authority, and leave an impression on the hearers.

Conversely, those who do not practice brahmacarya must always remain in illusion. Srila Prabhupada: “Brahmacarya is very, very essential. When one becomes detestful to sex life, that is the beginning of spiritual life.” (Lecture, 4/4/75) “Without becoming brahmachari, nobody can understand spiritual life.” (Airport Reception, 18/09/69)

sarvatra maithuna-tyago brahmacaryam pracaksate

“The vow of brahmacarya is meant to help one completely abstain from sex indulgence in work, words, and mind—at all times, under all circumstances and in all places.” (Yagnavalkya-smrti, as quoted in Bg. 6.13-14)

There are eight aspects of brahmacarya, as described in Sridhara Swami’s commentary on Srimad-Bhagavatam 6.1.12:

smaranam kirtanam kelih
preksanam guhyabhasanam
sankalpo ‘dhyavasayas ca
kriya-nirvrttir eva ca

One should not:
1. Think about the opposite sex.
2. Speak about sex life.
3. Dally with the opposite sex.
4. Look lustfully at the opposite sex.
5. Talk intimately with the opposite sex.
6. Decide to engage in sexual intercourse.

7. Endeavor for sex life.
8. Engage in sex life. (SB 6.1.13 Purport)

Sex is so overwhelmingly present in the material world that the question must arise, "Where has this sex desire come from?" The answer is that sex originates from God. In the spiritual world, Krishna and His consorts are spontaneously attracted to each other and engage in pastimes of love together. This is called adi-rasa, the original and real sex desire, the supermost platform of spiritual exchange. This adi-rasa is free from all material contamination, and is as different to mundane sex attraction as gold is to iron. (SB 5.25.5)

To understand the principles of Brahmacharya means to understand that sexual desire and sexual pleasure are creations of God which truly give life when used according to manufacturer's specifications.

In fact, celibacy is not exactly the right word to describe Brahmacharya. Celibacy could be repression of sex but Brahmacharya is transcendence of sex: you are so grown up that the toys you used to play with are no more relevant to you -- they have dropped of their own accord.

"Lord Vyasa discusses brahmacarya in his commentary on the Yoga Sutra: brahmacarya guptendriyasyopasthasya samyamah. Brahmacarya means using samyama (the process of dharana, dhyana, and samadhi) on the secret sexual organ. "Performing samyama on the sexual organs is known as niskama karma yoga. Niskama karma yoga is called brahmacarya (celibacy). This divine knowledge is the mother of all knowledge. It is mysterious and secret. After solving this mystery, no other knowledge remains to be revealed. Countless sadhakas who understand the importance of brahmacarya try very hard to practice it. But the brahmacarya which is expected of the seeker of divine knowledge is unattainable by ordinary persons. It is, therefore, said in the scriptures:

Of all austerities, brahmacarya is the ultimate. One who has mastered brahmacarya is no longer a human, but a god. "Brahmacarya is the greatest form of austerity. Other austerities exist, but are inferior. One who has practiced austerity by performing samyama on the sexual organs is a great saint, not an ordinary person. He is a god on earth. "

As a girl or a boy reaches puberty, she or he is burned by the fire of the senses. This sensuality upsets that youth. But as soon as saktipata is given to that individual, the downward path opens up. This path must be closed and the sakti (divine energy) made ascendant. This is as difficult a task as making the river Ganges ascend to heaven. Without total renunciation, the yogi cannot travel this difficult path.

"Brahmacarya has a primary and a secondary (incomplete) variation.
The primary form is to be observed by the celibate student, hermit, and the renunciant.

The second variation is to be observed by householders.
"The husband and wife should have sex for the purpose of procreation sixteen days after the start of menstruation, except for holy days. This is considered to be brahmacarya for the householder. "

If one does not understand the importance of brahmacarya he is a fool, even though he may be a learned man. The development of an individual's personality is impossible without brahmacarya. Therefore, Maharsi Patanjali says in his Yoga Sutra: brahmacarya pratlsthayam virya-labhah. On being firmly established in brahmacarya, vigor is gained. (Yoga Sutra, Sadhanapada, Sutra 38)

"Once someone becomes steady in celibacy, he becomes powerful. This powerful individual can achieve the ultimate truth, then fame, money, and other material goods come to him automatically.

siddhe bindau mahadevi kim na siddhyati bhutale. O Goddess, when one has mastered the sexual fluids, what power is not at his command?

"After the mastery of sexual fluids all powers are the slaves of the urdhvareta saint. The saint becomes an urdhvareta only by the practice of yoga. It is the urdhvareta who achieves God. A god's divinity is achieved only through brahmacarya.

brahmacaryena tapasa deva mrtyumupaghnata. Through the penance of brahmacarya, the gods have destroyed death. "How can disease enter the body of an urdhvareta who has destroyed death! "Lord Sri Krsna declares the importance of sexual fluids in the Srimad Bhagavadgita: bijam mam sarvabhtitanarn viddhi partha sanatanam. Know me to be the primeval seed of all existence, O Partha. (Bhagavadgita, 7:10) "The world is created from the powerful seed of the great Creator.
Lord Sivaji says: Aham binduh sivo binduh. I am the bindu (drop, ovum); Siva is the bindu. "The Durga Saptasati states: ya devi sarvabhutesu saktirupena sansthita. The Goddess resides in all beings in the form of sakti (divine energy). "Sexual energy is itself Durga, the goddess of power. "The great saints observed celibacy for attaining God. This jewel is found in the Srimad Bhagavadgita: yad icchanto brahmacaryam caranti. One who desires to reach his goal observes brahmacarya. (Bhagavadgita, 8:11) "Yogiraj a Goraksanatha describes the importance of sexual fluids as follows: The beloved fades in the absence of a husband and the yogi fades when he loses his sexual fluids. It is also said:

maranam bindupatena jivanam bindu dharanat. The loss of sexual fluids leads to death, and the sublimation of sexual fluids rejuvenates.

How to Observe Brahmacarya
"Let us see if there is a way to observe brahmacarya easily. brahmacaryam sada raksedastadha laksagam prthak, smaranam kirtanam kelih preksanam guhyabhasanam. (12) sankalpo'dhyavasayasca kriyanispatireva ca, etanmaithunamastangam pravadanti manisinah. (13) na dhatasyam na vaktavyam na kartavyam kadacana, etaih savairvinirmuktah yatirbhavati netarah. (14)
To completely observe brahmacarya, follow these eight rules: avoid thinking lustfully about a member of the opposite sex, do not discuss the opposite sex, do not play with those of the opposite sex, do not look at them with soft feelings, avoid solitude with a member of the opposite sex, decide against having sexual intercourse, do not determine to win over one of the opposite sex, and do not think about enjoyment with those of the opposite sex. (Daksa Samhita)

"The sadhaka can be a yogi if he observes these rules and uses his discretion to keep the opposite sex at a distance. Thus, the sadhaka should not imagine sex, discuss sex, nor engage in sex. Om santih, santih, santih!"

The yoga sadhaka, devotee, athlete, or individual aspiring for good health should chant the fifty-two stanzas on brahmacarya daily.
Fifty-two Stanzas on Brahmacarya

Chanting these verses gives a person the strength to practice brahmacarya. Women should omit verses 12 and 14, and men should omit verses 13 and 15.

Dear brothers and sisters, give up your despair and forget your miserable past. Become confident and stand up! If you become a celibate, the goal toward which you laboriously strive will come to you of its own accord. (1) A man or a woman without power is looked down upon by family, society, and nation, because he has lost his sexual fluids by secret cohabitation. To avoid this humiliation, protect your sexual fluids and become celibate. This is the path of dharma and the shortcut to success. (2) The weak men and women who have lost their power lament night and day, trying in vain to find a path out of the forest of despair. On the other hand, the powerful men and women who have mastered their sexual fluids enjoy infinite bliss on the great mountain of hope. (3) People drive away a guard dog, but if a lion comes and sleeps in place of the dog, they do not have the courage to drive it away; they themselves run away. (4) When wind blows on a forest fire, thinking it to be strong, it makes the fire even more intense. The same wind, however, puts out a small light burning inside the house, thinking it to be weak. (5) The skin and seed of the mango are kicked about on the road after the juice has been sucked away. In the same way, weak men and women are insulted by strong men and women. (6) Dear brothers and sisters, a single drop of sexual fluid is more valuable than all the wealth in the world. Those who are attracted by sensual pleasure waste it, but a yogi who knows its true value carefully protects it. (7) Protecting the sexual fluids makes the body lustrous. Just as the lamp without fuel burns down, so also that luster fades when the individual becomes sensual, loses control, and wastes his sexual fluids. (8) When sensual pleasures increase, strength is lost; so many diseases make their home in the body. On the other hand, a celibate individual protects his sexual fluids, so strength increases and not a single disease remains in his body. (9) A single drop of sexual fluid creates a complete child. Everyone knows this, yet one who is tempted by sensuality and destroys innumerable drops of sexual fluid murders countless unborn children. Is it right to enjoy life by murdering children? (10) The seed is a part of the tree and there is a tree hidden in every seed. In the same way, the soul is a part of God, and God is within the soul of every individual. To experience this truth, resort to the scientific practice of niskama karma yoga and become an urdhvareta, who is not distinct from God. (11) Dear sadhaka, if you wish to glimpse this great truth, you should believe the beautiful female body to be a hidden fire that burns onlookers and those who attempt to touch it. (12) Dear sadhika (female aspirant), if you wish to glimpse God, shun attraction to men. The sensual man is a resident of hell. He will seem like a God to you, but he is actually a monster. He will worship your beauty, then make you descend from heaven into the hell of sensuality. (13) Dear sadhaka, remember that you can never tread the path of yoga as long as you have the image of a beautiful woman engraved in your heart. No one can say when you will give in to temptation and pursue her. (14) Dear sadhika (female aspirant), remember that as long as you play with a man, you cannot preserve your body and find the path of God. (15) Death is imminent when sexual fluids are lost, and life is preserved when sexual fluids are protected. Therefore, make all efforts to prevent the loss of sexual fluids. (16) It does not matter whether you know your country or your religion. But it does matter whether you observe brahmacarya. If you wish to delve into the truth that lies secret in your body--that is, if you wish to see the great Lord who dwells within--you must practice brahmacarya. Without brahmacarya, your efforts to attain truth will be in vain. This is a point of utmost importance. (17) Brahmacarya is our childhood companion, and we should not fear that this companionship will be lost. One should fear sexual desire, because it is the enemy of youth. (18) You will fail at brahmacarya unless you build a fortress to protect your determination. Only the sadhaka who eats moderate and wholesome food and digests it with necessary exercises can practice brahmacarya. The sadhaka who eats immoderately or who fails to exercise never succeeds at brahmacarya. (19) Prakrti is made up of three qualities: sattvaguna, rajoguna, and tamoguna. Sattvaguna is the best of the three. If you cannot increase sattvaguna, you cannot practice niskama karma yoga to become an urdhvareta, and you cannot become a complete devotee of God. (20) Prakrti itself is Radhika Rani. She is the great power. Partake of her sattvaguna, and she will give you the gift of a matchless personality. (21) O unlucky ones, take care. How long will you wallow in sorrow? Awaken the dormant valor that lies in your heart. Take the great vow of brahmacarya and abandon your foolishness. (28) Liars murder a tiger in their talks with one blow of the sword, but when they come face to face with a dog they are afraid. Their vow of brahmacarya does not last long. (23) Cowards are not brave, though they may speak thousands of words to show their valor. The truly brave are inspired by few words. They are so brave that even when their heads are cut off, their bodies go on fighting. (24) The vow is a daughter of God. Only a brave, godly man can marry her. The cowardly can only marry demonesses. (25) Only the brave men and women who protect their sexual fluids can protect the universe. Other men and women cannot even make their family happy or fearless. (26) Dear brothers and sisters, you are afraid because the demoness of difficulty obstructs and harasses you every moment of your life. If you give up licentious behavior and resort to brahmacarya, this demoness of difficulty will fear you and will tread the path of death. (27) In spite of any obstacles in your path, you will be victorious. All difficulties will be afraid and will accept defeat. Wield the weapon of brahmacarya with a pure heart and confront your enemies bravely. You will then realize how many of your difficulties live, how many die, and how many disappear. (28) Just as the sun looks glorious in the sky and the moon is decorated by clusters of stars, so also the celibate finds a pedestal among men. (29) Do not become passionate and destroy your sexual fluids. The protection of sexual fluids is the best and most correct form of sadhana. By its practice your desires are fulfilled, and you can achieve salvation. (30) The strength obtained by the protection of sexual fluids opens up the closed gateway of luck, and makes your body more and more beautiful. (31) The protection of sexual fluids increases physical strength, intelligence, patience, and memory. It makes the mind steady and brings happiness and peace. (32) One who has been able to protect sexual fluids can achieve anything in this world. Even if it is dark, one can find a hidden object with a torch. The protection of sexual fluids is like the attainment of light in a world of darkness. (33) If you can attain self control, greatness will await you. All your wishes will be fulfilled, and fame, which is at your door, will welcome you. (34) Self control is the key to well-being. It is the only key that opens all locks, but locks the doors of sorrow. (35) Passionate men and women search in vain for happiness, yet they do not achieve it. On the contrary, happiness is always in search of the celibate. Such is the unpredictable play of God. (36) O great celibates, the penance of brahmacarya yields such mighty results that one fine day all supernatural faculties will come to your feet and request you to allow them to stay. The gods will be happy and will accept your greatness, and everyone will sing your praises each day. (37) Enjoyment gives one a sense of pleasure, but one only experiences sorrow in the end. On the contrary, yoga gives happiness in the beginning, middle, and end. (38) Though it goes by many names, yoga is unique and is called the yoga of brahmacarya or niskama karma yoga. One can become an urdhvareta by means of this yoga, which is like Midas's touch. Do not abandon this precious gem in order to search for a colorful stone. (39) Dear sadhakas, consider your body to be a laboratory where you can practice yoga, and consider your soul to be your teacher. Then take up the vow of brahmacarya and practice niskama karma yoga. (40) Dear sadhakas, remember that enjoyment leads to downfall, and yoga leads to success. The sensual person falls toward hell, and the yogi goes toward infinite achievement. (41) The strict observance of brahmacarya is a great vow. It is the soul of mantra. Therefore, any sadhana without the practice of brahmacarya is a failure. Gods depend on brahmacarya, so it is the main element; all other techniques are minor. (42) Yoga initiation means devoting yourself to niskama karma yoga, which makes the sexual fluids ascendant, thus bringing divine luster to your forehead. After the prana becomes ascendant, the fire of yoga puts a mark on the yogi's forehead. This is the true sign of a successful yogi. Others imitate this state by putting various marks on their foreheads. (43) Each religion has its own pilgrimage places. Brahmacarya is the only pilgrimage that has a universal following. Without asking its protection, the dirty mind cannot be cleansed. This pilgrimage is the site of penance of all the great saints of the world. Here reside all supernatural powers and accomplishments. (44) The devotee who is separated from worldly attachments can have a glimpse of the great Lord. To get rid of worldly attachments, take the protection of niskama karma yoga, which means to practice scientifically the path of brahmacarya. There is no other way to achieve God. (45) One who wishes to make this divine pilgrimage should use the vehicle of brahmacarya to succeed. Only those who have God's blessing can succeed on this pilgrimage. (46) Sexual fluid is a great gem. One who hoards it can achieve anything. If one can achieve divinity by practicing brahmacarya, why cannot one also accomplish everything that the world has to give? (48) Dear sadhaka, preservation of sexual fluid is the principle of God. Worship God under its protection. This is the illumined path. Do not leave it and tread the path of darkness, inviting only disappointment. (49) Just as a boat saves people from drowning in the river or the sea, so also these verses on brahmacarya will save you from drowning in the ocean of worldly life. (50) The devotee who chants these verses on brahmacarya every day at dawn will be divinely inspired. This divine inspiration is not just inspiration; it is the divine blessing of the kind Lord. (51) Nothing is unattainable in this world if you are divinely inspired. Inspiration is the great power that runs the universe. (52)

Question
Hi, I'm a 35 y.o male who is finding it very hard to control my sex instinct and often find it even intruding into my work and family time. I'm also experiencing a reduced attraction toward my wife ever since she bore our son. How do I get out of this mess?

Answer
Dear Arun, It's great to see someone realize that the state you are in needs correction! I'll do my best to help you out. Allright lets get to work :-)

Nature has created the sexual instinct in man to serve the following purposes when focussed right:
1. Progeny.
2. Produce marital bondage with one's spouse at the initial stages of marriage.

Based on your question and assuming you had a healthy attraction for your wife prior to childbirth, lets analyse the situation. Men and women are basically wired to get attracted to each other by nature. Nature's intention behind such an equation is to bring together two people into a state where they cohabit, produce offspring and then for the most crucial aspect - Stay together to form a happy family unit. For the sake of analysis, lets imagine a theoretical state where there was no attraction between two strangers called a man and a woman. Would they ever come near each other? or if they did would they be willing to stay together, bear responsibilities and do things for each other as a family? The general answer is 'NO'. Hence nature has come up with this thing called attraction that leads to forming a family unit.

It's here that there is a catch. Nature always programs a couple to feel this thing called 'attraction' at the physical, mental and emotional levels only up to a certain point of time. This state is produced as already mentioned in order to weld them together in setting up a family. Once this objective is achieved, the state of attraction naturally starts to wean. This is actually nature's pointer to the couple that having now formed a family unit they should move on and introduce a new foundation on which their marital relationship would henceforth rest. And that new foundation is based on concepts of unconditional companionship, trust, true love, consideration etc.. It is precisely for this reason that a marriage/relationship based only on physical attributes/sex has a short life.

Man erringly assumes the sensation of sex to be of paramount pleasure and something to be had all through his life. Blinded by this falsity he fails to realize that he can achieve states of mind/consciousness which are miles ahead of the sex plane in ecstasy. It is here that the concept of 'Brahmacharya' acts as a means to achieve these higher states. The net meaning of the word 'Brahmacharya' is to perform as per the dictates of the 'Brahman' or the Almighty who is always in a state of 'Paramananda' or eternal bliss. The important thing here is to shift the focus of pleasure from the sensation of sex to communion with the blessed lord in a gradual manner by thinking less on sex and more on god.

Coming to the question on hand, put your mind into a life based on true love and kindness. True love is unconditional. The giver of true love derives immense pleasure from the act of giving. He is not bothered whether he gets it back in reciprocation. When you truly love your beloved wife, her physical body or dressing will have no bearing on your desire to spend time with her and give her happiness at the innate level. Your wife is in reality God in the human form cooking for you, serving you and smiling at you. Realize the falsity of bodily attraction which is temporary and the effect of Maya (illusion). Gradually reduce the frequency of ejaculation and then reduce the frequency of sexual intercourse itself. This will then help get over dependency on recreational sex and lead to absolute Brahmacharya. Semen is the nectar in a man. The more he conserves this divine fluid the more he shines and prospers. Set aside some time everyday to:

1. Indulge in some form of physical exercise.
2. Stimulate your mind with intellectual work (most of us have this at our work place)
3. Indulge in 'Atmic Vichara' or quest of who you are by reading the summary of Holy treatises such as the 'Bhagavad gita' or 'Bible' or 'Quran' based on which ever religion you belong and by practising meditation.

Be ruthless in avoiding the sight, sound, smell, taste and touch of anything which fires up the sex plane. With consistent, true and honest efforts God will without doubt extend his hand to you and pull you up. Hope this puts you on the right track. Get back for clarifications if any.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,
I want to know why all religions seem to agree or atleast it is mentioned in the scriptures/books that sex/lust is an enemy to humans such as for instance adam thrown out of kingdom of god for eating the apple.?
Is it true that when you lose semen you lower your brain capability? I have read some books on abstinence.

Thanks a lot
Diren

Answer
Hi Diren :-)

That's an interesting question. Let’s try and get to the answer.

Religion is essentially a way of life and the aim of every religion is to ultimately help man attain self-realization. Lust is considered a lethal enemy of man for various reasons, some of which I will try to outline:

1. Lust is among those primal 'pleasures' which is very sweet and heady at start but ends with pain. Lust diverts the very vital energies in man towards sating it. The 'pleasure' man derives initially while indulging in lust soon disappears. Hence he decides to indulge in more lust filled activity to regain this so called 'pleasure'. In the process of reaching for this elusive pleasure which is nothing but a mirage, he slowly starts depleting his physical, mental and emotional energies/quotients. This depletion is not very visible during his teens or his early twenties, but starts to accelerate rapidly from then on. Also, he develops dependence and slavery to the illusory sexual sensation, which makes him lose his state of independence.

The net result - Man becomes a hopeless addict running after that state of ecstasy which he thinks sex/lust will provide him, but which in reality is the mythical pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, ever out of reach and wholly non-existent. What is unfortunate here is that he loses his prowess in every sphere of life in his quest for sexual ecstasy. It is for this reason that lust is called 'The great cheat' promising great pleasure initially but finally cheating the subject with pain, leaving him ultimately a wreck! Man in this state becomes entirely unfit to realize his oneness with God, which is why scriptures cutting across religions ask man to shun lust.

The same is the case with 'Adam' who strayed from his state of serenity, purity and the default divine state of his soul by eating the 'Forbidden fruit' of sexuality.

2. Coming to semen, yes man depletes his intellectual, physical, mental and spiritual capabilities when he loses his semen. Lust invariably leads to loss of semen. Semen is in truth the very last essence of the digestive process in man. It is 'Saptha Dhatu' or the seventh and final tissue element of digestion. According to Hindu scriptures, it takes around 30 days for semen to form and this volume is spent in a single ejaculation!

Semen or 'Ojas' is a fluid with the power in it to create new life. A man who has succeeded in conserving and transmuting his semen into 'Tejas' starts to develop shining cheeks, sparkling eyes and a magnetic, cheerful personality. His memory, sharpness and strength become notable. He is a talking squirrel, agile and energetic. As per the Bhagavad Gita and the Bible, Semen is God is motion. It is the very foundation on which all basis of life rests in a living being. Seminal energy is the basis of great success in every sphere of life. You might have noticed the overall fatigue and lack of life energy soon after indulging in an ejaculation and the reservoir of energy one has when one stays away from the same for a period of time.

Hope this answers your queries. Get back for clarifications if any.
Have a nice day and all the best Diren :-)

Question
Hello,
I am interested in knowing the exact meaning of "Brahmacharya" mode of life please. I am a 40 years old and married living with my wife and 2 children.

Answer
Dear Sriharsha :-)

It is nice to see people showing interest in 'Brahmacharya' considering how beautiful its results are on the practitioner. I will try to put forward the answer as completely as possible.

Literally speaking the word 'Brahmacharya' is a compound Samskrut word which can be split as 'Brahmani Charyathey iti'. The word 'Brahman' means the Almighty lord, while 'Charathi' means to surrender and perform as per his wishes, so as to soon attain self-realization. One who practices the same is called a 'Brahmachari', immaterial of what his marital status is. The concept of abstinence from sexuality in thought, word and deed is a by product of Brahmacharya that helps one achieve this surrender and not Brahmacharya itself.

Coming to the practical and effective meaning, 'Brahmacharya' is a state of body, mind and consciousness in which a man essentially adopts a state free from sexual thoughts, actions and attitude for recreation. It is a state adopted by man to free oneself from the dualities of Earthly life and embrace the unipolar state of 'Ananda' or bliss whose best representation is the Blessed Lord.

In case of a married house holder, sexual activity assumes righteousness when indulged with the following objectives:

1. In producing wanted offspring.
2. In creating a healthy marital bond with newly weds during the initial period of wedded life.

As a wedded couple progress in time through their marriage, nature ideally programs them to rely less on sexual activity in maintaining this marital bond and shift to more substantial parameters such as kindness, true love, understanding, companionship and togetherness. Thereby, while a single unmarried Brahmachari is required to abstain from all forms of sexuality, a house holder or 'Grihasta' is allowed sexual contact only with his wife to produce wanted offspring (procreation and not recreation). A householder wishing to adopt the 'Brahmacharya' mode of life should work towards achieving this state of mind and action in his marriage, whereby he acquires the same benefits a single unmarried true 'Brahmachari' begets in his path of self-realization.

Hope this answers your question, Get back for clarifications if any God bless and have a nice day Sriharsha :-)

Question
Hello there. Hope that you are having a great day, enjoying happiness. My question is on chastity and the body.I have been chaste 4 and half months before and felt this energy and this power, never felt before. Can you please give me information on how the body will preserve itself, by not spilling the seed. I am 36 could this really be true? I am really exited! How old are you? Are you Happy? thank you for your reply.

Answer
Hello Carr, Good to see your interest regarding Brahmacharya. It's absolutely true that chastity in thought, word and deed (this is of paramount importance since mere physical chastity has limited benefits) makes a person fantabulous in every aspect of life.

Let's get into the rationale behind the above statement. 'Semen' or the seed in a man as per Hindu scriptures is the seventh and final tissue element of digestion, bestowed with the amazing power to create life. From food comes chyle, from chyle- blood, from blood- flesh, from flesh- fat, from fat- bone, from bone- marrow and finally from marrow- semen. According to Ayurveda, the ancient Hindu medical science, conversion of each element at every step takes a period of five days. Thus semen is the last element that is formed out of food. It takes approximately 30 days and 4 hours to complete this cycle. Scientists believe that an intake of 32 kgs. of food produces 800 gms. of blood, which in turn forms only 20 gms. of semen. Now, you can see how precious semen is! And all of this nearly gets lost in a single ejaculation!

When a man shifts from a life of 'seminal wastage' to one of 'seminal conservation', the body begins to conserve the large amount of energy which was earlier used to produce and replenish the lost reserves of semen. Mind you, this energy saved is of considerable magnitude. This will answer your query regarding the energy and zest which you felt when chaste. This however is only the initial stage benefit.

For man to successfully conserve his 'seed' in the long run it becomes necessary to be chaste in thought, word & deed in totality. Mere physical restraint from sex/masturbation makes the body retain the seed for a certain period of time, say a few months at most, after which a normal man loses his sperm through 'nightfall' or a wet dream. Our ancient sages have recognized the fact that for man to succeed continually in seminal conservation, he along with physical activity should have a chaste, pure mind constantly engrossed in creative work & meditation upon the blessed lord, thereby leading to chastity in totality. Semen in reality has three major functions:

1. To rejuvenate and revitalize the physical body.
2. To help develop a keen intellect.
3. To aid a man realize his 'self'. This is a spiritual pursuit.

A man intending to succeed in conserving and transmuting his semen and deriving all the benefits from his efforts should ensure that he subjects his body firstly to adequate physical activity or sport, secondly to intellectual, worthwhile pursuits and thirdly sets aside some time of the day for spiritual practices. Any deficiency in the magnitude of the corresponding activity will make that part of the semen to flow out in a 'wet dream'.

A chaste man besides effectively conquering the downslide of ageing starts to develop a magnetic personality and a cheerful disposition. It has been stated in the great spiritual treatises that one who succeeds in the conservation and transmutation of semen effectively without a break for a period of 12 years is endowed with unrivalled. This shows the importance of 'Brahmacharya'

Thank you... I'm a few years younger than you, and yes I'm very happy with the changes chastity has brought into my life and is still bringing with every passing day! Hope this answers your query, revert to me for clarifications if any Carr.

God bless and have a nice day.

Question
Hi, I read somewhere that celibacy leads to health problems. Is this true?

Answer
Dear Mark, Contrary to such belief, Brahmacharya in the true sense carried out with the right spirit in fact cures diseases. A true and honest life of Brahmacharya in thought, word & deed propels man to reach a state beyond defect, decay and even get control over death!

There are some who erroneously assume Brahmacharya to be mere physical suppression of the sexual instinct. In such people, the mind however continues to roam in the forest of sexuality thereby causing an opposite reaction in their very body, mind & psyche which might even lead to disease. Brahmacharya is a mode of life which is to be carried out with honesty & integrity, centered around deep love and trust for God. Brahmacharya is not suppression or repression of the sex instinct but transmutation of the life force into something higher. The constant 'sex need' which people refer to is an acquired trait and a defect which is the result of recreational sexuality, while the objective of sexual energy is procreation and not recreation.

When you start a car and depress the accelerator the car naturally begins to move. But if you have the hand brake on and then try to move ahead, it could result in a broken hand brake, a damaged transmission or a shut down in the engine! When we put our efforts in a certain direction, we should direct all our energies in the same direction and invest our very heart and soul into the task at hand with the innocence and trust of a child. Opposites make little sense. Hope this answers your query Mark

Hello...How are you? I'm practicing celibacy for some time now. Is it necessary to make changes in food habits to succeed in chastity?

Answer
Hello Jason, I'm doing well. Nice to see you are on the path of Brahmacharya. Coming to the issue of what sort of food a celibate Brahmachari must take in order to succeed in his path, the following guidelines will serve as pointers:

A Brahmachari must indulge in a balanced, nutritious diet, which is simple and easy to digest. An ideal way of achieving this would be to take adequate amounts of wheat/ corn based, steamed or cooked food for breakfast/lunch and a salad consisting of as many fresh fruits and raw veggies as possible for dinner. You can have a cup of milk in the morning and evening with a cup of yogurt following lunch. Eating moderate amounts of butter and ghee are also suggested.

The basic aim behind such a diet is to reduce the dependence of the mind on the sense of taste as a source of pleasure. It is said that he who controls the tongue develops control over the other sense organs and Brahmacharya becomes easier.

DO AVOID:
1. Spicy, hot, sour and pungent food items and additives.
2. Onion & garlic to the best possible extent.
3. Oily, fatty foods in general (ghee and butter in the raw form, taken in small quantities are exceptions)
4. Fermented or overly seasoned foods (fresh yogurt is an exception)
5. All kinds of meat & eggs.
6. Coffee, tea, aerated drinks, tobacco, alcohol and drugs.

The above foods are to be strictly avoided as they increase the 'Rajasic' and 'Tamasic' tendencies in man, thereby igniting his sensual tendencies.

From my own experience I have realized the fact that shunning the above results in a calmer, brighter and a serene state of mind. It takes a few months of strict practice to realize the benefits and joy one accrues from following a 'sâthvic' diet. With constant effort and commitment, it is really not difficult to achieve the same.

By shifting onto a pure ‘sâthvic’ diet, one will get better overall physical & mental health. You become more cheerful and less prone to agitation and restlessness. This is very important for a man aiming to win over his animalistic tendencies. Revert for clarifications if any

Hey there. I'm a 21 y.o student who has got into the habit of viewing porn from the past 2 years. The first thing I do on getting up in the morning is watch porn and masturbate. Of late this has become an obsession. Earlier I used to watch porn but was not this desperate. Is it normal ?

Answer
Hello K, You will have heard of drug or alcoholic addiction. It's a state, where the addict goes on indulging in consuming the above in spite of knowing that they are bad and cause irreversible damage to his very being.

Addiction to sex is many times more damaging in totality, for it ensnares the very life energy of a person into sating it and creates powerful karmic tendencies which are very, very tough to get rid of. It's akin to a flame which takes birth on firewood, makes use of it to grow into a raging fire and finally burns this very firewood to ashes. And after the wood is burnt and the flame gone, it leaves dark burn marks on the surface that are almost impossible to get rid of. Why? Because the very surface on which the wood burnt also got scorched, burnt and scarred.

Viewing of porn can be compared to this flame. It starts with fun and excitement and before the person knows what's happening, he finds his mind coming back to it all the time so much that soon he wouldn't mind being without food and water but sitting glued to porn on the net becomes his chief full time occupation. With every image he views, this fire grows larger and consumes more firewood which in this case is he himself at the mental, physical and psychic level. Finally the flame reaches a state where he is burnt into a degenerate who knows the cause of his anguish but can do little.

Stop porn. Install filters on your computer to block it. Develop a mental resolve to become healthy and bright. A man who indulges in porn/sexuality can never be truly bright and cheerful like a clear morning with birds chirping, the sun rising and fresh nectar like breeze blowing!

Shift your mind to intellectual, worthwhile pursuits. When you feel the need for a change, play a sport, explore nature, feel the beauty of creation. Remember how you were when you were a little kid. You never needed anything external to make you happy. You knew the art of taking pleasure from the very simple things of life. You used to laugh till you could do so no more! :-) That was happiness.. Isn't it? You can become like that once again! The first step is to put your mind on things other than porn and sexuality... Once you achieve this, the next steps for further growth will dawn one after the other. Revert to me for anything more you need in this quest.

Question
QUESTION: Hello Ian:

Which technique do you think results in swifter progress: 1) to very strictly shut out all sensory stimulus or 2) to allow some sensory stimulus and then sublimate the desires into spiritual aspirations?

I have been perfectly celibate, without voluntary slips, for over 4 months now and I believe part of my success is because of a favorable environment with few females around and where I am immersed in my work and studies. I have noticed that my perception of females has changed and I no longer allow myself to consciously consent to 'do' anything to them in my thoughts. However, I still find that I appreciate their beauty and I still have a desire to stare if I see a beautiful girl. However, if I stare too much (such as when watching TV) and feel the stirrings of arousal, I find I have more control in sublimating these with meditation into spiritual goals.

I do realize that allowing some stimulus in approach 2) is a slippery slope that could result in a downfall, but I am assuming here that the person has already made some progress in being chaste. Approach 2) feels as though more energy is being raised in my body and I am training myself to adapt to it. The downside is that it potentially generates more impure thoughts. With approach 1), I keep wondering if the progress is too slow or even stagnant. Two other considerations I have are that I expect my environment to change shortly where there will be more temptation and boredom, and I am somewhat impatient to see if celibacy can cure a physical skin condition I have (psoriasis). I keep wondering if approach 2) is more effective in raising more energy and training me to live amidst worldly temptations.

We often here that artists need beautiful women around as a stimulus to produce great art (through sublimation). Could the artist produce such great works without that stimulus?

Once again, I thank you very much for your advice as reading about your experience was one of two things that was a catalyst for my current progress, after several years of failure.

John

ANSWER: Hello John :-)
This query must've been forwarded my way. Though it's not addressed to me, I will try my best to answer it.

Coming to your question as to which method would be better?
1.Strictly shutting out all sensory stimulus, OR
2.Allowing some sensory stimulus and sublimating the same

The answer is to shut out all sensory stimulus backed by the constant reminder of knowledge that sense objects lead one away from the path of real progress, happiness and bliss.

The second approach doesn't ultimately make sense, as it's nothing more than a circuitous & slow downfall towards one's past delusive animal instincts.

You are right in assuming that a conducive environment bereft of temptation helps. It certainly does and is in fact a necessity for an aspirant in the path of celibacy.

All Holy Scriptures cutting across religions state that till the time a celibate has realized his 'SELF' or god and is perfectly established in celibacy to the point where his mental purity and lack of response towards sense objects become 'Natural' and 'Effortless' he should always be extremely alert and vigilant against the onslaught of senses. By the honest, true and unbroken practice of 'celibacy' for a period of 12 years, man generally reaches this state. The sight of a naked woman would have no bearing upon him. He feels no difference in stimulus between touching a piece of wood and the naked body of a beautiful woman. He sees himself in every form of life and all forms of life within himself. This is the ultimate aim of celibacy and the goal of life. Man is then one with his maker.

But beware! Till one has reached this state, he is ever prone to defeat under the powerful attack of lust at any given point in time. It is in fact said that a celibate aspirant should ever be humble and meek before god, asking him for guidance and the power to win over the senses and be constantly aware of the fact that he is still a student in controlling his passions and not yet a master.

If an aspirant lets 'some' sensory stimuli to enter his domain, he soon finds himself being overpowered by 'more and more' sense stimuli, which grow like hay on fire and finally devour him! So the trick is to nip them at the bud.

It's good that you have been without slips since the past 4 months. This is in fact an indication that you are destined for more if you strive rightly. The first 3 -4 months of celibacy make a person experience a drastic change in his state of mind and attitude. This is because man 'slightly' touches upon that beautiful state of soul serenity which he never knew all through his adult life. But a word of caution is necessary here: As you progress further this initial euphoria or 'high' will settle down and stabilize, and then the celibate should very clearly remember to be eternally vigilant and alert against any form of sexual stimulus, else he will be tempted to stray and loose his ground.

The desire to stare at a beautiful lady is a clear indication of latent lust. There are people who argue that they are looking at 'beauty' and not at 'sexuality'. Would they stare at the same lady if she were old or say dead? Where did the beauty go then? True beauty is permanent and imperishable, it cannot age, and it cannot perish. This thing which we call 'beauty' in a man or a woman is the physical beauty of the body, an illusion. Look at this beautiful lady after she's down with disease for a few days all grungy, haggard and unkempt and see if you feel the same attraction. This 'attraction' which you refer to will have vanished...Why? Because the 'beauty' you were referring to and looking at was the illusive, temporary and semi-permanent physical beauty and not the true 'soul' or 'god' beauty. This is exactly where celibacy comes; it makes man get in touch with the real beauty of the 'soul or 'god'.

John, have you ever wondered why a young virile man or a pretty girl in her teens look so attractive? What is it in them which 'disappears' once the man grows old or this 'pretty girl' bears a few kids? The secret of reality and creation lies in this answer. It is 'God' who shines through these people at youth in the form of their sexuality and makes them look 'beautiful' in order to facilitate them to attract a mate, marry and produce offspring. Once this purpose is achieved this 'pretty girl' starts losing the physical charm and 'oomph' which she previously had. In reality the physical body made of flesh and bones was never beautiful. The 'God' power shining through it with the above said purpose held it high and together to give it firmness, fullness and an aura of beauty ! If the same 'pretty girl' were to die, say at youth her dead body would no longer look 'beautiful'…Why? Because the 'beauty' or 'God' or 'soul' which resided in her body has vacated its residence!!

Coming to your other question, a true and a great artist when he paints a beautiful lady, would at that instant knowingly or unknowingly be into painting this imperishable, all pervading 'God' beauty in the soul of the object, shining through the body. We can clearly see this difference between the works of an ordinary artist who merely paints the body and that of classics like 'Renoirs' or 'Rembrandts'. So again, all superlative results, be it in any field of life are results of man's connection with the 'Divine' and not the flesh. A 'Renoir' of even a very old man looks 'Fantabulous'!

Trust this helps clear your doubts regarding the subject and helps you walk more firmly in the path of celibacy John :-) Revert to me for clarifications if any

---------- FOLLOW-UP ----------

QUESTION: Thank you Dhananjay for your detailed response! I will re-commit myself to avoiding sensory stimuli as lately I've been getting lax on this. However, although your response makes perfect sense to me (I do see that allowing some stimulus only creates desire for more), I am still troubled by one question. I will re-phrase my question so it's more clear. Here is what I currently understand:

1) Sensory stimuli cause desire in people
2) Semen is produced in the body as a result of those desires
3) With meditation, the body can sublimate that semen into higher forms and this produces Ojas
4) The more Ojas a person has stored, the more spiritual power he will have.

By the above reasoning, it is better to get the body to produce more semen so more can be sublimated and stored as Ojas. So my original question came about because I wondered if more sense stimuli could be an aid to ultimately storing more Ojas. But of course there is something erroneous in my thinking on this. Can you help me identify what is incorrect in the above reasoning, and what's the right way to understand this process?

Thank you very much!
John

Answer
Hello John,
Technical knowledge regarding the endeavor is very important in order to help us aspirants choose the right path when we come to a fork on the road. Let's try and get to answer your statements/questions:

1. Sensory stimuli cause desire in people:
True, an aspirant is prone to react to stimuli with desire till the time he has reached mastery. This spontaneous reaction is a cumulative result of his similar reactions and actions from his past 'karma' or deeds.

2. Semen is produced in the body as a result of those desires:
Lets put it this way; semen gets into the 'ejaculatory mode' when man reacts to stimuli with desire. In a true Brahmachari, the volume of production of semen is limited to the 3 purposes which semen is programmed to attend to in addition to reproduction namely:

A.Rejuvenate and revitalize the physical body.
B.Help develop a keen intellect.
C.Take man to a spiritual plane and aid him in self realization.

In a non-Brahmachari, very little semen is available for the above three functions, as most of it flows out. In a Brahmachari it is the reverse.

3. With meditation, the body can sublimate this semen into higher forms of energy producing ojas:
True, meditation upon the divine transmutes 'Rethas' or sexual fluid into 'Ojas'. After the Yogi becomes and Urdhvareta, production of physical semen stops and Bindu (seed) is retained as 'Amrit' in the region of the brain. [Urdhvareta: This is a compound Samskrt word from the words Urdhva- meaning upward and Rethas- meaning sexual fluid]. It means 'One who has taken his transmuted his sexual fluid upwards'. However, in an aspirant yet to become an 'Urdhvareta' it becomes necessary to indulge in adequate physical and mental activity along with meditation, in order to achieve the state of 'Ojas'. Else that third part of semen flows out.

4. The more Ojas a person has, the more spiritual power he has:
True, Ojas is nothing but the gross creative power in a very subtle form.

As to your other statement that more semen means more ojas further to transmutation there is a correction. I will explain it with an example. Let's say 'X' calories of balanced food are required for a healthy, strong and muscular body. Will health, strength and muscle mass increase by tenfold if we consume '10X' calories or hundred fold with '100X' calories? No. Similarly only a portion of semen gets converted to 'Ojas' after attending to the other two functions. Overeating has a tendency to produce more semen in the gross form beyond requirement (which results in Bindu flowing down from the brain to lower chakra-s leading to debility). It is for this reason that great yogi's indulge in 'Mitaahara' – or moderation in diet.

Now on your question if more sense stimulus means more ojas, it is in fact the opposite. I would request you to re-look at point No.2. Sense stimuli produce desire which in turn stir up and put together semen into the ‘ejaculatory mode’. When this happens, the wheels of expellation have started to move. Any volume of semen that has got into this state cannot be converted into ‘Ojas’. It will eventually come out only as ‘Rethas’ in the gross form. This is the reason an aspirant is asked to totally shun sense stimuli. He cannot become an Urdhvareta as long as the mind roams in the forest of sexuality with desire.

Lastly, your query regarding Psoriasis. All diseases/deviations from robust health in man at the physical/mental level are a result of some past negative karma. Considering Brahmacharya is man’s journey back to the divine,it can undo all the inauspicious signs. However, based on the extent of one’s negative karma, this could take time. We are all aspirants who have trodden the path of Brahmacharya since short time, while indulging in the delusive actions of ignorance since a very long time! Time and effort will break even and then annul these karmas.

Hope this clears your doubts. Revert to me for clarifications if any John.

I try to hide and stay away from people, but trouble will find me. How long does it take for that to go away?

Answer
Hello Carr,

What you are basically trying to imply is the depressed state you find yourself in, further to the break in Brahmacharya and how to get out of it. Let’s try and address the issue.

As per your statement, you managed to stay without slips for more than four months. This is an achievement by itself. It shows your interest in the concept of Brahmacharya. A slip only means that you need to persist more and in the right direction. With divine grace, honesty, integrity and commitment you can succeed further.

Let’s first try and understand what made you slip. Our current state of mind, intellect, consciousness and ego is a cumulative of our past ‘karma’ or deeds. Each and every deed we have indulged in the past creates a ‘Vasana’ or a tendency. This is the reason why different people have different likes and dislikes. I may have a craving for sweets while your craving could be for spicy food. These inherent likes and dislikes for certain things are all a result of our constant past indulgences in those objects.

A universal common factor among majority of people however is the strong like and craving for the sexual act. A, B and C might have different tastes when it comes to food, clothes and cars. But most often you will find that they all have a strong liking for sex

Why? Let me quote from the book- "The practice of Brahmacharya" by His Highness Swami Sivananda who gives us the answer: || "Because the sex instinct is the greatest urge in human life. Sex energy or lust is the most deep-rooted instinct in man. Sex energy entirely fills the mind, intellect, Prana, senses and the whole body. It is the oldest of the factors that have gone into the constitution of the human being. A man has a thousand and one desires. But the central strong desire is the sexual desire. The fundamental desire is the urge for a mate. All hang on this central basic desire. The desire for money, the desire for children, the desire for property, the desire for houses and other desires come later on. Because the whole creation of this universe is to be kept up, God has made the sexual desire very, very powerful"||

In a man trying to be Brahmachari, the initial period is like swimming upstream, against the current of a swift river. Your strokes have to be very consistent, powerful and focused to make headway, else you will soon find yourself being washed downstream. But along with efficient strokes, there is another very strong factor necessary to successfully swim against the river of lust and reach the banks of chastity. That is the grace of the divine lord. No amount of mere physical, mental restraint and intellectual know how regarding the subject can help a man reach the chaste shores without the grace of the mighty lord.

Any man who reads books on the subject of Brahmacharya can know the subject. But 'realizing' the content wholly and staying out of lusts reach? That is something very difficult. It is for this reason that you have very, very few people who are able to succeed in this path. Success in Brahmacharya comes only to him who follows a very special mode of life with the blessings of god.

I will now address the topic of depression. When man becomes chaste, he practically lifts himself out of the scum and sludge called lust and passion. Each day you remain truly chaste, the mind, body and soul rejoice in splendor. Man experiences pure 'Ananda' or unipolar bliss. When you stayed chaste for a period of four and half months, your system at the mental, physical and psychic level underwent purification. This gave you joy and happiness. At the point when you gave into your past tendencies and slipped, all this joy and bliss your system had experienced by constant effort got negated for a moment's pleasure... You said everything goes wrong when this happened. That's because your 'Veerya' or semen is actually the basis of life, your very 'Atman' or soul. It is God in motion. It is dynamic will. It is the 'Prana of Pranas'. He who loses semen loses everything. Nothing else can compensate. Depression caused thus can be quite painful. Man feels disoriented and ashamed. But don't let this depression linger on. It will last only as long as you want it to last. A Brahmachari is firstly a man of great valor and poise. With honest effort and prayer to God, success is guaranteed. I will list out the methods to succeed that I have been able to gather from my own personal experience.

1. FOOD: Eat mildly spiced food wholly devoid of onion, garlic, synthetic additives and flavors. Give up meat & eggs. Meat eaters cannot succeed in Brahmacharya beyond a limit. Go for balanced, nutritious food made of wheat, pulses, legumes, milk and dairy products, fresh fruits and veggies. Give up all forms of alcohol, tobacco and use of perfumes. Half the battle is won with the right food.

2. LIFESTYLE: Get up early in the morning by 4.00 A.M and drink 1-2 glasses of water on an empty stomach. Drink some milk/fruit if hungry. Perform Asana , Bandha, Nadi Shodhana, Pranayama and meditation. This is very important. By the correct practice of breath control, the mind, breath, semen and Prana (Vital energy) come under one's control. All these four are interlinked. He who controls any one of them develops control over the other three. You can learn Pranayama from a good yoga tutor. Now pray to the lord to give you strength over the senses. Sit in Padmasana (Lotus posture) and meditate upon the lord. Concentrate deeply at the region between the eyebrows. Your concentration must be deep with the honesty, humility and the innocence of a child.

Indulge in creative/intellectual activity for the rest of the day (this can be your job at the workplace). Stay away from people who talk of sexuality and women. Stay away from women whose intentions you feel are not conducive to chastity. Even with women who aren't a threat, keep interactions to the point. Lust is the greatest trickster! It will find ways to crop up even from innocent contact.

Avoid looking into the eyes of women you feel sexually attracted to. Whenever a sexual thought comes into your mind, nip it at the bud and chant the lord's name. Ask him to help you win over lust. With honest efforts, no one can snatch away success from you. We fall due to our own weaknesses. We practice celibacy strictly for a month and then cheat ourselves saying 'Let me take one look at that woman, it wont hurt'. Every image your brain registers with a sexual intent will make a corresponding fraction of your semen get ready to go out! It gets into the 'ejaculatory mode'. Further to a number of such images getting stored, you will slip.

3. CHARITY & LOVE: To the extent possible, develop an intent of true love, consideration, kindness and care towards the people around you. Curb anger. Anger is the catalyst to passion and vice-versa. Both have kinship. Feed a stray animal with love and affection, you can visit an old age home or place for the destitute and spend some time with them out of true love, helping them in any manner you can either in cash, kind or in service. They are after all gods' children and god will feel happy when you make the less privileged happy. Their blessings will make your chastity rock solid. This is very important as celibacy never stays with self centered, egoistic people and trust me; most of us are self centered and egoistic during the course of the day without our own knowledge! Trust this will serve as a pointer to you to stay chaste. Revert to me for clarifications if any Carr.

God bless, be spirited and have a nice day in the book practice of Brahmacharya by Sivananda it is written: According to Yogic science, semen exists in a subtle form throughout the whole body. It is found in a subtle state in all the cells of the body. It is withdrawn and elaborated into a gross form in the sexual organ under the influence of the sexual will and sexual exciteme nt. An Oordhvareta Yogi not only converts the semen into Ojas, but checks through his Yogic power, through purity in thought, word and deed, the very formation of semen by the secretary cells of the testes or seeds. This is a great secret. Allopaths believe that even in an Oordhvareta Yogi, the formation of semen goes on incessantly and that the fluid is reabsorbed into the blood. This is a mistake. They do not understand the inner Yogic secrets and mysteries. They are in the dark.

Question

Their Drishti or vision is concerned with the gross things of the universe. The Yogi penetrates

into the subtle
hidden nature of things through Yogic Chakshu or the inner vision of wisdom.
The Yogi gets control over the astral nature of semen and thereby prevents the formation of the very fluid itself.

Can you give some details how this can be accomplished?
Thank you.

Answer
The subtle most state of 'Bindu' (seed) is 'Soma' (nectar). This nectar inundates the body in subtlety throughout. It is the basis on which the foundation of life rests upon. This is one of the reasons why further to its loss after ejaculation, man feels drained and empty. Semen is referred to as the 'Prana of Pranas'. It is the basic vital energy on which all other energies are formed and rest upon.

In a normal man indulging in the sexual sensation, 'Soma' (nectar) transcends into its gross form 'Veerya' (semen). When man is under sexual duress, all energy gets focused and concentrated at the 'Svadhistana chakra' (at the lumbar region) or the sex center. This prompts the secretor cells in the testes to produce sperm. The Cowpers glands or the bulbo-urethral glands get ready with the Cowper's fluid (meant to neutralize the acidity of urine in the urethra) and the prostate with the prostatic fluid. All these three mix together in the right volumes before ejaculation to form the resultant semen. In a man constantly harboring in the sex plane, semen is mostly close to the gross form, waiting to flow downward.

In Brahmachari yogi who is an Urdhvareta (a compound Sanskrit word formed from the simple words: Urdhva- meaning upward, Rethas- meaning sexual fluid. 'Urdhva Rethas yasya saha iti' meaning one who has taken his semen upward) a different phenomenon occurs. His attitude & perspective being different, wisdom takes the forward seat. Bindu in its subtle form (Soma) nourishes his body effectively and does not flow down to form semen. In the subtle form is its maximum power and reach. A cup of water in the gross form when limited to the cup has little energy by itself. But the same water when converted to steam and pressurized can be made to drive a steam turbine.

To accomplish this state, the yogi shifts to a lifestyle aimed at withdrawing and developing indifference over sense stimulations and responses. Man has developed his liking for sense stimuli from his past actions. It takes considerable effort to negate and finally win over these 'past tendencies' along with divine blessings. The Urdhvareta has accomplished the same.

Brahmacharya is truly speaking the means to achieve the end - 'Self or God realization'. It is the tool for man to dig himself out of the cave of ignorance and reach the bright state of knowledge. Knowledge of oneself and the creator!

Question
Hi,

I'm 22 have been meditating for 4 years now and have been practicing brahmacharya over the past year and i'm very impressed with the results. I can attest here the benefits of brahmachrya are amazing in all spheres of life. It enhances meditation, mental clarity and provides me with incredible strength and endurance at the gym.
I have recently taken up another technique called Mula bandha. This technique seems to provide even more vitality. I use this in conjunction with pranayama breathing techniques. It seems if I practice Mula Bandha alot during the day. It stops all lustful thoughts and sexual desire. Does this technique move all of the sexual energy up into higher chakras hence the vitality boost?

What can I expect in the long run after using this technique?
during my meditation I focus on certain chakra points I perform the mula bandha before and after the meditation. I meditate 3 times a day.

Michael

Answer
1. 'Mula Bandha' or the technique of withdrawing energy from 'Muladhaara chakra' into higher chakras is an effective tool for the aspiring Brahmachari in the transmutation process. However, all yogic activities such as Asana, Bandha, Nâdi Shodhana and Pranayama should be performed in an orderly & coordinated manner. All these are powerful techniques with strong effects and should be used as we make use of medicines - in the right dose and frequency. Excessive and random indulgence will not give the desired benefit, and the activity loses its effect and may prove harmful.

Thrice a day practice of early morning, afternoon at 12.00 & early evening around Sunset are the recommended times. The same can be chosen based on how time permits. The order in which the practice is to be carried out is as follows:
1.Asana 2. Bandha 3. Nâdi Shodhana 4. Pranayama and meditation.

Upon coming out of deep meditation, the yogi should not again indulge in any asana or Bandha for the next few hours but should rest his thoughts on God or perform creative activity.

A yogi is advised to perform Tri-Bandha or the three Bandha's in conjunction. They are: Mula Bandha, Uddiyana Bandha and Jaalandhara Bandha. These three ensure rise of the vital energy from the lower chakras to higher chakras. While Mula Bandha pulls up vital energy from Muladhaara, the other two bandhas take it higher. This is very important in transmutation. You can also perform 'Shirsasana' or head stand while performing Asana. This will give wonderful results.

Will it curb all sexual desires? It takes a long time, effort and divine grace for man's sexual desires to fully get curbed and come under control to the extent of lack of response when stimulated with a sexual object. However Bandha's will aid your journey to that phase.

2. By subjecting oneself to yogic exercises and meditation with correct guidance under a guru, the aspirant makes notable strides in his quest for self-realization, the ultimate aim of yoga.

Finally a quote for the Brahmachari: "By the practice of Brahmacharya; longevity, luster, strength, valor, memory, wealth, undying fame, great luck, knowledge and devotion to truth increase! Need we say more?

Question
Hi. For a few years I have a prostate infection which I find very difficult to heal (bad karma probably :(

For a while after micturition I was feeling some prostatic juice coming out (at first I didn't knew what it is... I just felt it is thicker than "normal" urine)... back then I thought it was because of brahmacharya and I went to the doctor late when I started to have some pains. I took some medication for a while but I have never recovered completely.
Now sometimes in the morning I find semen in my urine :((Every morning I urinate in a transparent plastic bottle to se if the urine is clean) I think my prostate is in tatters :(and because of the erection during the night the semen goes into the bladder. I seldom have nocturnal pollutions but finding semen in urine is practically the same thing as a pollution to me. To lose a little means to lose everything.
I practice badrasana (I read it is good for the prostate) for 1/2 hours daily and I drink Xanthium spinosum tea (I don't know the english word.
Thank you.

Answer

1. Semen in Urine:

Semen in urine is generally associated with the disorder 'Congestive Prostatitis'. This is further to the prostate gland being subjected to congestion due to a considerable period of erection and non-ejaculation, heavy vibration (such as hard riding on a motorcycle/ horse etc.) This could be onetime, periodic or chronic. Since you state this has been there for some time, it is important that you immediately consult a competent Urologist and get the problem solved.

2. Brahmacharya/ Prostate/ Night erections:

Now coming to the topic of Brahmacharya, those who are/ have followed a path of abstinence for a long time at the physical level only, abhorring sex/ masturbation but with their thoughts and emotions constantly seeking/ being stimulated at the sex plane cause a contrary reaction within their system. It is very important to aim at Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed. Mere physical repression can result in various disorders at the mental and physical levels. The sex force is a mammoth power. It can either be let free or if dammed by the concept of Brahmacharya, has to be properly transmuted into a creative/ productive work force.

Erections during the course of sleep at night are perfectly normal and healthy, even for a Brahmachari. This has got nothing to do with sexual arousal. This always happens during REM sleep (Rapid Eye Movement sleep). They occur on average every 90 minutes or so and typically last around 25 minutes, about the length of an episode of REM sleep. They have little to do with sex or erotic dreams, or with anything you may have been doing during the day.

Expulsion of semen in sleep is another matter. It is generally a product of unfulfilled sexual desires in the waking state. Also possible is that your prostate might have got infected to the point of malfunction resulting in sporadic production of the prostatic fluid.

Diseases/ abnormalities a sign of negative karma, due to misdeeds. Man's ascension in the path of Brahmacharya is his journey back to purity and divinity. Negative karma stored in his karmic account has to get worked out if he is to ascend higher. Some of these karma's are so strong that there is no way out but to go through suffering and thereby cleanse them. In any case, I would request you to concentrate on competent medical treatment first till you solve the problem

Hi Dhananjay,

I have question about temptations that arise when practicing brahmacharya, as it appears that people seem to be taking more of an interest towards me now since I have started to commit myself fully to my spiritual practices. Do people seem to be attracted to you more when you practice brahmacharya and meditate a lot? I asked a swami about this recently and he said to me that you need to be careful in the next couple of years because people will be attracted to the energy you emanate particularly women. Is this true? As much as I would love to meditate away in the forest somewhere. I am have to interact with society on a daily basis.

Answer
Hello Michael :-)

How are you? How's your life of Brahmacharya progressing? Coming to your queries...

I understand you intend to ask regarding:

Q1. People getting attracted to a Brahmachari further to a life of Brahmacharya:

A: When a man steps into a life of celibacy, he conserves energy which was earlier being sexually dissipated. Semen conservation and transmutation with pure thoughts, words and deeds produces 'Ojas' (divine energy) and 'Tejas' (luster) in one's persona. This in effect is equal to electricity. It is the manifestation of the universal cosmic power. Such a positively charged Brahmachari with a large reserve of cosmic energy becomes very active, energetic and powerful in all fronts. Just as a powerful north poled magnet naturally attracts iron filings (south polarity), a true Brahmachari is an embodiment of positive electrical energy. Women naturally find him attractive and appealing and hence are drawn to him.

But the aspiring Brahmachari should stay clear of women, knowing their beauty to be nothing more than an illusion in the cosmic drama called life. His contact with women in particular should be limited and only if necessary. Interactions should be to the point and not more. Lust is the greatest trickster. It has the uncanny ability of arising out of very innocent contact. It is tenacious and more patient than the most ardent celibate.

The true Brahmachari should ever be humble before god and the world, realizing his power not to be his own but a reflection of the divine power shining 'through' him. He should never bloat in ego and consider 'himself' the doer, for it is god the doer. The moment ego blossoms, his downfall begins. A man intent of achieving the ultimate goal of self-realization through celibacy should till he achieves his goal be ever vigilant against the onslaught of lust, temptation, anger and ego. Birth of any one of these nourish the others and become impediments in the path of the celibate.

Q2. How does one maintain Brahmacharya, whilst being in the world?

A: The technique of achieving this objective is to develop intense faith and devotion to god in addition to one's celibate practices. Constant self-contemplation coupled with prayer to god to help reach a state of dispassion towards the world gradually bear effect. As Lord Krishna tells in the Bhagavad-Gita "The saint of steady wisdom is 'In the world, yet out of it' ", a celibate yogi indulges in efficient action without caring and attachment for the resultant fruits. Once we accomplish this, our achievements cannot goad our ego.

To sum up, you can give your best into the work you do without letting the results affect you. Be indifferent to flattery. Also stay clear of sexually laced talk/ humor. You can develop an attitude of being reserved and brief yet polite with women. Everyone acknowledges a courteous and polite man. A man of such behavior may initially raise brows, but in the long term people can respond with nothing else but respect.

Hope this makes things more clear Michael :-)

God bless and have a nice day

Question
QUESTION: Hello,

Thank you for your answers in the matter of celibacy.

Through this, i am so interested to clarify regarding the 'ejaculatory mode' you had explain in the topic 'Advice on technique' asked by one of the seeker to you here.

You had explained that the semen that got into this mode would not be anymore be transmuted into ojas. The reason for this is that, the process of expellation has already moved.

So, i had assumed that it is already considered a loss of the creative fluid.

Can you please explain it further.

Cause, i read from another source that one can engage in sex 'moderately' and the effect is like the one in celibacy so long as there is no ejaculation happening. For short,it is tantric mode of sex.

Assuming one is regular in his meditation,it explained that the fluid that have not been expelled during Tantric sex would be absorbed through the bladder and other routes from the pelvic region to higher parts of the body, nourishing the nervous system.

Can you please enlighten us.

ANSWER: Hello there :-)

Hope you are keeping well. Let's get into answering your queries:

Q. Can one indulge in 'Tantric sex' or say moderate amounts of sex without ejaculation and yet get the effects of celibacy ?

A. 'Tantric sex' is a method of enjoyment of sexual pleasure, where the people involved follow a certain mode of life/ practices in order to enhance and prolong sexual pleasure before, during and after the sexual act. It consists of various means to achieve this objective.
'Celibacy is abandonment of and freedom from sexual pleasure forever in thought, word and deed at all places and times.

gross aim of tantric sex most often since time immemorial has been sense pleasure and gratification. The danger in treading this path was profound for a normal man in the age old days itself, let alone in today's times without the aid of a masterly guru, proficient in the subject. Since the 'Vaama marga' involves indulgence in the sexual act, starting from the physical level and reaching higher states, the risk of a student tripping and falling into the pit of lust is very strong.

Sex without ejaculation is definitely much better than with ejaculation, since semen is not lost during the act. Wastage of energy doesn't occur and it does make the person reach a certain stage of celibacy. However this comes with conditions. By following a life of sexual moderation without ejaculation, a man will no doubt be more of a celibate and a cut above than the man who leads a life of sexual wastage. This is not really due to absorbtion but due to lack of need for the body to produce semen. This holds good upto the point of good health, clear thinking and other general health benefits at the physical level. But beyond this, if man aspires to reach the state of 'Soul bliss' or 'God bliss', which has been described in the scriptures to be equal to a million times the pleasure of a physical orgasm (Sri Ramakrishna Paramahansa called the magnitude of 'Soul bliss' to be somewhat close to having sex through the millions of pores in the human body) a life of absolute celibacy for 12 years, giving up all the sense pleasures becomes mandatory. A man indulging in any form of sexual pleasure cannot become an 'Urdhvareta'. The gates beyond general benefits will not open for him.

I will explain the rational behind this. In a moderate sex life without orgasm, while man no doubt conserves his semen during the act, he also unknowingly/ gradually develops an attachment/ liking and strong desire for the pleasure generated from sexual contact. Also since woman is the source of his pleasure, he begins to associate her as an object of pleasure rather than as a soul- 'The manifestation of god'. This strong karma for sexual pleasure that gets stored in his 'Karmic account' ultimately takes him to a state where he can no longer rise beyond the sex plane. Any pleasure produced by the five senses (sight, smell, taste, sound, touch) is temporary and ultimately leads man into pain. It really is no pleasure at all as it is 'Maya' or an illusion, a nervous stimulation only and not 'Soul bliss'. Man has to indulge in more and more of sex to get the effect that he first got in course of time. 'The word 'moderation' is relative. The limits set by man are stretchable by his own imaginatioin. Further to getting deep into this mode of life, he will ultimately come to a stage where his vital fluid deserts him directly or indirectly. Once this happens he can no longer rise up the path of becoming an 'Urdhvareta'. Loss of semen also becomes an impediment for deep meditation, further to the 'Prana' getting unsettled.

It is for this reason, scriptures cutting across religions require a man attempting self-realization to wholly give up pleasure generated by the senses. As long as there is sense pleasure there cannot be soul bliss. They are mutually exclusive. God gives us two options: Either to reach out to him shunning the senses and reach a state of permanent soul bliss or to fool ourselves with the senses, thinking the illusion to be pleasure, while in reality it is nothing but delusion. And finally even the man who chooses senses, realizes very late of them being cheats and has to finally get back to the first path.
Also by reaching the 'Urdhvareta' state, scriptures stress a man is bestowed at the end of 12 years with superhuman powers, the vision of god and the fruition of all his desires.

At the individaul level, I will suggest a simple experiment you can indulge in to 'personally realize' this fact. Live a life of strict celibacy in thought, word and deed for three months. At the end of these three months, you can tell me the difference if any that you experienced by a life of meditation with total celibacy and no sex. I am eager to meet you again with the report :-)

Trust this helps

God bless and have a nice day :-)

QUESTION: Thanks Dhananjay,

Your response for my inquiry is worthy to be treasured. It really do.

As for my experiences, i was perfectly celibate for more than 6 months in thought, word and deed. Yes, you're right, it was worth the effort. I can really tell you honestly that my moods were always full of zest and enthusiasm that time. i even thought that life is full of blessings.

During and before this time, i was already practicing moderate meditation and physical exercises. You can call it yoga.it was also a time of serious research of knowledge. You know, 'Spiritual knowledge'.

Then, i got married. And since 'Tantric knowledge' has already been part of my research, i did tried it for a couple of months. Ejaculation control was perfectly mastered. no slips you know.

But then, i began experiencing mood swings and anger. 'Why', i thought?
It's okey you know if it's occasional, but unfortunately, it's more often. Then, i began doubting about the authenticity of 'Tantra'.

So now, i resolve to practice moderate non-ejaculatory relations. About once every two weeks, or once a month. Again, 'life' sets in again.

That was my experience bro. Dhananjay.

Now, all i can say is thank you. Hope people like you and Ian, would alwasy be there with a 'sword of truthfullness'. It's my instinct, honestly.

See you after three months like what you said, hehe..

Take care.

Answer

Hello there once again :-)

The benefits of celibacy can never be overstressed. From my own personal experience, I have come to the conclusion that they increase with every passing day and are virtually endless; riveting what has already described in the Holy Scriptures. What is required of us is only devotion, honesty, integrity and a strong will to enforce discipline. The rewards flow by themselves, and compared to their magnitude, our efforts pale in comparison.

As stated from your personal experience, indulgence of sense pleasures in any form results in the formation of the desire-anger combination. In the Bhagavad-Gita Lord Krishna describes this combo as a two sided sword which is the cause of all evil and pain on earth. He further states that they are born from the ‘Activating nature’ or ‘Rajasic temperament’. It is for this reason, celibates are asked to avoid stimulating food and company.

The 'Tantric' approach is akin to walking a tight rope between two high rises. Even the slightest gust of wind will send one crashing down.

If you find giving up sex all of a sudden tough (since your wife and her needs also need to be looked into), gradually decrease the frequency over a period of time. If your sexual interactions are now say bi-monthly, make them once in 20 days from the coming month (without ejaculation). Increase this period to 25 days the next month and so on. This will give you and your wife time to understand the benefits of shunning sexuality and the bliss of sexless ness. This is very important. It is an uphill task for a married man to practice Brahmacharya without support from his wife. The right approach is to educate her with literature and experience the benefits of a life of 'Brahmacharya'. Once man and lady are attuned in their approach, celibacy becomes a boat easy to sail.

Mahatma Gandhi, the world renowned freedom fighter and the father of India and his wife Kasturba practiced a life of celibacy. Content regarding chastity from the great man in his biography 'My experiments with truth' are available at: - http://www.rkvenkat.org/srvsi.pdf

P.S: Your query regarding semen in 'ejaculatory mode' is explained in the topic 'Forms of semen'

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I would like to know the meaning of semen in 'ejaculatory mode'. COuld you please explain?

Answer
Hello there :-)

Trust you are doing good.
Coming to your query regarding the forms of semen, here is an elaboration:

The vital energy or 'Prana' in a person basically exists in three states.

1. NORMAL STATE OR SUBTLE STATE: In the normal state, vital energy is spread over the entire body (in blood, bones, muscle, nerves etc…) giving us energy to indulge in various day to day activities. Pranic energy in this state is integral with the entire body in a state of harmony and union. The body is fully geared and in availability of life force to perform action efficiently. Based on the kind of activity we indulge in, life force flows to that particular part to perform the action. For example when an athlete gears up to run a marathon, his life force focuses into his leg muscles. When a boxer is in the ring, his life force centers around his arm muscles, when a chess player in midst of a game, his life force is concentrated in his brain and so on.

2. GROSS STATE OR SEMEN STATE:

When man is under sexual excitement, his life force or Prana is withdrawn from every part of the body and focused into the sex center. Life energy which was earlier in a subtle state of amalgamation with his blood, flesh etc… in the NORMAL STATE, separates from those regions to a large extent and flows to his sex center. This sends a signal for his testes to produce sperm. The prostate gland gets ready with the prostatic fluid. The Cowper's glands ready up the Bulbo Urethral fluid. Man is now fully geared up to engage in the sex act. Almost all his vital energy, except the basic energy required for his vital organs to function has now come down to the sex center. Energy is in a sate of wait to propel semen out of his system. Note how sexually aggressive a person becomes when he is fully aroused in the sex plane. This is further to all his Prana in a state of sexual focus. In this state man cannot efficiently indulge in any other activity other than the sexual act. Ask a fully aroused man to play a game of chess… he might not even remember the movements! Semen in this state is the linear, gross representation of his Prana or vital energy in liquid form. Energy which was earlier in electricity like form has now become physical, embodied in liquid semen.

In a man who constantly resides in the sex plane, his Prana is mostly in this gross semen form. This is the reason such people cannot effectively carry out any other form of work. The nature of gross semen is expellation. Its sole purpose is to reach outside to aid reproduction. This is called the 'ejaculatory mode'. It cannot perform any other function in this state. If not let out immediately, it will flow out in a wet dream.

Once in the 'ejaculatory mode' semen can never be fully reconverted back to Pranic energy. The sexual glands secreted various physical secretions to manufacture gross semen. All these processes are not fully reversible even through transmutation and meditation. There are severe limitations. A considerable volume of vital energy will flow out, immaterial of meditation or celibacy, once it has reached this final gross form due to sexual duress.

3. VERY SUBTLE STATE OR OJAS STATE:

When a yogi leads a life of true celibacy, conserving all his vital energy and transcending it from its NORMAL STATE to a highly concentrated, very subtle state through techniques such as meditation, asana, Pranayama etc… His Prana becomes very subtle in nature. Its intensity increases to a great extent. It is akin to gross water being heated and converted to superheated-gaseous steam in a distillation plant. Vital energy now has enormous potential energy. It rises up like steam does and reaches his 'AJNA CHAKRA' or the point between his eyebrows. This is called 'OJAS STATE'. The full power of this state is said to come to a Brahmachari further to 12 years of true celibacy, without wastage of even a single drop of semen. His Pranic energy is now totally sublimated. It gives him the ability to enter the metaphysical word/ astral planes. He can get astral visions, knowledge of creation, god etc… Advanced Urdhvareta yogis get powers such as 'Trikala Gnyana' or knowledge of the past, present and future. Many ancient sages in this state had 'Ashta Siddhis' or eight superhuman powers like Levitation (ability to fly), astral travel, ability to make the body microscopic or macroscopic, 'Bhuta vidya' or the power to converse with wild animals and win their obedience, Listening to sounds many miles away (Doorashravana), Power of sight ranging to hundreds of miles (Dooradristi) and many more

(I will give a detailed description of all the Siddhis for the information of celibates in another answer sheet) Most importantly, the yogi gets vision of God and is blessed with self-realization. This is the highest state.

Celibates should understand what exactly sublimation is all about. Urdhvareta kriya in reality is not conversion of gross semen into Ojas. It is conversion of subtle/ normal Prana into Ojas, by preventing the formation of gross semen. If you continuously indulge in sexual activity that brings down Prana from its NORMAL STATE to a lower GROSS/SEMEN STATE, sublimation becomes difficult and roundabout. It must again be brought back to its NORMAL STATE and then taken to the VERY SUBTLE/ OJAS STATE.

The answer to what happens in a man at the start of celibacy lies in this fact. At the start of celibacy when man shuns sex stimuli, his Prana or vital energy comfortably rests in the NORMAL/SUBTLE state. Earlier it was being brought down to form semen. Now that need has been removed. The body stops production of earlier quantities of semen. Initial stages of celibacy do not really involve re-absorption. Most volume of semen in gross form at the start of celibacy actually flows out. It is due to lack of further production by which energy levels go up. This is exactly why for celibacy to bear fruit say beyond three months or so, sublimation into OJAS is necessary. Till this time the body is actually not in a state of re-absorption. It is only in a state of non-production and in a state of harmonization of existing Prana at the SUBTLE STATE. Further to this, production of gross semen goes on reducing and formation of more and more Prana goes on increasing (provided the celibacy is true and genuine)

So when we say sublimation of semen into higher forms, it is really sublimation of Prana in NORMAL STATE into OJAS STATE. For Prana to reach NORMAL STATE, man should desist from sexual excitement thereby prevent formation of GROSS/ SEMEN STATE. In an Urdhvareta yogi, this is fully achieved. His body does not produce gross semen at all. The vital energy required to sustain his body and intellect are fed from that part of his Prana. The rest is fully converted to OJAS.

Trust this makes things clear. Revert to me for clarifications if any.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I am very well with each week that passes new experiences arise.
Lately I have been noticing increased body heat. It is winter here and I don't seem to get cold anymore. While everyone else has their jumpers on I dont. The body temperature will rise during meditation aswell. I also notice I don't get sick anymore either all of my friends have colds and it never gets to me. So my main question is the increased body heat a by product of meditation and brahmacharya? I'm also experiencing a duality between the physical body and the energy body. The physical body can be exhausted from the gym. And yet I can lay in bed and this other part of me is at full power so to speak.

Answer
Hello Michael :-)

Nice to hear from you and to know you are doing well. Coming to your queries, Q: Does Brahmacharya increase the body heat?

A: Yes, it certainly does. When a celibate indulges in yogasana and meditation upon god, thereby transmuting his Rethas (semen) into Ojas, the vast amount of energy which was formerly dissipated due to loss of semen now gets converted to energy and heat. This results in increased strength, energy, vitality and cheer. Further, Ojas which is called the “Divine nectar” has the power of annihilating all decay, disease and degeneration at the physical and mental level. A true Brahmachari seldom falls ill and even if he does due to some past negative karma, will recover in no time. This will explain your lack of need for extra warm clothing and no illness.

Also in a Brahmachari who has converted his Rethas into Ojas, The face starts becoming more and more red in color. This is further to semen being converted into heat.

I had a tendency for cough and tonsillitis before the onset of celibacy. The slightest change in weather used to give me a sore throat. All these irregularities disappeared after a few months of Brahmacharya. And now I take cold water showers daily! While my body is as warm as the rays of the sun. A cold water bath is very useful to the Brahmachari for the following reasons:

1. It kills passion and lustful thoughts
2. It regulates the excess heat produced
3. Cold water has immense 'Pranic energy' or natural cosmic energy filled by Mother Nature. When you heat water this gets destroyed.

Gradually reduce the temperature of shower water over a period of time (say one month) till it equals atmospheric temperature and tell me the difference in your life of Brahmacharya :-)

One of the signs of an Urdhvareta is his uncanny ability to be indifferent to the extremes of heat and cold, pain and pleasure and in general to the dualities of life. The mind becomes so strong and receptive to your commands that you will be able to withdraw your mind from the sense of heat, cold, pain etc… at your will.

By the way what are the changes you observe in your food habits (quantity, type of food) further to celibacy?

Question
I have been striving for celibacy for years. although I slip at times. I am celibate most of the time. I have noticed that I can see filth in others, I can see the perverse and they make me sick at times. I can hardly stand to keep company with them. I find their conversations so uninteresting, harsh, and underdeveloped. Why is this happening. Should I rid myself of such friends. Could that be why i slip at times? I want to be completely chaste until marriage. I read a book that talks about falling in love with a girls heart, and that is what I am waiting for.

Answer
Hello Carr :-)

Trust you are keeping well. Coming to your queries,

Q: Does bad company affect Brahmacharya?
A: Most people indulge in base thoughts, words and deeds thinking them to be a source of pleasure. This is due to 'Avidya' or maya – an illusion. They go in search of sense stimuli and ultimately get caught in the web of passion which takes them deeper and deeper into sin.

A celibate who is firm regarding his goal for growth should by all means avoid such company and talk. Wrong company sends out wrong/ negative vibrations which upset celibacy. You cannot be celibate beyond a limit in such environment.

If milk is mixed in water, it dissolves completely without distinction. If your turn milk into yogurt and then yogurt into butter and then put butter in water, it floats with no mixing. We are all beginner celibates akin to milk with water comparable to bad company and temptations. Till we reach the state of butter, we should ever be alert against water!

It is an indication of your presence in the path of purity that you feel offended by such people and their company. You should uphold this tendency of yours and strive toward a life of celibacy without slips. Once you meet the right 'soul' in the form of your wife as a life partner, you will be able to bring to life very 'special' and talented offspring, following which you can continue in the path of celibacy.

Well, the right approach is to fall in love with a girls 'soul' who is none other than the great lord! It is god who manifests as a soul in each and every one of us. The soul is beyond mind, body, intellect and consciousness, so see god in the person you love :-)

I wish you the very best in your path of celibacy and am sure that you will meet the right girl, who will give you happiness and spiritual growth as the right life partner should.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

Does really having a red face means good spiritual attainment?

I have a companion who has a 'pale' face in color. And we've been together for so long now.

I ask you you this cause maybe this would result in reducing my spiritual upliftment due to the fact that we're always together. Like mingling with 'psychic toxins' you know.

How about body constitution, does it affect the color of ones face and relate to ones health (whether spiritually or physically)? I mean for example if one has a pale or whitish face, would it not be possible that she is healthy?

Please enlighten us.

Also, Does the emission during wet dream (during sleep) equal to the energy loss in voluntary ejaculation? That is, one wet dream equal to one voluntary ejaculation.

If so or not, how and why?

Hope you don't mind for this.

Thanks..

Also,

Answer
Hello there :-)

Hope you are doing good. Coming to your queries,

Q1: Does pale complexion have anything to do with spiritual enlightenment?
A: Factually speaking, the facial complexion by itself has nothing to do with the spiritual enlightenment of a person. However, it has been seen that most celibates in the path of genuine celibacy start to develop a deeper, richer skin color. This is further to the energy and heat increase along with the rich amount of nutrients the blood contains further to reabsorbtion of vital fluids in their body, thereby also contributing to an increase in the blood count.

However some people may have a pigmental skin constitution which prevents their skin from getting any more dark or red. This color change is general and applies to the majority while there may be exceptions. So I would suggest not taking this as a deciding factor to determine the spiritual level of a person.

Again as regards to health also, there are some people pale in color yet healthy. It need not necessarily mean otherwise. However majority of cases with overtly pale complexion are generally linked to conditions such as Anemia or a poor blood count, which generally disappear further to a few months true celibacy.

Q2: Does emission during a wet dream equal that of voluntary ejaculation?
A: Most often, the energy lost in a wet dream is much less as compared to a voluntary ejaculation. Sometimes it is mostly prostatic fluid without much or negligible sperm. A wet dream occurs in dream state/ semi-conscious state when the sub-conscious mind is at work. Hence the wastage is not very high as compared to voluntary ejaculation in the awake state.

However it becomes important to realize that wet dreams are a clear indication of dormant lust unfulfilled. Since the mind has been suppressed from such thoughts while awake, it resorts to them in the dream when the intellect and consciousness are at their low. This is an indication that the aspirant should work harder towards realizing the fallacy and unreal nature of the senses and enlighten himself with truth.

Question
I am a 59 year old man that has been addicted to masturbation and pornography for all of these years. I am married but this addiction has destroyed my physical relationship with my wife. I feel that my only hope is celibacy. I really and truly want to know if it is possible for someone of my age to become celibate. Is their such a chemical imbalance now that it is impossible? Unless I do something, I will die in this addiction. How do I start? With just a decision to stop? I have tried before and can stop for periods of weeks but inevitably I fall again. I really appreciate your answers. Blessings to you.

Answer
Hello Rod :-)

It’s really nice to see one realize the ill effects of porn and wanton sexuality. You must’ve heard the saying ‘Better late than never’. This applies to celibacy and purity also. Let’s address the problem on hand.

Q1: Is it possible to be celibate after midlife?
A: Celibacy or "Brahmacharya" is man's journey back to divinity and purity. It is immaterial of one's age and gender. While the ill effects of uncontrolled sexuality no doubt take a big toll at the physical, mental and karmic plane with time, there is no better cure and hope than celibacy. Celibacy alone is the cure in the path of undoing one's wrongs. You have taken the first right decision in showing interest in chastity.

Q2: What is the technique to de-addict oneself from pornography and masturbation?
A: This is one objective, the achievement of which depends on the success of a multi pronged attack against the delusive senses. I will outline some of the techniques you can employ:

STEP I: Creative activity to keep the mind busy:
The tendency to watch porn and masturbate grows in people who make time for it. Keep yourself busy with productive and creative activity. If you are a working professional, devote all your energies into work during work hours. Don't let the mind wander to the opposite sex. You will have to be very strict and firm while enforcing this. Remember always to be on alert against the onslaught of the senses. Work with the aim of giving your heart and soul towards the job on hand and creating something valuable for yourself and those dear to you. Being busy and thereby keeping the mind occupied on worthy pursuits is the best panacea to prevent lust from sowing its seeds.

STEP II: Physical exercise:
Indulge in moderate physical exercise or play a sport you like early in the morning at least for an hour or so. Physical exercise converts sexual energy into bodily health and strength. When you feel strong, bright and cheerful, disgust will dawn at the concept of filthy sexuality. Pornography and masturbation are the worst forms of artificial and degenerative sexuality. Keep the thought of their ill effects in mind whenever you feel tempted towards porn.

STEP III: Filters:
Install a powerful net content filter on your system (K9 web protect is a good option. You can download it free from: http://www1.k9webprotection.com/getk9/download-software.php) If necessary ask your wife to choose the password and not to tell you the same. This will prevent access to harmful sites. Make your computer a device to access matter related to spirituality and well being. Let it be the gateway to freedom from porn.

STEP IV: True love for one's spouse:
Rod, we should always remember that the near and dear people we come across in life are special manifestations of god trying to enrich our life. Your wife is god in the human form, talking, serving, smiling and being there for you. Keep in mind the way she serves you with love, affection, concern and understanding. Is it right for us to be selfish and undermine such a person? Keep in mind the happiness she will experience further to true love and attention from your side as her life partner. The happiness she gets from you being strong, bright and contented. True love is not based on bodily beauty. The bodily beauty in a man or woman is an illusion. It is akin to a mirage. It was never really there. Keep this in mind. A person addicted to sexuality can never be a good human being. He firstly does injustice to himself by becoming firewood to the fire of lust. Direct your energies towards being a good husband and a human being.

STEP V: Prayer to god:
Set aside some time of the day to meditate upon god. Further to meditation pray to god honestly and sincerely with the temerity of a child to redeem you of all ills. With the divine grace of god, nothing is impossible. This is very important.

I would suggest you to read 'The practice of Brahmacharya' by his holiness Swami Sivananda to help you in your journey. It is available at: http://www.dlshq.org/download/brahma_nopic.htm

Trust this helps. I wish you speedy growth in the path of celibacy and redemption from the ill effects of lust and temptation. Don't hesitate to ask questions if any.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I hope all is well. The cold showers that you advised seem to be helping a lot I have even more energy throughout the day and it helps curb lustful thoughts.

I have a question about an experience that has been happening lately. There appears to be a tingling sensation at the crown of my head, feels like static electricity. I experience this in meditation and randomly during the day at varying degrees of intensity. What does this mean?

Also I have been experiencing a ringing noise when meditating. But its not unpleasant its actually quite soothing could you also explain what this is?

Michael

Answer
Hello Michael :-)

How are things going...
Good to see you are benefiting by the use of cold showers. Cold water has the tendency to negate lustful heat in the body and enrich the body with positive cosmic energy.

Q1: Tingling sensation in the crown
A: The crown of the head represents the 'Sahasrara chakra' or the thousand petaled lotus. It is the highest and most divine chakra in the human body, and the seat of union of consciousness with the almighty. A tingling sensation here generally occurs to the aspirant during the initial stages of ascent of consciousness to higher planes. There is nothing to worry about. You should continue your practices. With time, things will stabilize and you will develop harmonization.

Q2: Ringing noise during meditation
A: A ringing noise during meditation is one among the various 'Anahata sounds' or the sounds coming under the purview of the fourth chakra at the heart region. There are various other sounds associated with this chakra such as the humming of a bee, the blowing of a conch, the tinkling sound of cymbals, the sound of thunder etc... Advent of these sounds again suggests the ascent of consciousness into higher planes in the metaphysical world. These are all gestures of encouragement given by god to the aspirant in the path of spiritual enlightenment.

At this stage, I would request you not give too much importance to them but concentrate on focusing your mind on the great lord during meditation. Make your mind intent on knowing the true form of god, and meditate without any expectations of fulfillment of material desires (a true aspirant need not worry regarding the fruition of desires, for the closer he gets to god, god takes care of fulfilling even the minutest of his desires) This will clear the path for further progress.

Wishing you the very best for further progress
God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
QUESTION: Hello Dhananjay,

Thanks for a very kind elaboration.

However, the ‘fprms of semen’ that you had explained still bothers me. Im a little confused.

The thing is, you said, having moderate non-ejaculatory sex is much better than with ejaculation. There is no energy lost, right? This is assuming one follows a certain lifestyle such as regular meditation, exercise, etc.

On the otherhand, it is just a cut above the normal men than a celibate mode of life having also regular meditation, exercise, etc. in front.

So based on my understanding, no matter how deligent and expert the Tantric lover in the art of love, in mastering his seed, and no matter how moderate (let say once a month or once in two months) it is still inferior or far lower than the celibate in terms of spirituality.

How?

I thought what matters most is the preservation and cultivation of sexual energy in ones body. Also I presume that during non-ejaculatory sex, it is already a lost due to penile stimulation that result to prostrate, seminal vesicle and testicle's secretions which somehow when not ejaculated during tantric session leaves the body through wet dreams, repetition of sexual urges until ejaculated, etc. Am I right?

For example, if we compare John and Kane. In which John practices 20 minutes Tantric intercourse w/o ejaculation once in two months and Kane is purely celibate. Who among them has better spiritual attainment if both of them ejaculate only once in three years for the purpose of progeny, if assuming both of them are regular in their meditation, exercise, etc..?

Hope you don't mind. Thanks.

ANSWER: Hello there :-)

I'm doing good, trust things are great your side too… Thank you for the questions; let's get to the answers,

Q: Who between John and Kane will get more spiritually enlightened?
A: While both might exhibit similar benefits initially further to the common factor called 'non-ejaculation', Kane will achieve concrete spiritual enlightenment in the long run.

Let's analyze the rationale behind this statement.
Why does John want to indulge in non-ejaculatory sex? There are two reasons:
1. He wants to conserve his seed and grow spiritually.
2. But, he also wants to enjoy sensory pleasure derived from sexual contact.

These two objectives are contradictory and opposite. It is like wanting to eat the cake and have it too. We all know this is not possible. The objective of conserving one's seed is for spiritual enlightenment, while the act of having sex is aimed at enjoyment of sensual pleasure. Sexual gratification, with or without ejaculation is earthly, sensory and ties man firmly to his delusive side. Unless carried out with the aim of begetting progeny, its purpose is wholly sensual.

A man trying to do both is taking one step ahead further to non-ejaculation and two steps back by increasing his familiarity with the imaginary pleasure derived from sexual contact. This will bind him more and more to his animalistic side and prevent ascension into the realm of spirituality. At most he may derive the benefits of celibacy at the physical level. At some stage, slavery for the want of sex sensation will result in his seed deserting him knowingly or unknowingly, wherein his spiritual progress comes back to square one.

Illusory sense pleasures and soul bliss are equally opposite and mutually exclusive like two sides of a coin. Can we look at both heads and tails at the same time? No. We can either see heads or tails. Viewing one side prevents the other from being seen. God has made these two in the same way. The man who associates himself with sense pleasures cannot fathom soul bliss and the man who knows soul bliss has no mind for sense pleasures. To the spiritually enlightened man who has tasted soul bliss, sense pleasures seem like stale, cold food. He has tasted fresh, piping hot food and can no longer stand the thought of spoilt food.

We are all souls in various stages of delusion, yet to taste soul bliss emanating from spiritual enlightenment. We have for long been conditioned into eating cold, stale food called sense pleasures, erringly assuming them to be tasty, for we know not fresh, hot food (soul bliss).

How can a man fed on cold, stale food since birth ever know the allure of fresh, piping hot food? Or will he ever go back to eating such spoilt food once he tastes heavenly food? No. It is here that perfecting celibacy to the full extent comes into play. Absolute celibacy becomes the ladder to reach the high state of soul bliss.

The prize called soul bliss which comes at the highest stage of spiritual enlightenment is a very coveted catch. Celibacy is the foundation on which all efforts at claiming this prize are based upon. God in fact places various obstacles and temptations in the path of the celibate, offering less coveted states which are achievable more easily as a test. He tests our commitment and intensity with various temptations. The sex temptation is the chief among them. While the less ardent celibate deviates from his path and settles for the less coveted states, thereby locking himself out of the kingdom of soul bliss, the true celibate gives up all forms of sense pleasures knowing very well the great prize waiting for him at the end and is amply rewarded with soul bliss and self-realization by god at the fruition of his efforts.

In order to achieve true spiritual enlightenment, it is mandatory to overcome the desire for sense pleasures of all kinds and forms. Sexual pleasure is the strongest among all sense pleasures. Unless one succeeds in killing the familiarity of the sex sensation, one cannot fathom the depth of soul bliss. Indulgence in the sex act, even without ejaculation will always keep this familiarity alive and well fed.
At the personal level, I will suggest a simple experiment you can try to get more convinced regarding the above elaboration. Lead a life of true celibacy in thought, word and deed (no sex, no ejaculation) for six months. At the end of these six months, revert to me with the difference in spiritual bearing that you find if any :-)

Hope this helps in the clearance of doubt. I wish you the very best towards spiritual enlightenment.
God bless and have a nice day

Question
Good Morning,
I have a question as regards to the changes which take place in the body further to a celibate becoming a Urdhvareta. Could you shed some light?

Answer
Q: What are the changes which take place at the physical level in one who is transforming himself into an Urdhvareta?
A: It takes a very long time, with very honest and sincere Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed coupled with Gods grace for one to achieve full sex sublimation including the stoppage of wet dreams. However, as an aspirant climbs up the ladder of Brahmacharya to the best of his efforts by abhorring from the sexual act, ejaculation and impure thoughts for a considerable period of time; An inner phenomenon called Urdhvareta kriya (process) also called by the name 'Vajroli' takes place in his system, due to which semen which was earlier flowing downward and being ejaculated outward now starts flowing upward and inward. This aids the formation of 'Ojas' shakti in his brain. The aspirant is not yet a complete Urdhvareta, as he has not yet achieved complete sex sublimation or transmutation. Semen will still flow down if he is not vigilant against the senses (wet dreams stop in one who is a complete Urdhvareta).

When the aspirant maintains this state of Brahmacharya for a considerable period of time from when the 'Vajroli kriya' starts to function, the passage of flow of semen within his body (from the sex glands to the Urethra) starts to become narrow and constricted. Under such circumstances if he indulges in ejaculation of semen (even in a copious wet dream), instead of pleasure he experiences pain. This further aids in developing distaste and dispassion towards the sex act.

This is one of the most important of changes which occurs in the body of the Brahmachari at the physiological level. Coupled with this, certain external changes take place such as:

1. The body becomes more taut, wiry and lithe. The tendency to accumulate bulk and fat reduces.
2. The face develops a red hue and wrinkles gradually start to disappear.
3. The skin glows with luster and the eyes become bright. Eyesight starts to improve.
4. Overall, all organs in his body gradually start to return to their original state of maximum function (as they were during childhood)

From this stage onwards, the Brahmachari must be very, very careful in avoiding more than necessary contact with members of the opposite sex in particular and people in general. Further to the 'Vajroli kriya' taking place he starts to develop a magnetic personality and appears very alluring to the world in general and women in particular. Any act of letting his ego get goaded resulting in pompousness, pride or arrogance will immediately lead to his downfall in the form of his semen deserting him; for the appearance of these negative traits is invariably accompanied by blossoming of latent lust present within. The aspirant should very clearly know that he has no more conquered lust than a child has learnt to deal with the world. Lust is only in a state of control. It is still present in its fullest form within him, but in a latent and dormant state at most. From now on he has to be very humble before the world and god, always keeping in mind that this power he is developing is not his own but the power of God shining through him. Only humility, kindness and consideration towards fellow beings and an attitude of gratitude towards god for all that he has given will strengthen celibacy and make for further growth. (The answer to the question on hand has been elaborated a bit beyond its purview as a form of important general information to all Brahmachari-s with a view to help them achieve concrete growth)

Question

I am a man of 26. Its now 12 years since I first masturbated. Almost equal number of years I am trying to get rid of this habit but with no avail!
I am not able to control myself from ejaculating for more than 3-4 days in general. Pics of scantly clad women sometimes create havoc in my mind but more often than not I cheat myself by looking at them.
I want to get out of this problem. I just can't accept this situation. Its my dream to be a true bramhacharin. I am interested in spirituality for many years.
What should I do? Are there any exercise, visualization technique, etc which can help me? Please show some light in this regard.
Thanks

Answer

Q: How can one get rid of the habit of masturbation/ pornography?
A: The first and foremost requisite is the strong urge to achieve redemption from their vicious grip. Your intent is laudable and positive. In order to succeed practically, the following points carried out in tandem should help:

1. Keep the mind busy with constructive work:

This is one of the best panaceas in helping one stay clear of the problem. The desire to watch images & masturbate requires one to spend time, energy and thought in this direction. If you keep yourself busy with other productive work with an aim of achieving something valuable for yourself, this vice will automatically get squeezed into negation.

2. Indulge in physical exercise/ sport:

Regularly indulging in physical exercises or an outdoor sport that we like, helps convert sexual energy into bodily health and strength. The onset of lust and its growth into libido is nothing but flow of vital energy into the sexual domain. Exercise draws up energy from the sex center to our muscles and brain, thereby revitalizing the two. This will leave much less energy available for wanton activities.

3. Developing mental resolve:

This is the next important step. When one realizes the human body to be nothing more than a combination of bones, blood, flesh and other disagreeable secretions, dispassion will dawn at reality. Minus skin, the human body looks exactly like the cut up carcass of an animal. If necessary go to a morgue and have a look at the cutup body on an autopsy table. We shun in distaste secretions such as pus, phlegm, urine and excreta when they come out and yet try to fantasize on the very same body which is a bundle of all of these! Isn't it such an irony? This irony is a result of 'maya' or illusion. Sensual attraction is just a trick of the mind. In the first place there is nothing really to be attracted to. Further to death, the skeletal bones of a person lie in a heap, if the rotting flesh is separated. Where did the beauty go then? It was never really there. Remember it is this very flesh and bone on which one wastes his vital fluid to no avail. With time, the most beautiful body develops wrinkles, ages and goes into oblivion. Where did the beauty go then? Again it was never really there. Wasting semen on the body of a woman is like throwing hard earned money and assets on a fake investment plan. At least money can be regained with effort; semen once lost can never, never be reclaimed. With every ejaculation man loses a little bit of his very self! In course of time he will age very rapidly and debilitate into a degenerate at the mental, physical and karmic level.

4. Food and prayer:
To the extent possible, avoid extremely spicy food. Give up eating meat, onion and garlic. If you can't, eat meat not more than once or twice a week. From my own personal experience, meat eating is not at all the food for the Brahmachari. It produces animalistic tendencies and is a sure shot in giving food for sexual thoughts. Substitute it with protein sources from the plant kingdom and dairy products. Give up alcohol, tobacco and other addictions completely. Set aside some time of the day to meditate upon God and request him sincerely and longingly to help you tide over lust and to give you strength to keep the mental resolve.

With honest and sincere practice, god always extends his hand. We alone are the cause of our failures. When persistence and commitment tapers, failure is bound to set in. With will power, determination and tenacity, no one can snatch away success.

ॐ तत् सत्
(That Supreme being is the absolute truth)

Question
I have noticed that when I Lust with the eyes or thoughts I lose energy as well. How is the power being drained when no semen is lost? Also when I lust through the day I feel like I am in space most of the day. It affects me and makes me nervous and self conscience. I am happily practicing 100% chastity from now on. What are other ways to make my chastity 100 times more productive as far as accomplishments and intelligence. Is it just time?

Answer
Hello Carr :-)

Hope you are keeping well and enjoying the benefits of a celibate life with sustained efforts. Thank you for the query, coming to the answer:

Q: How does a man loose his energy through the sense of sight in spite of not engaging in the sexual act?
A: We perceive all in the external world around us only through the five senses namely:
1. Eyes -sense of sight
2. Nose -sense of smell
3. Tongue -sense of taste
4. Ear -sense of sound
5. Skin -sense of touch

Lustful thoughts reach the mind only via one of these five senses mentioned above. It is impossible for a man to experience the sex sensation without activation of one or more of these senses. So when you look at an object of lust, your eyes transmit this sensation to your mind resulting in the lustful thought. The mind in turn sends a signal to the sex organs towards activation. In a celibate committed and devoted to the concept of celibacy, such lustful thoughts cause mental and emotional pollution. This explains 'feeling dirty' further to lustful thoughts. Loss of energy is accompanied consecutively. Don't you feel a loss of energy when you get angry? It is very similar here too. Though this loss is smaller as compared to that from loss of semen, a cumulative of thoughts in the sex plane will make the seed come out eventually in a wet dream.

With sustained efforts, a disciplined life with adequate yoga or exercise and prayer to god for liberation, one achieves definite growth. It is very important to stay clear of all objects which fire up the sex plane through one of the above mentioned senses. That is, the celibate should stay away from sights, smells, food, sounds and physical touch which activate the sex plane. Coming to how long it takes, with every passing day you will find yourself brighter, happier, more cheerful and in possession of growing mental energy and ability. Further to 12 years of absolute chastity with not even a drop of semen loss (with the exception of the occasional period), the celibate is said to achieve superhuman powers and bliss incomparable to earthly standards along with the vision of god if he so desires. Also achieved is the power of total recall, wherein the celibate gets such a powerful memory that he can remember anything he wishes, however large it may be in magnitude. These are only some of the innumerable benefits and powers that he acquires. But the journey to this point is no less wonderful, and increases in bliss with every passing day of honest celibacy.

Trust this helps.

Wishing you all the every best in your noble endeavor of practicing 'Brahmacharya'
God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Do you have feelings of doubt as to whether your effort is worth it? Do you feel that you are missing out on life's greatest pleasure and one that is easily available? If so, how do you deal with these feelings of doubt?

Answer
Hello Bruce :-)

Trust you are doing good. Sorry for being a day late further to some commitments. Thank you for the query, let me elaborate on the core of the topic so the answer becomes clear:

Q: What should a celibate do when he gets into a state where a sense of doubt regarding chastity arises further to depriving oneself of the sex-sensation and the thought of 'I'm truly missing out on something' creeps into the mind?

A. Why does man reach out to sensual stimulus as a source of pleasure?

On study of the great treatises concerning spirituality and a regulated and disciplined spiritual life, one slowly comes to realize that the 'soul' (defined as the microsm of the macrosm (god)) in its pure state is itself bliss. The word bliss here means a unipolar state beyond happiness. Happiness is bi-polar as it has the opposite –'sadness'. Bliss is beyond polarity. This unipolar state of absolute freedom and standing is the inherent nature of the soul. The soul of every creature, be it man or animal is full of bliss, contentment and self contained. It is in a state of bliss further to itself, without requiring any external aid to propel it or contain it in this unique, lofty state. The treatises written by great masters teach us that, as soon as the soul descends into matter (further to identification with a body) by getting encased within the body, coverings of ignorance or 'maya' or 'avidya' start cocooning themselves around the soul. This results in the light and nobility of the soul getting hindered from reaching out (just as the clouds blocking the rays of the sun prevent them from reaching us). When this starts to happen, man whose basic nature is bliss (since he is actually the soul and not the body, mind intellect or ego) feels a scarcity of this bliss which he is originally accustomed to and goes in search of anything which appears to him as a source of bliss, for want of it (like a thirsty man in a desert walks for miles in the hope of reaching the mirage of an oasis, which is actually nothing but an illusion).

Sensual pleasure (derived externally through one of the five senses) is not really pleasure but only a tingling of nerves finally resulting in pain. Further to many successive births of indulgence in sensual activity as a source of pleasure, mans psyche begins to associate this nerve stimulation as the penultimate source of pleasure, for it has slowly forgotten its native state of 'soul bliss'. Most of us are in this state. It is here that 'Brahmacharya' comes as the ship for man to cross this ocean of delusion and reach the shore of 'true soul bliss'. By constant, persistent and honest practice of celibacy, man can slowly unwind and disentangle himself from this cocoon of 'maya' or delusion that he finds himself trapped himself in. Further to self-realization (total lack of bodily identification and acceptance that he is the soul) he gets into a state content in the self by the self. He requires no friends, parties, talk or anything else external for contentment, for he has realized the fallacy, temporary and hypocritical nature of everything external and the glory of his inner self and god.

When a man first starts on the path of celibacy, it is but natural that this percentage of 'delusion' is very high within him as compared to the percentage of soul bliss which is very minimal or almost non-existent. At this stage doubts sometimes do come as to the 'worth' of a celibate mode of life, which involves discipline and giving up of sensuality, for his psyche has long associated 'delusive pleasures' as agreeable. At such times, a firm and steady approach is required to tide them over and continue on the chosen path. What does a sprinter aiming to win the Olympics do? He sets aside all work, all merry, all junk food, all forms of distractions and focuses his heart and soul into the tough, hard and disciplined practice of preparing his mind and body for the final day. It is the same with celibacy which requires very consistent and honest efforts that are very Herculean at the start but with time, honesty and gods grace the sailing becomes more and more smooth.

All celibates have to go through the stage that you have mentioned initially. But with time, honest efforts and further to god's grace, things became easier. After around a year of honest celibacy (without breaks) the celibate reaches the next stage, wherein he cherishes and desires to be constantly in a state of unbroken celibacy, enjoying the new found bliss that has started to trickle. At this stage you don't 'miss' the old times but shudder at the thought of ever going back to that old state of delusion. When lustful thoughts do occasionally enter the mind, the celibate experiences pain, revulsion and guilt. All your energies focus at driving away these thoughts. The only thing you want is to be free of them and back to your state of 'celibacy' in thought, word and deed.

Trust this helps
God bless and have a nice day :-)

ANSWER: Hello Supriya :-)

It is always best to talk things out, so the pressure leaves us and a solution could be worked out. Let me rephrase your queries and try to throw light on the subject:

Q: Is it normal for a person to feel and proceed with ‘attraction’ he might feel towards his siblings/ parents?

A: The concept of sexuality one feels for fellow humans of the opposite sex is itself a product of delusion. It is a result of ignorance at the innate level. Man in reality is the pure soul. The soul by itself is beyond sexuality. It has no gender/ age/ form or want. It is imperishable, everlastingly permanent, inviolable and in a state content in itself. Soul in a man or a woman is just ‘soul’, it is the body which has a male or female form. On physical death, it again becomes just the ‘soul’ without any bodily identification.

However for the purpose of creation, the great Lord has made it necessary for man and woman to exchange their reproductive elements and produce offspring. This is the primal purpose of the sexual act. Any extension of this act beyond the above said purpose leads man to associate sensual pleasure with this act heavily. He begins to look up to this act as a form of recreation and relaxation. Further to many lives in this mode of thought and action, he begins to look at any member of the opposite sex not as a manifestation of the ‘soul’ but as an ‘object’ of sex and so called sexual pleasure. Age, relationship and sometimes even gender (as in case of homosexuals) become immaterial to him. He starts to look at every living being only through sexually tinted sight. The other person is no longer a ‘person’ but only an object of sex. In order to achieve sexual satisfaction from these ‘objects’ he lies to them claiming true love, manipulates, cheats and uses cunning.

At the start of adolescence, sexual tendencies of previous lives slowly start to manifest. A strong curiosity and liking for the concept of sex begins to raise its hood. These are the result of former indulgences stored in the ‘causal’ body or the ‘karana sharira’, the depository of all our tendencies and karma. At this point of time, if the sex impulse carried over from previous births is very strong, the child might get propelled into unnatural acts of intimacy with siblings or parents without its own knowledge. Before it knows what is happening, it has stepped into ‘forbidden’ ground. Under such circumstances, it forms the duty of the parents to correct, guide and show the right path to the child.

The act of your parent sleeping semi clothed with you (whatever the purpose might me) during childhood is unfortunate. The first duty of a parent is to ensure that the surroundings and atmosphere the child grows in do not induce in it a tendency toward wrong doing or thinking. While your mother's action might not have been intentional, its result upon you has had a negative effect in the form of stirring up of sensual feelings and finally guilt.

Great sages and saints across the world advocate only one thing. To consider all fellow beings as mothers, sisters or brothers in effect. There is no other relationship in reality. Once a child is born to a man from one's wife, the man is advised to lead a life of celibacy looking at his wife as the 'Divine mother'. These masters were not fools to advocate such a outlook. They did it so man could transcend the concept of the 'sex delusion' and get in touch with the real bliss; 'soul bliss'.

As the saying goes, past is history. We are totally powerless to alter actions once committed. It is the present which is in our hands. With pure thinking, virtuous living, non-violence and love/ peace toward the world at large, man can raise himself out of the deepest wells of sin.

Consider what has happened in your life as a bad dream and work towards forgetting it. Avoid and stop the recall of negative thoughts from your past in any form, for this amounts to re-living them. Positive and constructive thoughts make us confident and cheerful. We are all human and we all err knowingly or unknowingly. The concept of suicide is that which is entertained by those who lack the will and determination to face life. I'm sure you aren't one among them. Human life is a very precious mode of existence attained by the soul further to innumerable animal births without intellect, discrimination and awareness. God feels happy and showers his blessings upon souls who strive towards virtue and perfection. No sin can tie man to delusion once he has realized his mistake and wants to sincerely become good.

Focus you energies towards work, exercise and doing good to people if possible. Develop a stance of love, peace and well wishing towards people in general. With positive efforts and prayer to god to redeem you from all sins, progress is cent percent assured :-)

Answer
Hello there :-)

Good to see that you are feeling better. Coming to your doubts, Q1: Is incest common?

A: In the general sense considering the majority of people, the answer is NO. However as explained in my previous post, there are cases where it could happen intentionally or unintentionally, owing to past karma and lack of awareness and discrimination in the child due to its age & surroundings.

Q2: Did I go through any such experience?
A: By the lords grace, NO.

Its nice to see that you are working towards positivity. Keep up the effort and God will shower his blessings for sure :-)

Question
I work in a BPO, where the shifts are mostly in the nights and sometimes irregular. So it is not possible to get up early in the morning, every day. Should I give up this job to practice celibacy? Second,I am over 35. Is it ok to try celibacy now or will I not be getting any benefits at all?

Answer
Hello Pushparaj :-)

Great to see your interest as regards to celibacy. Thank you for the query, lets get to the answer.

Q1: Is it possible to practice celibacy, without the normal night sleep cycle and an early morning start?

A: The normal man functions at his best with regular hours of sleep at night and activity at day. Sunrise denotes the beginning of all activity with the advent of abundant cosmic energy in the form of heat, light and positive energy, while sunset denotes withdrawal. This is the basic norm on which all life in nature functions. You will have seen how birds start to chirp early in the morning all by themselves purely through their instincts without the aid of electronic alarms! There is not a single bird or animal on earth which stays asleep beyond dawn. Their morning tweets are a celebration of a new day and new life. Man however, due to various factors and reasons, most of which are a product of his degenerated mental state, chooses to ignore his innate voice to rise early, stays riveted to the bed and consequently loses the innumerable benefits of an early morning start to his day.

Why wake up early?
Early morning, before dawn (4 A.M~ 6 A.M) is called in Hindu philosophy as 'Brahmi muhurtham' which means the period of time most suitable for the attainment of 'Brahma jnana' or the knowledge of the Almighty creator, the 'Brahman'. During this period all forces and energies in nature are in perfect resonance for one to attain divine spiritual knowledge, the very objective of Brahmacharya. It is said to be the time when the gods come down to earth, to bless and uplift souls who are aspiring for liberation. This is the reason why a celibate is required to rise early. The man who rises early and indulges in communion with god gets great success in every mode of life.

One's career at the work front today forms an important part of his/ her growth at the worldly level. Even to concentrate on a life of spirituality or celibacy, one needs to ensure a constant supply of the basic needs (food, clothing, shelter) and backup capital for life post-retirement. Keeping the above aim in mind, it becomes necessary many a time to partake in occupations with erratic work hours, which might not be very conducive to one's overall well being. At such times a celibate aspirant might get into a quandary as to what should be done.

Ask yourself if you will be able to meet your current financial commitments & job satisfaction by a change over to a day job,

If yes- good, then by all means should you go ahead, for nothing beats the health and well being one achieves from the normal sleep/ activity cycle coupled with an early morning start and a life of ideal celibacy.

If no, you could investigate if there is a possibility of tempering these commitments, thus spreading your financial target to a longer point of time. Many a time we all run after money thinking it to be a source of happiness, while in reality money has very little to do with true happiness, beyond the basic needs mentioned above. Celibacy can still be practiced in this state, though it might not be as easy as with the former.

Life is always a compromise and a fine tuning process between what we want and what we can actually get. Everything comes at the cost of something. The merry making man who hops from one house party to another finds little time for spirituality, while the celibate spiritualist finds little time for merry making and eventually finds himself in a state with no further interest in what the world refers to as 'socialising' !!!... For he has started to get in touch with true bliss- His inner soul bliss, which is millions of miles ahead of the non-permanent happiness derived from external sources.

Ultimately, if one's commitment and interest in 'Brahmacharya' is genuine, sincere and persistent, god will eventually ensure that the path to growth is cleared of all obstacles and suitable conditions are created for the celibate.

Q2: Is it possible to derive benefits by starting a life of celibacy beyond the age of 35?

A: There is no age bar to a man or lady genuinely interested in getting into a life of celibacy. While sooner is always the better, better be late than never. Scriptures recommend a start age around 32~34 as the upper limit to achieve maximum benefits. This is further to the fact that the best sperm and vitality are within man unto this age. Beyond this age, the quality of the seed in a normal man starts to deteriorate. By transmuting the best of his vitality available during this period with unbroken celibacy for a period of 12 years, he can achieve the impossible. There are many instances of people in history who became celibates even beyond this age and yet achieved spectacular name, fame and self-realization. An age around 35 is still close enough for notable growth. So by all means should you get into being a celibate at the earliest :-)

Answer
Hello Tony,

Keep the interest in celibacy going. Thanks for the question, let me try to shed light on the matter

Q1: What is the best method to ensure continuous success in celibacy?
A: To put it in one word, that Brahmachari succeeds in continuous celibacy who has constantly persevered in this direction, long enough to tip the balance in his favor as regards to breaking even his negative karma. In other words, celibacy becomes longer and longer and finally life long, as the celibate reaches higher and higher states of purity (by honest efforts, consistency, perseverance and reverence to this mode of life) whereby his negative (delusive karma) starts to melt away to nothing. If negative karma leading to impurity is very heavy, it may take more than one life. This is the final reason for achievement or non-achievement of celibacy.

The reason behind this is very simple. Every time we indulge in sinful or virtuous activity (in thought, word or deed), we etch karma into our account. This storehouse of all +ve and -ve karma is stored in our causal body or the 'Karana sharira'. Every action we indulge in produces a 'Samskaara' or a mark. These 'Samskara's' in turn produce 'Vaasanas' or tendencies.

Lets say a man has indulged in very frequent sexual activity for recreation, being attached to the concept of sex very strongly over many past lives, then a strong 'Samskaara' for the desire to have sex gets etched in his 'Kaarana sharira'. Further to the presence of this strongly etched Samskaara, he develops the 'Vaasana' or a tendency that pulls and attracts him to any object related to sexuality. If he is unmindful of its dangers and takes no efforts to curtail this tendency, he slips deeper and deeper into sin as the tendency gets stronger and stronger. On accumulation of such tendencies over many lives, the 'Samskaara' becomes very strong, so strong that it almost appears to be a part of his nature.

This is the case in most people who say sex is their birth right to pleasure and a human need. In reality, the concept of sexual pleasure is totally unreal. It is not the real nature of the soul which is pure and clear. Sexual need is an indication of ignorance etched in the person, a trick of the mind. It is here that celibacy comes as a cure. With continuous and honest celibacy, man can gain freedom from this 'Devil' called sexuality.The ways of achieving this goal, will become clear in the next question.

A: To go about achieving this, which is what Brahmacharya is all about, one needs to take steps to kill the familiarity of the sexual sensation in every possible way. The following methods will be helpful to achieve this:

1. Indulge in yoga, exercise or any other physical activity on a daily basis. This converts sexual energy into health and strength. The portion of semen meant for the physical nourishment of the body gets sublimated.
2. Keep the mind busy with adequate intellectual activity. When you spend time on constructive activities, there is less time for the mind to wander onto objects of the senses.
3. Indulge in spiritual sadhana consisting of prayer, meditation and pranayama. Pray to god honestly and sincerely to help you tide over the onslaught of the senses and become a true 'Brahmachari'.
4. Give up eating stimulant foods containing onion and garlic. Stay clear of alcohol, tobacco and other addictions.
5. Get up early in the morning and indulge in yoga (shirsasana or head stand is very helpful) & meditation. Keep your thoughts pure through the day. At the slightest sign of a lustful thought entering the mind, divert the mind to productive activity and ensure the thought doesn't grow. Stay away from company not conducive to this mode of life. Unless Brahmacharya is carried out in thought, word and deed it will not bear fruits beyond a limit.
6. If you are falling prey to the act of masturbation or sex, take a challenge not to indulge in the same for 15 days, on achieving this increase this limit to 20 days, then one month and so on. Once you succeed in celibacy without breaks for more than 3 months, the path becomes easier. A yogi who practices absolute Brahmacharya for more than 3 months and then loses his semen in masturbation or sex, will experience almost no pleasure or even pain during ejaculation. This will help him develop distaste for the concept of losing his semen.

With honest efforts, true practice and devotion to god success can be yours. Increase the period of abstinence with every passing day. Within a years time, you can achieve growth by leaps and bounds.

Question
Hello,
Thank you for your time and effort.
Does masturbation make one's face ugly?

Answer
Hello Matti :-)

It's always a pleasure to answer queries from interested readers, coming to your doubts:

Q: Does masturbation makes one's face ugly?
A: Masturbation is an unnatural act of release of the reproductive element present within. The purpose of the sexual act is progeny and nothing more. With masturbation, man deviates further into the realm of delusion and ignorance. With every act of masturbation, he affixes more and more of his faith into a concept lacking in substance. The act makes him fantasize, imagine and delve his very self into nothingness. This is one of the major psychological consequences.

Now coming to the physical after effects of masturbation, each and every act of this artificial release of sperm debilitates and destabilizes the vital energy (Prana). Prana is the essence of all thought, energy and consciousness. It is the direct manifestation of the soul energy. A man is alive as long as the soul resides within. On exit of the soul the resultant form is a dead body. With every act of wastage of semen, one loses a fraction of his very self or soul. Mark how one feels tired, weak and lifeless further to ejaculation. Mark the burning eyes, loss of life energy and irritation on discharge of semen. Further to a long mode in such a lifestyle, all the vital organs, the spine and brain become weak. The man starts to age prematurely. Semen when analyzed is found to contain large amounts of cerebro-spinal fluid. The same ingredients which go into making our brain and spine also go into making semen. Constant loss of semen will eventually weaken the spine and brain. This is one of the major causes of back pain related problems among the majority. All mental faculties like memory, concentration and determination start to lessen and finally disappear. On the contrary, a few months of celibacy completely cure most back and health related problems, make one cheerful, energetic and positive. True celibates rarely if ever suffer from any disease or debility. Even if they are afflicted by some disease due to past karma, they recover in no time. This is due to the high immunity and resistance the body develops further to re-absorption of vital fluid.

A man who transmutes his seminal energy into 'Ojas' develops a beautiful complexion, sparkling eyes, shining cheeks and an attractive personality. Conversely, loss of semen by masturbation or otherwise has the opposite effect. Loss of vital power makes the face drawn, weak and lusterless thereby imparting ugliness.

Words fail to describe the positive effects one gains from this noble mode of life called Brahmacharya. The true Brahmachari attracts universal, divine cosmic energy onto to himself in vast quantities. Brahmacharya makes one reach a state where he is in perfect sync with the universal cosmic energy. Nature starts to work with him and for him. There is perfect harmony in all spheres. Trouble rarely, if ever befalls him as nothing seems to go wrong. He succeeds wonderfully in whatever action he endeavors upon. He casts a great impression wherever he goes and thus wins over people with his nobility and virtue. A true Brahmachari needs not the aid of cunning, guile, manipulation or dominance to succeed in the world. Presence of enormous divine energy within him makes even wicked people treat him with respect and consideration. No one can remain oblivious to the radiance and nobility of a true Urdhvareta.

I would request everyone who reads this to lead a life of true celibacy in thought, word and deed for a few months and experience the truth behind this wonderful experience called Brahmacharya.

Hope this helps
May God bless you, have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

It's almost 2 months that i did brahmacharya again. How are you?

I'd like to ask you again. But this time it's about wet dream.

How often do you experience nocturnal pollution since you've been practicing celibacy? I mean, do you usually have it monthly or so?

Second, Does this wet dream stops with continued practice of brahmacharya in the long run? Maybe you can have some inputs to us. You know its mechanics,etc. Cause, this time, i have a doubt that maybe this thing indicate -- the occurence of wet dream, it an indication that it is already the limit of maintaining brahmacharya. beyond that, it is not needed.

Please shed some light. Thanks.

Answer
Hello there,

I'm doing good. Its very nice to see that you are putting efforts into the practice celibacy, coming to your queries:

Q1: Do wet dreams stop with constant practice of 'Brahmacharya?
A: A wet dream in the general sense is the expression of unfulfilled desires in the awake state, during the dream state. If sexual wants and desires are let to blossom while we are awake and consequently suppressed, they manifest in the form of erotic/ sexual dreams which may or may not lead to a wet dream (emission of vital fluid). If the intensity and involvement in the sexual fantasy is very strong and deep while awake, there is a high possibility that the erotic dream might turn into a wet dream, i.e a dream accompanied by emission of vital fluid. Again milder indulgences in fantasies during the awake state might produce a sexual dream of lesser intensity, but without emission.

If a celibate practices true celibacy in thought, word and deed for a long period of time he can reach a state where he no longer has wet dreams. This state he reaches, further to elimination of most gross and subtle impurities in his physical, astral and causal bodies. If at all there is an occasional emission of fluid, it will mostly be a small amount of prostatic fluid being flushed out by the prostate gland for occasional cleansing (such emissions will not be accompanied by erotic/ sexual thoughts or fantasies). In fact the subject might not even know when the fluid came out as he would have experienced deep dreamless sleep and finds a very small amount of fluid emitted upon getting awake. This is accompanied by a sense of freshness and wellbeing, unlike a nocturnal sexual wet dream which results in weakness, dullness, depression and a sense of guilt. Such cleansing in a true celibate is very occasional like say once or twice a year. It does not fall in the category of a erotic wet dream which is debilitating.

Q2: How often do I experience wet dreams?
Elaborating whether I experience or don't experience wet dreams might be a little out of context as it would result in self-promotion. But I can vouch for the fact that wet dreams stop or almost come to a standstill once gross and subtle impurities (toxins) have been removed to a large extent. Again one never knows if the level of purity one has attained is really enough for life long stoppage, except by future experiences of success or failure. It is best to bear in mind that we are students in this path and be alert and humble.

To sum it up, a celibate has to constantly be on guard against the onslaught of senses which can stir up the latent lust present within. No amount of effort is enough, for we are always short of the mark by a few degrees. The day we think ourselves to be beyond lust, that day we fail and get to see our short comings. We see there's 'So little done and so much to do'. But with constant perseverance and devotion to god, success will ultimately come. As to when one succeeds in reaching this state beyond lust, Lord Krishna tells us in the Bhagavad-Gita:

" The objects of senses but not their relish turn away from the abstemious man. Even the relish turneth away after one has realized the supreme " - Chap.II verse 59, The Bhagavad-Gita

Which means:- A man by restricting his senses may refrain from the objects of sense enjoyment, but the taste for enjoyment remains. Even this taste leaves man after he has realized the supreme.

So till the final goal called self-realization is achieved, one is ever a student and ever prone to onslaught of the senses. He may fall from his state of celibacy at any point of time if not vigilant. Only honest effort and humility can help one reach the goal.

Trust this helps,
God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Could you tell us about your struggle with reaching the state of celibacy?
Thanks.

Answer
Hello Matti :-)

The results of a celibate life will probably seem more important than the struggle one has to go through.

I thank God for having been kind enough in giving me what little success I have had in the practice of Brahmacharya. Reaching continued states of celibacy no doubt calls for constant effort but the will, grit and determination required is supplied by none other than the Blessed lord. Our efforts and struggles pale in comparison to the kindness, consideration, compassion and patience god shows to the aspirant celibate like a loving mother who intently teaches the little child with never ending patience and waives off the child's outbursts of anger and immaturity with unconditional love and presence.

Beyond this, there isn't anything much in my endeavor worth writing or talking about. I consider myself a striving student of celibacy like anyone else out there, keeping a vigil against the senses, praying to god for continued success and thanking him for having given the jewel called Brahmacharya

Question
QUESTION: my wife is celibate through choice why can she manage it and i cant?;i find i need a sexual expression

ANSWER: Hello there,

Thank you for the query lets try and get to the answer,

Q: Are women more successful in the practice of celibacy?
A: When we get to the fundamentals and basics of what a living being is all about, we get to learn that an insect, bird, animal or man are all nothing but 'souls'. None of them are the body, mind, intellect or ego. If all living creatures are souls (The highest and purest form of universal consciousness which is beyond delusion) then why so much misery across the earth? The answer is that we are all veiled by numerous layers of 'Avidya' or ignorance. This ignorance which has cocooned itself in multiple layers around the soul, makes it forget its true, lofty and independent state of being self-content and makes it wander in search of 'apparent pleasure' which it erringly assumes to be present outside (through the senses). In reality, any pleasure got via external sources is temporary and lacking in substance. It will ultimately lead one back to the domain of pain.

A man or woman is nothing but the soul. The physical characteristics differentiating man and woman are only at the body level. The soul has no gender, age or type, it is just the soul. After death, when the physical body has ceased to exist, it becomes just the soul bereft of association with a male or female body.

The 'need' which one feels towards the sex sensation is nothing but deep rooted ignorance and trust in that which is untrue, unreal and illusory to be a source of pleasure. Constant association with untruth makes man believe it to be the truth.

The success of a man or lady in the practice of celibacy hence has nothing to do with their gender. Success in celibacy gets more pronounced as the percentage of delusive impurity within reduces. Addressing your case, it is very probable that your wife is in a state of better realization of reality at the innate level. Spiritual levels differ from person to person based on past karma and tendencies.

With sustained efforts and prayer to god, each and everyone of us can reach higher and higher states of purity, whereupon celibacy becomes effortless and natural.

Answer
Hello Clifford :-)

Leading a life of purity and chastity is one of those paths which is tough and bereft of gloss at the initial stages, but leads to great bliss and serenity as one advances. The path of sensual pleasure is the quest for an illusory objective which is exciting at the initial stages only to desert one in great pain finally. Even the man who chooses the second path ultimately realizes he has been cheated by the so called exciting senses, and finally has to revert to the first path. There is no other way to eternal bliss. Why not save ourselves of trouble by listening to the voices of great masters who have written books of substance like the 'Bible' 'Qoraan' or the 'Bhagavad-Gita' ?

After all as Lady Eleanor Roosevelt once said "Learn from the mistakes of others, you cannot live long enough to make them all yourself" - The smart man saves himself trouble by absorbing wisdom present all around him.

Life of the spiritual celibate might look drab and bland to the sensual man, but he will eventually realize one day that the celibate is in fact actually pursuing the short-cut to the land of eternal bliss, while he himself wasted time, energy and might in taking the attractive but dead end road to misery. And then, he has to travel all the way back to the crossroads once again and take the only true path to the land of bliss - The path of purity, godliness and virtue.

God has given man some great weapons to fight temptations. They are Intelligence, discrimination and contemplation. Used rightly, they tell us what is right and what is wrong. All that is required once we know this is an iron determination to implement the suggestion given by the soul through the above mentioned instruments. The soul is higher than all other faculties. Each and everyone of us can hear the voice of the soul if we set time time aside to sit quiet, contemplate and concentrate on divinity. This is what meditation is all about. The tool used to calm the mind and evacuate it of its modifications is 'Pranayama' or control of the vital energy achieved through regulated breathing. Practice these two after learning them from a knowledgeable source. Constant efforts ultimately bear fruit.

Question
I have been chaste one month and 3 days then had a wet dream, I hate it sooo much. I cannot believe that I am still dirty, I have abstained and guarded myself every day, I find women to be SUPER attractive when it is that I do look at them. I try to avoid looking unless I like her personality and consider her as a friend and a life mate. But I do not feel too weak it's been since last night and I already feel myself strong and confident again. Could this discharge be from my past lustful thoughts that is coming out now, even though I have been good all month?

I long to be chaste in word deed and act, with my eyes mind and body until I get married and then only to have babies. Thank you for taking time out of your day to help us reach pure chastity!

Carr

Answer
Hello Carr :-)

How are you doing? Keep the efforts at maintaining celibacy going. Coming to the matter on hand,

A celibate aiming at achieving genuine growth should abstain all contact from members of the opposite sex during the initial years of celibacy, till his mind no longer responds to stimulus as it used to. The slightest tendency of the mind to revert to old ways is an indication that he is not yet ready to be oblivious to such contact. Our causal bodies are storehouses of past delusive actions associated with the opposite sex, relating them as sources of pleasure. A few months of celibacy cannot undo these strong tendencies present within that are of large magnitudes.

The sexual sensation lies latent and dormant even in very advanced celibates until one reaches the state of self-realization. Abstinence and withdrawal from the senses at most only make these tendencies dormant and weaker. But the seeds of sexuality are still present in their full might deep within. If conditions favorable to their development are allowed, they will germinate into plants of desire and passion. It is for this reason that a celibate who wishes to totally redeem himself from the effect of lust is advised to lead a spotless life of chastity in thought, word and deed for a period of 12 years, whereupon he realizes his self and gets the vision of god. After reaching this state, there is no gear of fall, for he has roasted these seeds of sexuality and they have lost the power to raise their heads. Any break resets the clock back to zero and he has to start all over again.

Wet dreams are an indication that we have to strive harder and keep ourselves moire focussed on the objective. They are most often a sign of lack of consistent efforts.

Keep the dangerous tendencies in check, be ever vigilant and never let sexual thoughts grow. Curb and nip them at the bud by diverting the mind into other domains. The desire to look at a beautiful woman stirs nothing else but sexual feelings eventually, for the apparent physical beauty is in itself a delusion. Keep this tendency in check. With honest efforts, right lifestyle and prayer to god, success eventually comes.

Wishing you all the best towards success,
God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Dear Dhananjay,
I'm a guy that plays sports(Basketball) and the weird thing is, when I abstained from sex for 18 days, every time I woke up in the morning to work out, I felt very light on my feet, it was like my (light body) had increased and my focus was on point, my whole body felt tightened and wholesome,very fast and strong on the court than I ever was and even jumped higher gracefully without no waste of energy, no fatigue, It was almost like as if I was invincible and could do what ever i wanted as a point guard. But when I got caught up in sexual activities, I felt a huge drainage of energy expelled from my body, mentally and physically weaker, fatigue started to set in and I just didn't feel like doing anything. At first I felt like a super being, I need to know if that came from the 18 days Brahmacharya practice and what was taking place in my body during that period of obstinence?

Thank You
Troy

Answer
Hello Troy,

Great to see you are experiencing the effects of Brahmacharya.

Brahmacharya is the gateway to superior success and accomplishments in every walk and field of life be it materialistic or spiritual. By conservation of his vital fluid man can achieve the impossible. Semen is the net sum of all energy and greatness within man. He who wastes this vital fluid for recreation ultimately loses everything while he who conserves and transmutes this great essence will shine like a star in whatever endeavor he engages. The purpose of the sexual act is procreation (production of offspring) and not recreation.

When you remained celibate for a period of two weeks or so, your body went through freedom from regeneration of semen, which it has to with great stress in a person who constantly loses semen. To get a clear idea of how this actually works, kindly go through past answers on this portal with the following titles:

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I hope all is well. I'm still going strong and experiencing the many benefits brahmacharya has to offer. Although now I feel that I need to move to the next level, Guru devotion. I often read a lot about this but have never tried it up until now. It has really helped me a lot when temptation arises. I think upon the Swami that visits in my area during these tough times and the lustful thoughts go away almost immediately. I feel as if a part of him comes over to me. Can you explain what happens on an energetic level here?

Also I will talk to him about this the next time he comes around. But I assume he will already now as he is highly intuitive when ever I speak with him. How should I approach him with this? Do you think there might be a chance that he will direct me to focus on another person for example Swami Vivekananda?

Hello Michael,

Keep up the efforts at Brahmacharya going. Coming to your queries, Q: How does "Guru Bhakti" or devotion to one's spiritual master help in progress?

A: The Guru or spiritual master is a word formed from the two Sanskrit letters (Ga- Meaning Ignorance, Ra- meaning dispeller) it means one who dispels our ignorance. A true Guru is considered as a medium through whom God works. Great character, mental strength, compassion and understanding are the signs of a great master. A true master is beyond selfishness and has the sole objective of uplifting and inspiring his disciples. A good Guru analyzes the strengths and limitations of his disciple (evolutionary level) and accordingly professes him on the nature of the spiritual past most suited.

On a parallel note, the advancement of a spiritual aspirant depends largely on the devotion, love and respect he has for his Guru. There is the story of an ancient yogi from India who mastered all spiritual powers and was a celibate of immense power. His name was 'Gorakhanath". The story goes that at the point of time when he was a beginner and had enrolled himself into the hermitage of a great saint for spiritual initiation, the saint took his disciples to the forest to test their devotion. He installed a sharp spear under a tall tree, asked the disciples to climb the tree one by one and jump headlong into the spear. Naturally all of them refused to do so. Gorakhanath unhesitatingly climbed the tree and jumped headlong onto the spear. At the last second when his head was about to touch the tip of the spear the saint with his yogic powers ensured him freedom from death by turning the spear into a bed of flowers. This was possible due to the immense devotion and unconditional faith Gorakhanath had for his Guru, the Saint. The other pupils, doubted the Guru as the representation of God and weren't committed in totality to the Guru.

If our longing, efforts and sincerity at attaining high levels of spirituality and Brahmacharya are true and genuine, God undoubtedly sends forth a Guru who is commensurately knowledgeable and noble enough. But this wholly depends on our trueness and devotion to the concept at hand. The more true we are, the better will be the quality of the Guru.

There is a Sanskrit saying from Indian scriptures: "Acharya devo bhava" - Treat the master as God. When one has such an approach and devotion to one's master, he succeeds in winning the trust, love and affection of the master and Godliness flows from master to pupil. It is actually a flow of energy from the region of higher concentration (Guru) to the region of lower concentration (Pupil). The effectivity of energy transfer depends on the knowledge and pranic energy or universal consciousness within the Guru. One who is a great guru is always a strict celibate. A man who wastes his vital energy can never be a great Guru. To transmit knowledge at the highest level, one has to undoubtedly be an Urdhvaretha and the receiving pupil has to be an ardent and true celibate.

Question
Hello there,
I have been practicing celibacy for a couple of days now and having more erections than ever before . So my question is, what happens to all the semen that rose up in the private area after the erection subsided? and I mean without any release. Does the semen absorb back into the body? does it start transmuting into energy? I'll be looking forward to your feedback on this .

Thank You

Answer
Hello DJ,

Thanks for the query, lets try to get to the answer,

Q: What happens to semen that has been generated further to an erection if there is no ejaculation?
A: For semen to get fully reabsorbed into the body, it requires continued periods of celibacy in thought, word and deed beyond three to four months. During this time if unchaste thoughts were to be entertained, semen flows out in a wet dream and no reabsorbtion occurs. The first three to four months of celibacy do not involve reabsorbtion to a large extent but consist of non-production. The body which was earlier required to replenish lost reserves of semen now gets a breather and reduces this process. Removal of onus on the body to generate and ready semen results in increased vigor and vitality.

The reason why frequent erections are observed in the beginner celibate is due to the previous conditioning of the mind and psyche towards constant sexual activity. As celibacy gets longer and longer, this unnatural need of the mind and body for sexual gratification reduces.

For innate details on how this process works kindly go through the topic 'Forms of semen' in past answers on this portal

Question
Hey Dhanajay,
This may sound strange but I just wanted to ask this question out of curiosity and to be thoroughly educated on the practice of celibacy.

If a person is masturbating but doesn't come or stops before they reach that point, is that person still weakening the body's strength by masturbating even though no semen has been expelled from the body . Are your body being more relaxed more weakened ?

Answer
Hello Yang,

Coming to the question on hand,

Q: What are the effects of masturbation without ejaculation?
A: Masturbation is firstly an unnatural act that leads to frustration and problems. The purpose of the sexual act is procreation or production of offspring. Any other intentional indulgence in the sexual act or related activities leads to pain and suffering in the long run.

When a person stimulates himself sexually to indulge in masturbation, it is an activity without a valid aim. On the one hand he is stimulating himself to achieve an erection, while on the other hand this erection whose aim is to generate sperm and procreate doesnot have a valid target (a legally wedded spouse also wanting a child). This tantamounts to a person driving a highspeed vehicle into a dead end alley and crashing against the wall. This is exactly what happens each and every time masturbation is carried out. Immaterial of whether one ejaculates or doesnt, the subject causes immense harm to himself at the mental, physical and psychic levels. In case of masturbation without ejaculation, serious chances of developing diseases of the prostate and related sex glands exists. Ultimately, he who masturbates without ejaculating will eventually loose semen in a wet dream, for his thoughts are impure.

To sum up, it is a debilitating activity which causes harm at all levels. Real strength, happiness and bliss can be attained only with one mode of life:- "To treat sexual activity as procreational and drop it from the list of amusements one indulges in"

Kindly go through past articles on masturbation on this portal to go deeper into its effects.

Question
hello,

Thank you for your answers here. It's great.
Can you relate to us 'How does brahmacharya practiced in Islam'.

Though we have different system of belief, it has been for many years till then that i realized the benefits of brahmacharya- which i simply term it as 'chastity'. Yes, i cannot deny the immense energy derived from it ones it is practiced with devotion. It really enhance the practice of meditation – for us, it is Salah.

Yet, just wanna tell you that i'm a little cautious about extending it beyond limit. In the Qur'an, in addition of not having sex during menstruation, during daytime of fasting, and during 70 days of Hajj, in Surah Baqarah verse 226 if i'm not mistaken, it is said that it is not allowed to take an oath of not having sex with ones legally wife beyond 4 months. On the otherhand, masturbation is haraam (means forbidden) from puberty upto marriage (that is, from 14 years old upto 25. Meaning more or less 13 years).

Because of this, seems like, i'm in the state of doubt or 50-50, weather to pursue it like upto years. I say this because, i usually break it intentionally every after 4 months fearing that i'll commit a serious mistake against the 'divine law'. Not that, i cannot resist the urge because i now find it easy to do it. It is just a matter of following the guidelines of brahmacharya like what you have outline here.

Can you please enlighten my humble inquiry about this sir Dhananjay.

Maybe you already have a glimpse of an inquiry like mine here. I say this because maybe I haven't yet encounter a Qur'anic verses about it. Also, maybe there were words of wisdom from Muslim saints about this that I didn't yet encounter.

My sentiments here put me into tears due to your answers. I can feel your honesty. I really do.

Wishing you a good day and happiness..

Answer
Hello K,

Delighted to know of your interest in Brahmacharya, Thank you for the questions let me try and answer:

Q: What is the importance of Brahmacharya in Islam and for what periods of time can it be practiced?
A: While I'm not an authority on Islam, I shall answer this question based on the Universal concept of Brahmacharya, cutting across religion, caste, creed and geography.

Brahmacharya is defined as "Abandonment of and freedom from sexual enjoyment for ever in thought, word and deed at all places and times". The aim of indulging in this train of thought and action is to free ourselves from the grip of ignorance, delusion and evil and unite ourselves with the supreme creator, thereby attaining infinite bliss and meeting the purpose of the human life.

There is a saying in the Hindu scriptures "Tad ekam sat, vipraha bahudha vadanthi" - He alone is real, He is only one - The sages call him by various names. It means the supreme creator is only one; religions are only different roads to reach him. All religions are true and real. All religions when practiced right lead one to the supreme creator. Mohammed the prophet called him as 'Allah', Hindu sages call the blessed lord as 'Brahman', Jesus the sage called him as 'Christ'. All these great sages were beyond petty concepts such as hate, greed, fanaticism and ignorance. They preached a religion with the sole aim of liberating mankind from suffering and uniting it with the blessed lord. Any man who is true to himself becomes saintly immaterial of his religion.

Brahmacharya is the direct road to lead one closer to him -'God'. What is it that keeps us in the midst of pain and suffering and away from him? It is the result of our past sin and ignorance that has wound itself in layers around our 'self'. If man wishes to unwind himself from this sin he cannot achieve it without the practice of celibacy in thought, word and deed. By the honest and true practice of celibacy for even a few months anyone can personally observe that the inherent nobility, kindness, love, affection, strength, peace of mind and sheer bliss present within starts to surface. In other words man starts to unwind himself from the grip of pain and starts moving towards the domain of supreme bliss. He starts his journey towards perfection and eternal divinity.

In the Qur'an it is said: - "Surely, men who submit themselves to God and women who submit themselves to Him, and believing men and believing women,and truthful men and truthful women, and steadfast men and steadfast women, and humble men and humble women, and men who give alms and women who give alms, and men who fast and women who fast, and men who guard their chastity and women who guard their chastity, and men who remember Allah much and women who remember Him – Allah has prepared for all of them forgiveness and a great reward. (Al--Qur'an, 33:36)

What does this signify? It directs man to surrender himself to the lord, be kind to fellow humans, follow the path of truth, indulge in austerities to cleanse ourselves and follow a life of celibacy to disentangle ourselves from the grip of evil.

Mohammed the prophet has clearly stated in the Qur'an that the aim of Islamic teachings is to help one progressively transcend from the natural state to the moral state and from there on to the final and high spiritual state.

Allah further says:- " Follow not the footsteps of Satan" - (Al-Qur'an,2:209)
Here the footsteps of Satan are all those activities and temptations that take one away from Allah or the supreme creator. When Satan or ignorance beckons us to follow him, it doesn't show us the ultimate destruction it is leading us to. Rather it makes us take one small step at a time which appears harmless. Once a few steps are taken on this slippery slope called evil, Satan's (Ignorance and delusion's) job is done and one is sure to slide helplessly to his doom. So it becomes very important never to even take the first step and keep oneself ever vigilant against lust.

It is further said:-
"Indeed he truly prospers, who purifies himself" - (Al-Qur'an, 87-15)
Indulgence in the sexual act however less frequently keeps familiarity of the sex sensation as a source of delusive pleasure alive. As long as this familiarity is kept alive, the gates of purification cannot open.

The sexual act is legitimate for only one single purpose - 'Procreation'. The moment man indulges in this act for a purpose other than producing offspring; he is offering a seat to Satan or ignorance in his mind, body and psyche. The Holy Hindu sages have declared "A man can visit his wife and have intercourse with her once per wanted child".

The concept of sex for pleasure in marriage is a trick resorted by those who have no other bond other than the bond of physical sex. This concept is not true love. True love is never selfish. True love doesn't require the gratification of carnal pleasure to support itself. Man and wife can enjoy true bliss and togetherness once they practice a few months of combined celibacy. They will then see the real benefits of chastity and the deep, true love that blossoms between them which was never there while being in a sexual relationship. It is hard at the start to go into such a life, but then nothing special comes without effort.

It is said that a man and wife who practice celibacy with purity incur the appreciation and blessings of Gods from above. No statement can be truer. Words fail to describe the bliss, positivity and strength gained by such a mode of life. I would request people to get a real taste of this concept by leading a life of celibacy for a few months and see how their life improves at the mental, physical, material and spiritual levels for themselves.

If you are practicing periods of celibacy lasting up to four months, it is a clear sign that God is already with you and has his hand upon you. Only a handful of people succeed in remaining celibate for such periods of time. I would request you to take your wife into confidence towards reaching longer periods of celibacy and finally becoming a celibate for life. One reaches great heights further to such a life at the physical, mental, moral and spiritual levels and loses nothing.

Question
Hello there,
I just wanted ask, does working out everyday like Isometrics, push-ups, running, weight lifting; help a lot during Brahmacharya practice ? like giving your mind, body, and spirit a boost ?

Answer
Hello Tony,

Coming to your query,

Q: Does physical exercise help in celibacy?
A: Physical exercise is one of the important requirements for transmutation of sexual energy into health and strength. As explained earlier, semen has three important functions namely:
1. Help revitalize and strengthen the physical body
2. Help develop a keen intellect
3. Help in the formation of 'Ojas' or divine energy to aid spiritual growth.

Physical exercises are paramount in ensuring that the portion of semen required for revitalizing the body is absorbed. Lack of physical activity will make that part of semen to go out through a wet dream

Question
Hello there Dhananjay,

I wanted to ask, how many hours should one sleep everyday to keep perferct Brahmacarya & is it better going to bed early or late ? or does it matter?

Thanks,
Tony

Answer
Hello Tony,

Hope you are keeping fine. Coming to your query,

Q: What should be the duration of sleep for a celibate?
A: It is best to give the body seven to eight hours of deep sleep. Early to bed and early to rise is the formula on which one should base the sleep cycle. Waking up early in the early morning and performing physical exercises and meditation is the best approach conducive for celibacy.

Question
QUESTION: sir, It really inspiring that you are showing a path of encouragement to those who are fighting with tooth & nail to refrain themselves from sexual thought & activities.
sir my question is that after having a self control I tend to loose my semnatic fluid within a month which really break my confidence . so sir how can I came out of those frustration?

ANSWER: Hello there,

Hope you are doing good. Thanks for the query, let me try and answer.

Q: What is the way out for a celibate from wet dreams?
A: Wet dreams are a result of hidden and suppressed sexual currents from within which find a way out during the dream state. They are also the result of strong sexual karma etched into the causal body or the 'Karana sharira' - The repository of our past actions. Overcoming this problem will require very honest efforts, determination and a strong, nonfluctuating desire to be free from the grip of sexuality. Most importantly, unswerving devotion and love for god with constant prayers to redeem us from the illusion of 'Maya' is important.

At the physical level a celibate must indulge in yogasana/ physical exercise on a daily basis without fail to support transmutation of the vital essence. At the mental level, one must keep one's thoughts pure and free from anger, passion and excitement. It is also required that one sets aside some time of the day to meditate upon god (without asking for any materialistic wants) with an intention of gratitude, love and devotion.

With constant efforts based on honesty, sincerity and determination, success will slowly come and wet dreams become less and less frequent and finally disappear. This will aid the celibate in making concrete progress towards becoming a total 'Urdhvaretha' yogi.

QUESTION: Sir thank you for your answer.Hope this would work.

Sir my one question is there a huge loss during wet dream for one maintaining sexual abstinence?.Hope you wont mind for this .

Answer
Hello there,

I presume you mean to ask if there is much loss of vital essence in a wet dream. The quantity of loss depends on numerous factors such as intensity of the sexual currents from within, period of abstinence and certain physiological factors. Ordinarily in a true celibate, wet dreams are rare and do not involve much loss.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

Thank you for your response to my message about Brahmacharya in Islam. I was happy reading it. Your selfless contribution in imparting your knowledge here is very compassionate. Thank you. thank you.

Sir, Can you share with us how does this so-called 'one-time try only' child conception achieved?

I have learned from others that after been celibate for a long time, baby conception can easily be achieved by just one-time trying, anytime outside the menstrual period of a woman/wife. No need to calculate when she will ovulate whatsoever,like those been published in the readings by western medical experts. As they say, nature will take the rest to achieve this. All the 'true brahmachari' do is just to ejaculate once to attain it.

Is this true? I would be really happy knowing your views yogically.

Answer
Hello there,

Hope you are doing good. Coming to your query,

Q: What is the basis on which a celibate can successfully try for a wanted child from his legally wedded wife?
A: Nature has formulated the sexual act with only one purpose - 'Procreation'. In a true celibate leading a virtuous life, the power at his disposal to bring forth healthy, talented and virtuous offspring is very strong. Further to long periods of celibacy, the best of the sperm get conserved and reabsorbed leading to superb overall health of the body and that of the sexual organs. The sperm motility, density and concentration become enhanced to their maximum extent. Under such circumstances a celibate needs to indulge in the act of copulation only once with his wife (during her fertile period which a doctor can clearly pin-point) to result in conception. If god wills for the couple to have an offspring, this single act of copulation will result in conception. The celibate is required to leave the house further to the act and stay away from his wife for a period of two days as the emotional states of the man and the lady would be volatile further to the act.

It is said that a great soul descends into the womb of a lady who is into a virtuous mode of celibate life along with her husband. Who can ever quantify the merits and benefits of celibacy? They are beyond words and expression! Let us all pray to the Blessed lord to give us strength and ability to succeed in life long celibacy.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

I just wanted to ask why do some people find that sex or masturbation is a good release of tension & stress? are they widely misinformed on the whole purpose of celibacy or what? Is it that they can't handle all that sexual energy/semen being built or perhaps they don't know how to transmute it ?

p.s I would think ''tension'' of the whole body alone would be an excellent thing physically for sports as long as you keep stretching and eating right; wouldn't you think ?

Answer
Hello Troy,

Trust you are doing good, coming to your query,

Q1: Why do people generally experience an 'apparent' release of tension further to the sexual act?
A: When man comes under sexual duress, positive 'pranic energy' or vital life energy which is the source and fuel for all of man's activities, growth, progress and success gets converted into 'sexual energy'. Left to himself there is nothing called sexual energy within man. It is the thought of the sexual act as a source of delusive pleasure which fires up man's sex plane and converts healthy life force into sexual currents. When man continuously ponders on objects in the sex plane, most of this vital creative energy from within (which he could have used for creative activities and attained fantastic success) gets converted into 'sexual energy'. Further to a few days in this state, this sexual energy heightens and expands (by drawing from his vital energy) and he becomes like a balloon fully filled with air. Once he reaches this stage he feels a strong urge for sex which is what people refer to as the 'sexual need'. If he indulges in sex or masturbation, these sexual currents get temporarily released (thereby also draining the body of the precious vital energy) and he feels an apparent release of 'tension'.

In reality he has foolishly created this sexual tension in the first place by pondering over the objects of senses and converting his vital energy into sexual force. There is nothing called as a sexual need at all in the first place. It is only a result of delusion fueled by past memories of sex as a source of pleasure. With every sexual 'release' man actively participates in the process of converting his precious vital force into sexual energy and throwing it all away. It is like a man who has a million dollars in his bank account, he takes out a few thousand dollars every few days, buys cylinders containing a poisonous gas, locks himself into a room and lets the gas loose. At the point when the whole room is filled with gas he complains of a 'tension' arising due to lack of fresh air and decides to open the windows to let the dirty air out and fresh air in. After a few days he is back at his trick again - Drawing money from the bank, buying gas and then throwing it all away! Such an irony. At least money can be earned back but semen once lost can never, never I repeat never be got back. To produce every ounce of semen the body takes a great beating. It is produced at the cost of his entire well being.

As man starts to free himself from the grip of sexuality through celibacy, he will soon start to realize that lust is just a trick of his mind and really non-existent. Whatever stirrings of lust he feels are only a recall of his past associations with this activity. Once he starts to conserve this great force present within, he sill succeed wonderfully in whatever action he engages in and shine like a star.

The secret of transmutation is to keep the mind free of sexual thoughts in the first place and give adequate work for the mind/ body and heart in constructive activity.

Question
sir,
thank you very much for your previous advice you had given.
But I have one more query,that is with pace of maintaining celibacy I am creating a huge rage,anger with in my self which is out of control and creating a havoc with in me.So how can I get rid of it.Sometimes I start rebelling with God for this.Thank you and hope you wont mind for this.

Answer
Hello there,

Trust you are doing fine, coming to the query:

Q: How does one deal with increased anger and frustration, if he finds himself in such a state at the start of celibacy?
A: Anger and frustration are the result of built up desires within us that are unfulfilled. Anger is as dangerous as desire/ passion. Man first desires something strongly and if he fails to get it in course of time, the desire turns into anger. They are both nothing but double edged sides of the same sword that destroy man.

At the start of celibacy, the mind which was earlier used to craving for desires and fulfilling them through the concept of sex now finds itself marooned and held back within the bounds of celibacy like a criminal shut inside the walls of a prison. It retaliates with anger and tries to find a way out. There is no cause to worry or fear, the secret of taming this criminal prisoner is by ensuring lot of constructive work, physical exercise and prayer/ spiritual activities are loaded on to the mind and body and targets set for it to achieve.

Whenever a celibate faces rebellion from the mind and body against the act of celibacy, he should use his intellect and remind himself that he has taken up this great and noble job of taming this criminal mind and converting it into a virtuous mind so he can ascend the ladder of bliss. Just as a criminal refuses and revolts against the concept of reform at the initial stages, but gradually realizes his mistakes and becomes a good man the mind also needs to be firmly dealt with and told to change its erratic ways keeping in view the enormous bliss and happiness it will shortly start enjoying after celibacy starts getting established.

When man starts a life of celibacy, his old tendencies and instincts try to make him fail. But a man of great strength and power refuses to let these obstacles rob him of success and gradually ascends the throne of purity.

Question
Dhananjay,
Your answer to the question about anger leads to link between anger and envy. In these times all men have to guard against the feeling of envy of the alpha males or "players" who are successful in having sex with many women. So does this not mean that the intellectual approach has to examine the false values at the root of the anger? And do we not also have to guard against the easy rationalization that the corrupt culture that identifies manhood with sexing is too powerful to resist?

Answer
Hello Bruce,

Trust you are doing fine. Coming to the topic on hand,

A 'Brahmachari' is a man whose chief aim is to ascend the ladder of eternal bliss and divinity by unveiling the layers of ignorance which have wrapped themselves around the soul and blocked its limitless light, energy, bliss, power and divinity. Just as a piece of gold covered with grit and grime regains all its innate splendor when cleansed and polished, the light of the soul when uncovered and let to shine through brightens the life of the darkest of beings and enables them to experience unexplainable bliss (Bliss or 'Ananda' is unipolar - It has no opposite unlike the bipolar ‘happiness’ which is limited by the opposite sadness/ pain)

Let's try and illustrate the answer to your question taking reference of the following condition:

At a particular place, there is a dark, dank, cold and filthy room (Ignorance and delusion) and many males and females are locked in this little room since birth. They know nothing of the outer world beyond the room's walls and look up to the torch lights they have in their hands as a source of heat and light. Many a time they look at this light and marvel at it. Sometimes they swish their hands in the small volume of polluted air within this chamber and exclaim how large the room is and how much space they have, for that is all they have ever known since birth. They erroneously assume the light emanating from the battery powered torches to be the best source of heat, light and brightness in their existence for they know not of anything more than darkness and delusion. And one fine day, these torches will run out of power due to constant use (the sensual man finally loses all, wasting his vitality) and one by one each sinks deeper into darkness, disease and illness and finally dies a miserable death never knowing the freshness of breeze blowing across a meadow, the beauty, splendor, grandeur, warmth and magnificence of the splendid light giver the Sun (soul) whose batteries are inexhaustible and whose effulgence can never be compared with anything else.

The celibate who is also in this room is however on a scientific mission to break out of this room within which he finds himself imprisoned. He has been informed about the warm, bright rays of an entity called the 'Sun' (the soul) which no heating seating system can ever match, which no log fire can ever compete with. He still doesn't have first hand experience of how exactly this 'Sun' appears or the warmth and heat he gives out. He doesn't yet know the expanse, virtual infinity, space and fresh air in the so called 'outside' world that he has been told about. He knows not what it is to see the Sun in all splendor lighting the entire world and making life possible on this planet Earth by being the source of all heat, light, energy and growth. But he has only been told that he should ignore and be indifferent to the activities and tendencies of the other male and female occupants in the room who constantly hanker after petty pleasures involving each other and start to quarrel and fight once these impermanent pleasures come to an end only seeking more. He has also been asked not to mix with them, lest he too gets mired in their nature of thought and action.

At the start of celibacy, he slowly starts to feel around the room trying to figure out its layout. He starts to realize its limited dimensions and boundaries (which the others have no clue about). After a few months of celibacy he comes across something called as a 'door' in one corner of the room which is hinged at one end and locked at the other. Further to a year of celibacy, he musters up the courage and might to start kicking and banging at the door. But task is anything but easy. The door is very thick and sturdy, besides he is constantly distracted and plagued by the activities of his roommates who are constantly engrossed with each other in their delirium. Sometimes he feels like giving up and re-uniting with his counterparts. Sometimes they call him, pull him and try to trick him back into their state of stupor. If he gives in and rejoins them, all is lost and he will get back to his earlier state of degeneration. The thought of a limitless outside world, the fresh breeze and the 'Sun' have set his mind running with curiosity, eagerness and zest. He doesn't yet know what all these things mean for he hasn't had first hand experience, but he feels the stirring of an innate urge to find out all about its beauty and get out of the present hellhole.

Further to a year of constant efforts at alienating himself from his roommates (celibacy) and their antics, he finds within himself a power which he didn't possess earlier. Now his kicks and bangs targeting the thick door (delusion) are stronger and something marvelous has started to happen! When he kicks very hard and the door yields at bit at the locked end, he sometimes sees a thin, bright sliver of light!!! It is something he has never experienced in his life filled in the dark dungeon. The sheer brightness, power and warmth of the trickling sunlight make him awestruck and mesmerized. Mind you, this light is visible only to him and not to the others deep in their stupor, unaware of their surroundings. He now starts to persevere in his goal with a never before energy and enthusiasm. He finds himself less tempted by the doings of his roommates and more intent at breaking free.....He is now fully awake and has just one goal, to set himself free and experience the infinite bliss outside!!!

Coming back to the question on hand, the 'Alpha males' or players are the roommates active in their delirious deeds totally 'asleep' to reality. The celibate has woken up and is on the path to set himself free. Need we say more? The apparent pleasures derived from sensuality are like the heat and light produced by the torches. They will all fizzle out one fine day. Once man feels the warmth and luster of Sunlight (soul bliss), who would ever want to go back to the filthy dungeon (sensual pleasures)? Which man who has felt the warmth and power of Sunlight would settle for torchlight?!!! But till one is entirely free from confinement of the senses, the effort has to be tremendous and persistent. Any dearth of effort will tempt man back toward his unfortunate roommates and their delusions! Just as a bird long caged hesitates to fly out when set free, man at the initial stages of a life of virtue wonders if such a life is worth the effort, for he has long known nothing else but the dreary dungeon called sensuality and has associated it with life and happiness.

Desire unfulfilled leads to anger. Anger leads to more desire as a form of solace and finally when both of these have burnt man, a new foe called 'envy' takes birth when man comes across others having what he doesn't and cherishes to have. As soon as envy is born, it brings along its cousins desire and anger back into the tally. It is a vicious cycle very, very hard to negate. If there is one way to succeed, it is through celibacy. Control over one's sexuality empowers man to control all other troublesome domains. He who can control the sexual urge and transmute it into constructive work and progress can achieve the impossible. There is nothing in the world beyond the reach of such a man. He becomes the real superman. But till 12 years of absolute celibacy are achieved one has to be extremely vigilant against downfall.

So yes, one has to always keep oneself apart from the erroneous concept that sexing is 'manly'. By indulging in a life of sex for pleasure, man actually loses his manliness! Let our 'Alpha male' brothers try indulging in a 2 hour workout at the gym further to a bout of sex, the results would be there for all to see and they would be anything from 'manly'!

Why do we see sensuality and dollops of sexuality in every advertisement and in the media right from the ads of an Educational University showing a female student clad in suggesting attire? Because 'Sex sells', nothing more, nothing less. By using an object of sensuality, the advertiser is able to guarantee attention to the product. Ensuring such material in an ad is guaranteed to draw attention even from non-university aspirants! By focusing on sensuality, the very essence of the product is infact lost. It’s the oldest trick of the conman. The people behind it want to make money by hook or crook and care a tuppence for the welfare of the masses. It is another thing how this pollutes and corrupts the impressionable minds of young people eager to experience life. It sends out a strong wrong signal that anything associated with sex is ‘cool’ and that the opposite is dated. While the few smart ones try and think this out, the majority falls for the bait and gets 'hooked'.

What does the thief do when he wants to rob a house guarded by a magnificent male dog? He takes a female dog along and all the greatness, power and watchfulness of the male dog derived by years of strenuous training go up into thin air, such a shame. At least the dog can be discounted as an animal without a high level of discrimination, but we humans are blessed with a high IQ, an awareness of right, wrong and discrimination. Not utilizing these amounts to the greatest injustice done to ourselves.

May the blessed god give the strength, wisdom and knowledge to all to keep sensuality at bay.

Trust this helps, keep the efforts at celibacy going
God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
hi dhananjay!!
first of all let me thank you for providing guidance to everyones.
questions:
1.Does a slip in celibacy of a month bring you to the same level as that before practicing?
2.does a long time celibacy affect your fertility?
3.how to cope up with depressive mood following the breakage of vow.?

i feel much depressed after i slip after a strict focused 10 days.,it seems to me that all that effort has gone waste just due to moments slip.

Answer
Hello Sural,

Good to know of your interest in celibacy, coming to your query

Q1: Does a slip in celibacy after a month from start bring one back to the same level?
A: Conservation and transmutation of Semen results in a corresponding increase in the 'Prana' or vital energy, the source of all life and greatness. A slip in celibacy does harm to the celibate on the following fronts:

1. It drains the 'Prana' or vital energy that had being conserved. Semen once lost can never be recovered. The body has to again start the production of more semen at the cost of more life energy. To this extent man loses 'Prana' or life energy irreversibly. On a parallel note, his ability, success and greatness will reduce by that extent.

2. A slip in celibacy, re-familiarizes man with the sexual sensation as a source of delusive pleasure. One of the aims of celibacy is to kill the familiarity of the sex-sensation. This purpose gets compromised.

At the physical level, a slip in celibacy is like taking two steps forward and one step backward. Mentally and at the Karmic level (At the level of the causal body) it almost amounts to a reset back to square one.

Sri Ramakrishna Paramahansa the great saint has said:- " The entire process of raising the Kundalini, by spotless celibacy for a period of two years is lost with one single act of ejaculation. The aspirant has to start all over again".

At the beginning of celibacy, slips do happen. Take an oath to be celibate for ten days, then increase it to fifteen days, then to twenty days and so on. With success in longer and longer periods of celibacy, the tendency to slip reduces. Once three months of absolute celibacy are achieved, the going gets easier. After completion of a year of unbroken Brahmacharya, one gets transferred to a different domain of peace, power, bliss and virtue. Cosmic energies start working in favor of the celibate. The first year of celibacy is fraught with troubles and obstacles as purification at the physical and mental level occurs. With honest efforts and devotion to the lord, success is assured.

Q2: Does longtime celibacy affect fertility?
A: In reality a true Brahmachari is more potent and virile than the healthiest youth. If he marries and aspires for offspring, the couple can achieve conception with a single act of copulation during the wife's fertile period, if god wills them to have a child. Normal men need to try for many days or months to accomplish this objective. Such is the power and sperm concentration in his semen.

Brahmacharya is not suppression of the sexual force but transmutation. Brahmacharya makes a man get closer to perfection and will never harm the aspirant as long as his practice is correct. Chastity is to be followed in thought, word and deed. Mere physical celibacy with impure thoughts results in repression of the sexual force and will not bear fruits. The myth that Brahmacharya leads to infertility has sprung from people who haven't been true to the practice in thought, word and deed and who might have thus faced physical problems. To sum it up, true celibacy increases fertility!

Q3: How does one face the depression further to a slip?
A: A slip only indicates that our efforts are not up to the mark. It shows we need to strive more honestly, sincerely and in the correct direction with prayer to god for success. Adequate physical, mental activity and god-meditation on a daily basis are an absolute must if one wishes to break free from slips and wet dreams. We fail due to our own shortcomings, none are to be blamed.

Semen is the net sum of all power and life within man.
The 'Saptah Brahman' - An ancient treatise on Dharma says :-"Semen is brightness, strength and self (Atman or the soul).

When man loses semen he is losing a part of his very self, a part of his very life, being and existence. It is irreversible. The resulting depression is enormous and beyond words. The best way to avoid this depression is not to slip in the first place! However if one does find himself a victim of slip, he should immediately get at the root of what caused the slip and ensure non-recurrence of the cause. Meditating on god with devotion and sincerity, asking him to give strength to win over the senses will help. Also important is to busy oneself with constructive work and build a resolve to stay true to the oath of celibacy.

Finally words from the mouth of none other than the blessed Lord Shiva as told to Goddess Parvati which should serve as an inspiration for all celibates:-

" Na tapo tapahah ithyaahu Brahmacharyam tapothamam |
Urdhvareto bhaved yasya, sa devo na tu Maanushaha" ||

Meaning:- "There is no penance which equals Brahmacharya. Brahmacharya is the highest and loftiest of all penances |
The Urdhvareta saint who practices Brahmacharya is not a human being but a living god" ||

May you achieve great success in celibacy

Question
Thank you, sir, and a compliment is in order. You either are a student of Plato and his allegory of the cave or perhaps a reincarnation of Socrates. You write so elegantly about these delicate matters and have the heart of a lion to go against the corrupt culture we live in.

Answer
Hello Bruce,

Much honored to receive the compliments and to be of small service. While the good wishes have certainly fueled more inspiration and zest towards my efforts, I consider myself nothing more than a striving student of celibacy, trying to be ever vigilant against the onslaught of the senses and as prone to danger as anyone else out there.

But yes, being of some help to interested people like you certainly makes one feel happier at the end of the day.

May god bless you with progress in Brahmacharya and help you attain true knowledge of the self.

Question
QUESTION: Hello,

I have been have trouble with myy arousal levels recently. I think it my be connected to a porn addiction. How do i stop this from happening? How long do i stop looking at porn and masterbating until i become sensitized again?

ANSWER: Hello there,

Looking at porn and masturbating is a gradual poison which will ultimately kill man in every front. It is the direct path to physical, mental, emotional, psychic degeneration and decay. A person wishing to do good to himself at the individual level and make himself a worthy member of his family and society should stay away from this habit.

Detailed elaborations on how to free oneself from this problem have been dealt with in past answers with the following titles:

---------- FOLLOW-UP ----------

QUESTION: So, are you saying that one should not look at AND masterbate? I think i can and will stop the porn but isn't it biologically detrimental to stop masterbating completely, especially since i don't have a girlfriend to satisfy my needs. I would assume one would become unbalanced, moody and aggressive.
Should i just cut down and slowly stop? Or stop completely?

Answer
The biological sex need which people refer to is itself apparent, false and non-existent. It is a trick of the mind and a result of imagination and recollection of past actions. A few months of celibacy will make man realize this fact. The purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. Indulgence in the sexual act for any purpose other than begetting progeny takes man into the domain of pain and suffering.

Contrary to being detrimental, stopping masturbation and transmuting the sexual energy into creative and constructive work improves health/ wellbeing and produces true bliss. Yes one might encounter anger and mood swings at the initial stages, but in the long run harnessing the sex force through mental, physical and intellectual work with prayer to god will make man shine like a star. Sex energy is the net sum of all energy available in man. Wastage of semen degenerates man while transmutation and sublimation of the same makes him a superman.

Kindly go through all the past answers here to get a clear idea of what this really means at the practical level if you are interested in the practice of celibacy.

And yes, It will be necessary to stop masturbation and porn watching completely to achieve true progress.

Question
Hello sir,
I was glad and thankful for your feedback for the previous
question.
Sir I have a query on my past experience.It was just 1 year back where I was practising my celibacy on regular interval.I had a thinking that practising celibacy brings sucess to your life,but at the same moment I failed in a particular subject in my engg examination where my faith started collapsing there by.Even if I practise my celibacy but some times that griefs inflicts the pain.So how can I come out of it?Hope you wont mind for this.

Answer
Hello Sagar,

Hope your are doing fine. Coming to your query,

The practice of celibacy in the right sense in thought, word and deed indeed helps man to achieve great success. Enormous energy, ability and potential are made available to the body and mind further to the practice of Brahmacharya. Now how man makes use of this power for his achievements is a proposition that depends on various factors.

For a student to fare well in his examinations, hard work in his field of studies is of paramount importance. Brahmacharya makes available at his disposal a great deal of memory, concentration, patience, determination and intelligence. How well he actually makes use of these to practically achieve success in his examination will depend on his application of the same.

Brahmacharya is somewhat similar to a few liters of fuel at hand. But for the fuel to be ultimately beneficial, one still has to fill it into an automobile, start the engine, drive through traffic and finally reach one's destination whereupon the fuel would have met its purpose. If a man were to just sit at home with the can of fuel before him he would not reach the destination. He needs to take the initiative to make the fuel work through the automobile.Here we are converting automobile fuel into locomotion to help us move. A Brahmachari converts his sexual energy into 'Ojas' or divine energy and makes use of it to achieve his objectives.

As man succeeds in longer and longer periods of true celibacy in thought, word and deed, the power at his disposal also proportionately increases. While a beginner might not see much difference in his ability at the start as compared to his past, consistent and honest efforts will slowly start releasing the tremendous power and might which Brahmacharya bestows. As the saying goes "Patience is golden" and "Everything comes to he who waits and perseveres"

Question
I have been masturbating daily starting from the age of 19 years, but now I have realized the grave mistake which I was committing. I am 24 years old now. I want to be a perfect celibate until marriage. Can I attain self-realization even after marriage? I am sort of depressed about the enormous amount of vitality which I have lost during these years. Please help.

Answer
Hello Amit,

Good to see your interest as regards to the practice of celibacy, coming to your query:

Q: Is it possible to progress in the path of self-realization and celibacy if one has indulged in sexual excess?
A: The best of the sperm are available in a normal man from the onset of puberty up to his twenties and early thirties. From then onwards the quality and power of his sperm start to deteriorate. The first signs of degeneration at the physical, mental and psychic levels further to wastage of semen are seen in the form of deteriorating eyesight, tendency to feel tired, aches in the neck and spine, irritability and a general sense of negativity etc..

Semen is the net sum of all health, strength, wellbeing and power within man. One who conserves and transmutes this great essence can achieve the impossible.

It is good that you have realized the dangers of masturbation and want to be a celibate till marriage. If you get into a life of celibacy in thought, word and deed and thereby transmute the vital power into divine energy or 'Ojas', it is possible to progress in the path of self-realization and bliss. To achieve the same it becomes necessary to completely stop all forms of masturbation and other sexual indulgences. If a celibate practices true and honest Brahmacharya, he can bring forth talented and virtuous offspring after marriage and get back into the practice of divine celibacy by which the doors of 'Mukti' or self-realization will start opening.

As the saying 'Better be late than never' goes, the past is history. We are totally helpless as regards to altering the happenings of our past. It is the future that is at our disposal. There is no need to fear or worry if you put in sincere efforts in the practice of Brahmacharya from now on and become a celibate. And yes one becomes very eligible to attain self-realization further to twelve years of absolute celibacy (without the wastage of vital essence)

The Chaandogya Upanishad says:- "Those who practice Brahmacharya attain to the abode of 'Brahman'(The creator), for by the practice of Brahmacharya alone does one understand the 'Atman'" (self/ soul)

You have your entire life ahead of you to achieve this noble objective, so worry not about the past but march ahead into the special journey called life armed with the shield of Brahmacharya :-)

May God bless you with success in attaining the knowledge of the self

Question
Dhananjay,
Hope you are well. If the question is not too personal, would you care to tell us what set you on path to self restraint? Was it the reading of the Hindu scripture that enlightened you or negative life experience that led you to see what Julian calls the "duality" of sensual pleasure? I take it you are a young man but old in wisdom to attain this insight in this perverted culure.
Thanks
Bruce

Answer
Hello Bruce,

Trust things are going good your side. I'm doing fine, thank you. Coming to the question at hand,

Q: What triggered me to choose the path of self restraint as a way of life?
A: Fortunately in my case, I would call it Gods grace, there wasn't any negative experience or downfall in life that acted as a catalyst to choose the path of Brahmacharya. I consider myself lucky to have been born to parents who have a rich spiritual background and virtuous inclination to life. Ever since I have been a kid, there were always discussions and debates at home between my parents as to the origin of life, creation, the soul and the purpose of man's existence on earth. I fondly remember the various stories of virtue, morality, sacrifice and valor from Hindu scriptures that my mother used to tell me as a child while putting me to sleep every night. What little knowledge and spiritual inclination I have, I owe it to the foundation laid down by my divine parents. As a teenager, I had been advised regarding the benefits of the practice of Brahmacharya by my father, though I must say I didn't realize its amazing power and pay much attention to this wonderful concept at that point of time.

Further to marriage and fatherhood, one day like bolt from the blue I found myself recalling the benefits of celibacy about which I had been advised about during adolescence. I consider this as the trigger that set me on to the celibate path and owe it directly to the great Lord, the creator, for there wasn't any specific reason to try celibacy. I started spending much time reading material related to celibacy and self realization along with the practice of a yogic life with a hunger that hadn't existed before. With the start of strict and honest Brahmacharya, the underlying current of dissatisfaction that had existed earlier towards life soon disappeared. Every page I read from scriptures and books on self-realization were like a recollection and refresher of knowledge which had always been present below the surface. Tears of gratitude stream down my eyes when I think of how kind God has been as regards to initiating me into a life of celibacy. Like a godsend, I have been blessed with a wife who is herself noble, supportive and virtuous. By the grace of the Blessed lord, we have been able to overcome the obstacles which always come to every celibate as tests and are into a combined life of Brahmacharya as a celibate couple.

Hail the Blessed Lord, 'Brahman', 'Christ', 'Allah'. Who is called by many names but is One. Who runs the entire world, the cosmos, the universe with a twinkling of his eye. The scriptor, producer and director of the divine cosmic drama called life in which man is only an actor as a result of which it forms the duty of man to fully surrender his life to the dictates of the lord. Who is ever kind and merciful to his children in spite of all their mistakes like a mother who never angers at her child's mischief. Who is the source of all beauty, knowledge, power and life. The omnipresent, omniscient, all pervading super entity who has always existed and will always exist. How can one ever find words to describe the untrammeled feelings that he generates in those devoted to him? May he give the strength, ability and inclination to all those on the path of celibacy to attain thorough success and reach unto him.

Hope this throws some light regarding the question that was posed.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
hello.!!!
1.what is the importance of practicing brahmacharya for 12 years? what you attend at end.?
2.how siddhis are related with brahmacharya?
3.Can the damage caused by past mistakes, like loss of vitality be got back.?

Answer
Hello there,

Hope you are doing good. Coming to your queries,

Q1: What is the significance behind practicing Brahmacharya for a period of 12 years?
A: If one wanted to take a kettle of water and convert it to steam what would one do? Firstly the kettle would be placed atop a fire, it would be be covered tightly with a stopper, heated to 100 degrees centigrade and then the steam would start appearing, and after maintaining this temperature for a considerable duration of time, all the water in the kettle would slowly get converted into steam. Would any reduction in the temperature to say 98 degrees, reduction in the heating time or a leak in the kettle help us achieve conversion of every ounce of water into steam? NO.

Practicing Brahmacharya for a period of 12 years is very similar. The human body produces semen through a seven stage process. From food comes chyle, from chyle-blood, from blood-flesh, from flesh-fat, from fat-bone, from bone-marrow and finally from marrow comes semen. It is the seventh and final tissue element of the human body, hence called 'Saptha Dhatu'. It is the net sum of all energy, power, creativity and greatness within man capable of producing a new life. No other secretion in the human body has the power to give life. Semen is the net sum of all 'Prana' or vital energy within. The body draws entirely from man's vital life energy to produce each drop of semen and semen in turn produces another life. With every instance of loss of semen, 'Prana' or the vital energy within gets destabilized and man in turn gets poorer in his life energy proportionately. Hence for man to achieve his full potential and prowess in any sphere of life, the conservation, transmutation and sublimation of semen becomes mandatory. Just as water in the kettle took the requisite time, temperature and pressure to convert into steam it takes 12 years of absolute celibacy in thought, word and deed (without the voluntary wastage of even a single drop of semen) for the 'Prana' to reach a level where the complete intrinsic power, ability and greatness of man start to manifest.

Q2: What does one attain by this process?
A: The answer would be 'What does one not attain by the process'? A barrel of water by itself cannot do much, but if converted into high pressure steam, it can run a turbine and generate electricity. It can be used to cook food and feed a hungry mouth. Brahmacharya similarly can be used to achieve spectacular results in any field of life. All scriptures cutting across religions profess that by the honest and true, unbroken practice of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed for a span of 12 years, the Urdhvareta acquires superhuman powers and even the vision of God. This rewards him with the fruition of all his goals and objectives at the highest level and finally self-realization, the very purpose of the human existence.

Q3: What is the connection between Siddhis and Brahmacharya?
A: Siddhis or special powers are nothing but a manifestation of the infinite power already present within the soul or 'Atman'. The reason why these do not manifest in the common man is because of the layers of 'Ignorance' or 'Avidya' which have cocooned themselves around the soul. If man could unveil this ignorance effectively, he could achieve the impossible, be it in the materialistic or spiritual spheres of life. Brahmacharya helps one to effectively unlock this veil and let the light of the 'Atman' or soul to shine through in full splendor so man could achieve all his aspirations and reach the goal of human life through self-realization.

Q4: Is damage caused by past loss of vital energy reversible?
A: It is 'Better late than never' and 'Never too late for amendments'. Practice of Brahmacharya even for a few months will make even a non-believer realize the benefic effects of celibacy. The scriptures recommend that for the full powers and siddhis of 12 year celibacy to be unleashed, the commencement of unbroken practice must commence at least before the 32 or the 34th year. This does not entirely mean that those who start later will not be benefited. Our past is gone and beyond our control. It is the present and future over which we have some say. He who starts the practice of celibacy as soon as he gets to know of its benefits, whatever be his age will surely improve and shine from then on.

God bless and have a nice day

Question
Hello Dhananjay,
I hope you are doing well. Your response to my question in 'Advice on Technique' many months ago was of great help to me. I check this forum almost daily hoping to gather more wisdom and inspiration from you. Usually I'm disappointed that no one has asked a new question.

I started making real progress in celibacy a little over 1 year ago after reading this forum. Since that time I have had perhaps 3-4 voluntary slips, and several involuntary ones at night. This is a great achievement for me as in previous years my attempts at celibacy couldn't go beyond a few days. More importantly, I've learned something very precious that you have been saying in many of your posts: A sexual thought starts a vicious cycle and each additional thought causes a buildup; each such thought encourages similar thoughts, and, if we choose to indulge in these, the buildup accelerates the time when it needs to be released. I can't say for sure based on my experience that I have found any real techniques to stop the buildup once a bad thought has gained entry, but I now know that the process can be slowed down dramatically by not indulging further in sensory experience. To all your readers, I want to attest that at least this much is possible!

I have recently made the bold decision to give up my current job after several years of being mistreated. I started doing graduate work at a top University after almost 10 years in the workforce. I was very worried about the decision to change career directions and go back to school and compete with very bright students 10 years younger, but I tried to put my faith in my abstinence. It has been very difficult, and the demands on my time have kept me from maintaining a steady meditation practice and eating healthy foods. (The only good things is it keeps my mind away from impure thoughts) Recently, I did very poorly on an important assignment that will adversely impact my final grade. This is perhaps the first time in my life I have ever done so poorly on something I worked so hard on. It also caused a prof that I respected to lose faith in me.

I know this may seem like such a trivial event, but it has shaken my confidence tremendously. I am plagued with doubt, loneliness, and fear. In addition, I was filled with anger and hatred towards a prof and some others for the way they recently treated me. The feelings consumed me to the point where I couldn`t concentrate when I was studying, even when I tried to push them away. Then finally I had an involuntary emission at night, and the next day I felt more calm and able to move forward again. I guess I am almost relieved that this emission took place. It occurred to me that the same buildup that occurs with sexual thoughts also occurs with negative emotions.

Do you have any insight on the relationship between negative emotions (hatred, revenge, worry, doubt, fear, etc.) and abstinence? Celibacy seems to give great tenacity. For example, when I was doing my assignment I could stay up several nights with just a few hours sleep. But the downside of this tenacity (staying power) is that when I felt negative emotions, these also stayed with me and I coudn`t drive them away until it was physically released.

I also don`t know why I am still feeling such fear and self-doubt after practicing over 1 year. I have seen some of the benefits of abstinence in my meditation, but my external circumstances have far from improved. I guess I had hoped I would be further along. I do not doubt in the least that celibacy is possible and is the way to great success, but I do doubt myself (eg. whether I am doing it correctly, whether I started the practice too late, etc).

I feel guilty for stealing your time like this Dhananjay, but once again I am in need of the magic you wield with your words for both guidance and encouragement. With sincere humility and thanks,
John

Answer
Hello John,

Good to hear from you. To begin with, I will request you to put fears and worries aside and compose yourself with positivity. There is no problem or obstacle on earth capable of overpowering a man who puts in constant, sincere and focussed efforts accompanied by devotion to god to reach his goal. Just as a dark, cold night gets replaced by a bright, sunny morning, life's dark moments will eventually get replaced with positive, happy times. So offer not a seat to faith in the negative. Now lets get to your queries, Q: Is there a relationship between the domain of negative emotions and abstinence?

A: Let us get to the root of things and try to sort them out efficiently. First and foremost every man is blessed with enormous energy from within by default. This is represented by his 'Prana' or vital energy. Through his thoughts and actions man converts this basic, vital energy into various other forms of currents.
* If he constantly ponders over objects related to sexuality he converts this basic energy into sexual energy, sexual duress and sexual passion.
* If he lets people and situations around him to cause infuriation and gets enraged, he converts this basic energy into anger, hatred and frustration.
* If he starts practicing for the Olympics with persevered, dedicated efforts at his training and practice to the point of excellence at the highest level, he wins a gold medal for his country...

A normal man leading a non-celibate life, has say 'X' units of this basic energy.

A man that has started to transmute his vital essence into constructive force has say '1.5X' units of basic energy.

A celibate who is reasonably established in Brahmacharya has say '2X' units of basic energy.

An ardent celibate who is well established in the conversion of his vital essence into 'Ojas' or divine energy has say '3X' or three times the ability and power of a common man to succeed in a given task.

A complete Urdhvareta who is beyond the vagaries of human nature, self-realized, content in the self by the self and resting in the supreme bastion of divine bliss has virtually infinite units of this basic energy. He can direct this great force on the object he wishes and achieve his ideal with seamless success. He can solve the most impossible of problems easily and casts tremendous influence on the world by virtue of the large reserves of universal force that reside within him.

This final state mentioned above is the state every celibate will eventually reach if his efforts at Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed are honest, true and persistent.

Coming back to the question on hand, a celibate who has had some success in the process of transmutation stands at an energy level much higher to that of the common, non-celibate man. If he becomes a victim of negative vibrations by letting them fire up within him for whatever external reasons, he also succeeds in letting his '2X' units of energy get converted to '2X' units of lust, anger or passion. The power he has started to derive from celibacy is similar to sitting behind the wheel of a high powered race car. If the driver gets careless and crashes the car at speed, the resulting destruction is much more in magnitude than that of an ordinary commuter car. As a celibate progresses in the transmutation of his vital power, he needs to be all the more cautious in not only staying away from objects of lust but also objects that could generate anger, passion, hatred, fear, worry or other negative emotions, for the birth of any one of these causes dissipation of the vital essence he has saved and nurtured with so much difficulty down the drain.

When you let the occurings at your workplace envelope you with negativity and cause duress, the vital energy within that you had conserved with great difficulty and effort got converted into unproductive anger and fear and with the birth of one negative emotion, eventually come along the sister negative emotions. They are never far behind. They are all like close knit members of the same family. The presence of one fuels the others. It is for this reason that a celibate should be ever vigilant not only against lust alone but also against anger, jealousy, hatred and frustration. It is very important for a celibate not to court them, lest they deprive him of the great energy he is damming up in his quest to achieve a great objective which they will always eventually do.

When a wise man is carrying a precious large carat diamond in his pocket on the street, he is ever cautious against getting into meaningless squabbles with riffraff at the street corners. He knows the value of what he has and just wants to do one thing - Put the diamond into a safe place where he can cherish if for the rest of his life.

While it remains a fact that all of us get overpowered by these negative emotions at some time or the other, the smart man wishing to do good to himself, tempers these negative currents with positivity, counts to ten and calms himself down, for he knows that letting these emotions rake up their heads is a recipe to disaster and that converting these very same emotions back into vital power is the sure shot road to spectacular success. In case of the celibate, this works all the better, for he has the best of energy at his disposal to be harnessed into success.

The road to absolute celibacy is one stricken with downfalls, obstacles and tests, for the destination is one which is extremely lofty, splendid and beautiful. But it is a destination reserved for the indefatigable man who knows not to give in or give up. To achieve something great calls for great sacrifice, hard work, patience and perseverance. But the results will be more than worth the effort. The secret of success is to convert these weaknesses into strengths by not letting them rake up their heads at times when they show signs of surfacing. Life is a journey that always has its share of failures and pitfalls but one need not loose hope or get scared even a little bit, for success always comes to to the persevering, proficient few who are bold and daring and seldom to the mild and timid.

When we analyze the cause of our failures, we ultimately come to only one source - 'Us'. Our success or failure stems from what is within us. It is wholly internal. We need not waste our time searching outside for who caused us to fail. We ourselves offered a seat to external factors to come and spoil our well being and they did the only thing they are meant to do - Cause trouble. Just as a seed sown takes time to germinate into a plant and takes many more years to become a full grown tree that offers shade, fruit and flowers, the seed of celibacy takes its own time to bestow the great benefits it will eventually give as a tree. But till the time it becomes a tree, one needs to fence it against dangers, water it and guard it day and night, lest it be eaten by a grazing animal or trampled under ignorant hooves.

Fear not and worry not. There is not one person who hasn't had failures at the start of celibacy and depending on the evolutionary level from person to person, each takes his own time to get established into absolute chastity, and even then one has to be ever alert in guarding this plant. But with honest efforts, sincerity and prayer to god, success will undoubtedly come and as it starts to come, it will more than compensate for all the trouble and effort one has taken. Stick to the basic rules and foundations of practicing celibacy in thought, word and deed with adequate physical, mental and spiritual activity to ensure transmutation, firm on the assumption that it is the boat that takes man across troubled waters and safely makes him reach the shore of success, bliss and happiness. Some of the greatest achievers in history were the ones who tasted bitter failure step after step, but today we remember them not for their failures but only for their achievements!

This should help. Revert for clarifications if any.

May god bless you with success in celibacy and reward you with the fruition of all your goals and aspirations.

Question
Hi how are you. I'm a really sexual person. To me sex is a beautiful way to express our love. I have meant this guy and he wants to wait. Only thing is I'm attracted to him so its hard. He's special so I do want to do this for and with him. How do I avoid temptation? Any really good methods I can use.

Answer
Hello there,

Trust you are doing fine. Coming to your questions,

Q: How does one avoid temptation?
A: The best method to avoid succumbing to temptation is to realize the benefits of being celibate and keep one's mind, body and psyche busy with constructive activity. Make a resolve to stay celibate for a certain period of time and achieve this target at all costs backed by spiritual activity. On reaching this target, extend this period to a few more days successively and repeat the process with longer and longer periods of celibacy. Once a few months of absolute celibacy have been practiced, one gradually starts to experience the beneficial results of being celibate. This will create an urge within to stay longer in the celibate mode and with constant efforts, success will eventually dawn.

True love between two people is independent of physical or sexual interaction. It flowers and blossoms immaterial of sexual contact and in fact can be experienced to the fullest extent only in a relationship that is beyond sex. If 'Love' between two people is dependent on the sexual relationship they have, it is not true love but an extension of lust and carnal desire. The purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not merry making. The reproductive fluids of man and woman are intended to create life and are not to be wasted. One will gradually get first hand conviction on this fact as he progresses in true celibacy.

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

Hope you are doing good. I am extremely thankful to you for anwering my last question. I was established in celibacy for a week and then I had a slip, as I could not control my mind when strong temptations emerged. I am feeling very low and disappointed. I wanted to ask few more questions to clarify my doubts.

1. How do you overcome the urges and temptations when you see the opposite sex that previously urged you to masturbate? How to get rid of those thoughts from the mind? Although I try hard to control myself, I eventually end up masturbating again. Please help me.

2. What measures should one take if one wants to avoid sexual thoughts altogether, especially in the company of the opposite sex?

3. How to forget the feeling of disappointment from past relationships with the opposite sex? I had a relationship where my partner was not responding the way I expected and this caused frustration and the desire to masturbate to avoid it. I know this is wrong and is killing me from inside. I seriously want to get away with this habit.

4. How to be fearless when others don't behave the way you want them to, and criticize you? How to avoid anger and how to control oneself in such situations? I have noticed that this also provokes the urges to masturbate to forget the insults.

5. You talk about transmutation and sublimation of sexual energy. How can one accomplish that?

I want to enter into complete celibacy, but am helpless. I am addicted to social networking websites on the internet too. Does even looking at pictures of the opposite sex constitute a danger in the practice of celibacy?

I am hungry for your encouraging words Dhananjay. I seriously need them to gain strength and confidence. Please help me.

Answer
Hello Amit,

Keep the efforts at celibacy going. Coming to the queries,

Q1: How does one overcome sexual urges?
A: It will not be possible to overcome all these urges in one go at the start of celibacy. Hence the technique to be employed is to ensure that sights, sounds, tastes, smells and touch that fire up the sex plane in man are first kept at bay to the best extent. The mantra here is 'Prevention is better than cure'. On leading such a life abhorring sense stimulation for a long time and thereby killing the familiarity of the sex sensation as a source of delusive pleasure, man gradually starts reaching the shores of freedom from the sex sensation. Till then one has to be extremely strict and merciless with oneself regarding the downside.

Q2: How does one avoid sexual thoughts in the company of the opposite sex?
A: First and foremost, treat every woman as a mother or sister. There can be no other relationship if one wants to achieve this ideal. The 'friend' relationship will not do, it will invariably flower into lust and desire. Keep interactions brief and to the point. Lust has the uncanny ability to sprout from the most innocent of contact. No partying, or socializing with the opposite sex for the Brahmachari. Those who want to party and hangout with the opposite sex are not yet ready for Brahmacharya, they can give it a shot once they are over this interest of theirs. Brahmacharya is not a casual mode of life, it is a matter of gravity that calls for seriousness and purpose. The aim of the Brahmachari is not to win a popularity contest or be the most sought after guy in his peer groups. His aim is to discover his self. One must first make a choice on what one wants, the former or the latter.

Q3: How does one overcome disappointments that have stemmed from past relationships?
A: By reminding oneself that the things called 'Hots', 'Vibes', 'Chemistry' and 'longing' are nothing but various forms of lust, desire and passion, one realizes it was all an illusion. Would a man still want to go out on a date with his lover if she were ill, bad smelling, disfigured and ugly, devoid of alluring dresses and hairstyles? Ninety nine times out of a hundred, what people call love and a relationship is nothing more than an informal agreement of mutual convenience as regards to the exchange of sex, money, gifts or some other selfish need. This hasn't the smallest semblance to true love. True love is giving, true love is beyond a firm body, beyond social status and beyond the frills of a lady enjoying her ride in a high powered sports car. No wonder men who have none of these find it difficult to find a 'Lover', while those who do, easily find abundant number of 'lovers'. This is as much love as a rope is a snake. Keeping this absolute truth in mind will make one realize that the so called 'relationships' were nothing more than convenience contracts!

Q4:How does the Brahmachari deal with the reaction he gets from the society as regards to his celibate status?
A: Does a sprinter practicing for the Olympics bat his eyelids when he gets called as being aloof further to his strict lifestyle, food habits, no partying and inhuman practice sessions? No. He takes these things in his stride as they are the means to the end he has on his mind. Brahmacharya is very similar, one can't have the cake and eat it too. If one has decided to become a successful celibate, he will be indifferent to the world and turn a blind eye and ear to what people have to say. It is celibacy that interests the celibate and not a popularity rating as explained earlier. Once this stance is clear, you will feel no anger at what people have to say or don't have to say!

Q5:How does one achieve transmutation and sublimation?
A: Adequate and regular physical, mental (intellectual) and spiritual activity comprising of Yogasana or exercise, constructive mental work and god-meditation are the keys. The mind is best tamed by keeping it ever busy with productive work so it has no time to hanker after sense objects. Sexual thoughts are to be nipped at the bud when they do start to rise and are to be replaced by divine thoughts. With this basic rule frame, success will slowly start to trickle in course of time. For a detailed insight on this particular topic I will kindly request you to go through all the past answers on this portal with an eagle eye.

Question
Dhananjay,
Thank you for your answer to the young man's troubles. I would like to make a comment simply based on my life experience. Ambition is a fine thing, but young men of an idealistic temperment tend to be a bit too docile and even servile in face of authority. I think we should all demand respect from those we work with. This is part of being a man, and I believe manliness is something that sexual restraint is aimed at developing. The approval of a boss or a prof is not the purpose of life.
I think this is something to meditate on. And the negative emotions will be like fleeting impressions on the screen of consciousnes. Let them go.
Hope I made sense

Answer
Hello Bruce,

How are things your side?

Brahmacharya is essentially man's journey back to the domain of the glory and splendor of the soul. It is the soul in all of us that forms the source of all greatness, power, strength, will and achievement. The soul is beyond intelligence, the mind, the sense organs and the body.

However the soul or 'Atman' is eclipsed by various layers of ignorance and delusion (This prevents its great power and light to fully shine through). This degree of veiling differs from person to person and is the exact factor that determines what we call the evolutionary level of a living being. In an animal like say an insect or a worm who also have souls within, this ignorance is so thick and tough that the animal is beyond comprehending emotions which humans relate to. At this stage in the evolution of a worm or an insect, the comprehension that the body is everything and the fight to survival and life by gathering food and protecting itself is paramount. The veil is so strong that intelligence in the brain of an insect is minuscule and negligibly fractional.

Then again when we go to a comparatively higher being like say a dog, the 'veil' has slightly unwound itself and is present to a lesser degree as compared to the worm further to evolution. So you see the dog relate to man, display emotions such as affection and respond to man's communication. The intelligence factor is now automatically at a higher level in the dog (As the soul now has a few lesser layers blocking its power and light) so you have an animal that can be made to fetch a ball, guard the house and respond to basic instructions.

But the veil around its soul is still dense enough to prevent the animal from understanding how a television set works, how an engine fires to life or how the internet works. These things the dog cannot be made to understand.

Next we come to the final stage in evolution -'Man'. A cave man or a jungle man is not much different from other animals that reside in a forest except that his spine has become erect (Which automatically aids the rise of consciousness or 'Kundalini' to some extent) thereby giving him a better comprehension of things around him and the ability to interact with nature at a much more refined level to his advantage.

The 'Atman' or soul we have been referring to in all the above beings is untouched by the veils of ignorance around it and has always had the same splendor, power and knowledge. It might be compared to a 1000 Watt bulb ever emanating light. If the bulb were to be covered with thick blankets, no light would shine through in spite of the bulb burning with all power. The covering of blankets however doesn't reduce the luminance or brightness of the bulb in actual terms. It only prevents us from seeing the light coming through. Now if we unwound a few blankets and there were say just two blankets around the bulb, a part of the light would seep through the fibers of these blankets and we would know that there was a bulb within that was ON. We however still cant fathom its full brightness and power. If one of these two blankets were to be further removed and only a thin blanket were to remain, we would now start seeing the outline of the bulb, the sharp rays poking through gaps in the thin covering and realize the fact that the bulb is in fact quite bright and powerful. We still don't know the actual power of its wattage and luminance... And if we really want to know this parameter, there is only one way and that is to remove the final blanket around the bulb and see the bulb in all its splendor shining like a bright star!

This is precisely what the celibate tries to accomplish through Brahmacharya. Indulging in sense pleasure can be compared to adding more blankets around the bulb thereby going further away from its brightness. Indulging in true celibacy helps man to unwind all these blankets (Ignorance) around the soul and thereby let the shine, absolute splendor and might of the soul to illuminate everything around.

And when man achieves this great feet, his greatness, power, ability and intrinsic beauty would go to unheard of heights be it in the materialistic or spiritual plane. All lofty qualities that the soul is in charge of such as bravery, valor, might, strength, intelligence, knowledge, compassion and innumerable lofty qualities would reside at man's command, for they are after all products of the soul. Man would become the star of stars and shine with incomprehensible brilliance. He would then realize that this 'Atman' or soul is in reality a derivative of the universal power whom we call 'The blessed lord', the father of creation and the only permanent entity, just as the billion rays of the sun are all really a part of the sun reaching us. The sun may be compared to the 'Paramatman' or the great lord and his billion rays could be compared to the billions of living souls in fleshy sheaths on mother earth. So here we are... having come from him, the blessed lord and having being blessed with all the qualities he himself stands for !!!

So all of us need to keep in mind the fact that we are all derivatives of the supreme entity and have within us the loftiest of qualities. As this awareness starts to increase, negative emotions would vacate man all by themselves finding not a place to stay within him.

Question
Hello Dhananjay, I would like to start off by saying that I have read every question and response from the beginning with an eagle eye. Your words and modern day interpretation are more valuable than gold. You have answered almost all of my questions before I had to ask them.

I was first introduced to the idea of Celibacy through Julian Lee at his celibacy.info site. Julian believes that the entire world (and the people in it) is of your own creation, from inside out. Basically "Solipsist" And as you progress in celibacy/purity your outer world illusory dream upgrades. I would like to know from your perspective if you agree with this, and if so.. how other people fit in the equation since it is your creation.

Lastly, I would like to state for beginners, a good exercise to stop the pressure in the testicles is to lock your fingers together near your solar-plexus (abdominals) as this creates a closed energy loop and you can feel the energy draw back up. Feels like chills.

Dhananjay, thank you for your time and dedication. You are providing an Oasis upon this desert physical plane.

Answer
Hello Shawn,

Good to know of your interest as regards to celibacy. Reading past answers helps broaden understanding and hence is a recommended 'do' for those interested in celibacy. Coming to your query,

Q: What could be the reality behind and the connection between the physical world, life, God and creation?
A: When we start pondering and contemplating on who we are, each and everyone of us will get a gut feeling that there is something very ancient and permanent about us at the deepest innate level. Something beyond the body, mind, intellect, consciousness and ego. It is a very subtle feeling. The degree of awareness as regards to this subtlety might differ from person to person and from being to being. But at the beginning of everything and at the end, there is this basic feeling. We generally don't pay much attention to this feeling or awareness. It's very fleeting in most of us and doesn't occur very often while we are in the normal state.

Sometimes this 'awareness' goes to the next degree and 'tells' us that we should be doing something or shouldn't do a particular thing, then again this direction that is given out is itself very subtle and faint in most of us. But it is there, it is very definitely there. There have been times when we meet a person who appears very charming and acceptable but this 'very faint inner voice' tells us he or she is in fact the opposite. Much later, after a few months or years, after we have had bad experiences with this very person, we realize that this person was not what we assumed him or her to be. Then, at that point, after having been wronged, if we sit quiet a bit and can succeed in recollection of the past, we will know that at the time we met this person many months or years back, there was that faint voice that told us not to trust this person. It was a voice that knew the truth at the first glance and whispered us this fact from deep within like the sound of waves hitting the shore on a still moonlit night. You might be at some distance from the sea, you cannot see the sea, but you hear the sound of waves lashing the shore and know you are close to the sea. This was not a feeling originating from the body, mind, intellect, consciousness or the ego. It was something beyond all these. There was something very direct, absolute and no-nonsense about it.

If most of us are asked about who we are, we will describe ourselves as the body we possess. If the body is hurt, ill or wounded, 'WE' are wounded. If the body 'died', that person is no more and is dead. Some others consider themselves to be the mind they have. If their 'feelings' 'likes' or 'desires' are met or not met, they feel happy or unhappy. A few others will say they are the 'intellect'. They consider the real themselves to be the power within them to discriminate, ponder, reason and realize. A fourth sect of people might describe themselves as the 'consciousness' and the fifth sect as the 'Ego'. But neither the body, mind, intellect, consciousness and ego could point out the reality in the above real life example. All the five failed in discerning the nature of the 'charming and acceptable' person. So now we come to understand that there is a sixth dimension within us that has a purview beyond the purview of the body, mind, intellect, consciousness and ego. Rather it is a dimension which is not bound by the limitations of these three. That according to me, is the 'soul'. It is the true 'US'. That is who we are. That is what we actually are.

If we contemplate a little more on this 'sixth dimension' through meditation, we will start to get a trickle of a feeling that everything is contained within it and everything comes from it. That there is nothing beyond its purview or nothing independent of its knowledge and reach.

We will also start to realize first hand that the world we see is only a reflection of our own mental state. That the very same world appears different at different times. When we are irritable and angry, every person appears as somebody who could instigate and ire us further. When we garner a fat profit from a new business, the whole world seems so very agreeable, so filled with lovely people and so very perfect. How can this be? How can one thing appear as two or many different things? What does this show? It shows two things:

1. That anything that is real must hold its reality and state of stability immaterial of our or anyone else's mental state. Water is a liquid at room temperature. Immaterial of whether it is day or night, we are angry or happy, we got a promotion or a demotion at our workplace, water will remain a liquid at room temperature. This is the reality of water in gross terms and time.

2. That if the external world we see was real, it would have to remain fixed, constant and unchangeable. But the apparent world is never fixed. It is constantly in a state of flux. A girl who appears very pretty in her teens is no longer found to have this 'prettiness' on reaching middle age. Where did the beauty in the body go? If it were real, it would be fixed and permanent. So the so called beauty in the body was unreal, it was never really there. It was more like an illusion. Similarly the impermanence in the world we see around us comprised of roads, buildings, automobiles and people will also have to be unreal for none of these things are fixed. With time, all these will change. Roads will be widened, buildings will be demolished and taller buildings will take their place, people who were once nice to us become unfriendly, wealth and a fat bank account dissolve into nothing further to a wrong investment and the wealthy man becomes a pauper. So all these things were and are unreal. For were they real they would stand against the ravages of time and forces.

Now coming back to the concept of the real 'US' or what we called the 'soul', why is it that the 'voice' of such a powerful and all knowing soul within most of us is so faint? If the so called 'soul' were to be so knowledgeable, omnipresent, omnipotent and supreme, why is it we have to try so hard to hear its voice and suggestions? Couldn't we all become super humans if we knew everything before it were to happen? We would then take only the right decisions, judge the right people and choose best road to success. There can only be one answer to this query. That there is some kind of an obstruction preventing this great power from reaching our minds, intellect and consciousness. Just as the rays of a light get dimmed or partially blocked if it were to be covered by a piece of cloth, the supreme power of the soul seems to be largely covered by some obstruction. If we could decipher a method to relieve the soul of this 'obstruction', the world would be in our hands. We would know the future and attain spectacular success. We would realize the power of 'ourselves' to the fullest extent and go beyond sorrow and misery.

first few months of celibacy unto a year, various of these 'obstructions' at the physical level start getting undone. The physical body is the foundation on which the other bodies (astral and causal bodies) rest when the soul is in a state of encasement. 'Obstructions' at the physical level are represented by disease, illness and health related abnormalities. These slowly start getting rectified and the time taken will depend on the extent of these abnormalities. As one succeeds in longer and longer periods of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed, 'obstructions' or abnormalities/ deviations at the mental and causal level start getting vacated. It is a slow process but can be a sure process depending on the intensity and honesty in celibacy. If there is a break, the process gets broken.

With continued and persistent practice of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed for a period of 12 years, the scriptures profess that man can undo all the obstructions covering the soul and become totally free. While the removal of all obstructions ensures that the full light and power of the soul starts to shine through (thereby ensuring man gets superhuman powers - not a miracle really, since knowledge is power and the soul always knew everything but had been obstructed by ignorance) it also bestows on man the all knowable status. He will know the secret of creation, the past, the future and will rest in a state beyond sorrow perfectly in tune with the creator or God who was present within him all the while. He will realize he was a fragmented microsm of the macrosm we call God and that all creation has come from he himself at the macrosm level.

So to answer the query as to whether the illusory dream upgrades with success in celibacy, the answer would have to be that it would take man to a state where he would totally get freed from the grip of illusion and would start relating to the only entity which is permanent: " He himself, the soul which is a microsm of the macrosm -God", whereupon the purpose of human birth would be met and the cycle would be complete.

Trust this threw some 'light' on matter of the 'light'!

Question
Hello there friend, I'm on my 12th day of abstinence from sex or masturbation; and some of the changes I have notice is that I'm more bold and fearless mentally when it comes to other people or being around or talking to beautiful wemon; I sound way more humble in my words than before . it's the best feeling . The other thing is the physical part and energy; I have noticed It takes very long for me to get fatigued when im running or playing football; but the kind of energy im looking for is the noticible energy; the sexual energy to rise out more so then I know my practices are officially really working . right now i don't feel a very dramatic change to where i'm like, wow! and I wanted to ask you if that energy will come overtime as I continue to abstain and transmute . Thank you & God bless .

Answer
Hello there,

Nice to see that you have started the practice of Brahmacharya.
Focus on transmutation of the sexual essence through adequate physical, mental and spiritual activity and by keeping away from all sources of sense stimulation. Once three months of absolute celibacy are through, the going gets a little more easier. Once a year of absolute unbroken celibacy is achieved the changes become very noticeable further to absorption of the seminal essence in true effect. And from then on the practice of 'REAL' celibacy starts...

Question
I m 30 yrs. I'm doing masterbution for 10 yrs. Once in a week .i tried to stop it. And failed after a month or 2 several times. My eyes and cheeks gone inside and i'm in a bad health. I want to know that can i attain the powers and health back or is it beneficial to practice brahmacharya after 30. What are the ayurvedic medicines helpful in regaining health and strengthening semen to transform to ojas.

Answer
Hello there,

Q1: Is it beneficial to practice celibacy after thirty years of age? If so what are the pointers to achieve this?
A: Start a life of Brahmacharya by abhorring from the objects of senses in thought, word and deed. Keep a time frame of a month to begin with. On attaining this target, increase this period to a month and half, then two months and so on. With success in longer and longer periods of celibacy, the body will slowly start becoming more healthy and will gradually increase its vital reserves. It is very important to keep one's thoughts clean and indulge in regular physical, mental and spiritual activity to succeed in the practice of Brahmacharya.

Q2: Is there any medicine to compensate for the lost semen?
A: No. There is no medicine which can replenish the lost reserves of semen. Semen once lost is lost for ever. The degeneration undergone by the body to replenish more and more semen further to wastage is irreversible. The only good one can do to oneself is to ensure further loss of semen is curtailed, thereby ensuring future safety.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

How are you? I restored my efforts for celibacy again and am on my 5th day. I wanted to know about what food should be taken during the day and how many times to maintain celibacy? I was addicted to eating chicken but have curtailed it to a good extent. What substitute can I use for chicken? Also, should onion and garlic be completely given up? Will eating chicken once a week disturb one's celibacy?

Thanks a lot for your guidance,
Amit

Answer
Hello Amit,

Trust you are keeping well, Coming to your query,

Q: What is the right food for a celibate?
A: Till one succeeds in a complete year of absolute celibacy, it is best to stay clear of all foods which stimulate the senses. These include onion, garlic, chilly, hot and pungent additives, egg and meat. A celibate must give up alcohol, tobacco and related addictions completely and permanently for life. After one crosses a year of unbroken celibacy and has attained a certain amount of 'Siddhi' as regards to the conservation and transmutation of semen, one can relax these strict food regulations to some extent based on the spiritual level one has attained.

Vegetarianism is the best method to progress in celibacy. Non-vegetarian food is designed for a body that indulges in exceedingly strenuous physical activity such as professional sports, weight lifting etc.. and even in this domain, there have been people who have vouched for the amazing benefits and merits they have achieved further to going vegetarian. The aim of the celibate is to maintain a sound body and mind so he can focus his energies towards Brahmacharya. Regularly eating meat will not aid in the formation of a calm, clear, serene and tranquil mind which is so very necessary and will instead produce much aggression, passion and irritation. Consuming much meat will make it nonviable for the celibate to indulge in consistent spiritual activity to clear his mind of his past delusive tendencies.

A Brahmachari should take simple, wholesome, sumptuous, nutritious and easily digestible light food which does not load his stomach and cause lethargy and stupor. Milk, buttermilk, pure ghee, limited quantities of butter, fresh fruits and vegetables, dry fruits and whole wheat products are the foods that are most suited and advised for rapid progress in celibacy. Those who have a craving for a particular kind of food and find it very tough to give up the craving, can indulge in the food they like once a week and stay strict to the rules for the remaining six days. This way, they will develop control over their palate and eventually overcome the craving.

One very effective food technique to help one succeed in celibacy is to restrict dinner to only milk, fresh fruit and an assortment of raw veggies in the form of a green salad at night. This is a dinner menu that I have personally been following and gives great benefits. The body is in a state of rest at night and does not require high protein/ carbohydrate foods. Limiting dinner to fresh fruit and veggies will rest the digestive system and help it effectively process food eaten during the day.

Trust this helps

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

I have gone through all your posts and they are brilliantly communicated. Thank you.

It is always a pleasure to read through your answeres as they are written in a very communicative and easy to undertand manner. Your clarity of thought and communication perhaps is an indication of benefits one derives from celibacy! Correct me please if I am wrong.

Now coming to my intent for writing to you: I have three questions in my mind and this is also in interest of the larger audience incase this helps in clarifying their doubts:

a> I am 34 and a virgin by choice: My question is that: Is a person inexperienced in sexual intercourse in any way at an advantage in his quest to celibacy given that his/her brain doestn register the reference to the "sexual pleasure sensation"? I had incidentally come across a recent medical research study funded by an Ivy Leaugue medical college where also it has been revealed that a sexual itnercourse in itself is 400% more addictive than manual stimalation or even oral sex (empirically proven by exhibiting higher levels of secretion of the hormone "prolactin").

b> Personally am on my 14th day of celibacy although I have failed few times before. However since the last few days I have fallen ill due to a sudden viral attack. I remember from one of your posts that this is a normal "obstruction" to the quest in brahmacharya. Are we suggesting that the body initially repels the idea of celibacy and hence the disease/ illness surfaces?

3> Kindly throw some more light on the fact that the practice of celibacy helps in improving memory and concentration. Does it have a scientific basis? If so then by which period do you start recieving the physical benefits. Also memory being the precursor to intelligence then are we saying that celibacy in itself can make someone more intelligenct or develop perfect memory (??)....case in point could be the photographic memory of Swami Vivekananda.

Would be greatly benefited if you could enlighten us on these doubts with your ever flowing wisdom.

Many thanks and best wishes for your personal quest and good service to all of us aspirants

Answer
Hello Raj,

Good to see that you are interested in the practice of celibacy. Thanks for the queries. Coming to the answers, Q1: Does a person inexperienced in the sexual act have more of an advantage to succeed in celibacy?

A: Every thought and action we indulge in gets stored in the mind and etched in our causal body or the 'Kaarana sharira'. The causal body is a repository of all our present and past actions. The nature of man to perform a particular action is a result of 'Samskaara' or the 'lines of action' that are etched in the causal body. These 'Samskaaras' in turn produce 'Vaasanas' or tendencies towards a particular deed. It is for this reason that different people have different tendencies towards the same object. While a person with cruel vaasanas might be tended to hurt and injure a helpless animal, a man with kind and humane vaasanas will have a tendency to protect and show kindness to the same animal under similar circumstances.

If man repeatedly indulges in sexual activity for a purpose other than procreation, he starts to associate the act as a source of 'delusive pleasure' and entertainment following which the mind begins to get corrupted and tainted. The purpose of the sexual act is only procreation and not recreation. By misuse of the organs of excretion/ procreation as organs of recreation, man opens a can of poisonous worms which ultimately devour and destroy him. On the contrary, limiting the use of these very same organs to what they are actually meant for, bestows upon man a life filled with health, happiness, accomplishment and ultimately self-realization.

Coming to the topic regarding the effect of indulgence in the sexual act upon one's mind and psyche, each and every sexual thought and act produces corresponding 'Samskaaras' or 'lines of action' in the causal body. Our thoughts and actions are like the stylus of a lie detector machine. Just as the stylus in the machine produces a pattern on paper based on the heart beat and pulse rate of the person under test, our thoughts and actions etch their own 'lines of action' into our psyche. These lines are stored forever in the causal body and in turn make us the people we are.

A person who has not had any sexual intercourse/ encounter with a member of the opposite sex, correspondingly also does not have a first hand experience of the sensations that the act generates at the practical level in this particular birth. To this extent, he or she is not fully aware of these sensations and their after effects. This insulates the person concerned to a large extent from the delusion that is created further to indulgence in the sexual act as a source of pleasure. To a large extent, the person might be said to have abstained from opening a 'can of worms' and is that much more safe as compared to one who has opened the can and has to deal with the mess. To this degree, the person without first hand knowledge of sexual intercourse is more poised to succeed in celibacy. He doesn't have to deal with the apparent 'sexual longings' and 'needs' which surface in a man who has tasted the forbidden fruit and thereby colored his mind.

It is for this reason that all religions in the true sense profess man and woman to stay virgin till marriage. The very pertinent and valid reason behind this rule is to prevent man from adopting a recreational stance towards the sexual act. Also people who have stayed virgin and have practiced strict celibacy until marriage (without sex, oral sex, masturbation or any other sexual stimulation) by keeping their thoughts and deeds pure, elevate themselves spiritually and do not feel the need or desire to resort to the sexual act as a form of recreation even after marriage. They tend to limit the activity for progeny only and thereby poise themselves for real progress in the path of spirituality.

Q2: What is the connection between illness/ ill health and celibacy during initial stages?
A: As one starts a life of celibacy, he or she begins to lead a life which is drastically converse to the earlier mode of thinking, activity and life style which were largely based on sense stimulation. All efforts at celibacy are directed towards freeing man from the grip of delusion and sense stimulation. The mind and psyche which were earlier used to the objects of senses as a source of pleasure now find themselves being imprisoned in a vacant land bereft of these sense pleasures. They naturally revolt with anger, agitation and try to find ways to reclaim their old haunts.

The first year of celibacy is generally agog with purification at different levels. Purification and removal of 'toxins' that have been embedded within us due to our past karma slowly start getting undone. This purification generally starts at the physical level and then proceeds to the astral and causal levels. Removal of toxins from the physical body can take various forms such as ulcers, disease, illness, etc... These are essentially happenings related to detoxification and the release of toxins is generally a painful experience. They may also be considered as 'tests' given by God to analyze the commitment one has towards celibacy as the celibate's resolve towards celibacy gets 'tested' at these troublesome times. In reality, the celibacy one is practicing is actually undoing all the sources of imperfection and disease present within and paving the way for perfection. Many give in to the stress and strain and give up the practice of celibacy, while the strong and determined march on, immaterial of these obstructions.

Q3: What is the scientific basis behind the claim that celibacy improves faculties of the brain?

A: Dr. Edwin Flatto, M.D. in his paper Dt.March 2005 says -" The seminal fluid is a viscid, proteinaceous fluid composed of secretory products of the testes, epididymis, seminal vesicles, prostate gland, and Cowper's gland. It is rich in potassium, iron, lecithin, vitamin E. protease, spermine, albumen, phosphorous, calcium and other organic minerals and vitamins. An average ejaculation is about 2 to 5 cubic centimeters of semen and contains from 200,000,000 to 500,000,000 sperm. Each one of these millions of sperm carry 23 chromosomes, split chromosomes, prostaglandins, genes, electricity, and all the vitamins, enzymes, and minerals necessary for the creation of another human being. Besides being a factory manufacturing sperm, the testicles produce male hormones or androgens such as testosterone. If not ejaculated, they go directly into the blood stream and are carried to every part of the body. They stimulate the pituitary gland and the creative centers of the brain. Semen is not a substance to be wasted lightly. The faster you use it, the more the body is forced to produce it. Your blood stream takes the raw materials from every part of your body, including your brain, and transports them to the gonads to be used to replace expended resources. An analysis of both brain cells and semen shows great similarities. Both are very high in phosphorus, sodium, magnesium and chlorine. The sex glands and brain cells are intimately connected physiologically, but are adversaries in the sense that they are both competing for the same nutritional elements from the identical blood stream. In this sense, the brain and the sexual organs are also competitors in using bodily energy and nutrition"-End of quote.

In other words, semen contains the life force that alone has the power to create another life. When man indulges in the sexual act, he is giving a portion of his very life to produce another life. Such is the gravity, seriousness, divinity and importance of one single ejaculation. Would any of us 'play' a sport that would put our very lives on the line? Would we be interested in pole vaulting a high voltage, electricity transmission power line? No. Using sex for entertainment accounts to just that. Electricity is meant to be safely used to ease our life and not played around with. By using sex for pleasure, man is wasting the greatest power within him.

Medical research points out that semen, the spine and the brain are all linked. When semen is analysed, it becomes clear that it has the same constituents as the spine and brain. In other words, semen to a large extent is a derivative of the cerebro-spinal fluid. He who conserves and transmutes semen will never be troubled by joint pains, back aches, spinal problems or bone related disorders. The spine remains lithe and elastic and this can be made use of in the reversal of ageing (as the spine houses the channel 'Sushumna naadi'through which 'Kundalini' or life power flows) The brain becomes exceptionally powerful and all its abilities shine to the fullest extent. On the other hand those who waste semen will eventually be plagued by health problems such as joint pains, a deteriorating spine, bone disorders, poor memory, mental exhaustion, poor eye sight and innumerable diseases.

Hindu scriptures point out that by the honest and true, unbroken practice of Brahmacharya in thought word and deed for a period of 12 years, 'Buddhi naadi' or 'Medha naadi' is formed in the brain by which man can have a photographic memory of anything he reads or hears and can reproduce the same word to word unfailingly. He can solve extremely difficult problems and life situations easily by using the power of his 'Ojas' or divine energy. The ability of the brain to concentrate, focus and find solutions to any problem would be comparable to superhuman dimensions. Further to this period of true celibacy in thought, word and deed, man develops 'Trikaala Gnyana' or the knowledge of the past, present and future and rests in a state of incomparable bliss, constantly in the thought of God.

Swami Vivekananda was a living example for the benefits one derives from the practice of celibacy in effect. He attributed his remarkable mental prowess to a lifelong observance of Brahmacharya. At one point in time, a disciple of his was exclaiming at the impossibility of absorbing all the contents of the many volumes of 'Encyclopedia Brittanica' that had landed at the library the previous day.

Seeing the new, shining volumes, the disciple said to Swami - “It is almost impossible to read all these books in a single lifetime.”
The Swami said -" What do you say? Ask me anything you like from these ten volumes, and I will answer them all.
The disciple asked in wonder, “Have you read all these books?”
Swami - " Why should I ask you to question me otherwise?"

On being examined, Swami Vivekananda not only reproduced the sense, but at places the very language of the difficult topics selected from each volume. The disciple, astonished, put aside the books, saying, “This is not within human power!”
The Swami said: " Do you see?, simply by the observance of strict Brahmacharya all learning can be mastered in a very short time — one has an unfailing memory of what one hears or knows but once. That power may come to all. That power comes to him who observes unbroken Brahmacharya for a period of twelve years. With the sole object of realising God, I have practiced that kind of Brahmacharya myself, and so a screen has been removed, as it were, from my brain. For that reason, I need not any more think over or prepare myself for any lectures on such a subtle subject as philosophy. Suppose I have to lecture tomorrow; all that I shall speak about will pass tonight before my eyes like so many pictures; and the next day I put into words during my lecture all those things that I saw. So you will understand now that it is not any power which is exclusively my own. Whoever will practice unbroken Brahmacharya for twelve years will surely have it. If you do so, you too will get it".- End of quote.

Intelligence is largely dependent on the power of recollection. Memory is the catalyst to free flowing intelligence. Our intelligence is a product of how well we are able to grasp, store, analyze and reproduce what we learn and observe from life experiences and Brahmacharya is the base on which this intelligence rests, for Brahmacharya brings out the light of the soul and the soul is superior to intelligence.

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

Can one attain 'Buddhi naadi' or 'Medha naadi' whilst practising sex without orgasm for 12 years?

Answer
Hello there,

Trust you are doing fine. Coming to the query:

Q: Can a man develop 'Medha Naadi' through non-ejaculatory sexual relations?

A: As per the scriptures, results such as the 'Buddhi Naadi' appear in the brain of the Brahmachari further to becoming a complete 'Urdhvaretha' (A yogi who succeeds in arresting the very formation of semen and instead directly converts his vital 'Prana' into 'Ojas') and staying in this state of unbroken and true celibacy for a minimum period of 12 years.

In case of non-ejaculatory sexual relations, the person concerned is only withholding voluntary release of his semen during the act. The body constantly produces semen and this semen produced often reaches the 'ejaculatory mode' during the act but is forcibly withheld before the last moment. This does not qualify as Brahmacharya in net effect except for certain benefits at the physical level further to refraining from ejaculation. If the formation of semen in man is continuous, it must either be expelled or reabsorbed. Since the body is continuously producing semen but has no outlet, semen thus produced will eventually release through a wet dream sooner or later. More importantly, the subject concerned develops a strong liking and dependence on the sex act as a source of pleasure which prevents him from rising beyond the sex plane. The very objective of Brahmacharya is to ultimately make man forget his familiarity with the sex sensation as a source of pleasure so he can develop familiarity with 'soul bliss'(which is infinite and permanent unlike pleasure derived from the senses). These two are contrary and mutually exclusive. Presence of either one prevents the formation of the other. A man rooted in sensual pleasure cannot experience soul bliss and conversely a man who has known soul bliss will find sensual pleasure insignificant in comparison. Since indulgence in the sexual act will not help one achieve this objective, the corresponding benefits which accrue to an 'Urdhvareta' will also be absent.

A person wishing to get warm and dry has to completely come out of water and set foot on dry land. Swimming close to land, even in shallow water will not help one achieve this objective. One has to choose if he likes to remain in water or test dry land.

While non-ejaculatory sexual relations can be practiced before the start of absolute celibacy to help develop control over the retention of semen, absolute and true celibacy in thought, word and deed will be necessary if one wishes all the benefits that an 'Urdhvareta' acquires.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Sir,
hope you doing well.
i have seen in your answer, you said to give up meat and eggs,
sir,
but if i'm doing exercises then can i take boiled eggs?
i'm a vegetarian Indian, so don't get enough protein so my gym instructor suggested me this.
Please guide me.
Do eggs cause any harm?

Answer
Q: Since eating eggs is to be avoided by the Brahmachari, what is the alternate source of protein?
A: Further to honest Brahmacharya for a certain period of time, various changes start occurring in the body of the Brahmachari. To begin with, tissues start repairing themselves fueled by the increased presence of 'veerya' or semen that is being reabsorbed into the blood. The nectar like essence present in semen that gives great strength/ youthfulness and power cannot be matched by any other medicine or food product. It is for this reason that the statement 'What one loses further to the wastage of semen can never be regained' is cent percent true.

The re-absorbtion of semen into blood slowly starts restoring every deteriorating part of the body back to its state of complete health and well being while augmenting blood flow, Prana (vital energy) and overall health & strength. Further to continued celibacy, the Brahmachari will find that he does not require as much food as he used to consume earlier to maintain health, strength and vigor. Unlike his former state where there was continuous wastage of semen and hence the need to consume more food, the body slowly starts to become self sufficient in retaining the various vitamins, minerals and proteins that it needs to a larger extent. It is actually a misnomer among people that we need to eat much food to stay healthy. The reality is that a balanced, nutritious and wholesome diet consisting of the right amount of protein, carbohydrate, minerals and vitamins can fully be achieved through a vegetarian diet. I will suggest a pure vegetarian diet that will help in maintaining health, be conducive to the practice of Brahmacharya and provide the required amount of protein to sustain physical exercise. Minor variations can be applied to the diet based on one's personal liking :

EARLY MORNING: 1~2 glasses of water (before the practice of yoga or other exercises) with a glass of milk

7 ~ 8.30 A.M: Breakfast & one cup of boiled Dal (Tur Dal) and one banana.

1.15 P.M: Lunch comprising of 3-4 whole wheat chapati's or roti's taken with a vegetable gravy made of either beans, horse gram, green gram etc.. followed by a cup of buttermilk, yogurt or curds and another banana.

6 ~ 7 P.M: Another glass of cow's milk followed by dinner consisting of some cooked food with different fruits and raw vegetables such as cabbage, beetroot, cucumber, carrot etc..

This is a diet that ensures all ingredients required for the well being of the body are met and is fully 'Sattwic'. Eating a 'Sattwic' or non-stimulating diet is very important if one wishes to succeed in long Brahmacharya. It makes the mind calm, serene and tranquil. Another secret to ensure excellent health and strength is never to load the stomach fully with food. Eating excess food will only increase the quantity of faeces or stool. The body does not and cannot absorb more than what it requires. A wonderful method to determine what quantity of food one must eat is - " Consider the stomach to be made of four parts. Fill two parts with nutritious, wholesome food (half the stomach) one part with water and leave the fourth part empty so that 'Prana' or vital energy can move around and effectively aid in digestion. This is a golden formula to ensure health and strength.

Lord Krishna tells us:-

"Success in yoga is not for him who eats too much or too little, nor for him who sleeps too much or too little" - The Bhagavad-Gita Chater-VI/ Verse 16

" To him who is temperate in eating and in sleeping and in being awake, Yoga becomes the destroyer of misery" - The Bhagavad-Gita Chapter-VI/ Verse 18

Egg and meat, onion, garlic and hot/ pungent/ sour foodstuff are to be avoided during the initial few years of practice as they have a strong tendency to agitate, irritate and cloud the mind with aggression. Such a mind becomes wholly unfit for the practice of Brahmacharya.

It takes some time for the body to get used to a change in diet. Once this is accomplished, the Brahmachari yogi will find more than sufficient energy to indulge in all forms of physical and mental work and will in fact be left with energy even at the end of the day. Anybody who observes a few months of unbroken celibacy will start to see that they hardly get tired even while performing the most strenuous of activities. What is required is determination and love for the concept of Brahmacharya following which all merits will gradually start clinging to the celibate in course of time.

ॐ तत् सत्
(That Supreme being is the absolute truth)

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

Thanks for the answer to my previous post on ejaculatory control. Great answer!

Can I ask you another question? In your answer to my previous question, you said that results such as the 'Buddhi Naadi' appear only after having become a complete 'Urdhvaretha' for 12 years.

Let's say that a person does this (i.e. he/she stays in a state of true unbroken celibacy for 12 years) and 'Buddhi Naadi' appears as a result. Now the Urdhvaretha decides to marry (if he/she is not married already) and have a child with his/her spouse.

Does the person lose his/her 'Buddhi Naadi' after having procreative intercourse with the partner? And if the loss does occur will the person have to go through 12 years of true and unbroken celibacy to get it back again?

Hope that makes sense!

Answer
Hello Emmanuel,

Trust this finds you keeping fine. Lets come to the query,

Q: What is the correlation between appearance of the 'Buddhi Naadi' and procreative intercourse?
A: Since the objective of the sexual act is progeny and progeny only, a celibate wishing to have offspring from his legally wedded wife is allowed to indulge in the act once per wanted child.

Immaterial of whether the act is procreative or recreative, even a single instance of loss of semen will go against the purpose of staying celibate for a minimum period of 12 years and thereby acquiring the desired benefits.

Keeping the above reality in mind, celibates wishing to marry are advised to get done with their parenting objectives further to marriage and then take up the objective of life long celibacy. If a Brahmachari leads a virtuous life of unbroken celibacy before marriage, fathers a child after marriage and then continues with his practice of Brahmacharya, he will be fully poised to to take up the noble and magnanimous objective of life long celibacy. In addition to this, the child born to a celibate of such purity and virtue will most often be a great and noble soul with immense talent and lofty qualities. By the practice of true celibacy, the Brahmachari succeeds in attracting more and more of the universal consciousness which is all around him unto himself. A child is nothing but an extension of the father. It is the divine continuation of the legacy of the parents. It is the means by which the divine cosmic dream of god manifests and results in the continuation of the species. For this reason, the sexual act within the bounds of marriage, if carried out with the sole intention of begetting a child is considered a divine act of virtue.

Once a celibate practices 12 years of absolute celibacy and develops the 'Buddhi Naadi' among the numerous other powers and benefits, he will no longer be interested in sexuality as a means or recreation. Such celibacy ensures that he is almost or fully freed from the delusion that he once was a victim of. If such a person were to marry and beget offspring, he would not be deprived of his new found spiritual status as long as the intention of the activity was procreation. The very purpose of the sexual act is procreation. Using it lawfully and rightfully for the above said purpose would not constitute sin. But for the benefits of 12 year celibacy to start trickling, there cannot be even a single break, either procreational or recreational. For this reason, those wanting a family and yet embarking upon a 12 year period of Brahmacharya do so after fathering a child. This doesn't in anyway mean that a person can lead a sensuous, lustful life till he gets done with marriage and parenthood. Celibacy is a mode of life that is to be practiced at all times with purity in thought, word and deed both before marriage and after marriage. It is the power of celibacy before marriage that produces virtuous offspring after marriage and gives man the strength and inclination to take up unbroken, life long celibacy after parenting a child. There are also instances in history of great souls who have got done with their 12 year celibacy even before marriage from their teens onto their early twenties, but they are few and far in between.

So the answer to the query would be that the celibate would not in any way loose the benefits he accrues further to 12 years of celibacy if he had to marry after those 12 years and beget progeny. But till he reaches his target, there is to be absolutely no expenditure of his vital essence if the complete powers and self-realization that follows are his objectives

Question
Hey Dhananjay,

How are you? I have some questions on celibacy and interpersonal relationships which I would like to be clarified
1. What is the danger in people having physical relationships with the opposite sex for fun?
2. Why is it necessary for man and woman to stay perfect virgins until marriage and establish sexual relations with none other than their spouses? what is the gain by this?

Please clear these doubts in me. Thanks again for your service.

Answer
Q1: What is the effect of a physical/ sexual relationship between a man and a woman carried out for fun and entertainment outside the bounds of marriage?
A: Whenever a man and woman indulge in sexual intercourse, the astral bodies (also called ‘subtle body’ or mind body) of the man and woman merge together, and forces get created in the cosmos that are fully conducive for the birth of a new child. The connection thus formed between man and woman during intercourse produces an astral, umbilical-cord-like tube in the lower astral-plane world (the appearance of this astral tube is somewhat cloud like in color, about six inches in diameter and can be clearly seen when the astral body of the person concerned is viewed by deep meditation). The tube gets thicker, stronger and denser with every repeat act of sexual intercourse.

Why has God created this astral tube?
The basic function of this tube is to ensure genuine feelings of trust, true love, affection; understanding, sacrifice and bonding are produced between a legally wedded husband and wife, though they were strangers to each other before marriage. It is through these tubes that two complete strangers who had never known each other get the feelings to stay by each other, be loyal to each other and help each other in times of need. In other words, this channel acts as the means by which the couple exchanges thoughts, ideas, feelings and in general communicates with each other at the astral level. It helps in transmitting the true and unconditional love that should exist between a husband and wife. This astral tube is really a channel through which all the ingredients necessary for a couple to stay together and form a healthy and a happy family unit flow through. It is a channel which is designed to work fine and produce wonderful results when present between the husband and wife only. Period! Its purview is limited to one man, one woman and the man and lady are none other than the husband and wife.

When a man or woman has numerous affairs leading to sexual relationships with many people via casual sex, a huge population of people gets connected to one another through many 'astral tubes'. A great mass of astral matter envelops them without their knowledge as they go from one sex partner to another. If such a person's astral body were to be viewed through meditation, it would show N-number of astral tubes branching out to numerous people.

Now the purpose of the astral tube was to help develop a strong wedlock and form a strong family unit; but the man or woman who has multiple sex partners has no intention of settling down with any one person. All he or she is looking for is momentary sexual gratification, nothing more and nothing less. Also, most such relationships are fueled by selfish, evil motives such as manipulation, conquest, lust and a 'Use and throw' attitude. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred, the people don't have an iota of regard, respect, concern or understanding for each other and are motivated by sheer passion and lust. There is a total absence of seeing each other as individuals and what is present is only the perspective of viewing each other as 'objects of sex'. Once their questionable motives are sated, they desert and move on to another person thereby possibly hurting and wrecking the opposite party at the mental, emotional and psychic levels. This creates a strong 'karmic' reaction in the cosmos. The hurt and aggrieved person might have been promised marriage or a steady relationship and would have developed expectations regarding the same at an intense emotional and psychic level. The moment all his/ her hopes and dreams are crashed by utter betrayal resulting from the breakup, these very same hopes, affections and feelings turn into a dense mass of jealousy, bitterness, revenge and hatred. And the very 'astral tube' which was formed between the two and still exists strong and firm, now becomes a channel through which these negative energies flow between each other. This causes worry, fear, emotional instability and a lack of peace of mind between both the parties involved.

A person who has had multiple sexual relationships has that many 'live'- 'astral tubes' with all his/her ex-partners. Each of these 'astral tubes' lasts for a minimum period of 12 years (from the time of the last sexual encounter, if there is no repeat encounter) and can even last a life time or many births based on its density and thickness. Even if one were to realize his mistake and take up a strict practice of Brahmacharya with a virtuous life and constant prayer to God, it would still take a minimum span of 12 years for each of the 'astral tubes' to disintegrate counting from the date of the last sexual encounter.

It is further to the presence of this 'astral tube' that telepathic messages, vibrations and longings get communicated with former partners even if a person has ceased to have all contact. If one of the ex-partner were to intensely long for the subject concerned from one part of the world, the other party gets a feeling of recollection and re-living of past thoughts and actions and may be even tempted to revert for another sexual encounter, even many years after termination of the relationship. Such is the result and power of communication accruing through formation of the 'astral tube'. While it may appear that the people concerned have forgotten each other and moved on, they are in reality very much connected by the 'astral tube'. A serious and very strong consequence of much gravity has occurred without their own knowledge while 'playing' around with the opposite sex with dishonorable intentions!

This condition of the presence of many such 'astral tubes' with numerous ex-partners ultimately creates great havoc and problems to both the parties at all levels and turns into the harbinger of what most people term 'bad luck'. The 'soul' or the 'Atman' gets further cocooned by thick layers of delusion and ignorance. The negative vibrations that get created in the cosmos further to such sinful acts float around for a very, very long time. Even if such sexual encounters were carried out with mutual consent, the presence of these 'astral tubes' prevent the parties concerned from establishing a loving and strong relationship with the person whom they finally marry and settle down with; for the tubes would be still alive and in a mode of 'transmission' with former partners, akin to a live cell phone connection. They interfere and wreck the factors which go into the making of a strong man-wife relationship and can cause destruction of the resulting family unit.

For this reason, those who indulge in 'playing' around with multiple partners pay a heavy price for their thoughtless acts in the form of sheer misery ultimately.

Q2: Why is it recommended that a man or woman stay perfect virgins and follow strict Brahmacharya till marriage?
A: The force called 'Kundalini' which is nothing but the net sum of all 'Prana' or vital energy present within, is the source of all life, energy, greatness and power within man. This power is a direct result of the conversion of sexual essence and conversely also gets dissipated by sexual activity. For the twelve to fourteen years of the period of childhood, nature keeps the sexual essence dormant and inactive externally and restricts its activity internally to help achieve full growth of the body, brain, mind and intellect of the child. This is the reason maturity or puberty onsets at adolescence and not during childhood. As soon as a virgin man or woman has had the first intercourse, sexual awareness in the person gets heightened and focuses into the external world and the man or woman become more receptive to the forces of desire. By sexual intercourse, a psychic-astral tube as discussed earlier gets created between the 'Mooladhara chakras' of the 2 people concerned.

If this force is contained within the purview marriage with blessings from the higher astral regions of Gods, rays similar to the 'astral tube' are formed between each one of the couple and astral entities such as 'Devas' or Gods through the higher 'chakras'. A holy and divine state of matrimony is then considered to have been entered into. The purpose of marriage is progeny, companionship and finally self-realization. Scriptural sources state: "When a young virgin man and virgin woman marry and indulge in the sexual act with each other, their union is very strong and their marriage stable. Their astral tubes, or 'naadis' grow together, and they form a one body and a one mind. This is the truest marriage and the strongest, seldom ending in separation or divorce. Conversely, if the man or woman has had intercourse before marriage, the emotional/psychic closeness of the marriage will be less intense, and this will be in proportion to the extent of earlier promiscuity."

These higher astral connections with astral entities and lower astral-psychic tubes that are created between husband and wife are designed to handle the forces that exist in healthy matrimony. The tube is the basis on which healthy familial relations develop between man and wife and help them settle together. Further to parenting children, the couple can get into a life long mode of Brahmacharya and attain self realization.

The release of the sacred seed (via semen) into the woman during sexual intercourse establishes, through the first chakra or the 'Mooladhara chakra', the connecting psychic 'astral tube' which can be clearly seen on the astral plane during deep meditation. It is through this psychic tube that feelings, telepathic messages and subtle modes of communication pass between the married couple. It is by the presence of this 'astral tube' that we see abundant bonding, sacrifice and unconditional love between couples whose love is beyond the body and external factors. Many of these couples can exhibit knowledge on what the other person is thinking or can sense if something is wrong with the other even if they are far away from one another.

A man and a woman, who indulge in milder forms of sexual expression such as a touch, hug etc... Also establish a temporary connecting link of astral matter which penetrates their auras and covers their physical forms. It appears as a psychic mass connecting the two of them as wide as the length of their bodies. This astral matter is created further to the expulsion of emotional energies, blending their auras together. The psychic connection is powerful enough to repeatedly pull them back together or cause emotional pain if they are separated. But unless the encounter is repeated, this milder form of astral matter will wear away in a few days or a month at most, unlike the 'astral tube' derived from intercourse which lasts for 12 years at the least.

The scriptures state that each one of us is born in a state of brahmacharya. Upon reaching puberty, those boys and girls who remain virgins maintain their inherent state of brahmacharya. They are able to ward off, and may not even notice, many emotional and sexual temptations that would be troublesome to the non-virgin. This is because the astral shield surrounding the virgin's aura has never been penetrated. Reading a book about worldly experiences only pickles their curiosity, whereas had they established psychic, tubular connections with a member of the opposite sex as described earlier, the very same reading would stir up sexual desire at a much more intense level. Such virgins who are into brahmacharya since puberty can easily continue a life of celibacy and attain self-realization further to marriage and parenthood.

Sexual intercourse between the virgin man and woman before and outside marriage is the key that destroys this Brahmacharya. Also, all other forms of sense stimulation either via sight, smell, taste, touch or sound that fire up the sex plane lead man to the domain of self stimulation and finally actual intercourse. It is for this reason that a Brahmachari is advised to avoid anything and everything which might fire up the sex plane within him. As discussed earlier, intercourse causes an astral, umbilical-like psychic tube to form in the inner ether between the couple. It is within this psychic tube that the forces of energy and desire flow from one to another. These are the same forces between mother and father which culminate in the birth of a child and surround and protect him or her through earthly consciousness until age twenty-five. The psychic connection between the mother and father emotionally stabilizes children in the family. But if there are other 'astral tubes' present either in the mother or the father further to pre-marital encounters, or new ones being created with members of the opposite sex due to ongoing extra-marital encounters outside of the marriage, children suffer emotionally while growing up. The forces and vibrations resulting from the presence of 'other tubes' in either father or mother have a strong tendency to cause unrest, fear and confusion in the child.

It is for this reason that all religions in the true form ordain man and woman to lead a virtuous life high on morality backed by celibacy and abstain from any mode of sexual interaction with the opposite sex till marriage. This will ensure that further to marriage, they will be fully poised to develop healthy, strong and spiritual connections with each other which will in turn produce talented and virtuous offspring. After parenting children, the couple can easily revert to their earlier mode of celibacy and thereby succeed in attaining spectacular success in both the materialistic and spiritual domains. The presence of a single, unidirectional ‘astral tube’ between them awards them with the abundant tendency to fully support , understand and grow together in the spiritual life that they aim to develop and finally realize the soul or the ‘Atman’.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

Thanks again for your answers to my questions. They are always of high quality! You've inspired me.

I wanted to ask some more questions:
Are there any examples of modern day Urdhvarethas?
Did Sivananda achieve Buddhi Nadi?
Are you a member of a group of celibates/monks that help you in keeping vigilant?
What do you read for inspiration (apart from Sivananda's "Practice of Brahmacharya")?

Answer
Hello Emmanuel,

Good to know of your increasing interest in Brahmacharya. Coming to the queries, Q1: Are there any examples of modern day Urdhvarethas?

A: Since the human efforts that go into achieving and then maintaining the status of a perfect Urdhvaretha are Herculean and extraordinary, I would suppose there are a countable number of Urdhvarethas across humanity who occupy the lofty state of soul bliss and immense power that the title commands. Coupled with this is the more important factor of divine support from the Almighty that is so very necessary in the transformation of the normal man into a celibate of spotless chastity. The scriptures state that such Urdhvarethas are one in a billion. Also, It wouldn't probably be wrong to say those who occupy such a status do not generally advertise or proclaim the same, for they would be people high on humility further to having realized the fact that man is a puppet in the hands of the master puppeteer - The Brahman or Almighty. This makes practically pinpointing such people a 'not so easy task'.

Q2: Did His Holiness Swami Sivananda achieve the 'Buddhi Naadi'?
A: Even if a layman with no interest in spirituality or celibacy was to read Swami Sivananda's books on health, spirituality, yoga or Brahmacharya, he would return awed and inspired realizing the charisma, intelligence, nobility and radiance of the great soul that held the pen while writing these books. Such spectacular strength and ability to inspire the masses with words is a definite sign of a man fueled by the power that only true celibacy brings. Swami Vivekananda also had a similar power. When he addressed the Parliament of religions for the first time in Chicago with the opening words 'Sisters and Brothers of America...", the entire audience stood up with sheer respect and awe at the radiance, gravity, power and purpose emanating from the young monk in his twenties. Swami Vivekananda at that point of time was unknown and unheard of in the world of philosophy, religion or spirituality. He had faced great difficulty even to enroll himself as one of the speakers at the gathering to the point of almost being counted out in the list, further to his anonymity. Yet he commanded a reaction from the audience that would befit a king by his mere presence. This was due to the immense power of 'Ojas' derived from lifelong, unbroken celibacy. When we study the lives of such great men it becomes quite apparent that true Brahmacharya was the prime mover behind the final product. If we consider the magnitude of devotion Swami Sivananda put into a life of Brahmacharya, spirituality and service to humanity, one would not be erring if one assumed him to have mastered numerous siddhis along with the 'Buddhi Naadi'.

Q3: Am I a member of a group of celibates/monks?
A: I'm a married man and a father, who's into a joint life of celibacy with my wife and one among the thousands of celibate students across the globe, nothing more.

Q4: What do I read for inspiration in Brahmacharya?
A: I'm basically interested in assimilating any work of substance on matters concerning spirituality and Brahmacharya cutting across cultures, religions, caste, creed and sect. Basically being a Hindu, my exposure to ancient Indian scriptures and treatises on spirituality and self realization such as the Bhagavad-Gita, Vedas and Upanishads is on the higher side. However, I'm open to any source of writing that casts a possibility of adding to my knowledge. God inspires us and the books take credit!

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

Would you please share your thoughts and wisdom on this form of sexuality where the partners engage in non-ejaculatory sex for the purpose spiritual evolution.

Many thanks,

Ronan

Answer
Q. Can one indulge in 'Tantric sex' or say moderate amounts of sex without ejaculation and yet get the effects of celibacy ?

A. 'Tantric sex' is a method of enjoyment of sexual pleasure, where the people involved follow a certain mode of life/ practices in order to enhance and prolong sexual pleasure before, during and after the sexual act. It consists of various means to achieve this objective.
'Celibacy is abandonment of and freedom from sexual pleasure forever in thought, word and deed at all places and times.

left hand path). 'While 'Self-realization' was the final objective of the 'Vaama Marga' also, the gross aim of tantric sex most often since time immemorial has been sense pleasure and gratification. The danger in treading this path was profound for a normal man in the age old days itself, let alone in today's times without the aid of a masterly guru proficient in the subject. Since the 'Vaama marga' involves indulgence in the sexual act, starting from the physical level and reaching higher states, the risk of a student tripping and falling into the pit of lust is very strong.

Indulgence of sense pleasures in any form results in the formation of the desire-anger combination. In the Bhagavad-Gita Lord Krishna describes this combo as a two sided sword which is the cause of all evil and pain on earth. He further states that they are born from the ‘Activating nature’ or ‘Rajasic temperament’. It is for this reason, celibates are asked to avoid stimulating food and company.

Sex without ejaculation for the non-celibate is definitely much better than with ejaculation, since semen is not lost during the act. Wastage of energy doesn't occur and it does make the person reach a certain stage of celibacy. However this comes with conditions. By following a life of sexual moderation without ejaculation, a man will no doubt be more of a celibate and a cut above than the man who leads a life of sexual wastage. This is not really due to re-absorption but due to lack of need for the body to produce semen. This holds good upto the point of good health, clear thinking and other general health benefits at the physical level. But beyond this, if man aspires to reach the state of 'Soul bliss' or 'God bliss', which has been described in the scriptures to be equal to a million times the pleasure of a physical orgasm (Sri Ramakrishna Paramahansa called the magnitude of 'Soul bliss' to be somewhat close to having sex through the millions of pores in the human body) a life of absolute celibacy for 12 years, giving up all the sense pleasures becomes mandatory. A man indulging in any form of sexual pleasure cannot become an 'Urdhvareta'. The gates beyond general benefits will not open for him.

I will explain the rational behind this. In a moderate sex life without orgasm, while man no doubt conserves his semen during the act, he also unknowingly/gradually develops an attachment/liking and strong desire for the pleasure generated from sexual contact. Also since woman is the source of his pleasure, he begins to associate her as an object of pleasure rather than as a soul- 'The manifestation of god'. This strong karma for sexual pleasure that gets stored in his 'Karmic account' ultimately takes him to a state where he can no longer rise beyond the sex plane. Any pleasure produced by the five senses (sight, smell, taste, sound, touch) is temporary and ultimately leads man into pain. It really is no pleasure at all as it is 'Maya' or an illusion, a nervous stimulation only and not 'Soul bliss'. Man has to indulge in more and more of sex to get the effect that he first got in course of time. 'The word 'moderation' is relative. The limits set by man are stretchable by his own imaginatioin. Further to getting deep into this mode of life, he will ultimately come to a stage where his vital fluid deserts him directly or indirectly. Once this happens he can no longer rise up the path of becoming an 'Urdhvareta'. Loss of semen also becomes an impediment for deep meditation, further to the 'Prana' getting unsettled.

Practicing ‘Tantric sex’ comes with the very high risk of getting addicted to the sexual act and being stuck in the sex plane which makes it inviable to transcend into higher planes, which is so necessary for spiritual progress. This approach is akin to walking a tight rope between two high rises. Even the slightest gust of wind will send one crashing down.

It is for this reason, scriptures cutting across religions require a man attempting self-realization to wholly give up pleasure generated by the senses. As long as there is sense pleasure there cannot be soul bliss. They are mutually exclusive. God gives us two options: Either to reach out to him shunning the senses and reach a state of permanent soul bliss or to fool ourselves with the senses, thinking the illusion to be pleasure, while in reality it is nothing but delusion. And finally even the man who chooses senses, realizes very late of them being cheats and has to finally get back to the first path.

Trust this helps
God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I recently read your answer regarding astral tubes, and felt very inspired. I had a related question:

Do online relationships via chats and phone create astral tubes which can make a man suffer emotionally if the other partner does not respond favorably? What if a man fantasizes about the other partner via masturbation to avoid the emotional pain? Does this also create a huge karmic burden for the man and disturb him mentally? I am trying to recover from a similar situation. I am trying to be celibate but am not able to forget about her and end up masturbating while fantasizing about her. Please help me.

Thanks a lot for your guidance.

Answer
Hello there,

Hope your are keeping well. Coming to the query,

Q: What is the effect of relationships with the opposite sex through the medium of internet or phone indulged in with a desirous attitude and the effect of masturbation?
A: An unmarried man wishing happiness, progress and development would do well in letting feelings of desire develop towards a member of the opposite sex under purview of the following conditions:

1. He is an eligible bachelor, socio-economically stable, looking at entering the institution of marriage.
2. He finds the lady a suitable candidate to become his life partner in all respects at the social, economic, religious, familial and personal levels and the lady concerned also has similar feelings.
3. Both have an honorable and genuine intention of leading a legally wedded married life with each other in a responsible and respectable manner.

If all these above conditions exist in trueness, the man and woman after agreeing to lead a married life based on the foundations of true love, trust, loyalty, understanding and consideration in sharing the joys and sorrows of life and promising to stay by one another through the ups and downs of life can talk to their parents/guardians and get prepared to take the step of entering into holy matrimony at the earliest. Mark the word earliest. It is unrecommended to maintain contact over a long period of time. Until their relationship is cemented by holy matrimony, they would do well to refrain from any form of verbal/physical/sexual overture amongst themselves that might corrupt the relationship and limit their interactions to the minimum.

If either the man or the woman finds one or any of the above mentioned pre-requisites absent, then the purpose becomes null and void and both loose the right to look at each other from the perspective of a future life partner. Under such conditions, the man should stay clear of the lady, giving up any form of constant contact or rapport (such as meeting in person, the internet, phone, letters etc...) that could fuel a corrupted relationship

The purpose behind the above rule is to ensure he prevents the development of further 'Karmic interactions' with the lady through his actions at the physical, mental, emotional and psychic levels. If the man and lady continue to maintain such contact, it will invariably flower into more lust/desire and finally lead to physical intimacy from where downfall accelerates. This point is very important and to be borne in mind all the time to ensure one stays clear of 'Karmic entanglements'. These entanglements not only grow from physical deeds but also from thoughts, words, emotions and the intensity of energy directed and received towards and from the other person.

All such interactions with the opposite sex if indulged in outside the purview of marriage will lead to downfall of both the man and the woman concerned sooner or later at the physical, mental, psychic, emotional and karmic levels for sure.

* The thought or look at the picture of a woman will induce desire.
* This desire will induce man to approach/talk to her.
* Familiarity with the woman will result in 'keertan' or praising her qualities with friends.
* Constant thought and contemplation on the woman leads to 'Guhya bhaashan' or talking in secret with the woman on a one to one basis.
* The act of conversing will induce 'sparshan' or touch.
* The touch generated will lead to 'keli' or amorous sport.
* Indulgence in amorous play will lead to 'Adhyaavasaaya' or a strong desire for sexual enjoyment.
* This desire will lead to 'Kriya nivritti' or sexual intercourse.

- Section CCXIV, The MAHABHARATA, Shanti Parva, as told by Bhishma to King Yudhishtira.

These are called as the eight breaks in Brahmacharya. There is not a single soul on earth who is beyond the chronology of the above eight events from unfolding through contact with the opposite gender, except one who has realized the self. Each and every single being is prone to downfall if he indulges in any of the above starting with the desirous thought of a woman. For this reason, a man wishing to uplift himself and stay clear of downfall, sorrow and achieve progress in life should strictly avoid all the above eight breaks in Brahmacharya starting from looking at a woman with desire.

The very act of concentrated thinking upon a member of the opposite sex with desire outside marriage creates 'cosmic vibrations' which reach the other person indirectly. Such an act is unlawful and wrong and creates negative cosmic vibrations at the astral plane and around mans soul. Man loses much energy and finally his vital essence further to such contemplation. These negative vibrations which linger in the cosmos, interfere and inhibit with the free flow of universal consciousness which is the chief ingredient for success, peace of mind, energy, prosperity, future well being and what we term 'good luck' on the earthly plane and beyond. With masturbation, man indulges in the act of wasting the divine and most powerful form of life/god energy into nothing. Every indulgence in activity that leads to fantasizing on the opposite sex will end with loss of semen and frustration. Also with every such act, man develops a strong 'negative karmic quotient' due to misuse and gross wastage of the divine reproductive element which in actuality is the manifestation of the 'Atman' or soul.

The man or woman who fool themselves thinking they can get away with merely looking/talking or spending time with the opposite sex will without doubt fall into the clutches of sexual gratification ultimately. Failure to get sexual gratification will lead to frustration, perversion, masturbation and other acts which further lead to destruction of one's life energy, vitality and progress. To sum up, man creates enormous amounts of negative karma, around his soul. Any of the acts mentioned above, immaterial of whether they lead to unlawful sexual intercourse or not, drain man of his vitality, energy, greatness and true potential. One has to spend a large duration of one's life span to undo the negative karma accrued further to acts involving the above.

We can learn from the unfortunate examples of two men who were known for greatness in their respective fields but whose lustful ways brought destruction at all fronts:

I. A former president of the United States of America who was known for his political acumen, statesmanship, affability and charm finally got pushed to stooping down to the level of cheating on his wife, family and entire country due to a life of promiscuity. The lies that were resorted to hide his adulterous life were publicly telecast on international television causing him great dishonor, insult and injury. His success, name, fame and reputation to the level of presidency that was earned through decades of hard work, effort and patience were eroded due to an adulterous life carried out for momentary pleasure. And today, people remember him more for his scandalous affair with a white house intern of little worth and less for a glorious eight year long presidency of the USA. Such shame and misfortune, thanks to straying from the path of virtue.

II. An international golfing legend known for his rare talent, ability and prowess in the filed of golf lost all further to a series of affairs and illicit encounters with women. All the name, fame, wealth and recognition he had earned by decades of striving for excellence through rigorous practice went down the drain for momentary pleasure. At the end of it, he even lost the trust of his wife and family and tarnished his image and reputation with a serious blot of infamy in his admirable biography. Overnight, he got transferred from being one of the country's 'Mot admired athletes' to 'Top 5 most hated sports athletes'. Today, people talk more about his series of affairs with unknown women than his splendid achievements on the golf course.

These are only two examples. We can retrieve thousands more if we delve into the depths of history. But two should do to remind us to stay away from the path of sex outside marriage, recreational sex and its aftermaths.

A life of celibacy in thought, word and deed means one should prevent any and all of the eight breaks in celibacy. Interacting with women personally or on the internet, phone or through social networking sites with a vested interest will always lead one to slip lower and lower and finally fall. It takes a few months of absolute celibacy to make man start realizing what he was missing out on and how devoid of substance his former objective was. Absolute shunning of anything and everything which leads to the eight breaks of Brahmacharya is to be carried out if one wishes to take life beyond sorrow.

At a personal level and on a well wishing note, I will suggest you a single formula to make life glorious:-

"Stay away from all forms of interactions fueled by desire towards the opposite sex; for all these actions however subtle and harmless, give birth to lust and lead one to the next stage of slippage, fall and ultimately destruction. View members of the opposite sex through a sisterly or motherly perspective and keep interactions to the minimum".

This might sound Herculean to many; but then the achievement of anything great comes further to great effort and great sacrifices and the end result would be very, very cherishable and on a permanent scale.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
sir you previous reply was amazing.
sir I have one more question.
Being a student of B.Tech I haven't got any job yet,where my other friends are joining soon in their job.These sorts of things are really taunting me and putting a destabilized effort on practising celibacy.Can you suggest some remedies of how can I come out of this problem?Desperately looking for your suggestion.

Answer
Hello Sagar,

Trust you are keeping well. Coming to your query,

Q: How does one stay on the track of celibacy further to distractions generated by the highs and lows of life?
A: Our present life is a result of out past actions and we are the architects of our destiny. The highs and lows that we encounter in life are the product of our past deeds and more importantly the best path for the soul within us to evolve and refine its state of evolution. While untoward incidents in life might temporarily cause despair and frustration, these incidents are life's way of reminding us of the mistakes we might have committed and an opportunity to grow beyond these mistakes and evolve further.

As the saying goes - "All that happens, happens for the good", every life situation and experience is meant to make us amend our shortcomings and take us one step closer to perfection. Unless we experience failure in a given activity, we would never get to know the deficiency within us that led to the failure. We would continue to float in the imaginary world construed on presumptions regarding ourselves which most often station themselves far from the truth.

Failure makes us analyze, ponder and contemplate in-depth into the gross reality behind our thoughts,actions and tendencies that kept us away from success. Failure is man's best friend as it is the only state that portrays things for what they actually are, unlike success which most often has the tendency to make man fly in an imaginary world of fantasy assuming himself to be invincible and unblemished. The man who first tastes failure and then attains success is much more poised to succeed in maintaining his state of success as compared to the one who is intoxicated with the delusion caused by continued success without having ever known the reasons that cause failure. For this reason, failure is the best stepping stone to success.

For the celibate more than anyone else, every instance of failure is a golden opportunity to focus on the shortcomings within himself which led to failure and improve on his past performance. When we honestly delve into what kept us away from success, we most often find numerous valid reasons within our own selves that directly or indirectly worked against us at the practical level.

Success eventually comes and more importantly stays when we take life's fall's as a second chance provided to prove our true might and potential. The way to success would be to focus our efforts and concentration on efficient action and avoid thinking about the outcome. Further to efficient, persistent and sincere efforts with a positive outlook on life, success has nowhere else to go but reside in such a doer.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

What are the physical benefits of celibacy for a person who has wasted his semen continuously for 5 years and has developed wrinkles on his skin? I find that the skin on my hand looks very wrinkled. Is it possible to get a smooth skin again by observing celibacy? What is the minimum period one should observe strict celibacy to realize the benefits?

Thanks a lot,
Amit

Answer
Hello Amit,

Hope this finds you in good spirits and cheer, Coming to the query

Q1: What are the physical benefits of Brahmacharya for someone who has been a non-celibate?
A: The benefits of true celibacy are one and the same for each and everyone of us. They appear more pronounced and apparent in people who have lead a life of restraint and take a longer duration to start becoming noticeable in those who have led a life of wastage. The only way out is to start an honest and sincere life of Brahmacharya as soon as one gets to know of the consequences of a life of wastage and focus on complete transmutation of the vital essence from then on. Detailed descriptions of the actual benefits of celibacy can be obtained from going through past answers on this portal.

Q2: What is the duration of celibacy required to attain benefits?
A: The question of how long one has to practice celibacy does not arise as it is to be practiced in totality and forever at all places and times. Indulgence in the sexual act is to be restricted to progeny only if one wishes for health, progress and happiness in all of life's domains. Brahmacharya is the correct mode of life for each and every human being immaterial of his or her marital status. As explained earlier, the purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation.

The duration of time taken to undo the negative effects of seminal wastage will depend on various factors such as the age, health condition, lifestyle, sincerity in celibacy etc.. of the person concerned. It is best not to worry too much regarding one's past shortcomings and debilities and instead concentrate on improving oneself at the physical, mental and spiritual levels through celibacy, whereupon the benefits will start coming in their own accord at the right time.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

I had one more question. When a man who has been terribly non-celibate for years wants to take up celibacy, how does he fight with temptations which come while practising celibacy? Say a temptation comes after 5-6 days of practice, even after no sensory stimulation. What does a man do at that point? Does yielding to lust on such occasions prove the previous efforts worthless and entangle a man further into the addiction?

Thanks for your guidance,
Amit

Answer
Hello Amit,

Thanks for the query. Coming to the answer,

Q: How does a Brahmachari deal with temptations and desires?
A: Sensory temptations that arise and threaten to make one stray from the path of Brahmacharya are due to strong past karma that surfaces from the 'Kaarana sharira' or the causal body.

The following methods will prove to be useful in subduing lust when one is troubled. They can be used individually or separately based on one's need.

1. Close the eyes and concentrate on the region between the eyes with focus and pray to god, asking him to take lust away.

2. Indulge in 'Mula Bandha' a few times (Sit in Padmaasana - Take a deep breath - hold the breath - contract the anal muscles and pull the 'Apana Vaayu' upwards: as one does while withholding urination or defecation) this will increase the force of 'Prana' and subdue 'Apaana', the force behind sexual awakening.

3. By altering the vision towards the woman concerned to that of a mother or sister.

4. Another method useful for beginners is that whenever there is a stirring up of lust at the sight of a woman, one can imagine the smell and physical form of the woman devoid of skin. Minus skin, the human body has the extremely disagreeable and repulsive smell of blood and raw flesh (as one can know when there is a cut or laceration) minus skin; the human flesh resembles the cut up carcass of an animal at the butcher. This is how the female form actually is under those clothes and skin devoid of all beauty and attraction.

5. Reminding oneself the fact that the human body is filled with disagreeable matter such as stool, urine, pus, phlegm etc... 'Vairaagya' or dispassion will dawn at the false concept of being attracted to the physical form which is a holding bag for of all the above. Would anyone be attracted to a bag containing such refuse?

6. Imagine how the same woman would look in her old age with wrinkled skin, rotting teeth, scant hair and a disagreeable smell. This technique is very effective to remind one that the attraction of flesh is apparent, temporary and totally false. That it is an illusion similar to the one created in a magic show. This will make a person discount another for their physical appearance and value only the eternal, ever beautiful, divine and pure 'Atman' or soul within.

4. Drinking a glass of water, washing the urinary organ with cold water, immersing oneself in a tub of cold water to the waist, a cold water bath and going for a run are effective physical techniques.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi I'm 19 years old and am a male. So, I haven't had sex or masturbated for 2 years now just because I guess I'd rather not materbate, I feel that if I wanted to ejaculate I would want it to be with another person and not myself, it has nothing to do with shyness or anything like that I have no problem with any of that - I just don't masturbate, but anyways that's somewhat irrelevant. My question is, can this be unhealthy for my penis or health in any way to not ejaculate here and there?

Answer
Hello Josh,

Good to read your letter. Coming to your query,

Q: What is the effect of abstaining from masturbation?
A: Masturbation is an act of perversion and deviation from normal, healthy living habits. It is an activity that produces negative vibrations and karma all around oneself further to gross wastage and squandering of the nectar like life essence in man. From the physical, mental, psychic and spiritual point of view it is an activity utterly harmful.

You are in your teens; the point of time when the reserves and production of the vital seed in man is abundant and perennial. If celibacy in thought, word and deed is carried out from this stage in life by the conservation and efficient transmutation of semen, man can achieve fantastic results in both the materialistic and spiritual domains within a short span of time.

So contrary to being unhealthy, avoiding the act of masturbation will provide you with enormous and unexplainable benefits in every field of life. The important thing is to ensure that you keep yourself busy with regular physical exercise, mental work, spiritual activity such as meditation to transmute the conserved semen into 'Ojas' or divine subtle essence which the acts as the prime mover for superlative achievement. To achieve sustained transmutation through Brahmacharya will require staying away from sexual thoughts and actions and focusing the conserved energy on productive work.

Kindly go through all the past answers on this portal to get detailed knowledge on the benefits of staying celibate through transmutation

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

I have a strange fetish for some female body parts which is so strong that it pushes me to masturbate. I had this fetish since childhood. I want to ask, is this fetish karmic? If so, how to get rid of it? I have been trying hard but every time I have a big fight with my mind and eventually give in. This is a big hurdle for me to practise incessant celibacy. Please help me.

Answer
Hello Amit,

Hope you are doing good. Coming to the query,

Q: What is the cause behind and the solution to overcome strong sexual longings in a person that exist from childhood?
A: All the past karma accumulated from the innumerable births manifested by the soul is stored in the 'Kaarana sharira' or the causal body, the depository of past actions. Based on the 'samskaaras' present and the tendencies generated thereby, tendencies towards or against a particular object manifest in a person. A strong tendency for female body parts is hence nothing but a continuation of such tendencies from previous births accrued due to repeated indulgence in recreational sexuality. To start the dissolution of such tendencies, the same principles and tenets that govern true Brahmacharya hold good. Effort required to overcome these tendencies will depend on the strength and grip of past karma. The best method of progress is to focus on a life of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with adequate physical, mental and spiritual activity to help achieve the ideal.

As stated earlier, all forms of interaction visual, verbal and physical with the opposite sex that lead to any of the eight breaks in Brahmacharya are to be strictly refrained from. With sincere and committed practice, success will slowly start to trickle.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Dear Sir, I'm Vijay. I'm practicing brahmacharya for just over 28 days. I go morning jogging and pray God. Whenever sexual thought arises I indulge in household activities, chant god's name and go to temple. I'm not practicing pranayama. I'm not comfortable with it. My question is "Is it necessary to practice pranayama for sublimation of sex?"

Answer
Hello Vijay,

Good to know of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Keep the efforts going. Coming to your query, Q: Is 'Praanayaama' or control of 'Praana' a pre-requisite for success in celibacy?

A: 'Praana' refers to the net sum of all vital, life energy within. The word 'Praana' is a general term used to collectively denote the five different life sustaining winds within the body namely:

1. Praana: Aids respiration so as to purify blood in the lungs.
2. Apaana: The downward wind which aids in elimination of waste matter, urine and semen for reproduction.
3. Vyaana: The wind responsible for circulation of blood to all parts.
4. Samaana: The wind responsible for effective digestion of food.
5. Udaana: Takes the 'Jivaatma' to the Brahman during sound sleep and separates the astral body from the physical body at death.

Each of these individual winds have a distinct and unique function in regulating life energy within the body and in maintaining the normal functions in the system responsible for sustainment of life.

Praanayaama' (A Sanskrit compound word: Praanasya Aayaamaha - Meaning control of the Praana) is hence nothing but an activity that helps in the control of 'Praana' or life force through breathing techniques.

Why should one learn to control one's Praana? What does one achieve by doing so?

The external manifestation of 'Praana' or vital force is breath. The body replenishes lost Praana through intake of air via breath. By controlling gross breath, one can control the subtle Praana within. By controlling the subtle Praana within, one can control the mind. By controlling the mind one develops the ability to conserve/transmute his semen or the vital essence and thereby becomes peaceful, contented and all powerful.

The control over one's Praana thus enables a person to regulate and bring under control all his life activities. It might be compared to how a horseman makes the horse listen to his commands through reins. Just as the reins transmit his intention to the horse, and the horse correspondingly reacts, one can control the mind and thereby the body through control of Praana via breath. The breath-praana-mind and semen are all connected to each other intricately. Complete control of any one of the four automatically helps control the other three. It is difficult and not very effective to directly control one's mind or semen. The mind may be compared to an intoxicated monkey which is very hard to tame and restrict. Thousands of unconnected thoughts arise within the mind in a few seconds. Based on what the mind wants, the organs of action and the body follow. So what's the way to control the mind? Find out what gives the mind the energy to exist and blossom. This energy, the mind is deriving from 'Praana' or vital energy and vital energy is fueled by breath. If one can develop control over breath, one can easily control the mind and thereby the body. Note how breathing becomes erratic and uncontrolled in gasps when a person is under the effect of anger, lust or excitement. He has no control over his breathing and hence no control over the mind at that instant. Conversely, breathing becomes uniform and rhythmic when we are calm, peaceful and contented. This clearly shows that by control of breath, one can control the mind and the body.

Exercise, sports and all other forms of regular physical activity also impart control of Praana in their own way as our breathing patterns change while performing these activities. To that extent, transmutation of vital essence occurs, thereby keeping the mind free from negative thoughts. However, the breathing patterns that occur during exercise, sports or sprinting have their limitations as regards to aiding the complete control of mind, for they are in actuality reactions of the body to the state of physical duress it finds itself in. If man can indulge in specific breathing techniques fully aimed at control of the mind, his success in celibacy will be more pronounced and notable. Hence it is advisable to gradually learn the correct method of breathing through Praanayaama that will aid in better control of the mind and thereby help one succeed in thorough Brahmacharya.

Jogging, sprinting and all other exercises that are carried out regularly contribute to maintaining the state of Brahmacharya; for these activities help transmute that part of semen which is required to revitalize the physical body. If one keeps one's mind free from impure thoughts and subjects oneself to regular exercise, mental work and spiritual activity (God meditation) success in Brahmacharya is rest assured. Praanayaama is the direct and shortcut method to develop mind and body control to a high degree.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
QUESTION: Dear Dhananjay,

Thanks a lot for your previous answers, and I do get motivated every time I read the answers from this forum. Infact always keep me motivated to be celibate.

Today my question is Celibacy for women.
As you said loss of semen is draining of energy(vital force), and leads to various problem. However, women weather they indulge in sexual gratification or not, they don't loose anything as men(of course ovum etc release). So please tell me how does celibacy helps them(apart from sense control)? Because they don't loose energy as men do. Atleast earlier days they use to give birth to babies often which might have brought the great physical toll. However with advent of advanced medicine, modern women don't feel the necessity.

Thanks in advance.

ANSWER: Hello Shriharsha,

Good to receive your query, especially since it concerns Brahmacharya as regards to women considering it is a topic over which not much is known in general.

Q: Do the rules of celibacy apply equally to women in the same way as they do to men? And if so, what are the factors that are involved?
A: As we know the 'semen' in man and the 'ovum' in a woman are gross components by the fusion of which a 'zygote' is formed further to conception. This zygote then becomes the embryo and develops into a baby with the complete human form within the mother. In other words, the ovum and semen are the gross, physical manifestations of life force within man and woman. The power that exists in semen to create a new life is not merely in the physical fluid called semen but is further to the induction of a very large amount of life energy or 'Praana' into semen, following which this 'fluid' becomes empowered to aid reproduction.

Scriptures define semen (veerya) as a compound consisting of water, vidyuth (electricity), tejas (light) and other physical components such as enzymes and protein. Note the words vidyuth and tejas. These are the direct representations of Praana (life energy) within the fluid that actually aids fertilization to create life. It is for this reason that a man feels drained, weak and lifeless further to losing semen. By losing semen, he has lost the very electricity, light and life energy that were formed in the body as the end product of digestion. Semen is hence the net sum or end product of all life sustaining processes that occur within the body. It is the penultimate distillate of distillates, the nectar of nectars and the supercharged fluid meant to create another human being. No other fluid in the body can create life.. So it follows that conservation and transmutation of this super-fluid amounts to rapid build up of life energy.

What is it that a man looses when he expels semen? He loses the sum total of all his life energy (praana) and vitality. The weakness, energy drain and exhaustion that he experiences are not merely by losing a few milliliters of the organic body fluid called semen but due to losing the praana/vidyuth/tejas that the seminal fluid has been charged with. The fluid is only a medium, just as an electric wire is the medium to transmit electricity. When we use electricity to light a bulb, it is the electricity that is getting spent and not the wire! We get a bill at the month end for the electricity we have used and not for the length of wire we have installed! Note the difference. Semen by itself at the physical level can be compared to the wire. Just as the wire without electricity has no power, semen by itself is just a fluid without power. It is the induction of life energy in the form of praana/vidyuth and tejas into this fluid that make the ordinary fluid into a supercharged fluid capable of creating life. So when we say semen is precious, it is precious because it contains praana/vidyuth/tejas which are the sum total of all life energy. Semen only happens to be the fluid medium through which these life energies are being transmitted just as the wire transmits electricity.

What has been explained above as regards to men applies equally and in parallel to women. Just as men have semen (veerya), in women there is a corresponding fluid called 'RAJAVEERYA' that carries the ovum. In case of man the ejaculation of vital fluid is external and outward as it's function is to reach the female and ensure conception. In case of a woman, there is no outward ejaculation of her 'Rajaveerya' but a release of this vital fluid within her own body to receive the male sperm and ensure conception. In other words the woman secretes an equivalent fluid of the male semen but that which contains the ovum and whose function is to stay within her to aid formation of the 'zygote' which then becomes the embryo and finally the child. This 'Rajaveerya' contains the 'ovum' - The female reproductive element that has an equal part in creating life. Now what is the ovum? It is again nothing but a gross manifestation of the woman's life energy. It is the female seed derived after drawing from all the essences and life forces within her body.

Let us now take an example. Let us assume there is a man who is constantly indulging in strong sexual thoughts and fantasies through the course of a day for many days without indulging in actual ejaculation. What would be the outcome? There would be two important outcomes in this scenario:

1. He would find himself more tired and less strong as compared to the strength and energy that would have been at his disposal if he had kept himself totally free from these sexual thoughts.

2. He would shortly experience a wet dream within the next few days during sleep and loose his semen.

What can we learn from this example? That in spite of not physically 'ejaculating' the man found himself tired and experienced some energy loss and this energy loss became complete further to 'ejaculation' during the wet dream. Now what made him feel tired and less energetic after fantasizing in spite of refraining from a voluntary ejaculation? There must have been some other 'component' that he lost in spite of not losing his physical semen. This 'component' was nothing but the praana/vidyuth/tejas part of his semen. It was the energy with which his semen had been super charged. It was the 'electricity' we referred to in the electric wire earlier. The energy loss he felt was due to losing this very subtle energy by sexual radiation. Constant fantasizing made him radiate large amounts of mental, physical and emotional energy into thin air. The same energies which had super charged his seminal fluid got dissipated through radiation. Further to losing its praana/vidyuth/tejas component, the physical fluid called semen almost becomes powerless and is of no use to the body. The body hence throws it out during a wet dream.

Just as the man radiated large amounts of his vital energy into nothing via fantasizing, women also loose much energy and vitality further to indulgence in sexual thoughts and deeds. The first signs of this energy loss via radiation are fatigue, tiredness and irritation. Unlike man there is no external ejaculation. But 'Rajaveerya' that has been secreted from the sex glands (ovaries) of the woman looses its share of Praana and life energy during sexual fantasy or indulgence and becomes a lifeless fluid like semen from which the vidyuth has been taken out. This equivalent fluid which women produce also gets sapped of its true power and supercharge meant to create life. Once 'Rajaveerya' reaches this state, it becomes useless to the body and is expended once a month during the course of the woman's 'menstrual periods'. Women who are highly sexed and amorous have invariably been found to be nervous, high strung, irritable, frustrated and physically weak as they near middle age while virtuous, restrained women devoted to their family and staying away from sex as the chief form of pleasure tend to live a healthy, happy and contented life. Thus women suffer exactly the same loss of energy, vitality and life essence as men further to recreational sexual indulgence.

It is for this reason that Brahmacharya is a mode of life that is to be carried out in thought, word and deed both in men and women. Mere restraint from ejaculation of semen doesn't serve any purpose. Impure thoughts will eventually expel semen through a wet dream. What is required is ensuring that sexual thoughts are not let to grow and multiply within the mind in the first place. Only then can the production and formation of semen in men and Rajaveerya in woman be restricted and controlled. Once this is achieved, vital energy which earlier went into making the male or female reproductive elements, now becomes available for other constructive purposes like deep meditation and spiritual growth.

In a man who is a complete Urdhvaretha yogi, the very formation of semen is arrested. He directly makes use of his Praana for higher purposes without letting it form into physical semen. The process of transmutation is required for a man who wants to convert physical semen into 'Ojas'. Where is the need for transmutation in case of an Urdhvaretha? He prevents the very formation of semen in the first place! So the question of transmutation doesn't arise. Similarly in women Yogi's of the highest order, the very occurance of the monthly menstrual period stops. Where is the need for her period when there is no impurity to be thrown out? Menstrual periods in normal women signify expulsion of the unused ovum and the endometrium (inner lining of the uterus). In case of a lady of spotless chastity in thought, word and deed, the very formation of these elements gets stopped. Since there is no toxin or unused impurity to be expunged, such Holy women are known to get free from the menstrual period eventually just as an Urdhvaretha gets free from wet dreams. This is the highest state of Brahmacharya. Only a self-realized soul can be a complete Urdhvaretha. It takes a minimum of 12 years of absolute practice of true Brahmacharya with the grace of god to get established in this state.

Krishna tells Arjuna in the Bhagavad-Gita (Chap II-59): "Rasavarja, Rasopyasya, Param Drushtvaa Nivarthathey" - "O Arjuna, even the relish or tendency to enjoy sense pleasures leaves the man after he has realized the supreme". Till such a time the tendency to fall exists even in the most advanced celibate. One must forever be cautious against the onslaught of lust till such a state has been attained.

To sum up, women need to be as equally cautious as men when it comes to shunning recreational sexuality. The energy and life force they loose due to lust is on par with man. On the other hand, transmutation of vital force (Rajaveerya) into 'Ojas' helps women derive benefits on par with men. A man and a woman represent bifurcated forms of the one single energy - The one universal force - The Almighty Lord, for the soul is beyond gender and the soul is just a fragmented form of God like a drop of salt water separated from the mighty ocean.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

QUESTION: Dear Dhananjay,

I sincerely impressed with the knowledge you posses. Infact I been trying to tell lot of my friends the benefits of celibacy, and some of the questions(the one above) I could not answer properly. With answers from this forum I am able to mend ways to my friends in the path of celibacy.

However I wanted to ask the scriptures you refer to back your claims(it would be helpful for me to go through that and propogate the idea of celibacy). When I meant scriptures I am talking apart from BG(as I am going through it through properly) like Upanishad(which upanishad in general stress it, coz I read few I did not get that much information). Please let me know it would be of great help for me to give idea to many people and propogate Celibacy in a practical way.

Thank you again ,and thank you for doing omen service.

Regards,
Harsha

Answer
Hello Sriharsha,

Nice to know of your intent to propagate celibacy among friends. It is very important that people aware of the benefits of celibacy should enlighten others regarding the same and induce them into leading a life of purity and virtue.

Yoga is also called as 'Brahma vidya' or that knowledge by the realization of which one attains to Brahman - The Almighty Lord. Brahmacharya is an important 'anga' or component of Yoga without which one cannot realize the self.

Imparting knowledge that leads to realization of the self (Atman)to people is considered infinite in merit and many times more auspicious than gifts of land, money, food or other things of necessity to the poor. While the gifts of such objects no doubt help needy recipients to overcome their pain, it does not solve the cause of their pain, need and requirement. It only leaves the benefiter with a desire for more money, more property and more food, whereas gifting of the true knowledge or 'Brahma jnaana' that leads one to realize the self absolves man from desires generated by Maaya and helps him establish himself in the 'self' - The source of infinite and eternal bliss. By reaching this stage he becomes one with the universal 'spirit' and has no further need for the body, is freed from all sorts of hunger, desires and necessities. He becomes the 'spirit' himself and secures the bastion of eternal bliss. Hence it forms the duty of every person who has known the benefits of Brahmacharya to impart this divine knowledge to as many people as possible and thereby initiate them into the path of realization of the self thereby freeing them from the bounds of sorrow, pain and delusion created by Maaya.

Scriptural references to Brahmacharya are spread across the entire gamut of ancient Hindu scriptures. An aspirant needs to go through as many of these ancient works as possible and gather bits of relevant information from the wide array of treatises. Some of the works that might be of interest include:

1. The Bhagavad Gita
2. The four Vedas
3. Upanishads (Chaandogya Upanishad, Muktikopanishad, Yoga-kundali Upanishad, Shvethaashwathara Upanishad)
4. The Saptah Brahman
5. Shiva Samhita
6. Vignyaana Bhairava Tantra (A discourse from Lord Shiva to Mahadevi on Yoga)
7. The Aphorisms (sutras) of Maharishi Pathanjali
8. Hatha Yoga Pradeepika by Shri Svaatma Raama
9. The Yoga Vaasistha

The list goes on and on.. The referances I have made on this forum are drawn from some of the books mentioned above

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello there, I have a quick important question; does pre-cum or wet dreams weaken the body physically and mentally also? because ive been experiencing these things during my practice with celibacy. thank you & god bless

Answer
Hello there,

Hope this finds you doing good by the grace of god. Coming to your query,

Q: Do wet dreams cause physical and mental weakness?
A: Wet dreams are a result of repressed sexuality in the waking state that manifest themselves in the dream state while asleep. Brahmacharya is attained through transmutation and channelization of the sexual energy. Repression and suppression will not help one achieve the state of purity but will only make the fluid escape through wet dreams.

While the energy loss in a wet dream is much less as compared to a voluntary ejaculation, wet dreams still cause weakness and despair. The subject goes through the sexual act at the mind level. Continuous wet dreams can be debilitating and depressing. The way out is to ensure the prevention of the causes that lead to a wet dream.

If a man wishes to be free from wet dreams, he should first begin with the prevention & formation and growth of sexually related thoughts and deeds.

1. The mind should first be trained to shun such thoughts right from the point they start to rake up their heads. Note the word 'shun' - In the current context it means immediately 'displace' these lustful thoughts with the opposite thoughts of virtue, true love, compassion etc.. Wrestling with and suppressing these thoughts will not be of any use, they do not get displaced this way but only multiply.
2. The mind is then loaded with constructive intellectual activity (it can be work carried out honestly and committedly at the work place) so as to keep it busy and occupied.
3. The physical body is subjected to regular exercise to transform sexual undercurrents and energy into health and strength.
4. The mind is gradually resolved of its constant modifications/highs/lows by performing God meditation on a daily basis with a pure mind and intent following which it becomes more tranquil and serene.

With constant practice and perseverance the above technique slowly starts to bear fruit and in a years time better progress and growth becomes evident.

It is good that you are putting efforts in the practice of Brahmacharya. Keep up the efforts with sustained vigor and determination. As your thoughts become more and more pure with time by constant effort, wet dreams will also become less and less frequent and finally disappear. The key to success is an iron will and determination to keep the mind free from sexual thoughts. Constant prayer and God meditation to help one get free from the ravages of sexuality are also equally important.

Trust this helps,

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi. I want to know your opinion about food and brahmacharya. Do you think parboiled rice is a good food for brahmacharya? Can you tell me your eating habbits if it is not a secret of course? What to you usually eat? Do you have nocturnal pollutions?

Answer
Hello Danut,

Hope this finds you doing good by the grace of God. Coming to your queries, Q1: Is consumption of 'Parboiled Rice' conducive for Brahmacharya?

A: Parboiled rice or rice that has been half boiled, when eaten in limited quantities offers the benefit of many nutrients being intact further to a reduction in the cooking time, temperature and pressure. In case of full boiled rice the longer cooking time tends to destroy many more nutrients. Boiled rice should always be eaten fresh and preferably hot on the same day and never carried forward by refrigeration. The same also applies to vegetables. For this reason, a Brahmachari yogi would do well to eat most vegetables in the raw form, thereby deriving maximum nutrition.

Q2: What are my eating habits?
A: So we don't repeat ourselves here, I will kindly request you to go through the post in past answers titled 'Eggs'- Dt: 12/02/2010 where the question has been answered.

Q3: Do I go through nocturnal pollutions?
A: While directly answering this question will amount to self promotion, A true celibate can be rest assured that nocturnal dreams become very, very rare as the first year of unbroken celibacy nears completion and almost disappear into nothing by the second year by when the surface layer of past sexual karma gets diminished to a large extent. The success one has as regards to gaining freedom from wet dreams will depend on the ability of the person in keeping his mind free from lustful thoughts to a very large extent. Entertaining sexually related thoughts during the waking state is one of the chief cause of wet dreams. Sexual currents if let to build up during the course of the day, play havoc during night. For this reason, the panacea to success is to keep the mind occupied with worthwhile constructive activity, yoga/physical exercise and deep meditation.

Brahmacharya is not mere sexual restraint. It also encompasses preventing the birth of negative emotions such as passion, anger, greed, attachment, arrogance, jealousy, contempt etc.. If a man were to practice mere sexual restraint, whilst succumbing to any of the aforesaid negativities, he cannot be called as a true Brahmachari. Veerya (semen) will eventually desert such a man who exhibits an untoward and disagreeable character and his mind will revert to sensuality. These emotions are like close knit members of the same family; the presence of one or more ensures that the others follow suit.

Developing a perspective of compassion, love, affection and a well wishing attitude towards people, animals, plants and trees has an amazing effect in helping one achieve rock steady Brahmacharya. By being unselfish and doing good to the world around us, we are actually doing good to ourselves. By helping a man or an animal in need, we are helping ourselves. By gifting a thing to the needy, we are gifting ourselves. The attitude and energy that we give out comes back to us with equal force. Such a temperament gradually makes Brahmacharya become effortless and natural to a large degree.

Trust this throws light
God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello Dhananjay,
I really appreciate your knowledge and sincerity in understanding about the subject and sharing that with others...
Coming to my question: How do we maintain our purity(and tranquility) of mind in the current times, where we may even have to mix with lot of people in the course of doing our duties,job, education, business trips, etc..
Also does eating out create any hindrance to this celibacy practice in any way?
Can you share any personal experiences or tips that you feel will help us?

Answer
Hello Chandra,

Trust you are keeping fine. Thanks for the queries. Let me try and put forward the answers.

Q1: How does a Brahmachari maintain his state of purity in the midst of the illusory world high on Maya?
A: There is a saying in the Bhagavad-Gita by Lord Krishna addressing this issue:

" The Yogi must live in the world, yet be out of it; He should be like the leaves of a lotus which though surrounded by water and sludge, never get wet or soiled."

What does this mean? It means that the Yogi develops the ability to let the sense perceptions pass through him but does not respond/react to them further to having firmly anchored himself in the fact that the beauty and attraction perceived by his senses are all false, unreal and temporary and that God alone is eternally and incomprehensibly beautiful

In a gathering of people, say at the work place, there are different kinds of people with different attitudes and natures. A very large majority of these people constitute those who are rather strongly attached to sense pleasures and related activities. It is now the task of the Yogi to be in their midst while working, yet be unaffected and unruffled by the energies, vibrations, words and deeds put forth by them. To achieve this, the Brahmachari keeps the yardstick of reality and purity in his mind and discounts the words & actions of people as those occurring in a dream.

Can we suffer from a lengthy bout of depression lasting many days further to watching a very tragic and painful scene in a movie? No. This doesn't happen as we are in confirmation of the fact that the suffering and pain that are being shown on screen are just a moving set of images due to the effect of light. As soon as the cinema projector is turned off, the light stops getting projected and the screen turns blank.

Does an actor who gets shot in a movie really die due to the bullet? Or can he die through the shock of having been shot at? No. Actors attend to the scenes in the movie taking it as their job. As soon as the scene is captured and done with, both the hero and the anti-hero sit together behind the camera and chat amicably over a cup of coffee. They are able to do this as their involvement in the scene was at a superficial level in terms of gross reality. They mimicked the expressions of anger and hatred and put forward a show of killing each other. Once their part was played, they got back to normalcy and savored the coffee!

The Scriptures teach us that man's attitude and perspective towards life should be the same as that of the dreamer, cinema viewer or the actor. Neither gets affected as things are taken on a lighter vein and without the element of seriousness. The scriptures say that man is himself an actor in this divine cosmic drama called life - produced, directed and managed by the Almighty Lord.

The Yogi Brahmachari who is in the process of purifying himself has a very great task on hand. He is in the quest of remodeling himself at the very innate levels through major changes in his ways of thinking and action. The first qualities he needs to develop if he wants to succeed in this mighty task is to learn to be unaffected and untouched by what people say or don't say! Let people say what they wish; they too have the right of expression. Like the actor in the movie who listens to the director and accordingly performs, the job of the Yogi is to perform the duty entrusted to him and be unscathed by the reactions of those around him. Just as we take to the ramblings and mischief of a child with a smile and do not get angry or irate at the child, the Yogi similarly gives a wide margin to the eccentricities of people around him, all the time being in rock steady conviction and confirmation of his ideals and objectives. In the beginning this may appear a bit hard and one may find himself a source of ridicule. But with constant perseverance, patience and commitment, people will soon realize that it is only fair to let the celibate have his way when he himself has been non-judgmental, non-interfering and temperate as regards to their mode of thinking.

We as Brahmachari's should be serious as regards to our ideals, aims, objectives and goals and turn a blind eye and ear to what people have to say or don't say! While people might initially frown upon a celibate on coming across his do's and don'ts, everyone eventually has to respect a man who is polite, considerate and yet firm as regards to the conviction he has on his ideals. Practice and determination will gradually establish one in this line of action.

Q2: Does eating outside one's home affect Brahmacharya?
A: How does the food lovingly cooked by one's mother taste? How does it feel to sit at a table and be affectionately served by one's mother? The experience cannot be equaled in any other manner. Why is this? What is the governing factor behind the taste, hygiene and wholeness behind food cooked at home? The answer would be that the very energies, intentions and vibrations of the true love and affection that a mother/wife feels for her child/family get transferred to the food as an important ingredient! The best cuisine available at a very elite restaurant does not have this ingredient.

If a lady of the house cooks food with the loving and very genuine intention of welfare of her people, a part of her 'Praana' or vital energy flows out of her and enters the food that she cooks. Just as we can sense if a person has feelings of love or hatred towards us through the vibrations and attitude given out by a person even without verbal communication, 'Praana' can transfer from person to person and from the cook to the food. Food cooked at a restaurant by a commercial chef is prepared with a business like attitude devoid of emotions. It might be polluted with negative energy based on the nature of the person who prepared it. Eating such food 'contaminated' by negative energy most often leads to illness. Besides, food prepared at commercial outlets is high on additives/essences/colors and other chemicals which invariably cause deterioration of health. For the Brahmachari, flushing out of toxins within his body and ensuring 'new' toxins via these additives do not re-enter his body is of much importance. Keeping all these factors in mind, it would be best to avoid outside food to the best extent possible and commit oneself to food prepared at home.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello Sir,
i have known about all this divine knowledge for about 3 months, and i have really climbed up or grasped this truth with in depth study very quickly.
it is very clear in my mind about what you say,and i have been experiencing benefits like clear vision and thinking and glow on face,after practicing this for 3 months with not even continuous brahmcharya of even 15 days.
my questions are
1)why even though i have knowledge, i know the reality, i slip, means i can't even observe celibacy for 15 flat days, somewhere in between on someday this lust conquers me for sometime, and then again after masturbation i'm brought back to reality which leads to depression that "why did i fall even though i could see the pit just clear in my way". please help me with this.
2)To conquer lust is a great thing, and i believe one should not directly try for it. we should first learn to have control over our carvings for food first and then it should be lust, it just like you can't make sentences unless you don't know alphabets. express your views on this please.
3)I have observed that on my vow for observing brahmacharya for 15 days,the lust powers against me mostly on some specific days like mainly on 1st,3rd,7th,and 11th days, my all breakages are on above mentioned days of observing vow.
4)Observing brahmacharya is making me more good looking,with glow on face, increased confidence and physical fitness which increases the chances of opposite sex to attract towards me, so observing celibacy is tempting me further i mean it becomes harder with each increasing day, you become magnet for the opposite sex in short it increases your chances of slip.so how to deal with this
P.S- i'm 19 years old, and is it more difficult to observe brahmacharya at this age.
One thing i feel positive about is that all the benefits you describe to be got at end of continuous 3 months of brahmacharya, i'm getting them early, is this also age dependent,there is a way great increase in my physical and mental energy.
THANKS SIR, YOU ARE A SOURCE OF MY INSPIRATION.

Answer
Hello Sural,

Trust this finds you fine. Coming to your queries,

Q1: What makes a celibate slip, his knowledge of Brahmacharya not with holding?
A: What is the difference between a man who has a thorough knowledge of the map of a city and a man who knows the layout in the map further to having traversed through every road in the city personally? There is much difference between the two. While the first man is familiar with the theoretical aspects concerning the layout of the city, he has no practical knowledge on what it means to walk on these roads, where to turn and how to locate a place. To him the layout of the city represents nothing more than a few lines and diagrams on the map. He lacks the first hand, practical knowledge of actually moving around the city that comes from practical experience. He has never had a chance to get an actual 'feel' of what it means to travel across the city. The second man on the other hand has moved through every road and street and has factual knowledge of what distance really means. He is conversant with the directions at a realistic level further to having hands on experience in the actual deed of walking the streets. The directions to a particular place are ingrained in his mind further to true knowledge of the layout derived from first hand experience. Mere textual knowledge of a subject such as Brahmacharya is exactly similar. One cannot ingrain into oneself a life of Brahmacharya just by reading or listening to material on the subject. There is a vast difference between 'knowing a subject' and having 'realized the subject'. Depending on one's evolutionary level, effort and sincerity, it takes much time to realize and come to terms with practical knowledge of Brahmacharya. One has to personally go through the 'streets' and 'lanes' governing this divine science and evolve methods to tackle the dangers of lust and temptation lurking around the street corners. As the ability of the celibate to tackle these dangers grows, his success in Brahmacharya also correspondingly progresses.

Q2:Should a celibate try to conquer lust?
A: Is it possible to conquer heat emanating from fire and make the fire cool? Is it possible to conquer cold emanating from a block of ice and turn the ice hot? Is it possible for a man to dip his hands into water and not get wet? These are impossible things. They are impossible because trying to conquer them goes against the very basis of the reality of their nature & property. It is in the nature of fire radiate heat. It is in the nature of ice to radiate cold. It is in the nature of water to make things wet. Just as the concepts of heat, cold and wetness are properties existing in nature, lust and desire are also elements that exist in an ignorant mind. We cannot change the heat radiating property of fire; but we can negate heat by dousing the fire. We cannot change the cold radiating property of ice; but we can negate cold by sitting in a warm room. We cannot change the property of water to make things wet; but we can keep ourselves dry by not dipping our hands into water. In the same way lust cannot be conquered. It is a property, a tendency, and an element of ignorance akin to heat, cold and moisture. Just as dousing the fire removed heat, one can insulate oneself from the effects of lust by staying clear of thoughts, words and deeds that generate lust. In other words, one can safeguard oneself from the heat of the fire called lust by dousing the flame of ignorance with the extinguisher called knowledge. The objective of the Brahmachari is not to conquer any element of nature but to establish himself in a state where he is unaffected by the presence or absence of these elements. He accomplishes this by gaining true knowledge of the self. He works to realize the truth that he is not the body, mind, intellect or consciousness but the pure, indivisible, unblemished, taintless and stainless 'Atman' or the 'soul'. Once this realization is achieved, it is irreversible. Nothing can make him revert to his earlier state of ignorance. Once there is no ignorance, there is no source for lust to manifest. But till it is accomplished, one has to stay clear of all sources that generate lust.

Q3: What is the reason behind periodic surfacing of lust?
A: All things in nature follow the law of duality. Night is followed by day, summer is followed by rains, good and evil co-exist, happiness is followed by sadness, ignorance and knowledge are two sides of the same coin. There is nothing in nature or 'prakruthi' that is unipolar. Everything follows the law of duality by being bi-polar. A man at the start of celibacy is also naturally bound by these laws as he is firmly anchored in the realm of 'prakruthi'/nature or the material manifestation of the universal consciousness through innumerable past actions and deeds. The tendencies formed by his past karmas surface every now and then and unsettle his decisions. His bonding to the laws of nature makes him roam in opposites. A kind man might be induced into a cruel deed during a moment of thoughtless emotion. A sane man might get instigated into an act of insanity. Similarly, a celibate who has vowed to never entertain lust again might forget all about his resolutions upon seeing an attractive member of the opposite sex. What does this demonstrate? It shows us that we are under the grip of ignorance when under the influence of emotions, particularly the negative kind. The way to freedom from these dualities of nature would hence be to rise above these bi-polar tendencies and establish oneself in the unipolar state of true knowledge and soul bliss through self-realization. Till then, one has to constantly persevere to stay clear of everything that can instigate deviation. With honest and determined effort, success will become more and more pronounced in course of time.

Q4: How should a Brahmachari deal with the aura of attraction created around him, especially as regards to the opposite sex?
A: The world we see is a reflection of our own mind. To a desirous and lustful man, the whole world is full of young, beautiful women. To an academician pursuing scholarly pursuits the very same world is full of books. To a mother nursing her new born infant, this world is nothing more than her child. It is our perspective and not people or situations that decide our course of thinking and action. When one constantly functions in the 'I-me-mine' ego plane, one loses track of reality and starts assuming oneself to be distinct from others. This further fuels the ego and kindles the entire gamut of negative emotions. Can a man be aware of his sexuality, attraction or looks when is deeply engrossed in reading a book or playing a sport? No. His entire mind, heart and soul are deeply involved in the activity and he loses track of who he is or how he looks during that period of serious involvement. Brahmacharya is to be approached in the same way. Why direct our thoughts into thinking how attractive or repulsive we are? Why spend our energy into pondering on how handsome or ugly we look to the opposite sex? The goal of the Brahmachari is to rise above ignorance and establish himself in his self. In what way are his attractiveness or ugliness connected with this goal? They have no connection. They are again nothing but offshoots of his latent lust and desire for the opposite sex. The desire and lust within him are making him look outward towards people with a similar perspective. Does he become aware of his sexuality/attractivenes in the presence of his mother or sister? No, because his perspective towards them is different. Developing a similar perspective towards other women, being engrossed with creative work, avoiding thinking about himself and ultimately viewing every living being as the soul and not the body is the key to get free from delusion.

It is always good to start a life of celibacy at the earliest and get on with life meaningfully. Teenage is the time when one's energy and vital power are abundant and virtually limitless. Embarking upon a life of Brahmacharya right from the onset of teens provides enormous benefits in each and every domain of life. The path to success would be not to get caught with the benefic effects/results that one gains from a short period of celibacy but to concentrate on the larger picture of succeeding in honest and true Brahmacharya of a life time following which man can own the real treasure of treasures called 'Realization of his self'.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello Sir,

I wished to know what is meant by brahmacharya for women, since they don't have their sexual organs outside the body like men. What actions constitute the emulation of self-gratification akin to men? Do online emotional relationships with many men create problems for a women later in her married life? Do activities like partying, socializing and talking with men on a regular basis have the same harmful effects as for men? What is the effect of such behavior on her emotional quotient and understanding with her future spouse?

Thank you,
Amit

Answer
Hello Amit,

Hope you are keeping well. Coming to your queries,

Q1: How does Brahmacharya apply to women?
A: So we don't repeat ourselves here, I will request you to go through the post- 'Celibacy and women Dt: 11th January 2011 for the answer.

Q2: What are the actions as regards to women that are detrimental on a parallel note as in the case of men.
A: The same actions that cause damage to men hold good as regards to women also. These include sexual fantasy, pornography, masturbation, actual recreational sex and all other forms of sexual arousals. To sum up, all waste of mental, physical and emotional energy through sexual thought, word or deed lead to wastage of the vital essence in both men and women on an equal footing.

Q3:Do online emotional relationships with many men hurt women?
A: An emotional relationship is an emotional relationship immaterial of whether it is online, offline, thought-level, verbal or physical. Energy is expended in all these cases and attachment blossoms. This will eventually lead to interactions and involvement at a deeper level and finally cause sorrow, pain and loss of vital essence in case of both men and women.

It is very difficult for either a man or lady to be immersed in an environment filled with sexual, amorous and sensual undercurrents such as a party and yet adhere strictly to the tenets of Brahmacharya. For this reason, aspirants would do well to shun such environments that cause mental duress and instigate the latent lust present within. If a man or woman were to get deeply involved and addicted to such settings, the tendency to revel in such surroundings gradually increases and finally causes downfall in terms of Brahmacharya.

Question
Hi. I read that Ghee increases shukra (semen?). Do you think ghee is good for brahmacharya?
Thank you.

Answer
Hello Danut,

Hope you are doing fine. Coming to your query,

Q: Is Ghee beneficial for Brahmacharya?

A: Cows milk, fresh curd or yogurt, butter, buttermilk and ghee are considered beneficial for a life of Brahmacharya as these are 'Saathwic' foods that do not cause agitation or irritation of the mind. In addition to promoting calmness and producing an agreeable tendency, ghee is considered beneficial in the development of the 'Medha Naadi' in the brain that leads to superior mental faculties. The diet of a Brahmachari is frugal and simple and has minimal quantities of oil and fat. The above mentioned milk products are hence safe and 'saathwic' sources of the little amount of fat that the body requires for sustainment and for development of the brain. Hence ghee can be consumed in small quantities on a regular basis.

Coming to whether ghee increases semen, it should be noted that the final aim of the Brahmachari is to prevent the formation of semen after transmuting the reserves. This is further to the fact that semen exists in the subtle state all over the body by default. It is only sexual arousal which draws the subtle semen from every tissue and pools it into the sex glands re-converting it into gross semen. By default, the gross semen originally produced is trifurcated and goes to develop the body, brain(intellect) and towards the formation of 'Ojas'. Hence it is not recommended to consume excess food/nutrients which are high in fat and oil which could lead to the over production of semen and thereby induce its wastage through a wet dream since the body absorbs only the required quota. For this reason it is necessary to maintain a balanced and frugal diet that is just sufficient for one's needs.

Question
Hi, I want to become a very high level brahmachari. So far I have not had a slip for more than one and a half years. I was wondering how advanced does one have to be in order to stop having erections in dreams and the waking state, as temptations to masturbate can follow following an erotic dream. Also I heard that Yamaraj is afraid of the perfect urdhavereta- I was wondering how many lifetimes this takes, can the 12 years be accomplished in one lifetime?

Answer
Hello there,

Good to know of your efforts at celibacy. Coming to your queries,

Q: How advanced does one have to be to be free from sexual arousal in the dream state? Also how long does it take to reach the state of a perfect Urdhvaretha and what is the standing of such a man of virtue in the cosmic cycle?
A: The events that unfold in a dream are due to existing desires in the sub-conscious mind. Hence dreams are nothing but the depiction of latent desires and urges in the deeper sub-conscious. Since the power of the intellect and discrimination are minimal in the dream state, the mind is unleashed and unbound to function as it pleases. Erections that occur in dreams accompanied by erotic thoughts are due to sexual arousal fueled by latent sexual desires, urges and tendencies present within oneself. The very same tendencies that are indulged in or with held while awake manifest in these erotic dreams. As and when the mind starts becoming more and more free of these urges and tendencies in the awake state, sexual dreams also start reducing in frequency and finally disappear into nothing. True Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with the grace of god will eventually annul these dreams. The time taken is dependent on 2 important factors that determine freedom from these dreams/erections:

1. The ability and consistency in keeping the mind free from sexual thoughts, words and deeds while in the awake state.

2. Actions undertaken to wash away the past 'vaasanas' or tendencies stored in the 'Kaarana sharira' or the causal body. These can constitute cleansing and purification actions such as the 'Yama', 'Niyama', 'Praanayaama' of a life of Yoga.

Coming to your query 'Is Yamaraj the lord of death afraid of the perfect Urdhvaretha'? We first need to understand the concept of who 'Yamaraj' is. The term 'Yamaraj' refers to the title of an entity in the cosmic cycle who supervises and carries out the job of releasing mortals from their earthly and bodily existence through physical death and evaluates the merits and demerits accrued by these souls to determine their next existence. A perfect Urdhvareta is one who is non-semen producing. Having established himself in his native state of soul bliss the Urdhvaretha rests on the absolute rock of the one and only reality - The Brahman. The complete annihilation of relating oneself with sexual stimuli also follows and it becomes clear that such an Urdhvaretha is none other than the self-realized soul, for unless man has realized the supreme, the tendency for response to sense stimuli cannot be fully negated. Keeping in mind the purity, divinity and oneness that such a soul has with the Almighty Lord - Brahman, it follows naturally that all other entities working below the Brahman in the cosmic cycle also pay their respects to the Urdhvaretha and treat him with a high level of felicitation.

How many years or lifetimes this takes will differ from individual to individual depending on the evolutionary level that the soul has already achieved, the urge within to progress further and the efforts taken to reach such a state. But with honest and true Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed one can be rest assured that progress will eventually come and enlightenment will follow. Our job as Brahmacharis is to plod consistently towards purifying ourselves at all levels and strive to realize our self, following which all merits will come and cling by themselves at the appropriate time.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
QUESTION: Hi Dhananjay , I am a dedicated practioner of Taekwondo and I am looking to boost my performance physically mentally and spiritually in this art form and life in general. I have practiced brahmacharya in the past up to 4 months last year. And the power and confidence on every level seemed to improve. But then I lost it all due to heavy loss of the seed.

So I know without doubt that brahmacharya is useful Even though every forum will tell you its ok to lose your seed before a fight it won't affect you but it does. You would have to be a fool to not notice the difference why do they say such things?

This memory of the power is haunting me and I feel I need to accomplish something great in my life.

I have studied alot about chi energy, prana etc it seems to be all interconnected. I have great interest in self development. And also practice meditation occasionly. So my main question is what can I expect in the periods of say 6months to 1year and beyond. With strict adherence to the principles of Brahmacharya and meditation. Will my performance and strengh continue to grow? And is it true that one can gain paranormal abilties through such strict discipline? I am 21 years old
Matthew

ANSWER: Hello Matthew,

Nice to hear from you. Coming to your queries,

Q1: Why is there much media hype stating sex/loss of semen is good for health?
A: The subject of 'Sex' has been made into a tool by all forms of media from ads, movies, newspapers, magazines, journals and even the field of medicine to market things on a wide spread scale. The rationale behind this is very simple - Sex sells. Applying the concept of sexuality right from educational ads to HR practices ensures that the advertiser is guaranteed attention and a possible interest in the product from the public. This is the result of growth of perverse culture in the society around us. More and more indulgence in recreational sexuality makes man stoop to lower and grosser levels and finally drowns him in the cesspit of lust and ignorance which leads to ill health, insanity, violence and sheer sorrow. The smart man wishing health, happiness, peace, prosperity and spiritual bliss turns a blind eye to these 'tricks' employed by the people/media and focuses his energies into conservation of the seed that bestows him with unimaginable strength, power, ability and God-bliss. It would do well for the martial artist or fighter to remember the Heavy weight boxer Mohammed Ali's words - " The man who loses semen before a fight has already lost the fight while losing the fluid". One can logically imagine the power and superlative abilities that can be gained if semen is never ever lost and is instead transmuted into 'Ojas'. There is nothing beyond the reach of such a man. But this great power can be mastered only after a minimum of 12 years of unbroken celibacy. Words fail to describe the wonders of even short periods of seminal transmutation.

Q2: What can the Brahmachari expect from a year of unbroken Brahmacharya?
A: A year of unbroken Brahmacharya ensures that purification starts at the physical and mental levels giving the person greater energy, indefatigableness, perennial freshness, a glowing face, excellent health, power and freedom from most chronic health problems at the physical level. At the mental level, one develops better memory, keen understanding, ability to grasp concepts quickly, a calmer and peaceful mental state and most importantly a general sense of happiness and savor at life. The aspirant becomes less prone to irritation, agitation and weakness due to the abundance of 'Prana' or vital energy within his system that is being conserved. This provides him with a foundation to excel in whatever form of activity he wishes to endeavor upon.

There is one very important thing that anyone who is interested in celibacy should know - Mere abstinence from sex/masturbation/contact with the opposite sex does not amount to Brahmacharya and will not give concrete results. What is more important is to channelize the conserved fluid into the brain and create 'Ojas'. This is possible through a life of pure thought, word and deed at the mental plane, regular physical exercise at the physical plane and constant God meditation at the causal plane. All these three are important. Lack of any one of the three makes the fluid flow out. Brahmacharya bears fruit only when carried out with entirety at the mental level. This mental Brahmacharya which means non-entertainment of any form of sexually related thoughts including anger, attachment, greed, arrogance and jealousy is the key for success. Due to constant indulgence in sexual thought/activity it becomes second nature for semen to flow downward. In reality the natural course of semen is to flow upward. This is how it functions in an Urdhvaretha yogi. He makes it flow downward and outward only when he wants offspring. All other times, by default, the fluid flows up to the body/brain and provides him with superb abilities in all domains. All of us can become Urdhvaretha Yogis. What is required is an iron will, determination and desire to conserve the most important part of ourselves. To retain, conserve, transmute and derive benefit from the nectar of nectars, the essences of essences - The vital fluid called semen.

'Praanayaama' or the control of 'Prana' through special breathing techniques is a very important tool in achieving unbroken Brahmacharya. This concept is well recognized even among the Japanese and the Chinese martial artists who indulge in special forms of breathing and meditation before a fight to clear the mind of undulations, focus energies for the fight and bring themselves into a calm and serene yet highly alert state of focus before the fight begins. Being a martial artist, you might well know that the logical, clever, calm, composed, confident and cool fighter wins the bout and not one who is angry, irritated, anxious and hasty. All the above mentioned qualities that make a winner can be accrued only from abundance of 'Prana' or 'Chi'- the vital power and this vital power stems from none other than the vital life giving seed present in semen. The true Brahmachari can thus excel in any form of activity further to efficient practice and can have an edge which the non-Brahmachari heavily lacks. From scriptural references and from the lives of people who have followed such unbroken Brahmacharya beyond 12 years, we get to see that they developed powers and abilities that would be classified 'superhuman' in the eyes of the common man.

At the personal level and to start with, you can carry out a simple experiment:- " Be celibate for a period of 15 days abhorring from all forms of sex/masturbation/sexual stimulation/arousal keeping the mind pure and relaxed, yet focussed on martial arts with a 15 minute prayer/meditation to God every day to help you achieve spectacular success". When you meditate, ensure that it is either very early in the morning or at 6.00 P.M in the evening in a dark or dimly lit room free from sounds, sights and distractions.

We shall carry forward this discussion based on your report after a fortnight :-)

Kindly go through all the past answers on this portal to widen you awareness on the different aspects of Brahmacharya.

QUESTION: Dhananjay, Thank you for your quick and very informative answer. I have been through all of the previous posts and am up to speed. I am already 11 days in and I feel the power starting to return it feels great. If there is anything positve that have come out of my previous falls is that I know exactly what causes the descent and have listed them down and thoroughly examined them.

Though there is one thing that happened during my 4 months of brahmacharya that I will need you advice on. Towards the 3 month period my strength and endurance shot through the roof and it was observed by my friends at the gym and at the dojo. The first week was fine they didnt seem to mind but it was consistant after a few weeks of this I was approached by them and they asked me are you on performance enhancing drugs or steroids. I could not believe what I was hearing. This infuriated me. No it couldn't be that his hard training, dedication and strict discipline caused this to happen, it had to be drugs.

At this point I felt my power peaking to a level I had never experienced before. I got the expression people were intimidated by me and would try to react agressively to me. Most likely it was the anger I was emanating due to the comments made earlier. How do I control this anger when people directly dismiss my hard earned work?

The following week after I was at a party alcohol was involved and I lost my seed then it was down down from there back to my former self. Lost everything I had worked so hard for over the 4 months. It seemed I was put back in the system so to speak and everyone treated me normally again.

But now I have renewed will and not only do I intend to gain the power I had before but to surpass it and to truly see what I am capable of.

Answer
Hello Matthew,

Hope this finds you doing fine. Coming to your query,

Q: How should the Brahmachari deal with people and the success he achieves?
A: The power and ability that the Brahmachari starts to develop are in reality the power of God that has started shining through him. The vital seed in man is the direct representation of the God-power in nature. When the Brahmachari thus conserves and transmutes his seed into success and accomplishment, he is really only the medium through whom God is functioning. He is like the chisel through whom the master sculptor-God is working. He is like the brush held in the hands of the skillful painter. Just as the chisel or the painting brush by themselves cannot sculpt or paint but need the hand of the sculptor/painter, all of man's accomplishments and achievements are fueled and driven by God and God alone. Once we realize ourselves to be the mediums/tools in the hands of God, there will no longer be any excitement/elation - depression/anger at the apparent success'es and failures of life. We start coming closer and closer to our true selves (The Atman or the soul) and thereby begin to experience true bliss which is permanent, lasting and infinite unlike the pleasure gained from sense objects that is impermanent and temporary.

Let people say what they want. Let them comment or not comment on what they perceive us to be. Can a block of ice become hot just because someone says so? Does the crow become white just because someone says so? What is there is there... The reality of an object is its reality and does not change because I say it has changed. Similarly let us not be disturbed by the opinions/attitude of people regarding our strengths and weaknesses. Instead, let us focus on our efforts.

May you make rapid strides in the path of Brahmacharya and attain bliss of the Atman.

God bless and have a nice day:-)

Question
Hello Sir,
Hope You would be fine .
Sir few days while maintaining my continence I went through a derogatory act. I couldn't succeed to qualify my Bank exams for which with rebellious mind I lost my balance and started pouring blame to God and started watching porn although I never wanted to do this.I have started loosing my faith from God. So Sir Can you help me to redeem from such mentality. Thank you .Hope you won't mind

Answer
Hello Sagar,

The one and very important fact which each one of us should remember is that God - The Almighty is the most impartial, just and kind entity ever to have been and ever to be. This entire universe is his creation and each and every soul is a fragmented part of him which is as divine and blissful in nature as he himself. The layers of 'avidya' or ignorance surrounding our soul make us forget our true nature of unparalleled bliss and go in search of temporary and impermanent sense pleasures which are really not pleasures at all but doorways to pain and suffering. When we strive for something and succeed, we wrongly assume ourselves to be the doers responsible for our success and walk proud with our head held high. But when we strive for something and fail, we blame God for the failure and curse him for the stroke of bad luck. Does this make sense? Isn't there something fundamentally wrong in this concept?

The real concept, the real fact and what we may call absolute reality is something quite different. God, in his divine cosmic dream drama called life has set a particular part to be played by each and everyone of us. We are all actors in this dream drama of his and he is the director. Being the director, God decides which part each and every one of us should play. He decides that one of us should play the part of a Lawyer - and no matter how hard this man tries to become a doctor, he will fail and will only end up taking up a law course and practice law. Another man might study law with a desire to practice law but after a few years of his practice, he gets the chance to set up a business and becomes a businessman altogether giving up his law practice. What does this show? It shows us that it is not we who decide what we should become or not become in life but that there is a very powerful force above us which has already decided what each and everyone of us should do. This great force has already cast us in a particular part in the life-drama.

It is an act of ignorance when people credit themselves with the success they achieve and tell themselves and others how smart they have been in reaching such a state in life or in having acquired such wealth, title or position. The reality is that it was co-incidental that they happened to choose the very same profession that God had already chosen for them in his life-drama and thus it appeared as though they were the cause behind the spectacular success.

Q1. So what is the right approach to life?
Q2. How should one decide what to do and what not to do?
Q3. What should be the central theme around which one should hinge his life objective?

A/Q1: Ours is not to question, interject, make others responsible or to blame anyone. Ours is to put in our best efforts and then be silent and witness. Based on our past karma, our present efforts and his own decision in deciding which part we shall play in the life-drama, God will show us a way and will make us do what we have to do in this life whether we want it or not. Our right is to the action alone and never to the fruits. Let us do our part as actors with honesty, sincerity and truthfulness... HE will decide the outcome and that is not our concern. Keeping this in mind and moving along with the current in the river, our life becomes smooth and easy.

A/Q2: Each and everyone of us are connected to the Lord through strings that he holds. We are like puppets controlled by the puppeteer. Immaterial of whether the puppet wants to dance or not, the puppeteer will make it dance if he so decides as it is he who holds the strings. When we put in our best efforts and stand aside watching silently, God will let us know in what direction our next step should be. Let us not be attached to our actions or have expectations regarding the outcome. Let us be neutral and flexible. Then we become fully in synchrony and in match with HIS pull of strings. As soon as there is no resistance from our side at the pull of strings, there is no more pain, worry or unhappiness.

A/Q3: The central theme around which one should hinge his life objective should be realization of the master super power called GOD. Things like our profession, our likes, dislikes, success and failure are only events which occur in this life-drama. They have no bearing on absolute reality. Let us not waste our time and energy getting caught up with these petty things of little value. Based on HIS divine will, God will decide what each and everyone of us should become or not become. Let us work hard at the opportunities he gives us and watch silently on what happens, all the time being unattached to the fruits of our actions and fully attached to HIM -The Almighty/All pervading master of masters. He will take care of us and show us the way.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
I am trying to perfect my retentive memory. I forgot what someone said at my workplace about a film, and even though I am practising brahmacharya I have not reached that stage of perfect retentive memory- can you help me if I gave as much details as possible? I remember what someone else asked him but then I forgot the name nof the film a few hours later.

Answer
Hello Sanjay,

Hope you are keeping fine. I assume your question here is regarding the benefits of Brahmacharya as regards memory development.

Memory building is a process that takes time. Brahmacharya, which helps in the build up and transmutation of semen into Ojas is one of the most effective ways of increasing one's memory quotient as semen can be called a derivative of the cerebro-spinal fluid and its conservation/transmutation alternately increase this fluid resulting in better growth and fine tuning of faculties of the brain. Twelve years of unbroken celibacy have been vouched for both by the scriptures and also people who have reached that state to help in the formation of the 'Buddhi Naadi', a special astral channel in the brain that promotes photographic memory and abilities of superior recall.

With honest and true Brahmacharya, one will start improving as regards to his power of recall with every passing year.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Sir, I'm vikram, 25 years old. I'm trying to practice brahmacharya, but I can't do it. I've broad band internet connection at my house. I can't disconnect it, because it is given to me for education purposes by my father. I've the bad habit of watching porn in internet. I try to control myself and motivated to practice brahmacharya. But, that lasts for only 7 days. After 7 or 8 days I start watching porn again. Tell me any idea, so that I can eliminate my porn habit.

Thanks.

Answer
Hello Vikram,

Trust this finds you fine, Coming to the answer,

The following measures should help overcome watching of porn:

1. Install a good net-filter/web protection system such as 'BLUECOAT K9 WEB PROTECTION SYSTEM' to prevent access to forbidden content. It can be freely downloaded from the main site http://www1.k9webprotection.com/

Upon installation, ask someone you trust such as your father to choose a password. Let the password not be known to you. This will cut access to unwanted content on the net.

2. The internet, a powerful information highway has been made available to you by your father with the good assumption that you will improve your knowledge in all fronts and so as to help you fare better in your education. Misuse of the same for derogatory and perverse activities such as watching of porn amounts to hands on cheating and letting down the trust and love that your parents have reposed on you. It is the primal duty of students to cultivate good habits, excel in education, develop good health and strength and most importantly build a sound and respectable character so as to help themselves become worthy individuals. Watching porn will lead to irreparable damage at the physical, mental, emotional and psychic levels in course of time and cause decay and degeneration of the person beyond repair. Always remember this fact and take an oath to stay clear of porn and enforce it at all costs.

3. Wake up very early in the morning on a daily basis and indulge in regular physical activity/exercise/sports. This will convert sexual energy into health and strength and the tendency to waste the vital essence will diminish.

4. Stay clear of peer groups/friends who indulge in lustful talk/deeds. The company we maintain plays a very important role in deciding our line of thought, action and tendency. Practice of Brahmacharya is not possible if a man is addicted to such company or thought. One has to decide which path one wants to choose...The path of sensual pleasure and decay or the path of health, mental clarity and God bliss.

5. Indulge in God-meditation for about 15 minutes everyday to start with and pray to God to help you tide over the habit of watching porn with all sincerity and devotion. Within a few months of determined and honest efforts, God will undoubtedly extend his helping hand. But the intention, desire and efforts taken to establish absolute Brahmacharya must be very sincere and true. Based on our efforts we can without doubt expect an equal and matching degree of support from God.

6. Give up the act of masturbation all at once. Wastage of seminal energy will strengthen the tendency for more wastage and finally drive man into premature old age and incurable disease.

Kindly go through all the past answers on this portal to get a deeper understanding of Brahmacharya, its benefits and ways to achieve it.

With serious and sustained effort, success will slowly start to trickle

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
hello Dhananjay,

How's life?

First of all thanks for your support by strengthening us regarding brahmacharya/celibacy.

You know, after researching, personal experiences, and encountering many publications through books and internet, i was a little confused now about this subject known as 'sexuality'..

Sometimes i can't figure who's telling the truth or this guy or that guy is writing false idealogy by making it appear truthful..

Since i consider myself as a man with a low disciminative intelligence(viveka),that seems cannot distinguish if i am getting the right information, i would like to ask your kind help about this internet site that tuckles about brahmacharya..

What can you say about 'www.aypsite.org'?

I am asking you this cause i believe someone with a chaste mind can really distinguish or have a keen observations about which is right or wrong especially if it has been coupled with meditation.The site that i have mentioned had motivate me to meditate regularly. But, everytime i read the tantra lesson, im getting confused.

with my folded hand in prayer here, i wish to read from you again.

To Ian abrams also, can you please enlighten us..

Answer
Hello Kane,

Hope you are keeping well. Coming to the answers,

Since I am not aware of the credence, integrity and depth of real knowledge of the person/people who run the site you have mentioned, I will not be in a position to comment on their approach to Yoga.

However, with the well wishing intention of guiding and being of help to you, I shall briefly deal with the approach to Yoga through regular and tantric practices with a general perspective.

There are two paths to attain Yoga. The right hand path and the left hand path.

The right hand path makes use of the principle of renunciation to help the Yogi overcome the desires and bonds that have kept him anchored to the impermanent external world and its apparent modifications. The first step in the right hand path is to make the Yogi realize the sugar-coated poison like nature of pleasures derived from the five senses of reception and the five senses of action. Once the Yogi gets an idea of this truth, the right hand path concentrates on the next objective of helping him become independent of his dependence/slavery to these sense experiences. On attaining to these two objectives, there is still another last and final attainment pending. And that is the extermination of past negative/unwanted 'Vaasanas' or tendencies that have been stored in the 'Kaarana sharira' or the causal body due to past actions or karma. Upon successfully completing all these three tasks to finality, the Purusha or the soul succeeds in the dissolution of the cocoons of 'Avidya' or ignorance around itself and shines in its full splendor. The state of self-realization is then said to have been irreversibly achieved.

The second path of Yoga is the left hand path or the 'Vaama Marga'. As the name suggests, it is the alternate and less traveled, more dangerous risky path. The left hand path consists of Tantric practices and rites (which may include the use of sex, liquor and such other intoxicants) as the means to achieve the final realization of one's unity with the creator. It is a path filled with risk, danger and extreme peril. On the one hand, the aspirant is trying to free himself from the clutches of lust, passion and related attachments. On the other hand he is using forms of these very same evils in an altered approach to weed them out. The task of establishing oneself in the reality that sense pleasure are impermanent and not really pleasures is itself no mean task. It calls for great efforts and an understanding which can only stem gradually from realization of life experiences for what they are. If one were to approach this tough task using these very same evils as weapons, one can imagine how hard, difficult and dangerous the means become. It is like the case of an ill man who says - " I shall spend more time in the company of disease and ill health and finally come up with a way to ward off my disease". It is like a beginner trying to establish Brahmacharya in the company of a woman of questionable repute with the perspective - " I shall spend a few years with her and enlighten myself on the fallacy of sex, lust, passion and disease and thus become pure and godly". This is a path wholly unsuitable to society in general. It is a path in which ninety nine out of a hundred will fail and get thrown back into the depths of misery and suffering. It is a path that requires a Guru who has himself achieved self-realization through such very means and has the mind to assiduously help the disciple on a one on one basis to achieve the final state.

Keeping all these facts in mind, it is best to stay clear of any form of Yogic practice that even fringes close to the left hand path by advocating the partial/full use of sex or related sense temptations even in 'moderation' and to be riveted to the path of complete purity, renunciation and self discipline.

The safest, fastest and most efficient path that would apply to most classes/mentalities and calibers of people is following the path of absolute purity, renunciation and devotion to God with constant efforts at complete renunciation of all forms of sense pleasures (especially the sex pleasure) following which progress becomes natural and concrete.

Trust I have managed to throw light on the doubts that were plaguing your mind.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello Sir,

I am trying to practise celibacy. But after practising for 2 weeks or so, I feel a tremendous increase in my energy level, and the fear of falling down/giving in to porn and masturbation starts. I feel specially vulnerable at night, when I am alone with my computer. Does this mean that I am not sublimating enough? How many hours of intellectual and spiritual work do you recommend per day to maintain extended periods of unbroken celibacy? After what period does this become effortless/easier?

Thank you,
Amit

Answer
Hello Amit,

Hope this finds you keeping well. Coming to the answers,

It is good that you are now able to maintain up to two weeks of celibacy as compared to the few days that you used to earlier. The duration of Brahmacharya that one can effortlessly maintain will increase gradually as the negative karma present in the causal body due to past sinful activity goes on getting gradually washed out by the constant efforts the celibate applies in achieving Brahmacharya. Some people are able to succeed with longer periods of celibacy right from the start because their past sexual karma is minimal. Again some others may require a few months or a year of practice to reach the state of unbroken celibacy. What is important is to strive consistently and tirelessly, immaterial of success or failure towards achieving longer and longer periods and finally life long Brahmacharya. This can only be achieved by purity in thought, word and deed and with adequate physical, intellectual activity and spiritual God-meditation/prayer asking God to help us reach absolute purity and continence. It is the urge and desire within to establish oneself in absolute Brahmacharya that matters the most.

As to what is meant by adequate activity at the physical, mental and spiritual planes is something that differs from person to person. Generally speaking, doing justice to one's dharma with honesty and commitment which would be academic studies for a student or work related brain work carried out with dedication for a working professional will most often suffice as adequate mental work for the Brahmachari. When we put in our heart and soul into the work we do, we automatically succeed in giving the required intellectual workout for our mind and brain. The right attitude while indulging in any action is to offer it as a token of service to God. This way we do not try to do anything for ourselves but post our work as service to God for the opportunity he has provided us with to evolve ourselves. This entire experience called life with its various activities is a part of the divine God-drama designed to make man evolve and finally realize his oneness with the creator.

Develop a positive attitude towards life and remind yourself of the fact that your default nature by itself is purity. We are not the body, mind, intellect, ego or consciousness. We are the soul and the default nature of the soul is purity, divinity, knowledge and infinite bliss. It is our long association with sin, ignorance and delusion that has woven a cocoon around us (soul) that has made us forget our default, inherent and absolute nature of bliss, purity and divinity. When ever sexual thoughts or urges try to invade, let us remind ourselves of the fact that we, the soul have no gender, form, body or any other limitation. That we are bliss infinite by ourselves and beyond limitations of the body, mind and intellect. How does it make sense to associate the concept of finite sex as pleasure for something that is subtler than space, imperishable, infinite and formless? This fact when constantly pondered upon will gradually make us indifferent to sense stimuli and anchor us more firmly in our inherent nature of soul bliss.

If being alone at the computer at nights is tending you to watch porn, install a net filter/web-protection system. Limit use of the computer to constructive activity and immediately get up and shut the system once work is done with. Do not dribble aimlessly on the net. The mind which has become accustomed to porn as a getaway will tempt, trick and lure a person back into sin the moment it is free from constructive work. The internet should be used productively to enhance one's knowledge and as an efficient medium of communication and not as a haven to roam and carelessly hang around.

Those who want to establish real Brhamacharya should develop the habit of retiring to bed early and waking up much before sunrise at 'Brahmi muhurtham'. Rethas (semen) will not stay beyond a limit in the man who is still in bed in a state of Nidraa (sleep) even after the Sun has risen. The Sun represents the source of all vital energy that is responsible for life in our solar system. Correspondingly, Rethas (semen) represents the net sum of all prana (vital energy) within man. So it follows that when man rises early before sunrise and performs Asana/physical exercise and Dhyana (God-meditation) while it's still dark, Rethas (semen) will abound in plenty within him and gets converted to Ojas (divine luster) leading to a powerful intellect, memory, intuition, prosperity and success in all walks of life.

Gradually increase your period of celibacy from 15 days to 20 days, then to 25 days and so on. Once three months of unbroken celibacy without a single slip is achieved, the going gets a little bit easier as regards to the reduction in urge for semen loss. Once a year of unbroken celibacy is achieved the going becomes even more natural. Those who have achieved a year of unbroken Brahmacharya with constant God-meditation have a high chance of leading the celibate mode of life for the years to come provided God wills it.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Dear Sir,

I started practicing Brahmacharya for 1 and half months very strictly and I even felt my mind & body was improving very much than I expected but suddenly I got lustful thought and got into it. I touched myself and lost the fluid 3-4 times in 2 weeks. After that my mind is very irritated and feeling nervous some times. I do not want to go back to the old habits but my ultimate aim is self realisation. Please let me know how I can again go back to my brahmacharya practice? Is there any time duration (days/weeks) before I can start my Spiritual practice again? Please suggest me mantra for Brahmacharya also.

Thank you
Murthy

Answer
Hello Murthy,

Hope this finds you fine. Good to know of your interest in the practice of spiritual continence. Coming to the answers, Breaks in the path of Brahmacharya at the start occur due to one's long association with recreational sexuality that has made the sexual 'vaasana' or tendency very strong and deep rooted. Hence it takes considerable time and effort along with God's grace for one to get established in the uninterrupted practice of Brahmacharya. There is no time interval or period required in between a break and re-start of practice. In fact one's attempts and efforts at continuing celibacy after any slip/break must be immediate and without delay to ensure smooth flow of efforts and success.

Since the approach and methods an aspirant can adopt to achieve unbroken celibacy have already been discussed in previous 'past answers' on this portal, I will kindly request you to peruse and go through all the past answers with an eagle eye and get clear about the subject.

The best and most effective 'mantra' or divine syllable to achieve success is to constantly chant "Om Namo Naarayanaaya" - which means "Salutations to Lord Naarayana, The Supreme being who resides in the heart of all mankind". Constant repetition of the Lord's name with reverence, devotion, love and with a request to free us from the grip of ignorance and establish our self in the domain of true knowledge will bear fruits and give success. You can chant the Lord's name and meditate regularly to help achieve growth in the path of Brahmacharya.

May you achieve success as a Brahmachari and gain knowledge of the self.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
QUESTION: Hello Dhananjay
If a person has observed celibacy for a certain period of time and then slips(either voluntarily or involuntarily), does all the benefits/achievements he had accrued earlier lost and he reaches the level of a "normal" sinner?. I guess you got what I am asking and all its various implications...Does all his past achievements or austerities doesn't have any value or use?

ANSWER: Hello Chandrasekhar,

Hope this finds you fine by the grace of God. Coming to your query, Q: Does a Brahmachari get back to square one further to a slip? What are the actual implications in reality?

A: A slip, be it voluntary or involuntary could be compared to taking two steps forward and one step backward. In other words, it is like effectively going back one step. Why not two steps backward? Because, In both cases an important 'lesson' is learnt by the aspirant.

A voluntary slip causes much more devastation and suffering than an involuntary slip. The pain and depression that follow are greater in magnitude as the involvement was at a deeper level and under the action of one's own will to a greater degree.

A voluntary or an involuntary slip (wet dream) are indications of some form of a deficiency as regards to one's efforts in the path of Brahmacharya. Most often, these slips are by themselves 'tutorials' enacted by destiny (The Lord's will) to make the celibate realize an eternal truth he has been oblivious to. They are pointers which occur in the path of Brahmacharya to make the aspirant open his eyes to reality by waking him up from the delusive sleep under whose influence he has wrongfully assumed certain falsities to be realities. Thus we may infer that each and every fall/failure that occurs in the path of Brahmacharya (and life also) is a divine occurance enforced by God to make us see the truth for what it is and to give up the path of delusion which we have erringly assumed as truth.

We can bring clarity to this concept from the following example. Let us assume that there is a man 'X' pursuing the path of Brahmacharya. This man with much effort has given up sex, masturbation, pornography and other physical forms of sexual activity. He has succeeded to a large extent in keeping sexual thoughts from flowering in his mind by nipping them at the bud when they start showing their faces. His aim is to become a spotless celibate even free from wet dreams. Further to his desire, urge and efforts to reach such a state of purity, he has not had wet dreams from the past few months. He now finds the benefits of Brahmacharya trickling in. He finds more energy at his disposal. He finds his memory and concentration getting sharper. He finds that the confidence, power and ability to get work done and excel in his line of activity have increased quite notably...

Now Mr. X has derived all these benefits due to his persistent efforts and the grace of God. He has to a large degree, also succeeded in giving up sexual fantasy, erotic imagination and looking at the opposite sex with lustful eyes. What happens next? Mr. X becomes a little overconfident. He starts assuming and telling himself that he has conquered passion and has become an 'Urdhvaretha'! He starts believing that he is immune to lust and has reached a supreme state of purity. Now suddenly, a small change occurs in Mr. X's attitude and approach. As with most cases, Mr. X occasionally starts taking the liberty of looking over members of the opposite sex telling himself - " I have now reached a state of purity and looking at the 'beauty' of a lady cannot harm me". He starts occasionally viewing beautiful women when he is out in public places. Next he tells himself that just a 'few seconds' of willful fantasy and 'enjoyment' at the sight of attractive women will do him no harm as "He has reached the state of high purity" and will not get upset in his state of Brahmacharya. This train of thought leads him to 'enjoy' the sight of attractive women every now and then though he continues to abstain from physical sex, masturbation and pornography.

What happens next? A few days/weeks later Mr. X will experience an erotic dream in his sleep that culminates in a massive 'wet dream'. It drains him of his vital energy and leaves him depressed, drained and direction-less. He is suddenly left high and dry and stunned on as to why such a loss of semen occurred in spite of his strict abhorrence from sexual activity. Suddenly he finds that all the self-confidence, energy and ability he had developed over the past few months has gone down the drain.

The involuntary fall in form of the wet dream becomes a humbling experience for Mr.X. He suddenly wakes up to the gross reality that he is nowhere even 'close' to the 'absolute' state of purity he had imagined himself to be. He realizes that he was quite foolish in even daring to assume his self-proclaimed state of divinity. The pain and depression he went through further to the wet dream scare him of further downfall and he quickly mends his ways by giving up all forms of 'women watching' that lead to mental and amorous fantasy. He becomes high on humility realizing that his own power and strength will leave him in a trice if his efforts at celibacy become lax and casual. He has learnt one important lesson in the path of Brahmacharya!

What do we learn from the above example? We learn that the 'slip' which Mr. X experienced was in reality a masterful stroke of the Lord Almighty intended to make 'X' realize the falsity of his superiority complex and misplaced over confidence. Thus the 'slip' was in fact a blessing in disguise that actually made Mr. X mend his ways and get closer to reality. The pain he experienced further to the slip has left a strong mark in his mind which will prevent him from reverting to his earlier mode of thinking. The 'slip' has become a learning experience that will help him take one irreversible step forward in the path of progress.

The Great Lord ensures that as many such 'slips' as are required to 'correct' the aspirant's 'wrongs' occur in the path of the celibate when his quest for absolute Brahmacharya starts. The aim and intention behind these slips is not to harm/hurt or cause failure to the aspirant but to ensure that he gets closer and closer to perfection by the realization of his mistakes. These slips are the 'invisible' hands through which God corrects our shortcomings and makes us get established in higher and higher states of purity. Till each and every train of thought and action that is unreal and erroneous exists within us, we may continue to experience failure and downfall. The degree and intensity of these 'falls' will depend on the 'extent' of deviation from the correct path.

What a great and genius teacher the Lord is! In spite of being invisible to the naked eye and In spite of being Incomprehensible he is mighty and efficient enough to cleanse us of our mistakes and help us learn the truth in a manner in which we shall never again repeat the crime! The 'right' path one must take in life is professed by books of divinity such as the 'Bhagavad-Gita', 'The Bible' or the 'Quraan'. All these books profess the one and same thing finally. Their means may be different, but the ends are the same. They are all like the million 'Radii' that can be drawn within a circle. Each radii comes from a different direction and from a different point on the circumference; But all the radii have nowhere else to go but meet at the center of the circle. Just as there is one and only one center that a circle has, there is one and only one single, all powerful entity that rules the world called 'God-Almighty'. Everything is encompassed within the Supreme Lord and nothing and nobody can function independent of him. Whether someone believes in this absolute truth or doesn't makes no difference. That which the Lord has decided will happen whether we want it or don't. Smart and sensible people learn this divine way of God's functioning quite early and walk on the 'right' path. The less sensible ones immersed in their own 'ignorance, arrogance and untruth' prefer to take the hard way of learning these eternal truths of life through pain and suffering. Why not take the easier path of 'virtue, purity and Godliness' to a happy life and after-life instead of the longer, tougher and painful path of 'sense pleasures' to learn these eternal truths from suffering and finally revert to the same divine path after learning things the hard way?

So the answer to the query would be that the 'slips' encountered by an aspirant are the 'learning instances' that occur in his path... Does all his past progress and austerities/efforts have no value? Even if they don't have value in the context of unbroken celibacy which, Yes he has to start all over again, they do have value in terms of teaching him priceless lessons regarding the falsities of sense pleasures and the absolute divinity, permanence and truth of the Supreme concept called the 'Almighty Lord'

God bless and have a nice day :-)

QUESTION: Dhanajay

Thanks for the detailed reply.. It clarifies the main point,but still I have 2 more questions which will cover a different area.
1)A break/slip would push back one into the delusion in terms of God realization and purity, and a person will be feeling the depression.... but in terms of the lesser things, like, some thing he must have achieved during his celibate state, namely, some kind of physical/mental/intellectual skills or achievements...what happens to them? Do they also go waste and he becomes a dummy in those areas also and has to start all over again ?

2)What happens if he wants to break his celibacy for an absolutely "dharmic" duty, ie, for some thing like having children with his wife.

Answer
Hello there, summarizing you queries,

Q1; What happens to the physical/mental/intellectual skills acquired further to a slip?
A: The answer previously given applies to all repercussions in totality. It is two steps forward and one step backward. There is a temporary setback and decrease in the physical, mental and intellectual level of the aspirant. While these setbacks are not serious enough to push him back to square one, they still set him back of his previous mark to the applicable extent. However the lessons learnt and pain experienced take the aspirant that much closer to reality. But he also has to repeat that many days/months or years of Brahmacharya to revert to his earlier 'level' and 'feel'. It is like an athlete sprinter who has lost the race further to wrong food and wrong practice techniques. He has now learnt where he made mistakes. But mere learning of his mistakes doesn't help him win a medal. He still has to apply his newfound knowledge and participate in the race once again the coming year and win the medal.

Q2: Is the celibate allowed to break his vow of celibacy for producing offspring?
A: The purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. When carried out with the sole objective of producing offspring with the legally wedded wife, the sexual act becomes a deed of divinity and holiness. Under such circumstances, a celibate is allowed to visit the wife and indulge in the act 'Once' per wanted child (at the time of her monthly fertile period). Again, he indulges in the act to produce a wanted child and not to enjoy sensual pleasure. Also, the energy he loses further to expenditure of semen for fathering a child will be minimal considering he has already put in many years of practice in the domain of virtue. Such an expenditure of semen doesn't wreck him physically/mentally and emotionally like a voluntary slip would.

In spite of the act carried out under such circumstances being holy and justifiable, loss of semen is loss of semen in terms of unbroken celibacy. It is like money kept in a bank account. Even if one were to spend the money on a constructive and valid purpose, there will still be a corresponding reduction in the total sum of money in the account. The expenditure being valid and constructive doesn't mean there won't be a reduction in the final bank balance. It only means that money has been used efficiently and rightly.

For this reason, celibates wishing to practice unbroken celibacy start such practice after they are done with fathering children so they can concentrate fully on their spiritual life and enrich it with absolute and unbroken celibacy. Till such a time, they are allowed the 'break' if it is with the legally wedded wife and if it is carried out 'once' per wanted child till conception occurs. The sperm concentration and virility of a Brahmachari who has put in long durations of Brahmacharya is generally potent enough to ensure conception with a single act of copulation if God wills for the couple to have a child and if carried out during the wife's monthly fertile period. This doesn't in anyway mean that a man can lead a licentious life till fathering a child. Celibacy is a mode of life that is to be carried out at all times and places, immaterial of one's marital status if one wishes for the superlative results that Brahmacharya bestows. It only means that one can devote oneself wholly and completely to 'unbroken' Brahmacharya as soon as he is done with fathering a child or two.

Question
Hello there :)

I just wanted to ask(I really need your help on this); say I've been practicing Celibacy for 1 to 2 years now; If I wanted to have my own kids; how would I do that without losing semen??? & breaking Celibacy & losing Energy, Vitality,a Keen Mind etc is the last thing I would want to do!
Please help!

Thanks

Answer
Hello John,

Trust you are doing fine. Coming to your query,

Q: What should be a Brahmachari's approach as regards to the act of copulation for fathering children?
A: As stated in earlier posts, the purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. The sexual act indulged in with one's legally wedded wife takes a divine and holy dimension if carried out with the sole purpose of begetting a child. God has created the act of sex for the very purpose of producing offspring and the use of this act for this divine and rightful purpose within the institution of matrimony does not amount to unrighteousness. Ensuring that a family, society and community of people continue to have their presence on earth and pass on their knowledge to future generations can be achieved by no other means but by producing healthy, talented, morally and emotionally sound offspring and we all know that the sexual act is the rightful means to this objective. Hence limiting sexual activity to procreation does not cause any debility or decay in the Brahmachari.

Keeping this eternal truth in mind, a Brahmachari is allowed to indulge in the sexual act with his legally wedded wife, 'Once' per wanted child till conception occurs. Further to an honest and sincere life of Brahmacharya, the sperm concentration and virility of the Brahmachari is generally potent enough to ensure that the wife conceives with a single act of copulation if carried out during her monthly fertile period provided God wills for the couple to beget a child. Unlike the common, semen wasting man who may require days and months of efforts to make his wife conceive, the Brahmachari has a very high chance of ensuring successful conception with a single act of intercourse. The sperm motility and density in his semen are in abundance and super-charged with ample 'Prana'(life energy) further to his long conservation and transmutation of the seminal fluid. This enables him to very easily 'create' another life under God's will.

A non-celibate man leading a life of wastage expends many 'liters' of semen by way of 'thousands' of 'wasteful' ejaculations he indulges in further to a life of recreational sex and masturbation in his lifetime. The Brahmachari on the other hand conserves all this energy and spends only a 'spoon' or two of semen per wanted child! Anyone can compare the two cases and know by commonsense the immense benefits and merits the celibate accrues as compared to the non-celibate. If expenditure of the vital seed is limited only to the act of fathering an offspring or two, the Brahmachari practically loses no energy, vitality or other benefits derived from Brahmacharya in the sense of totality. It is like taking out a glass of water from a lake...Does the lake get depleted and become shallow further to removal of a glass of water? NO.

Though outside the purview of this question, For the benefit of celibates who plan to marry or married celibates who wish to beget progeny, I will now also put forward the conditions and rules that a Brahmachari and his wife can follow if he wishes for a happy and virtuous married life, offspring, and yet derive the full benefits of Brahmacharya by being undeviated from the concept of true Brahmacharya:

1. The final purpose of marriage is evolution and companionship. Further to taking the vows of marriage with the blessings of elders, well wishers and society, the man and wife should stay by each other through the joys and sorrows, the ups and downs of life based on the foundations of true love, loyalty, fidelity, trust, understanding, companionship and genuine care and concern for each other as 'souls'- The manifestations of God and not as 'bodies' made of flesh and bone. This approach and perspective towards one's spouse ensures that the couple are not overpowered by lust, passion and delusion as regards to each other and always 'view' each other as 'pure souls' brought together by divine will to help each other evolve and attain self-realization. Such an approach automatically ensures that Brahmacharya in married life becomes 'effortless and natural' and that the love, bonding and genuine feelings of care and concern become very strong and concrete at the innate level. Such couples receive divine blessings and do not desert or cheat the other for impermanent sense pleasures such money, name, position or fame. Their relationship develops on the rock solid foundation called 'true love' which is beyond the body, looks, social & financial status, which are all external and impermanent factors of life. True love has nothing to do with these external factors. True love is that permanent and indissoluble feeling that springs from recognition and gratitude towards the other person as a 'manifestation of god' and as a 'soul' who has come to enrich and ease our life. With such a perspective, the man and woman should lead a life of virtuous Brahmacharya with adequate God meditation/prayer and governed by the tenets of kindness, truthfulness, non-violence and non-possessiveness for other's wealth and property. Constant efforts and perseverance in this direction will being enormous happiness and contentment in the marriage and make the joint life of celibacy the gateway to sheer bliss.

2. At the earliest point of time after marriage, the couple should make the effort to beget a child. It is to be remembered that the purpose of marriage is progeny, companionship and evolution in that order. Delay in begetting a child can lead to the couple getting caught with lust, passion and finally discontentment and suffering. Hence begetting a child should be the first priority after marriage.

3. The man and woman should ascertain the monthly 'fertile period' of the wife (the time when she is most likely to conceive) and engage in the reproductive act. Before commencement of the act, the man and woman should meditate whole heartedly for a few minutes on God with complete devotion and surrender and request - " O Lord, The great creator, Me and my beloved wife will henceforth engage in the divine act of reproduction for begetting progeny. Kindly bless us with a virtuous and divine 'soul' in the form of a child who is endowed with spirituality, health, intelligence and wisdom. Salutations to thee".

4. On successful completion of the act, the man should leave home so he and his wife stay away from each other for a period of two days. Further to the break in Brahmacharya, the emotional states of the man and wife would be volatile, vulnerable and sexually unstable due to expenditure of their vital fluids and indulgence in the act which consumes much 'Prana' or life force. In order to ensure that no more unwanted sexual interactions occur, the man is advised to leave the place for two days to let his own and his wife's emotional states stabilize and come back to normal.

5. Upon completion of the two days of separation, the man and lady revert to their combined life of celibacy and carry on as before.

Further to such an honest, virtuous and divine life of combined celibacy where the man and woman conserve and transmute their vital essences and cohabit with each other only for wanted offspring, It is said that a 'great' soul comes down their family way as a child. Children born out of such a holy union between a man and wife in a combined life of celibacy will most often be exceptionally talented, healthy, virtuous and noble with an abundance of lofty qualities.

The benefits of God-bliss, health, prosperity, true love, genuine understanding, concern, care and absolute loyalty that a couple derive further to a combined mode of celibacy in marriage with constant God-meditation and prayer are the results which I have personally experienced in the joint mode of a combined life of celibacy that I am leading with my wife. This is based on my personal experience and is beyond doubt.

To sum up, a virtuous life of Brahmacharya before marriage and continuance of such a life after marriage with a 'pause' while trying for offspring does not in any way weaken, debilitate or reverse the benefits one has gained from celibacy. Further to getting done with fathering a child, the aspirant and his wife can continue with their life of Brahmacharya with complete focus and devotion and aim for a 'lifetime of Brahmacharya' that leads to realization of one's own self and completes the purpose of the human existence.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello there :)

I was reading earlier in your posts you said cold water has immense ‘Pranic energy’ or natural cosmic energy filled by Mother Nature. When you heat water this gets destroyed.

My question is does this mean the water would have to be all the way on cold? to where I'm freezing? but don't get me wrong I just tried that today . I started off with a warm to hot shower for about 7 minutes and then changed it to completely cold and felt an exhilarating energy boost and an energy spark up my spine! & only had it on cold for a few seconds then quickly turned it off!. & I don't regret it either . I never felt better coming out of the shower in great mood like that after 5 seconds of a cold shower!.
I don't know what It is but am I suppose to start with a cold shower and end with cold or will a spark do?

p.s
Another thing I wanted to ask about that; should I wait until it's been at least a full month Unbroken Brahmacharya to take pure cold showers because you mentioned that ones body becomes more heated during the practice of Brahmacharya; & I kinda thought cold water would be nothing to my body by then!.

Thanks!

Answer
Hello Pikkon,

Good to know of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Coming to the queries, Q1: What is the significance of a cold water bath to the Brahmachari?

A: As mentioned in earlier posts, water in its default form available in nature has abundant 'Prana' or life energy derived from the universal energy in the cosmos. Heating water destroys this energy. The amount of energy lost from water depends on the temperature to which it is heated. The higher the temperature of water, the greater is the loss of Prana. The use of this energy for one's benefit is a technique that the Brahmachari can employ to increase the level of 'Prana' (life force) within his body and thereby aid Brahmacharya. Practice of Brahmacharya by way of transmutation of semen into higher forms of energy makes the level of Prana within one's body gradually increase. However, it is to be noted that sublimation and transmutation of the vital essence via meditation is also accompanied by an increase in body heat.

The following are the primal benefits that can be derived through cold water baths (unheated water):
1. Cools the body by annulling the heat generated from within due to continuous sublimation further to long hours of meditation.

2. Neutralizes the 'heat' produced by sexual undercurrents. Excess sexual energy that is left over even after transmutation, especially when one is a beginner and is still learning the process of sublimation can be negated and stilled to a large extent by a cold water shower or bath.

3. Infuses the body with 'fresh' prana (life energy) from the cosmos. The pranic energy available in the cosmos is extremely potent and powerful. It has the power of energizing and mobilizing a person from tiredness and exhaustion.

4. Soothes the nervous system and helps one get out of slumber, sleep, stupor and related states of inertia which if left unattended can trigger lust and passion.

Keeping these reasons in mind, cold water baths are of high value to the celibate. A hip bath (In a tub of cold water up to the waist) is very useful in cooling the reproductive organs and warding off sexual arousal when troubled by lust.

Q2: What should be the temperature of 'cold' bath water?
A: It is recommended to avoid 'extremely cold' or freezing water and limit one's exposure to moderately cold water or water at room temperature. The act of bathing in cold water must be an enjoyable, refreshing and energizing experience and not a 'shocking and chilling experience! Extremely cold or freezing water can have a negative effect on the nerves and skin and cause undesirable effects. Moderation is the key here and extremes are to be avoided. An effective yardstick as regards temperature would be to use water that is hovering around the room temperature or a few degrees lower and not more.

Cold showers can be taken right from the start of Brahmacharya. It takes a few days to get used to cold water as a bathing medium, following which the activity becomes enjoyable and refreshing. It is inadvisable to bathe in cold water when one has a fever or some other illness.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Why most people laugh at me when i ask or discuss them about celibacy?

Answer
Hello Neeraj,

Lack of knowledge and ignorance regarding the topic of Brahmacharya makes people behave in a varied manner. Besides, most people in life don't need a reason but only an excuse to laugh, cry or scream!

A celibate would do well in avoiding discussions regarding this topic with every Tom, Dick and Harry, for this is a divine science that is to be taken seriously and not 'over a cigarette and coffee' kind of a topic.

Question
Hello There :)

I have a quick question on Celibacy & itdidea's benefits towards certain disease's or viruses .

Is a brahmachari immune to diseases/viruses such as HIV/AIDS?
Is a brahmachari immune to second hand smoke?

Answer
Hello Reace,

Hope you are keeping fine. Coming to the answers,

Transmutation of the vital seed into health, strength and 'Ojas' results in an increase in the immunity and resistance one has to diseases. People who lead an honest life of celibacy beyond a few months have a much lesser chance of falling ill and succumbing to most ailments. Besides, the body gets rejuvenated and revitalized leading to robust health and well being.

Diseases invade the body on account of 'toxins' present within the physical body, the astral body or due to past karma embedded in the causal body. Ideally speaking, the human body by default is completely immune to all forms of disease. It is the presence of these toxins that makes the body conducive for the growth of 'germs' when they invade.

After a few months of unbroken celibacy, continued periods of Brahmacharya ensure that these 'toxins' present in the physical body slowly start to surface and get cleared out of the system. The time point when these toxins 'surface' generally results in an illness of some form related to the particular toxin that is being vacated and the end of the illness generally means that the particular toxin is washed out of the system for ever provided the Brahmachari does not repeat the activity (food, thought or action) that embedded the toxin into the system in the first place. This process goes on incessantly for the first few years of celibacy when layers after layers of impurities within the body, mind and psyche are thrown out by continuous and unbroken celibacy. Further to the removal of all these toxins at the physical, mental and causal levels, the Yogi develops a body called as 'Yogagnimayam shariram' or a body that has been purified by the fire of yoga. Such a body is then akin to a 'perfect body' that is virtually free from the action of disease, age and time. The only susceptibility of the body is towards 'Prarabdha karma' or those past karma's that have to be worked out in the current life.

It can be safely assumed that one who has attained such a body purified by the fire of Yoga after many years of unbroken Brahmacharya has enough positive karma and immunity to either fight or avoid the incidence of disease. The immense amount of positive karma accrued from a life of virtue and Brahmacharya itself ensures that the celibate is protected from disease at not only the physical level but also at the astral and causal levels. This positive karma and an aura of divinity that surround him protect him from the gamut of diseases and degeneration to totality with one exception. And that exception is his 'Prarabdha karma' or that past karma which has to be worked out in this life without exception. If his 'Prarabdha karma' has within it elements that portray the advent of a disease accrued do to some past wrong action, the Yogi will have to suffer that particular disease in order to cleanse himself of his past sin. The laws of nature are fully impartial and such that even a man of divinity and virtue has to suffer for his past negative actions without fail.

Again one should remember that the mere presence of strength, immunity and resistance against diseases does not mean that the Brahmachari should become indifferent to an atmosphere which may result in passive smoking (smoke exhaled by a smoker) or impinge the risk of a disease such as AIDS. Prevention is always better than cure and avoiding the very environment that may lead to a disease should be the first priority of the Brahmachari. As mentioned earlier, the Brahmachari should safeguard himself from exposure to conditions that can lead to the induction of 'new toxins' into the body such as cigarette smoke or infected blood from an AIDS patient. The Brahmachari who is established into unbroken Brahmacharya from many years is like a warrior who is capable of defending himself from attack through any form of assault. However this does not mean that the warrior goes in 'search' of fights without necessity and reason. It only means that like the warrior, the Brahmachari will be in a position of fend himself against the onslaught of most diseases and come out hale, healthy and untouched; A state which is very hard for the normal non-celibate man to achieve.

God bless and have a nice day

Question
How should one choose a spouse for marriage such that she supports celibacy? What should be the minimum age difference between man and woman? Is it possible for women to be more active sexually than the man, if the man has been celibate? How is this difference reconciled? In the present world scenario it is very hard to find such virtuous women with high character who support such high standards like celibacy. Where should one start the search? Should one marry a working woman or not?

Answer
Hello Amit,

Trust you are doing fine, Coming to the answers,

If a person's efforts, commitment and devotion to the concept of Brahmacharya are genuine and persistent with constant God-meditation and prayer asking for removal of all obstacles in this path, God invariably blesses such a person with a husband/wife who will be supportive and encouraging to Brahmacharya.

It is the intensity and longing one has for Brahmacharya that matters. One's attitude should be

"There is nothing more important and more attractive to me in this existence than the realization of God through the divine act of Brahmacharya. I do not want association with anything or anyone who comes in the way of this mode of life". One who has such commitment, love and devotion to Brahmacharya will without doubt eventually succeed in becoming an Urdhvaretha. Getting an understanding husband/wife is a very trivial and small happening that will be taken care of within the twinkling of God's eyes.

Progress in the path of Brahmacharya is never 'instantaneous'. Numerous obstacles, temptations, impediments and problems will be laid in the path of the Brahmachari by God himself to 'test' how faithful and committed the person is. These are like the exams a student has to pass to be awarded with a degree. Will a student be given a graduation certificate just because he claims he has gained knowledge and mastered the subject? No. He has to prove his knowledge by faring well in the various exams year after year, after which he is finally awarded with a degree by the university for his accomplishments. The success, enormous power, bliss and God-realization that come further to Brahmacharya are very similar. They will come and undoubtedly reside in the man who has honestly, sincerely and lovingly committed himself to God through Brahmacharya by years of unbroken celibacy come what may and not in a few days or months. But they will come; they will surely come. Our's is to strive and plod honestly and not worry about 'when' and 'how'. These are things which will be decided and forwarded by God in his own accord.

There is a saying- "The right approach for a man is to give ninety percent of his energies towards love and prayer to God and the remaining ten percent as love for his wife. Then the wife will forever adore and be after the man trying to win the remaining ninety percent"!

The male and female energies are created by God for the continuation of 'Samsaara' or manifestation of the outer world that we see comprised of people, their thoughts, actions and their creations. By default, the female energy by itself lacks definition. In other words it lacks form, structure and boundary. It is indefinite, deep, mysterious and unbound like the dark night. The male energy on the other hand signifies definition. In other words it depicts form, structure and a well defined boundary. It is definite, shallow, clear and bounded in sense of tangible perception. These two energies are the two forms of the one single God through which he operates. These two energies represent the dualities of nature. Till one reaches a state of union with God beyond the domain of the dualities, each energy complements the other. Till then, each energy is in a state of imbalance without the other and each needs the other to complete itself. For this reason, the concept of marriage and a family is Holy, sensible and purposeful.

The female energy characteristics of lack of definition and unbound depth make a woman feel incomplete and empty by herself. She is forever in search of that something which will give her a sense of definition, direction and completion. In the same way, there is a sense of incompleteness in a man until he finds a 'worthy' woman who can be the object and means of expression of his qualities of strength, bravery, firmness, self-confidence and a sense of purpose and direction. Whom he can protect, provide and take care. From whom he can enrich his life with the feminine qualities of kindness, consideration, understanding, affection and true love. These two equations are basic and form the substratum of the need for matrimony and family. They are the pillars on which a healthy and happy family unit is formed. No matter how modernized, sophisticated and advanced the world gets, these basics can never change. This is the law of creation which is permanent and eternal.

The qualities which the woman fundamentally lacks are present in abundance in the 'real man'. So when a woman comes across such a man who stands for and represents 'definition' (which she lacks) through his qualities of bravery, strength, firmness, sureness, confidence and a sense of direction, which form the 'male substratum', she finds an opportunity to end her sense of 'incompletion', 'indefinableness' and 'emptiness' by associating with the 'very opposite' of these lacunae within her that he represents. Once a woman finds such a man, she revels at the sense of completion and definition that she suddenly experiences and her life gets a 'direction' and sense of purpose at the innate level. A woman who has found such a man who has thus 'completed' her incomplete nature will willingly and lovingly follow, assist, understand and stand by the man who has driven away her deficits and has provided her with what she needed the most 'A sense of security, direction and purpose'.

When a man is governed by these qualities and is hence firm, sure, brave and confident of what he wants in life with the zeal and tenacity to pursue it, his woman feels an admiration for these qualities that he possesses and will most naturally be supportive and understanding in whatever path he chooses and offer him her valuable qualities of love, affection, kindness, concern and steadfast loyalty.

The problems of lack of love, non-admiration, unkindness and an insupportable nature from a woman towards her man most often arise due to lack of the 'manly' qualities in the man and when man deviates from the 'true' nature which he should be anchored to. Most often, men and not women are to be blamed for the resulting scenario. What wrong does the man do? Instead of being steadfast in his nature and true to the 'male qualities' mentioned earlier with a sure sense of direction, man runs after the woman begging for her 'approval', idolizing her as a precious 'object' of pleasure and seeking to 'please' her with money, gifts and material possessions as a substitute to the priceless 'real man' qualities mentioned. This is like making a statement -" Since I lack the priceless qualities of bravery, sureness, self-confidence and a sense of direction, I am substituting them with these expensive gifts, dinners, constant words in praise of your beauty and a promise that I shall ever be your slave and do whatever you want me to do in return for your company, lots of sex and your undivided attention and loyalty to me'...

What will be the reaction? The woman who came to the man seeking him as her partner with a hope that he will be the embodiment of priceless 'true male qualities' finds that he is worse than she herself in this domain and lacks the grit, will, determination and confidence a man must have in himself and is instead a timid, effeminate and direction-less weakling who is prepared to give up his self esteem and self respect for the pleasures of her body, company and attention. This realization in the woman make her look down at the man and results in an attitude of scorn, disgust and loathing towards the man. Once a woman reaches this state as regards her partner if still not married, she will avoid and eventually leave him. If it is with her husband after marriage, she will constantly curse her fate for having given her such a 'spineless' man and shows this discontentment outwardly through bad mouthing, condemning and rebuking the man at every possible excuse. She will fail to be supportive in his endeavors and does not find him worthy enough of her affection and attention.

There are women 'Gold diggers' that may stay by such a man if he were rich and powerful for the sake of financial security or gains; but such a man can never win the love, respect, admiration and unconditional devotion of a woman that comes further to manly qualities of substance.

If a man wants his wife to be loving, considerate, affectionate and supportive to his aims and objectives, he first needs to develop and be wedded to qualities that befit his maleness. He first needs to be self-reliant with himself and not a slave of sex and passion. He needs to be the embodiment of at least a few if not all the aforesaid qualities mentioned to make the woman look up to him with respect, admiration and awe. This will naturally induce the woman to respond to the man with loyalty, attention and devotion. She will then naturally strive to enrich his life with her feminine qualities of kindness, affection, unconditional love/support and will try try her best to please him. The man also can then correspondingly respond with consideration, understanding and kindness from his own side towards her and this results in a marriage which is stable, happy and purposeful to both the parties concerned. Whether the wife is a working woman or not becomes a trivial issue of not much concern. But a man who craves after the female physical form and has a mind constantly fixed in lusting after female sexuality can never achieve this. His wife will always feel the 'pressure' to look 'sexual' as she is in a constant state of competition with other women trying to win his attention. In the company of a man who is virtuous, God-loving, firm and sure about his ideals and not devoted or besotted to sex as a form of pleasure, the approach to sexuality that a woman has eventually alters. She adjusts her perspective accordingly and falls in line with the man's way of thinking and approach. Nature has made woman very adaptable and has given her the strength to change herself to a large degree. What is required is a man who is worthy in the lady's eyes and who can inspire and dynamize a woman to change accordingly.

As regards how a Brahmachari can find such a such a woman, he can find such a woman through his rock steady conviction and commitment to God through Brahmacharya itself. When the right time comes, he will come across a 'soul' that is destined to be his wife and support him in his quest. He can then proceed with fathering a child or two and the couple can work jointly towards leading a life of bliss filled Brahmacharya in the constant thought of God. One and only one thing is required of the celibate -"That he be wholly and honestly devoted to God through Brahmacharya come what may", following which all the right things and right people will happen when the time is ripe!

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Dear dhananjay,
i am very impressed by your answers of various questions given here by you.Now i have also decided to practice celibacy wholeheartedly.I want to ask,is celibacy important in improving only self?How can change life of others by becoming celibate?I heard some yogis who have power to cure incurable diseases of mankind by just touching them.Can these siddhis be attained by becoming true celibate?
Thank you.

Answer
Hello Neeraj,

Good to know of your interest regarding Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers, Siddhis and superhuman miraculous powers cling to the pious Brahmachari after many years of unbroken celibacy when he starts getting close to becoming a complete Urdhvaretha or a non-semen producing Yogi. To the Brahmachari, these are really not miracles but only a manifestation of the already existing powers of the soul further to the layers of 'Maya' around it getting unwound.

The Urdhvaretha who has reached such a state makes use of these powers to do good to mankind and alleviate their suffering under divine orders from above and never for selfish or commercial purposes.

A plant sapling cannot protect a gathering of people from the elements. In order to shelter people and offer shade, it has to survive the various attacks from livestock trying to eat it and finally succeed in becoming a large and well grown tree after many years of growth. Only after it has reached such a state can it shelter people from the sun and rain. In the same way a Brahmachari needs to persist in many years of unbroken Brahmacharya emerging victorious against the attacks of lust and temptation with constant prayer and God-meditation to reach a state where he attains superhuman powers that can be used rightly.

Before one tries to 'change' the lives of others, one should have succeeded in changing one's own life! So charity begins at home. We first need to correct our own shortcomings before we can reach a stage where we can effectively correct other's shortcomings.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I am now on my 10th day of practicing Brahmacharya;
& I was wondering because it's been only 10 days; is the conserved energy inside me sleeping but growing until its reached a month or longer?
or can I awaken some of the energy conserved by 10 days of Brahmacharya by doing something active or how does that work?
but I do feel less tired & more alive since I started this practice .

Answer
Hello Mike,

Keep the efforts at celibacy going. Coming to the answers,

It takes a few months to a year of unbroken Brahmacharya for semen to start getting re-absorbed. The first few months do not consist of re-absorption but only non-production of semen further to the body being relieved of its duty of forming semen. Since the aspirant shuns a life of wastage, the body does not have to constantly produce semen as it used to earlier before the onset of celibacy. The relief experienced by the body from being rested of the job of producing semen results in higher energy, strength and vitality. The semen conserved during this initial period goes towards the restoration and revitalization of all the organs in the body and results in improved immunity, heath and vigor.

It is very important to practice Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed keeping the mind free of impure thoughts and effect the process of sublimation through regular physical, intellectual activity and God-meditation if Brahmacharya is to be continued in totality.

This is the difference between the ordinary unmarried celibate and a Brahmachari. While the unmarried man may masturbate or loose his seed through constant wet dreams, the Brahmachari sublimates and transmutes his vital essence into something more powerful and worthy.

Brahmacharya is not suppression or repression of sexual energy but transmutation. A man who merely suppresses and contains the sex desire within causes serious imbalance and danger to his body, mind and psyche and may soon be afflicted with dangerous diseases. The Brahmachari on the other hand keeps his mind pure, bypasses the concept of sexuality and gradually gets free of the 'apparent' and 'false' need called as the 'sex need' conditioned into the mind through years and past lives of recreational sexuality.

Keep your mind occupied with constructive activity, shun impure thoughts, indulge regularly in a sport/physical exercise and set aside some time of the day to indulge in God-meditation.

This will make Brahmacharya effective and you will reap benefits with time.

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I just wanted to ask what are some great sleeping positions for a Brahmachari?

Answer
Hello Jorge,

Good to receive your query. Coming to the answers,

Q: What is the correct way one should sleep?
A: The recommended position while going to sleep is to sleep on the left side of the body, on the left hand with the left nostril pressing against the pillow so as to keep the right nostril open.

The air currents passing through the left nostril control the right hemisphere of the brain and those passing through the right nostril control the left hemisphere of the brain. Each of these hemispheres in the brain control opposite and different kinds of qualities in a person. The left brain represents the male qualities of logic/reasoning and controls the fire element in the body. The right brain represents the female qualities of analogy/intuition and represents the water element in the body.

By closing the left nostril and breathing through the right nostril while retiring into bed, the left brain representing the fire element gets activated and this aids efficient digestion of food consumed during the day leading to sound sleep and relaxation.

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I really wondered to see this site and thanks for giving such valuable information about celibacy.

I am 32 years old now. if i start now celibacy can i get the benefits the way you explained? Please comment more on how to retain this Celibacy from Lust.

Answer
Hello there,

Hope this finds you keeping well. Coming to the answers,

It is never too late to start with the practice of celibacy. However, the best results can be attained further to starting a life of Brahmacharya by the age of 32-34 years at the latest. After this age, the strength and potency of man's vital energy starts gradually deteriorating and going south. One can get on the path of attaining the complete powers and God-realization which follow through life long Brahmacharya through the start of unbroken celibacy during the early 30's. The sooner one starts such Brahmacharya, the better. People embarking upon unbroken celibacy from their teens/20's are poised to enjoy the benefits of Brahmacharya faster and earlier further to vitality being at its zenith at this early stage. So it follows that Brahmacharya is a beautiful mode of life that is to be followed right from the onset of puberty and forever with the sexual fluid being expended for begetting offspring only. Further to such a life with constant God-meditation and prayer, life becomes one special and beautiful journey filled with bliss, contentment, health and joy.

So we don't repeat ourselves and since the methods that can be used for the process of sublimation and transmutation of sexual essence have already been dealt with, I will kindly request you to go through all the 'past answers' with a discerning eye to get a clear understanding.

Question
Namaste,Thank you very much for all your answers you have given people. I have been reading them and have learned so much.

My first question is does losing your semen from masturbation lose your talent in a particular area. I have been a pretty serious musician for 10 years. And I have been masturbating for probably 12 years now. I was just wondering if I have lost a bunch of talent from that and would i be able to get it back from being celibate. I have been celeibate for about 9 days now and have noticed a difference in my music ability. I hope i haven't lost a bunch of talent.

Also another question I have is a health issue i have. I have a kidney condition which has been caused by auto immune. I discovered i had it when i was 14 years old and now i am 24 years old. Do you think masturbation caused that? and do you think that celibacy will cure it?
thankyou very much.

Answer
Hello Matthew,

Good to see your have started the practice of Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

'Rethas' or semen is the penultimate representation of one's life energy at the gross level. It is the physical representation of the net sum of all life energy or 'Prana' within. All achievements, accomplishments and success that man attains are fueled by his 'Prana' or life energy at the gross level. So it follows that wastage of semen results in loss of Prana and loss of Prana results in one losing a very part of his 'self' or Atman. It is for this reason that man feels lifeless and drained further to loss of semen.

Masturbation is an unnatural act of perversion that causes much degeneration and decay further to the loss of semen through artificial means. While the act of sex for recreation is by itself a deviation from healthy and spiritual living - that takes one to the greatest level of accomplishment in both the materialistic and spiritual domains, by masturbation, man is taking another step forward in the wrong concept of recreational sexuality and putting himself in peril. It is an activity that is to be shunned at all costs and refraining from masturbation will immediately make a man more healthy, successful and energetic by leaps and bounds.

As the saying goes - "Better late than never". Our past is gone and beyond our control. It is the present and future over which we have some say. Worry not about mistakes made in the past and instead focus your energies into a life of honest and sincere Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed and in a few years, you will see the remarkable benefits and improvements a life of true Brahmacharya bestows. It is Brahmacharya and not any other mode of life which can bring out the hidden powers and talents within man, be it in the material or spiritual planes. Practicing honest Brahmacharya with efficient transmutation will beyond doubt help you perform better as a musician of a different caliber altogether.

Coming to the auto immune kidney condition, since you say it started at the age of fourteen, there is little chance of masturbation having been the cause. While masturbation by itself is not frequently associated with renal irregularities, one needs to remember that every deviation from robust health and well being occurs further to the presence of past negative karma accrued from a wrong mode of thought/action carried out by the person that in turn leads to the induction of physical or astral impurities/toxins within the body. Man has to suffer for each and every act of wrong doing no matter how small. Brahmacharya is the best mode of life that man can offer himself if he wants to redeem himself of any kind of an irregularity or deviation from normalcy at the physical, mental, emotional and psychic levels. Depending on the strength of past karma that caused the condition, there is a very high probability that Brahmacharya can slowly but surely undo the condition under the grace of God. Practice an honest and sincere life of Brahmacharya with regular physical activity, constructive work and God-meditation asking God to redeem you of all troubles. A few years of honest efforts will without doubt yield positive results and improve your life on all fronts.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Dhanajay,
Applying one's will power to observe celibacy means its not something which comes by itself unconsciously or without effort... So what should be the right reason for anyone to convince himself (in the core of his heart) to observe celibacy?
Also I guess many times the scriptures themselves may talk in contradictory terms that some times its good to control senses and some times its not good and so on... Please share your understanding on this ..

Answer
Hello Chandrasekar,

Hope you are doing good. Coming to the query,

Q: Why should one practice Brahmacharya?
A: Can a mirror covered with dust shine and reflect an image? NO. One cannot see one's reflection in a mirror covered by dust. Reflecting an image does not come 'naturally' to the dust covered mirror. Does this mean it is against the nature of the mirror to reflect? NO. It only means that that the layer of dust covering the mirror is obstructing the 'true nature' of the mirror to reflect and shine in all grandeur. If one were to take the effort of cleaning and polishing the mirror, the very same mirror that appeared dull and lifeless would shine in splendor and give the exact reflection of the object placed before it.

The practice of Brahmacharya is exactly similar. A person (The Atman or soul) could be compared to the mirror. As in case of the mirror whose inner shine and splendor were 'unchanged and untouched' in reality by the presence of dust but only temporarily obscured, the Atman by itself is untainted, stainless, unblemished and eternally pure. It is the long association of a person with objects of senses that has made him forget his true nature of eternal bliss and go in search of 'temporary' and 'impermanent' pleasures via his five sense of perception (sight, smell, taste, sound and touch). This long association with sensual pleasures weaves a strong cocoon of 'Maya' (Ignorance) around the soul that makes it forget its real nature of eternal bliss and experience suffering further to indulgence in sensual pleasures. This results in a state where the pursuit of purity, virtue and Godliness appears 'unnatural' and alien to one's nature (just as the dust covered mirror would say 'How can I reflect an image? It is unnatural to me!)

The 'Shvetâshvatara Upanishad' a superb treatise on the path of self-realization written by the great and noble sage Shvetâshvatara for the benefit of mankind gives us a beautiful example to demonstrate the above analogy. There it is said - " As gold or silver, first covered with earth, and then cleaned, shine full of brightness and light, so the embodied man seeing the truth of the Atman as one, attains the goal and becomes sorrowless".

In order to 'remove' the layers of 'ignorance' woven around the soul and reclaim one's default state of Bliss and joy, one has to reverse the order of activity that brought him to this state. Since indulgence in sensual pleasures was the key activity that led to degradation, one has to give up such activity, contemplate on the true nature of the 'Atman' and realize that one is not the body, mind, intellect, consciousness or ego but only the 'soul'. One has to realize the infinite bliss state of the soul and reclaim his lost kingdom. This can be achieved by no other process but through Brahmacharya. As one progresses in Brahmacharya, he slowly starts to realize that sensual pleasures are temporary, impermanent and can never give true bliss. He starts to realize that lust and temptation are only tricks of the mind due to continuous repetition of recreational sexuality and have no stand or bearing by themselves. Finally, one realizes that eternal bliss and joy exist within oneself (soul) and that there is non need for anything external to entertain oneself.

This state is explained in the Bhagavad-Gita by Lord Krishna. There he says -" The realized soul of steady wisdom becomes content in the self by the self and goes to the state beyond misery and sorrow never to return back "

Do we want an existence like a dust covered mirror, dark and unclean, thrown in a corner with a pile of junk, unknown, uncared, neglected and abused or the magnificent existence of a well maintained and polished mirror that is proudly displayed in a public gallery and is admired and marveled by all the people who pass by it? The answer to this question decides the relevance of Brahmacharya.

All scriptures cutting across religions advocate man to ascend the state of purity and divinity and shun sensuality. This is beyond exception. It is for the discerning mind to rightly interpret these books of priceless value and absorb their true meaning just as we absorb the 'essence' in food through digestion and discard the balance through excretion.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Dear dhananjay First of all wish u happy holi.
I am quite comfortable with celibacy but i have no control over anger(krodh),greed(lobha),moha and ahankara. I want to ask you can i become successful in controlling these just by becoming celibate?Plz suggest me some books which can be helpful in self-realization.

Answer
Hello Neeraj,

Wish you also a Happy Holi. Coming to the answers,

Lust, anger, attachment, greed, arrogance and jealousy (called 'Arishadvargas) are the six negative traits that bind man to delusion and deprive him of the bliss and well being that are in truth his default nature. They are the result of ignorance and in turn breed more ignorance causing a vicious cycle. The practice of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with constant God-meditation will gradually make one realize the fallacy of indulging in these six impediments to soul bliss and will help one in negating them. What is important is to constantly remember that indulgence in any one of these six traits leads to loss in 'Prana' or vital energy and will cause a downfall of the aspirant in terms of his net progress in all walks of life both spiritual and material.

For this reason, one should constantly remind oneself that we are the 'Atman' or soul which in reality is unblemished, stainless and untainted by the happenings around us and not get instigated into a state represented by the above six traits. With constant God-meditation and a virtuous mode of Brahmacharya, this aim can be accomplished to a considerable extent further to crossing a year of unbroken celibacy. After a year's practice, one can observe more concrete progress in terms of a further reduction in the tendency to succumb to any of the six. What is required is constant determination and perseverance to refrain from getting fired up by these traits and remind oneself to stay unruffled around the happenings in the world along with the practice of Brahmacharya.

The Bhagavad-Gita would be the most practical and user friendly guide for an aspirant aiming for self realization. It is a perfect pointer of the path to be taken for spiritual growth, confirming to the practical application of how to implement ideals. Opt for the summary on the Bhagavad-Gita written by Shri 'Paramahansa Yogananda' published by the self-realization fellowship. This is a book of priceless value to the Yogi.

Question
Is it true that by long practise of brahmacharya and conquering wet dreams one can get a steel body! I say this because I am practising martial arts (Wing Chung) and would like to gain a big advantage- as well as physical training! I know Lord Hanuman is a perfect brahmachari. Can one develop even a steel body like Superman if one reaches the level of urdhavereta!

Answer
Hello Sanj,

Trust you are fine. Coming to the answer,

The conservation and transmutation of semen without wastage through proper means involving physical, mental and spiritual activity results in the body to gradually tend towards a stage where it produces lesser and lesser quantities of 'physical' or gross semen and instead the 'Prana' or vital energy directly goes into the body, brain and intellect to give superlative abilities. One must remember that physical semen is the gross representation of Prana or vital energy. Semen is the physical medium through which the subtle life energy present within succeeds in creating another human being (through reproduction). In other words this implies that a reversal of this outward flow in an inward direction enriches, empowers and superpowers the life energy and ability of the person.

In a person who is a complete Urdhvareta, the physical production of semen is completely arrested further to a complete control and mastery over 'Prana' or life energy. Such a person is beyond the state of lust, temptation and all the 6 negative traits and is in complete realization of the fact that he is only an extension of 'Brahman' or the Almighty. Since his individual ego is completely destroyed and this has made him relate himself only as an extension of the Almighty, such a person rests in a state where his Brahmacharya is effortless and natural. This state he is able to achieve and maintain further to realization of the fact that he is the soul which is just a fragment of the Almighty and not the body, mind, consciousness or ego. This is a very advanced state that is almost beyond the comprehension of the layman who thinks he is the body or the mind. Only a few years of honest and true Brahmacharya can help one start to realize the entirety of this state.

Further to reaching such a state, the superhuman powers that already exist within the soul start to manifest within the Urdhvareta. He would depend very little on his physical body and instead used his mind fueled by the power of the soul to accomplish things in the gross world. This gives him the ability to 'think' his way into things that he wants to accomplish. He can 'will' for something for happen and it happens. But again, since his will, thought and action are mirror reflections of the Almighty further to dissolution of the individual ego, what he does is fully within the laws and bounds of the Universal will (Gods will) and never beyond. Hence such a person will never commit any wrong by the use of these powers and instead makes use of them only under divine permission and under rightful necessity.

As one starts the practice of Brahmacharya and succeeds in longer and longer periods of celibacy and finally unbroken Brahmacharya, the physical and astral toxins present within gradually vacate over a period of time. Elimination of these toxins is generally represented by the onset of some form of brief illness or disease. The suffering and pain that the Brahmachari endures through the illness works out the negative karma (the cause of the toxin or impurity) which was embedded within due to past misdeeds and burn it out. As and when layer by layer of these impurities burn out and vacate (for ever), the body becomes that much stronger and impregnable to further disease or debility. It develops the strength and power to become stainless and untouched by external factors fueled by the power of the soul. Finally upon reaching the complete state of an Urdhvareta, the Yogi develops what is called as 'Yogagnimayam Shariram' or the body purified by the power of Yoga. Such a body is akin to a body made of steel and is resistant to all forms of degeneration and decay except that dictated by 'Prarabdha karma' or that karma which has to be worked out in the present life. Great physical and mental feats can be easily carried out further to achieving such a state.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello Sir,

Suppose an adolescent gets caught in pornography's trap and gets addicted to masturbation in his late teens and early twenties. Does his continued indulgence introduce demoniac entities into his gross body? Also, when he hugs his parents, does the bad karma get transferred to parents (or anyone else he interacts with) also?

How can one develop sufficient strength and will power to completely eliminate such tendencies, which are deep rooted in one's consciousness ?

Answer
Hello Amit,

Hope you are keeping well. Coming to the answers,

Demonic entities are astral in nature and hence invade the astral body. Indulging in pornography and masturbation drains the body of positive Prana and thus attracts decay, degeneration and negative energies. This results in corrupting the mind, body and the psyche and thus leads to overall downfall in every sphere of life. Since negative entities associate themselves with negative acts, long indulgence in porn related activities does make one come under the influence of negative tendencies and entities.

Hugging a person cannot transfer one's karma to the other under normal circumstances. However, as in the case of constant association, the vibrations given out by a person affect the minds of those around him or her. We feel positive and divine in the company of the pious and virtuous and become negative in the company of wicked and evil people.

Success in attaining a pure state of mind comes after a long time based on one's past karma further to constant efforts, determination and honesty in the practice of virtue and purity. The only way one can develop strength is to indulge in rightful action, shun wrong action, keep one's thoughts pure and lead a lifestyle of virtue, discipline and constant prayer to God.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
I am very serious about finding a celibate spiritual partner. My beliefs are Enlightenment/Hindu/ Yoga-like. Where can I find such a partner? I know only of a couple that met in India in the Himalayas that had a celibate marriage. Where can I find other "Brahmacharyas?" Please email me with your email address, as I would like to be able to contact you. Namaste.

Answer
Hello there,

Trust this finds you good. Coming to the answers,

If the efforts, intentions and the determination behind realizing God through Brahmacharya are honest and sincere, the celibate aspirant is eventually blessed by God with a life partner who will be supportive, understanding and committed to a marriage based on Brahmacharya. Our's is not to worry about where to look for such a person. Our's is to plod honestly and consistently towards reaching higher and higher states of purity in the divine path of Brahmacharya with complete surrender and love for God following which God sends forth at the right time the right person who is destined to be our life partner if he so wills. When it happens, one will know. There is no need to ponder and there is no doubt about this fact!

Since I have limited my interactions to this portal, you are free to pose any query regarding Brahmacharya (You can check on the private box if the information is too personal) and I shall try and revert at the earliest with sincerity and to the extent of my knowledge.

It is laudable to know of your intention to get into a marriage based on Brahmacharya. Such a marriage is most apt to help develop true love based on the fact that we are 'souls' and not the body or the mind. It is a marriage that is specially designed to aid quick strides towards self realization.

May God bless you with a life partner who will support your endeavor of Brahmacharya through a celibate marriage
Have a nice day :-)

Question
Namaste Dhananjay,

I pray that you will be able to help me with my struggle.

I have been endeavouring to be celibate for almost 4 years. I started back in October 2007 and immediately went from masturbating almost everyday to never masturbating.

While I have not lost vital fluid using my hands since 2007, I have involuntarily (without hands) when looking at pictures and watching videos of sexually agitating activities. Unfortunately, I saw a sexual image tonight and lost quite a lot of fluid. I am rather concerned because I have been a little ill lately with a cold.

I have a number of questions.

1. What's the best thing to do straight after a falldown?
2. Should a young man, like myself, of 20 years age, who very infrequently loses vital fluid (no more than about a dozen times per year), be worried about a conscious loss like this?
3. Right now my mood is okay and I don't feel too weak. Is this perhaps a good sign? Is it possible that because I have been practicing brahmacarya quite diligently that I have built up a 'store' of energy that cannot be depleted so easily?
4. Are you familiar with ashwagandha for rejuvenation of vital fluids? Does it work well?
5. Is there anything in particular you would suggest I do?

I immediately took a bath after this loss and tonight I am going to chant all evening and not take any food. I am not freaking out right now and am trying to take a calm approach to this matter, but I sincerely hope I have not significantly damaged myself.

I think the main cause was that I became disillusioned with brahmacarya and thought that it had no merits; it was as if my mind was tricking/deluding me.

Answer
Namasthe Tom,

Trust this finds you good. Coming to the matter on hand,

1. The best course of action further to a downfall is to analyze and realize what caused the downfall and never ever repeat the mistake. This is very important for further progress. Unless one learns from his mistakes and prevents their recurrence, growth and progress cannot occur. A Brahmachari should get clear regarding the source of his downfall and take a vow never to repeat it followed by continuance of his life of Brahmacharya with God-meditation.

2. A voluntary loss always sets back the aspirant to square one in terms of spiritual progress.

One has to start all over again to reach the level of 'Prana' or vital energy that one had previously achieved. Since loss of Prana results in spiritual reversal to that extent, one has to again spend that many months/years of absolute Brahmacharya to reclaim the spiritual level that had been attained. The age of an aspirant only decides loss at the physical level. When we say we are 20 years old, it means this body is 20 years old and not our soul. Our age only represents the age of the physical body and not that of the soul. Loss of semen in the early 20's may be slightly less debilitating to the body than in the 30's or 40's. But how will an aspirant offset the astral and evolutionary degeneration that occurs to the 'Jivaatma' or the individual soul further to a voluntary slip? There is no other way but to start again. The soul is ancient, timeless and eternal. The spiritual evolution one has attained is a result of innumerable previous births. Each and every voluntary break in Brahmacharya results in a break in this spiritual evolution. Hence one should always strive to never let a break occur; be it voluntary or involuntary.

3. The degree of depression further to a slip varies from person to person based on the age, physical condition, spiritual level and mental tendencies of the person. It is best not to ponder too much regarding the slip itself and instead concentrate on preventing the recurrence of factors that lead to the slip. Energy built up over many 'years' can vanish within no time if the aspirant is careless. One should practice Brahmacharya in totality and at all places and times if one wishes to stay clear of downfall.

4. All medicinal herbs, concoctions, special foods and supplements for revitalization of seminal energy are incomplete and temporary forms to resubstitute seminal loss. Semen once lost is lost forever. It is the most precious of all body fluids and the nectar of nectars. No amount of external supplements or food forms can replace and re-compensate the loss of semen. Hence the Brahmachari should forever persevere to conserve and transmute his vital seed.

The supreme bliss, power, God-realization and strength that one accrues from a life of Brahmacharya is incomparable and unmatched by any other mode of life. Brahmacharya is the most supreme and lofty of all states that a human being can ever rest in. A life of seminal wastage is really no life at all. It is an existence in which a person degrades, degenerates and decays with every passing day and pushes himself into the depths of sorrow and pain. Strive for honest and sincere celibacy with regular physical exercise, mental work and constant God-meditation asking the Lord to grant you strength to achieve spotless celibacy.

You have been striving for Brahmacharya from the past couple of years. You have an innate urge and desire to get established in Brahmacharya. You are amongst the chosen few who has been let by God to try the divine act of Brahmacharya. There are billions of people across the world. But only a minuscule minority among the billions are hand picked by God to even try out this divine mode of life. Based on their past karma and tendencies, only a few hundreds from this minority will be chosen by God to accomplish a certain period of Brahmacharya and only a countable number of people from these hundreds will succeed in life long, unbroken celibacy and attain the final goal. Shouldn't we show our gratitude to the great Lord by persevering and striving for true celibacy? Isn't being honest and true to Brahmacharya the least we can do for the grace God has shown on us? Won't we be letting him down and failing him if we succumb to lust? Let us give our best and persevere till the end to maintain spotless celibacy. This is the least we can do.

If our devotion, efforts and yearning to achieve Brahmacharya are honest and true, God undoubtedly extends his helping hand and helps us achieve success. Nothing can be achieved without the grace and help of God. At the same time, there is nothing beyond the realm of a man who puts in sincere efforts and devotion at the accomplishment of this ideal with deep love for God.

May God bless you and have a nice day :-)

Question
QUESTION: How preserving semen affects us sexually? (not spiritually:)

I experienced more sexual action involved in my life with "intense pleasure" when I preserved semen for almost 15 days so I was just wondering, does preserving semen makes one more sexually active and removes weaknesses of male genitals?

I understand practising celibacy is a much broader concept leading us to the path of enlightenment and not just for sexual satisfaction but still I would like to know its effects for a person who is willing to have sex but wants to preserve semen..

ANSWER: Hello Eshamur,

Hope you are keeping fine. Coming to the queries,

Q1: What is the effect of semen conservation at the physical/sexual level?
A: When a man becomes celibate the body gets rest from constantly producing semen. This results in a mammoth increase of 'Prana' or vital energy within the system. The increased Prana leads to better strength, endurance and ability at the physical level and more concentration and focus at the mental level. On a parallel, sexual glands such as the testicles and the prostate among many others rest and rejuvenate further to a period of abstinence. This tones and refreshes the sexual system leading to better function. How a man deals with this increased energy and potency is left to his discretion. If he reverts to constant sexual activity trying to enjoy the 'increased pleasure' he once again starts to waste his primal fluid and eventually becomes weak and debilitated. On the other hand if he transmutes the conserved fluid into 'Ojas' or divine astral power through sublimation with constant physical, mental and spiritual activity, his Prana within goes on increasing and he can achieve the impossible. Unto such a man does not come disease of the mind or the body and he can excel in any field of activity.

Q2: What is the effect of non-ejaculatory relations?
A: Non-ejaculatory relations or not ejaculating during the sexual act is much better than a life of seminal wastage. The man/woman stop the sexual act much before the onset of an orgasm and thus refrain from an ejaculation. It helps the man/woman develop control over ejaculation and thus helps prevent ejaculation of semen. It is a technique that can be used initially before the start of absolute celibacy to help one develop independence from the concept of climax/orgasm. But non-ejaculatory relations will eventually have to lead to absolute Brahmacharya in course of time if one wants the benefit of transmutation. Semen that reaches the 'ejaculatory mode' during the sexual act (see past answers for definition of ejaculatory mode) will eventually flow out through a wet dream even if ejaculation is avoided.

When the production of semen is continuous (as in case of the normal man who indulges in sexual arousal) it will have to be expelled. A man who is constantly producing units after units of semen further to sexual arousal on a regular basis will have to expel the semen. Gross semen in the physical form is constantly produced by the body in large volumes in a person who is constantly getting himself aroused in the sex plane. Such a person has only two options:

1. Either regularly expel the semen through the sex act and debilitate oneself
OR
2. Stop all forms of sexual arousal at the mental and physical level and transmute the residual semen into 'Ojas'.

Further to absolute and true, unbroken Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with constant God-meditation lasting longer than a year the body will produce lesser and lesser quantities of semen as the 'Prana' or vital energy directly goes into building the body, mind and intellect of the person without being converted into the physical fluid called semen. The semen producing nature of the system slowly starts getting 'switched off'. This is when the man actually starts transcending the state of transmutation and slowly starts climbing the path of becoming an 'Urdhvareta' or a non-semen producing yogi. This is when true Brahmacharya may be assumed as having started. Till this point of time, the body will be passing through a state where it is refurbishing and revitalizing (by making use of the conserved semen) each and every organ that had started getting debilitated due to the previous lifestyle of seminal wastage.

If the practice of Brahmacharya beyond this state is continuous, true and genuine the yogi gradually starts progressing towards reaching the state of an Urdhvareta (which takes many years) by producing lesser and lesser volumes of semen. He starts to become more and more calm, composed and powerful at the physical and mental levels with unshakable confidence, grit and determination to handle the eventualities of life. He begins to slowly realize the truth that he is something beyond the body, mind, intellect and ego and that everything around him including himself are mere projections of the one single Almighty Lord. That each and every happening is master controlled by the Almighty and nothing really is in the hands of man. That we are only tools in the hands of the master sculptor and that life becomes one smooth journey if we give in to Godly commands instead of flexing our individual and powerless ego. Words fail to describe the joy and bliss one starts to experience further to taking steps in this direction by the honest practice of Brahmacharya.

It is for this reason that the real benefits of Brahmacharya accrue further to its practice in thought, word and deed. Merely refraining from ejaculation is alright before the start of celibacy for it helps one develop independence from the slavery of orgasmic pleasure, but this independence will eventually have to be converted into the next higher state namely independence from the need for sexual arousal/pleasure itself if one wishes for higher and loftier benefits.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

QUESTION: Thanks for good response..

One more thing to clear up..I heard that in Tantric sex they are asked to preserve male sexual fluid but still they get involved in sexual activity and they claim to experience intense pleasure lasting for hours..

Can we increase our pleasure by refraing ejaculation?

Answer
Hello there,

Tantric sex is a dangerous path that most often leads to the downfall of the aspirant and does not have any connection with Brahmacharya.

Since discussions on this portal are limited to the subject of Brahmacharya, discussions about tantric sex or methods of increasing sexual pleasure are not within our purview.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,
can i ask you what is your inspiration in this path of celibacy? And what prompted you to become a celibate? What is your job profile?Did you taken a bow of celibacy? I am sorry if i have asked you too personally. Thank you.

Answer
Hello Neeraj,

Trust this finds you fine. Coming to the answers,

Q1: What inspired me on the path of Brahmacharya?
A: When we make the objects of senses as a source of our happiness and well being we find that the path of sense pleasures and the so called 'objects' of happiness and excitement always fall short of the mark and leave us wanting for more. They fail to give the desired amount of satisfaction and often leave us high and dry in pain. Like a fire that is never satisfied with any amount of wood supplied, man's desires and worldly aspirations are never sated no matter how hard he feeds them. This realization made me look towards spirituality as a solution and Brahmacharya being one of the first foundations for the growth of real spirituality came into the picture.

The true reason behind any person trying for Brahmacharya seriously would be the arrival of one's individual soul to a state where it has begun to realize the falsity and impermanent nature of the world around. This prompts the person to look for a better, permanent and more sensible alternative to the apparent, temporary and unreliable sense pleasures which eventually desert man in the realm of pain. Man starts his serious quest to find that one permanent state which will offer him freedom from the highs and lows of worldly life and establish him in a state of permanent and infinite bliss. This state he can achieve by no other means but by realizing his own self as an extension of the Almighty and finally merging into the Lord. Brahmacharya is of paramount importance for anyone wishing to reach this state.

Q2: What is my occupation?
A: I'm a self employed professional.

Q3: Have I taken a vow of celibacy?
A: At the start of celibacy before the start of unbroken Brahmacharya I did take vows of certain time frames. But as time progressed I realized that Brahmacharya is a divine and beautiful mode of life that is to be practiced for ever and not something to be limited to months in the calender. By the kind grace of the Almighty Lord the state of Brahmacharya has been steady.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
I'm 25 years old. I'm trying to observe brahmacharya for 30 days and later to increase the duration for a year. I'm successful for 19 days. But today, the 20th day I accidentally saw porn in net. Due to this I watched porn. But, I didn't masturbate. My biggest question is "what should I do?"

My mind is telling me that "your brahmacharya viratha ended with watching porn. So you go on with masturbation. Enjoy it".

Do I have to start a start new viratha? Had my 19 days viratha wasted? How to number the days from tomorrow "1,2,3.. instead of 20, 21, 22 days of observing viradha" I feel very bad of breaking the viradha of 19 days by watching porn

Answer
Hello Prem,

Trust this finds you fine. Good to see your efforts at maintaining Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

A mistake made is history. We cannot alter the outcome of the committed action. Watching porn and fantasizing is no doubt a break in Brahmacharya. But by all means should you refrain from the physical act of masturbation. Carrying out the physical act will result in culmination of the mental break into completion. Voluntary loss of veerya from masturbation will act as the last nail on the coffin. Hence it is to be avoided at all costs.

Take a cold water bath, sit before an idol or photograph of your favorite God or even better, close your eyes and meditate on God asking him to give you the strength and determination required to carry on spotless Brahmacharya. Take a resolution on his name that henceforth, you will not watch porn on the net or elsewhere. Sit in Padmasana and chant 'OM', the representation of the Almighty for half an hour silently with the eyes closed and with absolute devotion. Our attitude towards God should be one of love, surrender and devotion. Remind yourself of the fact that you are not the body, mind, intellect, consciousness or ego. You are only the soul...The timeless, formless, untainted and eternally pure Atman and the Atman is nothing but an extension of the Almighty as a spark is an offshoot of the fire.

Let us ask ourself, How can the concept of body and sex apply to such a pure entity as the Atman? The idea of sex is itself false and an illusion. It is a trick of the mind based on the assumption of something unreal to be real. It is a result of 'Maya' that springs from ignorance. The best way to annul Maya is to overpower her with 'Vidya' or true knowledge. Knowledge that our real nature is purity, divinity and stainless. Knowledge that there is nothing called as a 'sexual need' in our true nature but is only a result of constant past indulgence and imagination. Knowledge that we are not the body or the mind but the ever free and pure Atman-- A derivative of the Paramatman. Just as we change our clothes when they get old, the Atman changes his body when it gets old and takes rebirth in a new body. So this body is an external covering similar to our clothing and not worth worrying much about.

Continue with the Brahmacharya vratha without any break. You have indulged in a visual and mental break by watching porn. Ensure that the break does not go to the final stage - physical. The prayer to God with sincere apologies for committing wrong and a promise to never repeat the act of watching porn should help you carry on with the Vrata if your repentance and love for God are genuine, heartfelt and sincere. Forget the mistake but always remember never to repeat it. With constant efforts at practicing absolute Brahmacharya based on sincerity and devotion, the period of success will become longer and longer.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hi Dhananjay

Do you have any step by step guide to achieve celibacy?
Do you suggets specifics on vegan food and timing of meals?
I fel down from the owe so many time. Please guide me.

Ram

Answer
Hello Ram,

Trust you are keeping well. Coming to the answers,

1. The best approach to achieve Brahmacharya is to take a vow for a certain period of time and then to gradually extend this period further. During the course of the vow, one must try his level best not to entertain lustful thoughts and replace such thoughts immediately with divine/pure thoughts. This is very important as it is impossible to wrestle and fight lustful thoughts when they show their heads. The only way is to avoid fighting them and instead immediately displace these thoughts by replacing them with divine thoughts.

2. The next important course of action is to ensure that the mind is constantly kept occupied with constructive work through the course of the day and a certain amount of time is kept aside on a daily basis for yoga and Prânâyâma or exercise/sports and some time for deep God-meditation. While meditating, one should surrender to God and request for his grace and blessings in attaining unbroken Brahmacharya without asking for anything materialistic like money, name or fame. This is absolutely required for success in celibacy as Brahmacharya becomes impossible without his grace and will. If the aspirant's intentions at ahieving Brahmacharya are genuine and heartfelt, God always blesses him towards success.

3. It is important to avoid all forms of visual & verbal stimulation that fire up temptation. They may include movies, magazines, porn, cinema posters etc... Also required is to avoid the company of people and women who constantly dwell on the sex plane. The lifestyle of a celibate should be clean and free from the company of friends and people who act as impediments to celibacy.

4. Coming to food, a simple vegetarian diet low on salt, spices, oil and fats is advisable. Onion and garlic should not be cooked with food but can be eaten in medicinal doses in the raw form once a week for blood purification. Consumption of dairy products in limited quantities gives its share of benefits and is better than a full vegan diet. Meat, eggs and mushrooms are to be avoided. The right timing would be to have breakfast atleast by 9 A.M, lunch before 2 P.M and a dinner consisting only of fruits and raw vegetables by 9 P.M and go to bed by 9.30 P.M. This helps the aspirant to wake up at Brahmi Muhurtham (3 A.M - 5.30 A.M) and practice yoga and meditation. A man wishing to accomplish unbroken Brahmacharya should be out of his bed much before the Sun rises, have his bath and meditate. Semen will not stay within the man who stays in bed beyond sunrise.

These are the basic requirements that help promote celibacy. For more details and discussions on achieving success in Brahmacharya, kindly go through all the past answers on this portal with an eagle eye.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

And 1 question is that info about 12 years is true? Dhanyawad.

Answer
Namaskars to you to Rohit,

Nice to hear of your repeated efforts at Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

Failures in the path of Brahmacharya in spite of one's efforts occur due to the presence of strong sexual 'Vâsanâ' or past impressions in the 'Kârana shariram' or the causal body which overpower the logic and vichâr shakti (reasoning) of the person when under sexual duress resulting in failure. These impressions are lodged in the causal body due to past sexual actions going back to many thousands of births in the human form and innumerable births in the animal form leading to 'Avidya' or ignorance. This results in the true nature of absolute divinity and purity of man to be eclipsed by these Vâsanâs just as the rays of the Sun are obscured by thick dark clouds in spite of the Sun being extremely bright and radiant. Does this mean darkness is the original nature of the Sun? No... It only means that clouds in the path of the light emanating from the Sun have temporarily obscured him. As soon as the clouds depart under the action of strong winds, the bright rays of the mighty Sun reach us in all grandeur. The practice of Brahmacharya is very similar. Our scriptures say that we, the Sun within this body - (Âtman) full of brightness, radiance and purity has been covered by the clouds - (Avidya or ignorance) leading to loss of the knowledge that we are purity, divinity and bliss manifest. That we are extensions of the Almighty Lord himself. This loss of knowlege makes man assume that sexuality is his natural state, while in reality, the concept is very alien and unconnected to the soul. Where is the question of finite sexual pleasure that ends in sorrow for the Âtman who is always in the state of infinite bliss and joy beyond measurement? If we make use of the strong winds - (true knowledge, constant practice of purity and God-meditation) to drive these clouds of ignorance away, the radiance and light from the soul once again starts reaching out and floods our minds and hearts with bliss incomparable destroying all sorrow. As soon as man reaches this final state, he becomes free of desires. Being the embodiment of bliss and joy, he merges into the Almighty, never to return back onto earthly life ever again. So one has to first put efforts in destroying the ignorance around the soul and reclaiming his lost kingdom of God-bliss. In order to annul these past impressions embedded within the causal body the following points have to be strictly enforced:

1. Prevent the formation and growth of new sexual 'Vâsanâs' through new sexual karma that man might indulge in from the sight, sound and touch of anything sexual in nature including mental fantasy or recollection.

2. Practice with devotion the five Yama's and Niyama's of Yoga (explanations regarding these I will forward if a separate query on a life of Yoga is put forth)

3. Lead a pious life consisting of God-meditation on a regular basis along with consistent mental and physical activity that will help chanelize sexual energy into productivity making use of the technique of 'Prânâyâma' or the Yogic method of control of vital energy through breath.

IMPORTANCE OF PRÂNÂYÂMA IN UNBROKEN BRAHMACHARYA :

The secretion of semen within man in the sexual organs is controlled by the mind. As soon as a sexual thought enters and flowers within the mind, signals are passed into activation of sexual organs and the 'Prâna' or vital energy moves from every part of the human system and focuses into the sexual organs to form the fluid called semen. Hence if a man wants to prevent the loss of semen he must first prevent its formation. If he wants to prevent its formation he must prevent sexual thoughts. If he wants to prevent sexual thoughts, his mind must be fully under his control.

Now controlling one's mind as per one's commands is not an easy thing. One might catch hold of and restrain anything in the world; but to catch the mind is a near impossible task. It is the fastest and most agile creature in the world faster than light and matchless in speed. In one moment the mind is contemplating on a tasty dish on the dining table and within the next quarter of a second it has gone to the Moon a few lakhs of miles away! The reach and speed of the mind are such that the most wise and capable of people find it difficult to ensnare and control the mind.

So what then is the way to control this extremely fast and monkey like intoxicated mind which wants a million things all at the same time? Our ancient Yogi's say that the mind can be controlled by that which created it. By that which gave birth to it. And the mind is created by breath. As we breathe, so does our mind function. If we breathe rapidly and randomly, the mind also behaves randomly with many thoughts cropping up in succession. Observe how breathing becomes rapid and fast when under sexual excitement. Observe how breathing becomes rapid and fast when under the action of anger or any other emotion. And correspondingly observe how it is impossible to entertain any thought when we take a deep breath, hold it and stop breathing for a few seonds. If we do this, we will see that no thought can be pondered on or indulged in for the few seconds when there is no inspiration or expiration but only retention of breath in the lungs. Hence the mind and breath are connected. By controlling one's breathing pattern, one can control this superfast mind.

In the treatise 'Yoga Vâsista' written by the great sage Vasista, the mind has been compared to a horseman and the breath compared to the horse. The intoxicated horseman (mind) seeking excitement and not knowing what he is doing wants to ride to the end of a dangerous cliff atop a mountain. But if the horse (breath that controls the mind and Prâna (vital energy)) were to refuse to move forward, the horseman (mind) would be helpless, would not be able to move around foolishly and would eventually be controled. So it is told that if one can develop the ability and technique to control one's breath then he would be able to effectively control the mind from roaming around aimlessly and dangerously behind sense pleasures. Thus through the control of one's breath, one develops control over the mind and through control of the mind acquires control over his semen. Control over his semen gives man the ability to prevent the formation of further sexual karma and the prevention of new sexual karma ensures that he can rapidly progress in negating the past karma, thereby reclaiming the Lordship of the soul.

The practice of 'Prânâyâma' using special breathing techniques twice a day (Before Sunrise and during sunset when the breathing of both the right and left nostrils is equal and the breath can hence pass through the Sushumna or the central Nâdi or astral channel in the spine) gradually helps one reach a calm and serene state of mind and thus results in mind control. Through regular and consistent practice of 'Prânâyâma', the helpless horseman called the mind finding the horse (breath) unwilling to move as per his commands soon gives up his erratic movements and becomes calm and composed. This calm and composed mind is then directed on God and with the mind having achieved a certain degree of freedom from recurring, strong sexual thoughts -- the formation of and loss of semen is automatically curtailed. This is the secret behind the Yogi maintaining unbroken Brahmacharya. Practice of 'Prânâyâma for many years with absolute Brahmacharya and God-meditation is also the method by which Yogi's develop superhuman powers or 'Siddhis'. The incidence of all Siddhi within the yogi is through the mastering of 'Prânâ vidya' or the control of 'Prânâ'. By the use of 'Prânâyâma', unbroken Brahmacharya becomes very possible in course of time and under the grace of God.

If the sublimation and transmutation of Rethas (semen) is carried out without a break for a period of 12 years, the level of 'Prânâ' or vital energy within the body reaches a level where all faculties of the body, mind, intellect and consciousness reach a state of superlativity. This helps in the ascent of 'Prânâ/vital energy or 'Kundalini (The Serpent power) within man to reach the final chakra 'Sahasrara' which culminates in Yoga Samâdhi or superconsciousness. In the state of Nirvikalpa Samâdhi, man gets the power to nullify certain of his past karmas and become stainless, thereby hastening his progress towards final emancipation.

Focus on a life of Brahmacharya with regular yogasana/exercise/sports at the physical level, 'Prânâyâma for regulating the vital energy and constant God-meditation with devoted prayer to God for success following which Brahmacharya becomes longer and longer and finally life long under the grace of the Almighty. Kindly go through all the past answers on this portal to get detailed insight on how to accomplish this.

May God bless you with unbroken Brahmacharya and knowledge of the self

Question
Ok..im asking it seperatly. I also want to know about Yam and Niyam...

Answer
The term Yoga is a derivative of the Sanskrit verb 'Yuj' - which refers to Union. Yoga thus signifies a mode of life that leads to the union of the individual soul - The Jivâtma with the universal soul - Paramâtma or the Almighty Lord also called as 'Brahman' and is far from the mere practice of physical postures (Âsanas). Thus the aim of Yoga is to help man overcome his ignorance and reclaim the Lordship of his soul thereby attaining union with Brahman. Any form of true Yoga be it Hatha Yoga, Raja Yoga, Karma Yoga, Bhakthi Yoga or Kriya Yoga is governed by the spectrum of basic rules goverened by the 8 salient constituents (Ashtângâs) that are most necessary for reclaiming the absolute state of purity and divinity of the soul. The practice of Brahmacharya is complimentary to Yoga and Yoga complimentary to Brahmacharya. Neither can exist without the other and are mutually dependent. The aim of Yoga is self-realization and the final objective of Brahmacharya is again self-realization.

While both Yoga and Brahmacharya no doubt give much benefit to a practitioner at the physical and mental levels, the gates of true Yoga and the real effects of Unbroken Brahmacharya begin to open only to the aspirant who is prepared to make the necessary changes to his lifestyle, mode of thinking and perspective towards life by adopting a virtuous and pure mode of life based on spirituality. A person wishing to get benefits/siddhis from the practice of Brahmacharya and use these powers for selfish, ego centric and malefic purposes with questionable intentions will be sadly dissappointed to see that no power/siddhi or ability for superhuman actions will ever come to his disposition and that even the few changes that take place after a few months of Brahmacharya at the physical and mental levels leading to a charming & attractive personality will soon desert him if he were to use even these initial surface benefits for wrong acts based on wrong intentions. The powers that the Yogi acquires énroute are mere byproducs of the ascent of the the Jivâtma on the ladder of evolution and begin to manifest in the man who surrenders himself fully to God and takes each and every step in life fully conscious of the universal laws of nature and very aware of the fact that he is a mere tool in the hands of the higher power. Hence unbroken Brahmacharya becomes a concept that will appeal and more importantly be achievable only by those countable number of aspirants who have a yearning for the realization of God/their own self and not to the majority still enamoured by the external world laced with sense stimulations. This statement has been placed here as a means of information to all those people with the far from true presumption that unbroken Brahmacharya can be easily and casually achieved with a trivial perspective. The truth is very far from this wrong assumption; for achieving unbroken success in this mode of life means working sincerely, seriously, commitedly and persistently not only at changing many acquired habits and tendencies from the current existence but also those dating back to innumerable previous births. The aspirant is on an endeavor of unimaginable proportion; for the practice of Yoga and Brahmacharya is aimed at the highest accomplishment of the human existence -- Self realization, the very objective of the human life.

Now we shall get insight into what constitues a life of 'True Yoga' based on the 8 principles of Ashtângâ Yoga put forth by the great sage - Maharishi Pathanjali.
Any form of Yoga becomes Yoga in the true sense if governed by the following 8 principles that are incorporated in action in the practitioner's life:

1. YAMA
2. NIYAMA
3. ÂSANA
4. PRÂNÂYÂMA
5. PRATHYÂHÂRA
6. DHÂRANA
7. DHYÂNA
8. SAMÂDHI

YAMA: Consists of five mandations that are to be strictly applied in the Yogi's life:

1. Ahimsa (Non-violence):
This mode of action refers to refraining from causing mental and physical pain/injury to all living creatures under all circumstances and times.

2. Sathya (Truth):
The practitioner is required to always abide by the truth and refrain from un-truth.

3. Âstheya (Non-stealing or non-acquiring)
It refers to a course of thought and action where the aspirant should not steal/take/acquire or encroach upon anything that is not rightfully his. It not only applies to money & material objects but also to positional status, gifts, donations etc.. By unlawful acquisition he commits a crime and through the acceptance of gifts the Yogi becomes indebted to the giver and thus sets up a new karmic equation with the donor that he has to again annul through repayment thereby taking his objective of enlightenment further away.

4. Brahmacharya (Spiritual celibacy)
It refers to the abandonment of and freedom from all forms of sexual enjoyment for ever in thought, word and deed and at all places and times.

5. Aparigraha (Non-possesiveness)
This refers to becoming independent of the 'me', 'mine' thought and attitude. A Yogi is required to develop detachment from the objects surrounding him and overcome the false concept of ownership that he has towards objects such as wealth, property, children, wife etc.. and finally even his own body. The principle behind this concept is to make him realize that none of the above mentioned objects/people including his body are his own but are only manifestations of 'Maya' or the cosmic illusion. All the above mentioned things including his body finally get destroyed and only the true 'HE' (soul) remains. Hence the need to develop detachment and overcome attachment for objects that are temporary and prone to destruction.

NIYAMA:

1. Shaucha (Cleanliness)
Refers to the need for maintaining internal (mind) and external (body) cleanliness.

2. Santosha (Gladness)
The Yogi is required to develop an attitude of being content and glad with whatever comes to him in life through chance. His purview consists of performing his duty sincerely and never worry about the fruits of his actions. He should perform his duty with his heart and soul and yet not have expectations regarding the outcome. Thus develops gladness, being content with what the Lord blesses him with.

3. Tapas (Austerity)
Refers to the various forms of austerities he may perform based on his mental and physical inclination such as Japa, prayer, fasting, cold water baths etc.. with the aim of developing Tithîksha (spiritual endurance) and achieving single pointed devotion to a life of Yoga and God. These austerities vary from person to person based on their individual tendencies and level of evolution.

4. Svâdhyâya (Study of the scriptures)
Refers to the study of scriptures that act as pointers to man for self-realization.

5. Îshwara Prânidhâna (Surrender to the Almighty)
Refers to complete devotion and surrender to the Almighty Lord.

ÂSANA:
It is defined as that posture in which the body is steady and comfortable. Therer are various âsanas described in Yoga and the aspirant can choose any one or more that he finds comfortable performing. The Padmâsana and the Sidhâsana are generally preferred for meditation.

PRÂNAYÂMA:
Tthe control of Prâna or vital energy through breath.

PRATHYÂHÂRA
Withdrawal of the mind from the five senses of perception and action.

DHÂRANA
Concentration meditation.

DHYÂNA
Contemplation meditation.

SAMÂDHI
The state of superconsciousness where the mind and Prâna of the Yogi merge into the Atman and the yogi reaches a supreme state of bliss oblivious of everything except his soul and realizes himself as nothing more than the soul. At the physical level, body of the yogi stops breathing, the heart stops beating, the lungs become still and every organ within his system goes into a state of suspension and yet he is alive. This is also called 'TURYÂVASTHA' or the fourth state (As he is in neither of the three normal states viz. Jâgrath (wakefulness), Swapna (dream state), Nidrâ (sleep)). The yogi can stay in this state for hours, days, months or years without breath, food, water and without any of his organs functioning and yet be fully alive. This is a state unknown and not recognized by medical science. He is fed by AMRITA (the divine nectar that gives immortality) that drops from the region of the brain down his throat to nourish his body. He experiences superlative bliss in this state further to his merging with the universal consciousness.

Thus concludes a brief outline of Yoga which the yogi strives to accomplish. Each of the steps mentioned in order starting from the Yama, Niyama's and upto Dhyâna are to be gradually perfected following which Samâdhi happens by itself. Just as a hill climber ascends the hill one step at a time, the Yogi first perseveres and perfects the Do's and Don'ts mentioned in Yama and Niyama through practical application in his life. This makes him fit to perform âsana. The practice of âsana helps him get ready for Prânâyâma and mastering this makes him succesfully perform Dhârana and Dhyâna on God during meditation. On becoming an adept in concentration and contemplation on the Lord without any mental modification, he goes into Samâdhi.

It will now be seen that a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya is something that is to be meticulously cultivated with great effort, determination and persistency over a period of time (sometimes even over a period of many lives depending on the evolutionary level one has already reached) and not something that can be attained casually in the short span. Each of the above mentioned steps become achievable only when the previous step has been considerably mastered. A man who is unable to control his lower emotions such as anger, greed, attachment, arrogance, jealousy etc.. in real life situations will find it very hard to succeed in Yoga and accomplish unbroken Brahmacharya. Brahmacharya by itself is that supreme path, the success of which requires a person to have reached considerable advancement in the control of his other emotions. A man constantly angry, jealous, greedy or arrogant can never succeed in Brahmacharya or Yoga and sooner or later experiences a break. One who wishes to achieve unbroken Brahmacharya should parallely strive to achieve purity, divinity and stainlessness as regards to his other emotions and eventually get free of them. He will then find that Brahmacharya becomes 'Natural and effortless' and very much appears in line with one's nature rather than contrary to it.

METHOD OF PERFORMING PRÂNAYÂMA:

For the benefit of those interested in Prânâyâma which assures a person of immense success in unbroken Brahmacharya if carried out with the other Yama, Niyama's, I shall henceforth give a brief descirption of how to perform basic Prânâyâma:

1. The aspirant should wake up at Brâhmi Muhurtham (3.00 A.M - 5.30 P.M) much before Sunrise, have his bath, prostarate before God & the Guru with devotion/surrender and pray for a minute asking for success in the path of Yoga and Brahmacharya. He should then sit in Padmâsana/Sidhâsana or Vajrâsana and perform the three Bandhâs (Mûla bandha, Uddiyâna bandha and Jâlandhara bandha -- descriptions on how to do this can be google searched from the internet)

2. Next is to be performed Nâdi Shodhana which I shall now explain:
Sit in any one of the âsanas mentioned above and close the right nostril with the right hand thumb. Exhale slowly and completely from the left nostril. Now with the right nostril still closed, inhale slowly, deeply and completely from the left nostril till the lungs are full. On filling the lungs, Immidiately close the left nostril with the ring and little fingers of the right hand and slowly exhale the breath from the right nostril. Now repeat the process with the right nostril by again slowly taking up air and letting it out from the left nostril. This process is to be repeated for five full minutes alternating air flow between the left and right nostrils and is called 'Nâdi Shodhana'. It purifies the Nâdis (astral channels) present within the body within three months of regular practice, and is to be practiced once in the morning before Sunrise and again in the evening at Sunset before the practice of Prânâyâma.

3. After performing the three bandhas and Nâdi Shodhana the body becomes ready for Prânâyâma which is explained below:

Drink a glass of water and sit in any one of the âsanas mentioned above and close the right nostril with the thumb. Exhale slowly and completely from the left nostril. Now with the right nostril still closed, inhale slowly, deeply and completely from the left nostril till the lungs are full. Hold the breath, swallow twice, remove the hand and retain the held breath for 16 counts (seconds). Now close the left nostril with the ring and little fingers of the right hand and slowly exhale the breath from the right nostril. The inhalation and exhalation must be very slow and smooth without jerks. Now with the left nostril still closed with the ring and little fingers of the right hand, inhale slowly, deeply and completely from the right nostril till the lungs are full. Hold the breath, swallow twice, remove the hand and retain the breath for 16 counts (seconds) in the lungs. Now close the right nostril with the thumb of the right hand and slowly exhale the breath from the left nostril. The inhalation and exhalation must be very slow and smooth without jerks. This completes ONE Prânâyâma.

While new to Prânâyâma, the Yogi must perform SIX such Prânâyâmas of 16 second retention in the morning before sunrise and SIX in the evening at sunset. After forty days of practice, the counts can be increased to 24 seconds. The act of drawing up the air, retaining the air and exhaling the air must be slow, deep, smooth and without jerks. If the yogi finds it hard to perform this process for 24 seconds after forty days, he must not force himself but must return to the practice of 16 second retention for as much time as is necessary to make him fit for the 24 second process. Note very carefully that one must never force himself to achieve longer durations in a hurry. Only after the Yogi is able to perform the 16 second Prânâyâma SIX times with ease, twice a day, after forty days (or how many ever months necessary) based on his individual ability should he venture for the 24 second breath retention of SIX Prânâyâmas. After achieving 24 seconds of breath retention after a few months the Yogi should increase this duration to 32 seconds and practice that for forty days. On getting comfortable with 32 seconds of breath retention, he can increase the retention time to 40 seconds, then to 48 seconds and so on. This time duration should be increased gradually on and on upto the point of comfort but never beyond one's ability.

After finishing the practice of Prânâyâma, the Yogi should meditate on God for some time, being free of all other thoughts and desires.

NOTE:
1. Sweat that comes out of the body during the process of Prânâyâma should be rubbed back into the body after each Prânâyâma.
2. One must sit on a yoga mat or small carpet while performing Yoga that should not be used for anything else.
3. Immidiately after finishing Prânâyâma and meditation, one must have a small snack consisting of a glass of milk and a fruit or two. The stomach should not be kept empty.
4. People who practice Yoga should avoid caffene, alchohol, tobacco, and foods high on salts and spices.

By the regular and correct practice of Prânâyâma, the body and face become lustrous and toxins in the body get thrown out. After a year's practice, the mind becomes very calm and serene and excellent health and well being manifest within the person along with the development of immunity towards diseases. The mind starts getting free from uncontrollable desires and acquire steadiness and one pointedness along with focus and concentration. The yogi starts to gain siddhi over his semen and will slowly get free from wet dreams to eventually attain unbroken celibacy.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Does excess eating cause any downfall or an impediment in the practice of brahmacharya, assuming one adheres to all other requirements such as pure mind, food, etc?
And how do we define what is excess? Does it not depend on the person and his activities?

Answer
Hello Chandra,

Hope you are keeping fine. Coming to the answers,

Consumption of excess food leads to disease, lethargy, stupor and toxification of 'Nâdis' (astral energy channels). This results in clogged Nâdis thereby hindering the free flow of Prâna (vital energy). As soon as there is a blockade of Prâna, that particular part starts to degenerate and decay leading to disease. In the man who continuously overeats, 'Nâdis' in the weaker parts of his body first start getting clogged leading to reduced functioning of the particular organs connected to those 'Nâdis'. This is gradually accompanied by the toxification of all other 'Nâdis' in course of time leading to degeneration of the entire system.

A man wishing for a healthy and joyous life should abstain from excessive eating and limit his diet to 'Mitâhâra' (moderate diet). One must eat to live and not live to eat! Craving for food as a form of entertainment or means of passing time is the first urge and temptation the Brahmachari Yogi must work at becoming free from. The tongue and the sexual organs are conncected. Through the control of the tongue, one finds it easier to control the sex urge and control of sexual energy invaraibly leads to control of the tongue. A glutton who has made food as his chief passtime or means of relaxation soon gets inundated with deep rooted diseases beyond cure. These effects are not very visible initially but gradually show their ugly heads as man approaches middle age.

The health disorders that we see in society today starting from common cold and fever at the change of every season to serious conditions such as Blood pressure, Diabetis, Hypertension, Heart problems, Osteoporosis and other bone/joint problems are all a result of overeating and lack of Brahmacharya. If each and every person was to follow a disciplined life with a moderate and nutritious diet, regular exercise and limit their sexual indulgence to progeny, the world would have been a healthier and more joyous place free from disease. In Yoga, it has been very rightly said that the chief cause of disease is the presence of toxins within the body and no other mode of life produces more toxins than overeating and sexual excess. A few years of Brahmacharya with a moderate diet (The two go hand in hand and Brahmacharya is impossible if one overeats) makes a person virtually free from all forms of disease and debility. Immunity and strength within the body reach a state where visits to the doctor stop completely.

In the Bhagavad-Gita, Lord Krishna says:-
"Success in Yoga is not for him who eats too much or doesn't eat at all" -- "Who sleeps too much or doesn't sleep at all".
" To him who is temperate in eating and in sleeping and in being awake, Yoga becomes the destroyer of misery" - The Bhagavad-Gita Chapter-VI/ Verse 18

In the treatise on Yoga -' Hathayoga Pradeepika" written by the venerable Sage 'Svâtmârâma, it is said:-
Yoga fails by six causes - Overeating, over-exertion, excessive talk, observance of unsuitable disciplines, promiscuous company and unsteadiness in practice.

Chapter-I/ Verse 15.

This reminds us of the dangers or overeating, oversleeping, overfasting, not giving the body enough rest, useless and excessive talk, following a lifestyle that goes against the Yama-Niyama's, constantly being in the company of the opposite sex and those addicted to sexuality and irregularity in practice.

So what then is the measure of a 'moderate diet'? A moderate diet may be defined as that quantity of food which is just right to compensate for the expenditure of energy that occurs during day to day activity and that which does not cause heaviness, lethargy and inertia. If the meal is correct, one will feel content, refreshed, light and comfortable. If one feels heavy, uncomfortable and lethargic further to food, it is a clear indication that one has overeaten.

Contrary to general perception, one does not require much food to stay strong, healthy and active. What is required is a moderate diet that is nutritious, wholesome and that which is taken at the right time. As soon as man starts following a life of Brahmacharya, the conserved semen reduces the quantity of food required by the body. It takes close to 42 Kgs of food taken over a period of a month to produce an ounce of semen. Unlike the normal man who constantly wastes his vital fluid and hence requires much food while trying to recompensate for his lost energy, the Yogi who conserves his semen needs very little food to maintain health, vitality and well being.

In Yoga, a yardstick has been given to know how much food one should eat at each meal. It is said that the stomach is to be assumed to be made of four parts. Two parts are to be filled with food (half the stomach), one part with water and the fourth part is to be left empty to let the free flow of Prâna aid digestion. One who follows such a procedure stays healthy, strong and lives long blessed with vibrant health.

The trick is to stop eating before the stomach is full and never eat 'up to the throat' as most people ignorantly do.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

Many thanks for sharing your valuable knowledge with all, and for your detailed answers.

Iam a bachelor and practice brahmacharya.

Iam having good success at brahmacharya in the last 1-2 years. During this period, I notice gradual weight loss. My body has become wiry and taut. My energy levels are quite ok, and my immune system is probably still quite strong because apart from occurance of cold once, i haven't got any other ailment in last 1-2 years. I think brahmacharya has increased my resistance power. My appetite has decreased, in the sense that i still feel hungry on time but lesser amount of food is enough to satisfy the hunger. Iam definitely eating lesser now a days compared to two years ago.

Questions:

1. Could the weight loss be related to brahmacharya ? I have read somewhere that the "heat" (tapas) of brahmacharya reduces fat/weight. any thoughts on this ? Although losing excess fat is good, i think one should also maitain healthy weight. Any thoughts on building some muscle/weight ? Any foods ? I take soaked almonds and milk+dates now and then.

2. Could my body be needing lesser food than before because "energy" is being conserved ? energy conserved within = needs lesser food input from outside ?

thanks,
Ananth

Answer
Hello Ananth,

Good to know of your efforts at Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

The results and changes that you mention are a result of the good health, lack of degeneration and establishment of vitality that the body gets surcharged with further to resorption of semen through Brahmacharya.

The body of the true Brahmachari eventually gets wiry, taut and firm with the reduction of fat. The skin becomes lustrous, radiant and free from wrinkles/sagging resulting in a clear complexion and youthful appearance. Since semen is the 'Saptha Dhâtu' or the seventh and final tissue element of digestion, its conservation and transmutation results in a lesser need for food.The resorption of semen back into the blood stimulates the release of certain hormones that send signals to the body against 'cell multiplication' (The main cause of old age and increase in fat and girth).

One of the functions of semen other than reproduction is to revitalize and recharge the body with potency, strength and health. The heat produced by Brahmacharya/meditation sublimates the semen into 'Ojas'- A vapor like subtle substance that gives 'Tejas' or luster to the entire body and especially the face. The increase in blood count (Red blood corpuscles or RBC in the blood)and the heat of Yoga -'Yogâgni' results in a reddish hue to the face of the Brahmachari.

As long as the true Brahmachari takes moderate amounts of nutritious food in the form of proteins, vitamins, carbohydrates, minerals and required quantities of fat, he need not worry about his weight and health as they are automatically regulated and maintained.

A Yogi is advised to take many small meals instead of a single large meal. This is to ensure that the stomach is not kept totally empty at any given time (as keeping the stomach fully empty makes the gastric fire consume his vitality, leading to weakness and ill health). The consumption of limited quantities of dry fruits, honey, lemon, fresh fruits and raw vegetables along with wheat products, milk, ghee and cereal does well to maintain the required balance.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
QUESTION: Hi Dhananjay
Thanks a lot for sharing your thoughts and knowledge with others and for starting such a group.
Coming to the topic mentioned above, I heard that there are some ayurvedic medicines, which as a side effect or main effect, can cut down the sperm production in men and make him virtually impotent. This means that even though there is semen produced or ejaculated by a man, the sperm count is reduced enormously, which is in a way conserving the body's energy/prana.(My understanding is that the major prana is lost in the production of sperm and not other fluids. Please correct me if my understanding is wrong here)

So, can this kind of inducing brahmacharya provide the same benefits as done with will power?.
And also is this good for the person in the long run?

ANSWER: Hello Chandra,

Trust you are keeping well. Coming to the answers,

The use of any medicine or food supplement be it ayurvedic or other cannot help a man achieve true Brahmacharya if he were to expend his semen. One's sperm count in semen has nothing to do with 'Prâna' or vital energy in the body. Hence one does not conserve Prâna by reducing one's sperm count. There are many men with a low or absent sperm count who are extremely capable both physically and mentally and who possess good amounts of Prânic energy. The sperm within semen is only the medium of transfer of life energy and not the energy itself. The sperm is the electric wire and 'Prâna' the electricity. If there were no electricity, then what would be the use of the electric wire?

Prâna is not lost in the production of physical sperm in the absolute sense. Prâna is lost in 'surcharging' the sperm with life energy. The physical thing called sperm by itself has no power (like the electric wire without electric current). It is the induction of enormous amounts of life energy into the sperm that makes the sperm potent and capable of creating another life. And this life energy is directed to the sex glands under commands of the mind. So one has to control the mind to control and conserve this life energy.

We need to realize here that the final aim of Brahmacharya is to help man negate and erase the negative traits/tendencies (Vâsanâs) lodged within him due to past negative karma and thereby make it viable to reclaim the true state of purity and divinity that he represents as the soul. For this, he has to undertake a long journey first abstaining, then overcoming and finally becoming fully independent of desires for the sense temptations by realizing his true nature of soul bliss that is infinite in comparison with sexual pleasure.

This immediately points at the need to abstain from sexual pleasure at the mental level. It is not the body which enjoys sexual enjoyment but the mind. The body is again only the medium (like the electric wire transmitting current) which performs the sex act under the directions given by the mind. The body is only a mass of flesh that cannot enjoy or suffer. It is the mind which experiences the dualities of pleasure-pain, heat-cold etc.. This will make it clear that any effort at Brahmacharya merely aimed at suppressing the flow or altering the constitution of the sexual fluid is of no use even to the smallest extent. As long as the mind is not kept in check from enjoying sexual pleasure, one cannot derive the benefits of Brahmacharya in total.

Taking medicines that produce impotency will not make any difference as regards to the desires and cravings in the mind that are fueled by past karma. Taking such a medicine will not evolve man even a single step further in the process of evolution. Even if the entire sexual system in man comprising of all the sex glands were to be surgically removed, there would not be the slightest change as regards to the desires/wants and sexual cravings on a realistic basis (in terms of the ignorance wound around the soul). Removing this ignorance around the soul is a procedure that involves working at the highest, most subtle and abstract levels; for we are dealing with cleansing the dirt around the Âtman (soul) and the soul is formless, colorless, timeless, deathless and invisible. One has to first reach the level where he starts to comprehend what this soul is in reality and achieving this comprehension is something beyond the ability of the body, mind, intellect, consciousness and ego. These lower vehicles can only help man progress to a certain extent in the direction of enlightenment but cannot be used to know the soul. One can know the soul only from the soul. For achieving this supreme state, one has to fully rise beyond the limitations of the body, mind, intellect and ego.

A man who is enslaved by the concept of sexual pleasure cannot achieve this objective even to the smallest extent. He would achieve nothing more than wasting time and causing bodily harm by trying external aids such as medicines to change the constitution of his semen. In the long run, such an approach would leave him more debilitated and degenerated than the layman who has a normal sex life!

God bless and have a nice day :-)

---------- FOLLOW-UP ----------

QUESTION: Thanks for the detailed reply! Though I don't intend to follow or recommend this approach and wanted to the know the theoretical aspect only, you have more than answered my question, but still I have a doubt which I am not able to hide...
In the hypothetical case you have discussed, getting 'atma-jnana' may be a far cry, but I am just interested to know how things are going on at the pranic level...., as in the case of an impotent man or some one who is sexually disfunct by what ever means, how is his prana wasted as compared to one who is indulging...
May be I can give an example from mythology such as Arjuna becoming impotent from the curse of Urvasi, etc.
Please pardon me if I am asking too much or a stupid question.
Thanks!

Answer
There could be numerous causes for impotency; both physical, mental or a combination of both. There are many instances of men or women who are unable to procreate and yet have normal levels of Prâna. Impotency doesn't necessarily always occur due to lack of Prâna. While the reverse, lack of Prâna could lead to impotency. It is something like a man unable to salivate adequately while eating but may be quite normal at the Prânic level.

Immaterial of whether a person is sexually functional or defunct, he will loose Prâna to the same extent as any normal person does further to the sexual act accompanied by ejaculation. This is further to the fact that the major loss occurs at the energy plane and not the physical plane.

Plz guide me. Thank you

Answer
Hello Neeraj,

Good to hear of your practice of Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

Progress in Brahmacharya without the aid of Prânayâma is not impossible but would be an uphill task for most people. At the start of Brahmacharya and during the initial years, man is still very strongly connected to his past tendencies and impressions that have been accumulated over a span of many births by constant indulgence in 'Mâya'(Ignorance). His connection with these negative traits is often so strong that the pursuit of purity, divinity, sexless-ness and virtue appears contrary to one's nature. Unless one has a very strong commitment to cleansing oneself of the 'Avidya' (Ignorance) that has wound itself around the soul through immense devotion to God via complete surrender, it is not easy to succeed in this cleansing activity by 'Mânasik Japa' alone (Mental repetition of God's name)

The rationale behind the above statement becomes clear when we understand that the cleansing action must start at the physical or gross level. The physical, astral and causal bodies of the aspirant at the start of Brahmacharya are home to various toxins and impurities that are a result of his past actions.

Listed below are the directions of the actions to be carried our to cleanse these toxins present in different planes as per Yoga:

1. Through the practice of 'Yama-Niyama' the aspirant gets the mental strength and poise required to persevere the difficult path of reclaiming one's status of 'Âtma Bhâva'

2. Through 'Âsana' the physical body becomes fit, healthy and free from disease thereby allowing the aspirant to concentrate on God without aberration (A diseased mind and body lacks the energy and will to concentrate and focus on God). A person who does not practice Âsana should at least indulge in regular physical activity such as sports/exercise etc.. to attain robust and radiant health.

3. Through Prânayâma are removed the toxins and impurities in the body.

4. Through Prathyâhâra (withdrawal of the mind from the 5 senses of perception and action) are removed the impurities arising from the attachment of the mind to external objects.

5. Through Dhârana & Dhyâna are removed the impurities in the astral body

6. Through Samâdhi gets removed everything that hides the supremacy of the soul.

Prânayâma has been described as 'Tapas' of the highest order. It is a very special mode of breathing activity that makes man desire-less and peaceful; two very important requisites for anyone attempting self-realization. With constant and prolonged practice of Prânayâma, the mind becomes calm, serene, content and blissful. The mind starts to derive the bliss of the immortal Âtman and starts losing the tendency to seek entertainment from external sources. The control of Prâna through breath is the most effective way of controlling and regulating one's life energy. Unless one has succeeded in the control of his Prâna, absolute and unbroken Brahmacharya becomes impossible. Wet dreams will continue to occur and one cannot attain the state where he is completely free from the emission of spermatic fluid.

It is here that Prânayâma comes into the picture. After a year of practice of correct Prânayâma coupled with a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya, the 'Urdhvaretha Kriya' (also called the Vajroli Kriya) kicks into function. If the aspirant continues to maintain pure thoughts and actions scrupulously from this stage onwards, the ascent of semen to higher regions becomes automatic and natural. Semen which was earlier flowing downward and outwards now starts flowing upward and inwards. The secretion of semen within man gets lesser and lesser and his 'Ojas' increases drastically as a large amount of Prâna gets directly transformed into 'Ojas' without being converted into 'Rethas'(physical semen). This is when real Brahmacharya might be assumed to have begun. If one's efforts are honest and focussed the ascent towards becoming an 'Urdhvaretha' start falling in place.

If time happens to be a constraint, lessen Japa and meditation by half an hour and use these thirty minutes to perform Prânayâma before the start of Japa. This will result in deeper and more concrete focus during meditation; for Prânayâma is the foundation for all further effort at the mental plane involving Japa and meditation.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Namaste Guruji, hope you are at your best. I would like to take advantage of this portal and explore the topic of unity and fragmentation. Per my previous question, which you answered so profoundly, I wish to explore the mechanics of the physical, causal and spiritual progression towards self realization.
I have been practicing the austerities of Brahmacharya and have noticed upon practice that Maya has endless traps of cyclical enticements to keep me apart from god union. Are these the same temptations that the Buddha and Christ faced upon their overcoming the physical illusion? I liken it to a detoxification process with impurities coming to the surface in the form of negative manifestations. Am I far from the truth? I only wish to end the cycles and get to what is real and everlasting. My ego and sense of identity feel like roadblocks to this path.
Thank you for your graceful wisdom.

Answer
Hello Shawn,

Trust you have been keeping well. Good to hear of your efforts at Brahmacharya. Coming to the reply,

When we get to the root of anything 'aiding us' or 'working against us' as regards to the attainment of an objective, we finally realize that both these opposite pair of dualities spring from nowhere else but from within our own system. If we are able to effortlessly excel in a given activity, it is because we have developed the ability to focus and concentrate our Prâna (life energy) into the accomplishment of that particular activity (through our efforts in this birth or previous births). If we are unable to excel in a particular activity inspite of our repeated efforts, it is again because the required amount of life energy is not reaching the target objective. In other words, we may be in a state where we are yet to cultivate and master the art of focussing of Prâna to the required extent as regards to the particular objective on hand or there is a deficiency of the required amount of Prâna. If both these don't apply, there is something hindering the free flow of life energy into the target resulting in our inability at success. Man's success or failure as regards to the attainment of an objective depends largely on this simple and basic principle.

The practice of Brahmacharya towards attaining enlightenment is exactly similar and hinges on the same principle. The plays of Mâya we experience in the quest for Brahmacharya are a result of our own past indulgence in negative karma. These tendencies and impressions lodged in the Kârana sharira (causal body) surface every now and then and try to unsettle our progress. The only way to win freedom from their onslaught is to persevere relentlessly till each and every past impression of Mâya within us is rooted/weeded out.

The very purpose of a life of Yoga is to root out these past impressions and reclaim the lordship of the soul. All saints like Jesus, Buddha and many more had to face the tests of these onslaughts. They became a Jesus and Buddha because they had the will, determination, zest and perseverance to never give up until they reached their objective. All their efforts and aims were based on the timeless fact - " Yes the onslaughts of Mâya are strong, tricky and unpredictable. But I am the soul who is greater and more powerful than the strongest illusion of Mâya. I am bliss infinite and knowledge manifest. I am the soul who has no form, shape or color to get influenced by anthing with a form, shape or color. Where is the question of the concept of sex for the soul who is bliss himself in manifestation? I have not yet realized this great truth but I will shortly realize this truth on realizing my own self by the grace of God. I shall never give in or give up till my final destination is reached. If Mâya is strong, I will make my efforts stronger. I want nothing more in life than the accomplishment of this aim. This is life and everything else for me is death."

Our (the soul's) basic, default nature is purity, virtue, divinity and knowledge manifest. We (the soul) are forever in a state of infinite, permanent and unhindered state of knowledge and bliss. Then why does sorrow, desire for external objects and craving for enjoyment exist all around us? Why do we see people doing all sorts of things to attain happiness/pleasure and suffering from all sorts of pain and sorrow as an aftermath? One naturally gets the question - Why do we run after anything that hints at a promise of pleasure if we are the Âtman (soul) - who is bliss manifest and knowledge manifest?...

The answer is that the Âtman (soul) has been cocooned by layers of Avidyâ (ignorance) that is preventing the unhindered flow of this bliss, knowledge, joy and perfection from reaching outward. Like a light bulb that has layers of dust and dirt surrounding it thereby making it dim and dull, the layers of ignorance that have wound around the soul due to one's past karma make one forget his eternal state of bliss and joy and make him seek pleasure and excitement outward. Like a man who complains of there not being enough light in a room lit by the dust and dirt covered bulb and hence seeks additional illumination from say a torch, the embodied soul complains of its lacklusture, mundane existence and seeks excitement and pleasure from external objects through sense gratification, ultimately ending in sorrow.

What then is the solution to this problem? A sensual man addicted to sex and liquor will say :- ' I run after women and liquor as they are the only means for me to experience pleasure and excitement beyond normal limits. They are the means through which I experience pleasure at a high level in contrast to the pains and sorrows of life...This is like the man in the room seeking the aid of a torch to brighten the room lit by the dull/dust covered bulb. It is not seeking additional illumination that is wrong; what is wrong is wasting one's time and energy in finding an electric torch whose batteries will run out shortly when the brightest source of light is right above his head. All he needs to do is clean the bulb of the dust and dirt covering it and the room immidiately gets flooded with bright light in totality. In the same way the sensual man's desire for bliss and joy is in no way wrong. What is wrong is his approach at finding this bliss and joy. Like the man in the room found very bright light by cleaning and polishing the light bulb, the sensual man can win bliss and joy incomparable by giving up his life attached to the senses and concentrating on a life that leads to 'cleansing' the dust/dirt covered around the light bulb called the soul. He cannot win the entirety of this bliss in a few months or years, it might take many decades or even lifetimes. But it is an effort well worth the hardship. Unlike his earlier means of enjoyment through sex and liquor, the bliss and joy which one reclaims and rediscovers further to the full cleansing of the layers of dirt around the soul are permanent and infinite in time and magnitude. A man can lead a life of wanton sex and heavy alcoholism for a few decades at the most. But he has to pay a very, very heavy price at the end of this period in the form of degeneration of his physical, mental, karmic and financial health leading to extreme pain and sorrow through disease, degeneration, weakness & debility. Instead, if this same man were to set aside the same time, energy and will spent on lusting after women and wine at leading a life of unwinding the layers of ignorance around his soul, he would have been much more closer to the permanent and infinite bliss radiating from within his own self - The Âtman (soul); something that comes free of cost and is everlasting.

As the great saint Bhagavan Ramana Maharishi said -"Every man's craving for happiness and pleasure is his unconscious quest for self-realization". Each and every man we see running after sensual enjoyments through women, wine or wealth is a soul trying to reclaim its original state of bliss. What the man doesn't know is that the road he has taken does not lead to his objective of eternal pleasure. After taking a long, sensual journey on this road and after having suffered very deeply at the hands of women, wine and quest for immense wealth, the tired and weakened man finally relizes that he has taken the wrong road. The embodied soul then having realized it has journeyed on the wrong road in its quest for eternal pleasure accepts that there must be some other road that leads to its destination of eternal happiness. It then has to travel back all the way to where it started from in order to annul the performed karma and start afresh its quest for self-realization. There is no other way and this is the final and absolute truth. This is true for each and every living being born on earth whether we like it or not. Hence the question is not whether one wants self-realization. The question is 'How soon' one wants self-realization. The sensual man wastes his time and energy on the wrong road and after immense pain and suffering lasting many births comes back to the 'right road'. The Yogi chooses the right road and accomplishes his objective in a much shorter time.

The soul's real, default nature is infinite bliss and joy. But since this bliss has been covered by one's past karma the soul embodied within this fleshy body has forgotten its original state. Like a fish which always craves to swim in water and becomes unhappy if taken out of water, the embodied soul always craves for its original, default state of bliss and having forgotten this state runs after anything and everything which promises some amount of happiness (women, wine, wealth etc..) But women, wine and wealth give a very brief and temporary flash of pleasure, come at a very heavy price, are temporary sources of pleasure and leave man wanting for more. Finally even the most indulged man has to face great pain, sorrow and suffering at the hands of these three thereby getting back to square one and with more added negative karma. So they really don't solve man's problem of wanting infinite and supreme pleasure that is ever lasting. If man wants this everlasting and infinite pleasure, there is only one place where he can find it and that is within himself. As soon as man succeeds in realizing his self (Âtman) as an extension of the almighty Lord, he gets freed forever from the bounds of pain and sorrow and reclaims his lordship of the soul. But this is an endeavor that is easier said than done. It is a project that requires constant effort and perseverance, sometimes lasting many lifetimes from the point of onset. But it would be a journey well worth the hardships, discipline and perseverance required.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

Question
Hello there,
I just wanted to ask, does physical celibacy increase physical athleticism?

Answer
Hello Williams,

Mere physical celibacy (Abstaining from sex or masturbation) has little benefits in the long run, though in the short run it does improve one's physical health to a certain extent. For celibacy to bear fruits, it must be converted into 'Brahmacharya' or spiritually based sexual continence. In other words, one must not suppress one's sexual urges but must annihilate these sexual urges themselves by rooting them out from their source (ignorance).

The words 'celibacy' and 'Brahmacharya' are very different in meaning and have little in common. A celibate is one who merely refrains from physical sex; but whose mind might be constantly pondering on the sex plane. Such a person cannot grow spiritually and become free from wet dreams or masturbation. 'Celibacy' is merely physical not spiritual.

'Brahmacharya' refers to freedom from and abandonment of all forms of sexual enjoyment in thought, word and deed at all places and times with constant devotion and surrender to God. A Brahmachari strives to revert to the default nature of his pure soul which is free from the concept of sex, desire and craving for sense pleasures. Through his constant striving he overcomes the acquired sexual conditioning the mind has grown accustomed to from his past actions and gradually reverts to the sex-free nature of the soul.

If a man or woman were to merely suppress their sexual urges physically whilst the mind constantly pondered on them, it would result in the advent of ill health and disease both at the physical and mental levels. Brahmacharya refers to a mode of life that aims at preventing the very birth of these sexual urges at the mental level and not at their suppression. Thus one gradually succeeds in reverting the mind to the pure, sex-free nature of the soul.

Question
AFTER CLOSING THE MENSTRUAL CYCLE DUE TO OLD AGE....FEMALE ALSO HAVE SEX....WHY?...

Answer
Hello Prakash,

The desire for recreational sex, be it in a man or woman is due to the presence of'Agnyâna'(Ignorance) around the Jivâtma (Degenerated individual soul).

Age is for the body; not for the mind and the past Vâsanâs (Tendencies) that it is associated with. A man or woman may be ninety years old yet full of sexual desires. When we refer to the age of a person, it means that his/her physical body is ninety years old. The mind has no age and sexual desires are a product of the mind. One's age and physical condition have nothing to do with it.

Question
QUESTION: Hi, I have read over your past answers and have been trying for total celibacy over the course of many years. My problem is that whenever I get to around 2 months to 3 months of celibacy, I start getting such increased energy and euphoria that my perspective and awareness changes and I enter into a somewhat manic state. During these times, I can't really take care of or am even conscious of my day to day needs and I was hospitalized and diagnosed with bipolar disorder even though I have never been depressed. Again this is triggered by prolonged celibacy and the process is exacerbated if I meditate as well. Please let me know, what is going on? I am 29 now, and these episodes happened during all during my 20s, the last one was about a year ago.

ANSWER: Hello Trevor,

Trust you are keeping well. Coming to the answers,

Bipolar disorder or manic-depressive illness which is an abnormality stemming from the brain resulting in extreme mood swings is essentially a condition that generally develops in a person during one's late teens or early adult years. Most cases exist in a dormant to mild form right from the person's teens & start showing up before the mid twenties.

Your mentioning of the fact that these episodes have shown up in you from your early twenties correlates with the recognized symptoms of Bipolar Disorder.

Most people associated with the disorder might generally have one or more of the following factors associated with them at one point of time or the other:

1. Substance abuse which might include alcohol, drugs, chemicals etc..

2. An over-erratic and extreme lifestyle based around excessive sex with frequently changing random partners or alcoholism coupled with activities causing severe disturbance into the sleep cycle, mental trauma or extreme emotions that oscillate between opposite poles.

3. Genetic traits that suggest a family history of Bipolar Disorder or other Psychiatric disorders.

If there has been an incidence of Points 1 or 2 mentioned above in your life, I would suggest you to immediately put a complete stop to such activity and lead a balanced and healthy lifestyle giving up all forms of substance abuse, random sexual relations, a life of sustained and extreme partying late into the night or early morning hours that disturb the sleep cycle and concentrate on getting 7 hours of deep sleep every day. Coupled with this is the need to keep the mind free from activities or states that generate extreme emotions of all kinds. If these two points don't apply to you; well and good ensure that such a lifestyle is never embarked upon.

Point 3 occurs due the presence of disorder oriented genes passed down from parents as a result of 'negative karma' accrued in the past that one has to work out in the present existence. Modern medicine also recognizes the fact that children with a parent, sibling or relatives with Bipolar Disorder are four to six times more likely to develop the illness, compared to children who do not have a family history of the disorder.

As of today, modern medicine does not know the exact cause of Bipolar disorder.

As of today, modern medicine does not have an established cure for Bipolar Disorder.

A life of Brahmacharya will eventually help overcome the disorder completely or to a large extent based on the intensity of the disorder governed by the karma one has to work out as per the destiny generated by one's past deeds.

The anti-depressants/mood stabilizers and psychiatric medicines prescribed by modern medicine have vast side effects leading to debilitation and degeneration of overall general health in the long run. One must take a personal call and decide whether he/she wants to take the medicinal route in trying to cure oneself (which does not remove the cause of the disorder but only suppresses the symptoms externally) or an alternate route based on Yoga & Brahmacharya (which can weed out the very cause of the illness beyond the physical and mental levels right unto the karmic level). The decision is fully left to the patient and is based on his/her discretion.

I shall now explain the approach to the problem based on a life of Brahmacharya:

The mind is an extremely sensitive and delicate vehicle that God has provided man to recognize and sense the world around him and to finally realize his own self. It is for man to recognize this fact and cultivate habits and a lifestyle that lead to health, well being and purity of the mind. If let to stray and function randomly in activities not to be indulged in, the mind becomes the vehicle of man's destruction. This will manifest in the present birth or in future births based on one's karma. There is no doubt about this fact.

1. One should completely give up alcohol, tobacco, drugs highly processed, seasoned, salted and spiced food and restrict oneself to bland and light food.
2. Lifestyle should be puritanical and yogic with regular physical exercise, Prânayâma and meditation. The company of people/situations that irritate, agitate and ruffle up unsavory emotions should be gully given up if one wishes results. The mind should be kept calm and relaxed to tbe best possible extent without getting incolved in the outcome of one's actions.
3. While meditating and also otherwise, one must fully surrender to God with love and devotion and pray to him to absolve one of all sins and negative karma that has caused the disorder. Absolute beleif and surrender do wonders.
4. Brahmacharya should be total and willingly done. Mere suppression and snubbing of sexual thoughts cause problems rather than solving them. It should be in thought, word and deed and not repression of the sexual urge. As soon as a sexual thought starts to arise, one must not fight it but must replace it with an opposite and pure thought.

Prânayâma forms a very important constituent in one's efforts to overcome health problems and mental disturbances (refer to the past answer on how to perform Prânayâma). If performed correctly with a life based on Yama-Niyama (refer past answers on Yoga), Prânayâma does wonders within a years time in establishing superlative mental and physical health.

To sum up, all mental and physical deviations from radiant health are a result of wrongful actions from the past in this or previous births. A life of Yoga is the best and most concrete method to help one obtain releif.

May God bestow you with radiant health and well being and absolve you from the problem on hand

QUESTION: Thank you for your response, but perhaps I was not clear about my situation. My attempts at Brahmacharya was the trigger for this increased energy and mania. You suggest that Brahmacharya is the solution but don't address why it may cause such issues. My feeling is that the reason I get manic when I take to Brahmacharya is that my bad karma is being brought to the surface and flushed out, and it messes with my head. I guess you don't need to respond again, but I want to emphasize that a puritanical lifestyle of Brahmacharya was what triggered these episodes.

Answer
Hello Trevor,

Thanks for elaborating and clarifying on your query. Coming to the matter,

First and foremost, a life of Brahmacharya can never be the 'CAUSE' of any abnormality, illness, ailment or deviation from radiant health at the mental or physical levels.

Mark the word 'CAUSE'. Diseases and deviations from robust health occur in each and every person due to the presence of bad karma which is a result of past misdeeds. So the actual 'CAUSE' behind any disease or illness is past negative karma' that has warranted the induction of this disease into the body. The practice of Brahmacharya puts man onto the path where these 'toxins' and 'impurities' that have been inducted into the physical, astral and causal bodies due to bad karma find it impossible to continue their stay and start getting flushed out. The 'flushing out' of toxins always involves a moderate and temporary recurrence of the disease at the point when the toxin 'resurfaces' and then finally leaves the body forever.

When a venomous snake moves into the house and starts to reside, it isn't seen all the time but shows up every now and then and bites the residents of the house. Now if we were to try and drive this venomous snake out of the house, firstly the snake would put up resistance against being driven out. If our efforts are persistent and sincere, the cornered snake finally finding it impossible to bear the onslaught further, would try biting the attacker for one last time. But the danger and adventure would be an effort well worth the trouble since we are having a showdown with the snake for the one last time and would be driving it out forever only to be permanently free from being bitten every now and then...

The presence of disease causing 'toxins and impurities' within one's body is very much the same and could be compared to the snake. These toxins have landed there in the first place due to past negative karma and are in a state of permanent residence troubling the person every now and then or waiting to increase in volume and finally surface as a deadly, incurable disease. Brahmacharya becomes an efficient weapon with which the aspirant starts to poke and drive out these toxins. When the practice becomes prolonged and consistent, these toxins being unable to stay longer surface and briefly manifest for a certain time in the form of the disease they represent. Now the time required for these toxins to get fully flushed out depends on the intensity of Brahmacharya and the magnitude of the toxin present within. A heavy deposit of toxins further to much negative karma might take longer to vacate than a lighter load of the same. But the aspirant has no choice but to persist in vacating these toxins, for this purification is something he has to carry out now if not later. One can never side step accrued karma, be it good karma or bad karma. Why not get clear of the karma now and permanently forever?... Postponing this activity will only make life worse as these toxins have the potential to trouble a person every now and then and cause further complications (like living in the snake infested house and being prone to snakebite).

So the question is not whether one wants to vacate these toxins or not...It is 'how soon' one wants to vacate impurities present within the physical, astral and causal bodies. We don't have a choice in deciding whether we take up this cleansing or don't. These toxins have come into the Jivâtma (embodied soul) due to its past misdeeds and have been inducted in the first place for it to learn some important lessons and rectify its past mistakes. The embodied soul now having taken up Brahmacharya (again as per divine destiny) has been given a chance to get rid of these toxins, rise above them and evolve further in its quest to reclaim its lordship. Like everything else that happens around us for a reason, the whole chronology of events is decided by divine will and deliberation. For this reason man is only the 'tool' and not the 'doer'. It is God who performs each and every action with the final aim of making the degenerated soul regenerate into knowing its true nature and reclaim its supremacy.

I would suggest you to continue to focus on an honest, persistent and relentless life of Brahmacharya with complete surrender and devotion to God, following which it becomes easier for man to come to terms with his karma and march ahead in reclaiming his true nature of undulating bliss.

God bless

Question
First of all thanks to you Dhananjay, My question is what is kundalini and kundalini awakening? How it is linked with brahmacharya and what changes take effect in body after kundalini has been awaken?

Answer
Hello Rupesh,

Hope you are keeping well. Coming to the reply,

The word 'Kundalini' (A derivative of the Sanskrit word 'Kundala' - meaning coil, denoting a three and half coiled snake) also called serpent power is a term that is used to denote potential energy of the realm of 'Prakriti' (creative principle of nature) present within man in the dormant form. Awakening of this creative energy to the state where it rises to higher planes and becomes available to the person for harnessing into productivity is referred to as 'Kundalini awakening'.

Yoga tells us that this enormous energy is present within all living beings including animals in a dormant and passive state. In man, the dormant resting place of Kundalini is the Mûlâdhâra chakra the region located near the basal end of the spinal column (coccygeal region). The ascent of Kundalini and its movement to higher planes occurs through the 'Sushumna Nâdi' (An important astral energy channel within the spinal chord) and hence this is possible only in the case of man who has an erect and vertical spine unlike animals who have a curved and horizontal spine (The reason why Yogi's sit erect with their spine straight during Prânayâma & while meditating).

The human birth thus signifies that stage of evolution where the Almighty Lord has given a chance for the Jivâtma (embodied soul) to rise above the animal senses and reclaim its original and default state of God-bliss through the process of self-realization. But for self-realization to fructify, man has to rise above his earthly senses, tendencies and take his vital power to higher planes and unearth his creative potential represented by 'Kundalini' in these higher regions.

Kundalini awakening and Brahmacharya are very intricately connected and complete awakening cannot take place without Brahmacharya. We must remember here that the word 'Kundalini' is only a symbolic representation of the dormant creative potential in man. The sleeping three and half coiled snake that is used to denote Kundalini is only a symbol of the sleeping and dormant creative power within man which he has not been properly harnessed. As a snake becomes active and powerful when aroused from slumber, man's creativity and genius shine further to the full use of his creative power represented by Kundalini. In a man rooted to the senses and losing much of his vital energy through base sexual activity and other earthly pleasures, there is no chance for his creative power to get conserved and transmuted into something higher beyond the material realm. Since by losing one's semen and thereby losing one's Prâna, all vitality and energy is lost, man becomes ineligible to get in touch with his higher powers and talents inherent within the Atman (soul) - A prerequisite for superlative achievements in both the materialistic and spiritual planes.

Conservation and transmutation of one's vital energy (represented by semen in the gross form) into 'Ojas' (divine astral power) continuously for a period of twelve years without break results in the complete and total awakening of the latent superpower present within under God's grace. The immense amount of conserved Prâna then helps Kundalini gradually ascend to higher planes (represented by the seven chakras, denoting the seven worlds) and brings out the more powerful and subtle powers represented by the soul in the form of 'Siddhis' (supernormal powers). If the Yogi ignores these powers and focuses this mammoth energy at realizing himself, it becomes possible to achieve the objective of self-realization and thus fructify the aim of human existence.

The Brahmachari Yogi concentrates on a life of absolute Brahmacharya through adequate physical activity, intellectual work and God-meditation, following which his Kundalini automatically gets awakened through God's grace in course of time and he becomes very eligible to realize his self. A Kundalini Yogi works towards awakening his dormant power through a variety of 'kriya-s' and also reaches the same goal. Both are like the two faces of the same coin.

The changes that occur by the complete awakening of Kundalini or the enlightenment that follows further to a life of unbroken Brahmacharya with God-meditation are one and the same. To put it short, all powers of the soul get manifest and man realizes his oneness with the Almighty creator, finally to merge into him and complete the purpose of the human existence, never to be reborn again.

God bless and have a nice day :-)

I am 34 &half a year boy.I have been celibate from 7 months ago.I have two big problem.the first & more important one is my obsession.
I have had a mind full of obsession,easily irritated along with negative & somehow complicated emotions from 18 years ago.I take fluoxetine 10 mg once a day & I would be much worse if I didn't take it.Is there any hope for me to be cured by celibacy?I have done some practices of yoga esp pranayamas & trataka irregularly more in 5 to 3 years ago without celibacy(because of shortage of informations, I always failed maintaining celibacy that time).during these 5 years I got worse.my mind & thoughts got more dull & tamasic & I have lost my emotional & imaginary memory in a large extent.although I didn't much overindulge in these practices & yet I really believe in these practices if they get done with an appropriate program & choice.
another problem is a mild arthritis which I have in my left hip further to overstretched thigh tendons lead to so little instability of hip joint & my left leg have been gotten a bit longer than right leg so that when I bend over to stretch my legs , my right knee do not open fully like left leg .how does celibacy affect it along with suitable exercise?I have started taichichuan 9 month ago regularly in a class but yet I don't get an acceptable result of it. please reply & clarify these.
I'd like to share my personal experience with a simple way to help maintaining celibacy.Pran modra (one kind of hasta modra) help it.
connect tips of little finger & ring finger with tip of thumb smoothly.hold middle & index fingers strait with a smooth connect.
another way is to put thumb on the nails of little & ring finger smoothly & the rest is like previous.

Answer
Hello Ali,

Good to hear of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

As mentioned in earlier posts, the incidence of all diseases and deviations from robust and radiant health in a person is due to the presence of past negative karma that introduces toxins into the body. These toxins then become conducive in attracting disease causing micro-organisms or lead to inefficient and deficit flow of Prâna within the Nâdis (astral energy channels.) Brahmacharya, if carried out with a life of Yoga with honesty, sincerity and devotion with surrender to God asking for solace will beyond doubt help in the gradual removal of the negative karma which is the actual source of the malady, unlike external allopathic medicines which succeed in snubbing the effects/symptoms of the disease but do not remove the cause of the disease. The effect of allopathic antibiotics is immediate and rapid in initially curtailing the symptom but not the cause. In the long run, these medicines create a gamut of side effects and ruin the overall health leading to many other new problems. The practice of a life of Yoga with absolute Brahmacharya on the other hand is slower but very thorough in rooting out the very cause behind the problem.

As regards the problem relating to the obsessive disorder, a life of Yoga carried out with sincerity and devotion with surrender to God will gradually remove the related toxins. Note however that these toxins have been inducted into the body due to a valid reason in the first place. The very principle behind karma is to teach the Jivâtma (embodied soul) a few lessons. These lessons it learns through suffering the disease, never to repeat them again. This is how the embodied soul learns and rectifies upon its mistakes in the course of evolution. Immaterial of whether we are prepared or not prepared to undergo the pain further to a disease, the quantity of pain that should be applied on the Jivâtma for 'lesson learning' will always be applied by divine destiny. None is capable of side-stepping this cosmic phenomenon whether he wants it or doesn't. This is the reason why we have cases of people with a life long problem of say a defective or debilitated heart, lung or kidney that fails to get right despite being treated at the best super-specialty hospitals under the watchful eyes of highly specialized doctors. Modern medicine by itself knows little as to the exact reason behind 'why' most diseases or conditions persist in the human system, for its purview and limitation ends at the physical and at most the lower areas of the mental levels. Also, many areas within these physical/mental levels are themselves unclear to medicine and it knows nothing of the causal and karmic levels of man.

If an attempt at trying to solve the problem through a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya is wholly acceptable by you (as complete devotion and belief forms a vital component in progress), the following procedure will help:

1. The intake of all drugs/mood stabilizers/anti-depressants must be gradually reduced and finally stopped. One's belief must be - " I have sinned in the past and hence am facing this problem. However I have absolute devotion and surrender to God and the strong belief that he takes care of all who come to him with their heart and soul and who are prepared to atone for their mistakes. I will get cured through the divine life of Yoga and Brahmacharya and will not induct more toxins into my system through anti-biotics/drugs. I am prepared to face the hardships that may come in this path with determination and zest knowing that I shall gradually be rid of the cause of the problem in course of time through divine grace".

2. Wake up early in the morning before sunrise, immediately have a bath, sit for a few minutes in an Âsana that you find comfortable and honestly pray to God asking him to redeem you of all faults and purify you to perfection. There is one and only one Absolute God in the entire Universe. The Hindus call him Brahman, the Christians call him the Christ and he is called Allah in Islam. All these religions are like the different roads that lead to the same destination. Honest, sincere prayer and love shown to God be it through the tenets of Hinduism, Christianity, Islam or any other religion all go to the one Almighty Lord/Universal creator.

Now perform a few stretches, followed by the below mentioned Âsanas for improved flow of Prâna (life energy) within the legs/thighs and the brain :
1. Paschimothânâsana
2. Pâdahasthâsana
3. Sarvangâsana
4. Shirâsana

If practicing these postures is difficult at the initial stage, persist and gently coax the body into performing them over a period of time. Do not give up.

3. Upon completion, perform 'Tribandha' (Mûla Bandha, Uddiyâna Bandha, Jâlandhara Bandha) preferably by sitting in Padmâsana, Vajrâsana or Sidhâsana whichever you find convenient (Methods of doing all these can be Google searched)

4. Now perform Nadi Shodhana and then Prânayâma (As has been explained in past answers on this portal titled -'Pranayama and Yoga for Brahmacharya')

5. Finally meditate on God asking nothing in return. Do not make personal requests for grant of health, wealth etc.. while meditating. Meditate on God with pure devotion and love for the sake of sincere worship to this great and supreme being and nothing else.

6. Constantly repeat the name of God through the course of the day or whenever possible. Do not let violent, irritating or impure thoughts flower in the mind (people, movies, music and all other sources that may generate such thoughts are to be strictly avoided).

7. Repeat the procedure of Yoga as mentioned above at 6 P.M in the evening

8. Have a light dinner consisting only of a little milk, a salad of a few fruits and 3-4 green/raw vegetables as early as possible and retire to bed no longer than 9.30 P.M. Before retiring to bed, the last thought on one's mind should again be God and nothing else.

A sense of love, mercy and compassion to help people and be kind to all living beings and trees creates a positive vibration in the cosmos and enriches one's aura (astral body) with positivity and health. This automatically replaces the Tâmasic bodily currents with Sâthwic (pure) currents which in turn leads to mental peace, serenity and well being.

This procedure if followed for a period of a complete year with the strict practice of Yama-Niyamas (As has been explained in past answers on this portal titled -'Pranayama and Yoga for Brahmacharya') with a sense of love and compassion for all people, animals and trees with honest and sincere Brahmacharya will start the purification and detoxification of the Nâdis (astral channels) and shift man into the track of purification and health. This is the truth and is beyond doubt.

May God bless you with health, happiness and well being.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

My question is that when I set up a vow of celibacy, I encounter withdrawal symptoms like irritability, headache, sleeplessness. Mostly my external work environment which is highly stressful is like adding fuel to the fuel. Sometimes, when I am on a 1 month vacation or something like it and take a vow of celibacy, eventhough, I encounter such withdrawals, I have the capacity to cope with it because I exclusively try to stay with it, bring some understanding to it, negotiate with it and move to a safer place many times within myself.

1. What is your advice to manage withdrawal symptoms

2. Knowing my job will be stressful, very boring, monotonous sometimes, what would be your advise to manage celibacy amidst stress and boredom?

Answer
Hello Srikanth,

Hope you are keeping fine. Coming to the answers,

The withdrawal symptoms that you refer to are a 'reaction' put forth by the body and the mind that occur in varying degrees in some people during the initial stages of Brahmacharya. It is in the nature of both the body and the mind to post a reaction further to any notable change in its routine either externally and internally.

An example to demonstrate this point would be the 'fever' which briefly occurs in a person further to inoculation. The very purpose of inoculation is to develop resistance within the body against a particular disease. Now when a person is administered with say an anti-typhoid injection, the body 'reacts' to this foreign matter in the blood stream by producing anti-bodies that result in a brief fever for say a day or two. This 'fever' is the reaction of the body whilst it is fighting the foreign matter and developing anti-bodies that in turn give resistance and build immunity against the particular disease.

Another example of reaction would be the advent of muscular pain when a person first starts an exercise or a sport. If a person were to start the practice of sprinting afresh today, he would find it practically very hard to run the next day due to immense pain in the leg muscles. Now exercise is basically a healthy and life vitalizing activity and sprinting strengthens the muscles of the legs, yet the body gets subjected to leg pain from the very activity that is supposed to strengthen it... why is this? This is again due to the 'reaction' posted by the body against the sudden and abrupt change in its normal routine. Since the person has not subjected his leg muscles to this kind of a stress and strain earlier, the muscles react to their new found state of stress through pain. Again this is not something serious or worrisome, for continuing the act of sprinting day after day acclimatizes these muscles to 'settle down' and become fit for the new routine and they don't show signs of pain after a few days of regular sprinting activity.

The practice of Brahmacharya is no different. However in this case the reactions occur at multiple planes viz. the physical, mental, karmic planes and these reactions are most often based on years of past activities and tendencies, sometimes even dating back to many past lives in the human and animal forms. So it really isn't surprising to find people taking quite a bit of time to come to terms with the drastic change in thinking and attitude that Brahmacharya requires. Some people find an increase in sexual urge, anger, irritability, depression and mood swings at the start of Brahmacharya while others find themselves having more frequent wet dreams, increased hunger, lack of hunger or thirst etc.. to name a few. These are only indications that the body, mind and psyche is trying to adjust to the new lifestyle and settle into harmony. The magnitude of these reactions varies from person to person and depends on the mental, physical and karmic levels of evolution in the person. A person who was less sexed, less aggressive and more spiritual even before the start of Brahmacharya might show lesser reactions than a person who is the opposite. The honest and gradual increase in the period of Brahmacharya from a few days to a fortnight, then to a month followed by a few months and finally to years of the practice helps the body settle into its new lifestyle without any backlash.

The most important thing to note here is to carry out Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed and never to merely physically abstain with the mind rife with sexual thoughts. The energy conserved needs a proper channel to manifest and this channel is to be presented in the form of regular physical exercise, mental/intellectual work and most importantly spiritual activity in the form of God-meditation. Also necessary is staying clear of people, circumstances, sights, sounds and talks that are contrary to the tenets of Brahmacharya and that may agitate and unsettle the mental calmness and harmony the aspirant is working towards. This automatically makes a person more cheerful and at peace with himself and his surroundings making it easier to settle into the newfound mode of lifestyle and helps cope more efficiently with withdrawal symptoms.

The right attitude to one's occupation and work is to view it as a part of one's Dharma (duty) and engage in it cheerfully, light heartedly, honestly and with a positive perspective without bothering about the fruits. Immaterial of whether we want it or don't, destiny and our past karma offers us a particular path to be tread for overall evolution. It is through this path alone that the person evolves and grows and this path ultimately serves as the medium for one's progress in the journey called life.

One's attitude to work should be - " I will give my best at the work God has provided me with to sustain myself and silently watch as a witness without bothering about the fruits of my actions, all the time being immersed and engrossed in God thought and contemplation. I will not be attached to the fruits that my work may or may not bring but will wholeheartedly engage in work with sincerity. Let God handle the fruits of my work, I will accept what comes to me as forwarded by him, for he is the most impartial and loving well wisher that has existed and will ever exist".

Such an attitude helps one take the routine of life with a light hearted perspective and will prevent states of anger, excitement, boredom or depression, gradually transferring one into the realm of bliss. When do these negative traits bother us? They can bother and torment us only when we are dependent on a particular action and its result as the source of our happiness and well being. If we were to instead transfer God contemplation and God thought as our mainstream activity and main source of happiness, what we would do or not do in the mundane plane of life or at the workplace would have no effect on our mental state and well being. This is what the Bhagavad-Gita professes and preaches. The root cause of man's sorrow is his dependence on objects other than God as a source of his well being. If he were to gradually give up this dependence and increase his dependence on God thought as his chief activity through meditation, his pains and sorrows would soon find no place to rest and vacate.

Wishing you all the best for a life of Brahmacharya,

Question

I have diabetes since I was 15.At present I am 19 years old,taking insulin injections since the last 2 years.Before that my diabetes was easily controlled by oral medications.But then my diet went horribly wrong and now I am dependent on daily insulin injections.

I regularly read the Gita ,do daily japa and pranayama(kapalbhati,anulom vilom),follow Brahmacharya; since the last 1 month.Though I am very much interested in getting spiritual progress,I would like to know can Brahmacharya also cure/control my diabetes apart from providing spiritual progress?

Answer
Hello Kaushal,

Good to know of your practice of Brahmacharya. Coming to the subject,

A life of Brahmacharya and Yoga will definitely aid in establishing health and well being immaterial of what the disease is at the physical, mental and karmic fronts. Having said this, one should bear in mind that past negative karma that produces these diseases or deviations from normal well being takes its own time to work out and exhaust. Deviations from health represent past negative karma while Brahmacharya and Yoga represent present efforts in the opposite direction. What has been done in the karmic cycle will also definitely be undone but the time taken entirely depends on the magnitude of past karma and the extent of our present efforts. Those who have a large store of past negative karma suffer many years, decades or lives with the malady while a lighter karmic load exhausts itself faster in a shorter period of time, thereby freeing one of suffering earlier.

Immaterial of whether a man is afflicted with disease or not, there is one and only one correct path for the progressive, sensible and right thinking man wishing happiness. This is the path of non-violence, truthfulness, non-stealing, good character and virtue.

Non-violence here doesn't limit itself to abstinence from causing another physical injury. It includes desisting from all acts which may cause physical or mental pain to all living beings and trees including oneself. If a man overeats, has a bad lifestyle that leads to ill-health and abuses his mind or body with acts leading to their degeneration, he causes violence to his own self and will have to pay for it later with some disease or debility that afflicts him due to the negative karma accrued. The body and mind are gifts of the Almighty for man to realize his own self. They are the mediums through which the embodied soul evolves into the pure soul. Each animal or living creature values its body, mind and well being to the same extent as one values his own. These are very dear and priceless to all living creatures. Causing the smallest hurt to another hence equals causing the same hurt to one's own body and mind; for in reality the underlying self (soul) within all creatures is one and the same... A manifestation of the supreme being.

If a man constantly causes mental pain and suffering even to the smallest extent to another, the bad karma that attaches itself to him causes a similar and equitable reaction in his own case at a later period. Afflicting others with mental pain causes much mental distress or even diseases of the mind to manifest in the doer if the karma is very strong. The laws of karma formulated by the Almighty are very just, impartial and thorough in their working. Each action and reaction are equal and opposite without exception. What we do to others comes back to us. Hence we should try our best to do good and if not possible, at least not do bad.

This is the bedrock on which all happiness and suffering including health depend upon. Our past misdeeds give us pain in the present. If there is a debility or deviation from radiant health in the form of an ailment, we can be sure that we are paying for some past wrong doing of ours. The accrued karma will work itself out and cause that much suffering as is required to atone for the past wrong action. What is this atonement? It is the process by which the Jivâtma (embodied soul) realizes it mistake and rectifies its negative tendency, never to repeat the act. A man who might have cut the limb of another in his past birth finds himself born lame or meets with an accident that decapitates his limb and causes him life long suffering and invalidity. He realizes the importance and dearness of the bodily part through the pain he suffers, the tears he sheds and the agony he bears thus learning a lesson through the law of the Almighty.

Brahmacharya and a life of Yoga if carried out rightly constitute a way of life which ensure that man is prevented from further indulging in negative karma. A true Yogi strives to lead a life of non-violence, desists from speaking the untruth, does not take anything from anyone that does not lawfully belong to him, maintains a virtuous character by not indulging in recreational sexuality and remains non-possessive and unattached to all external objects and internal emotions. These tenets serve as an iron-armor in preventing the formation of new negative karma and give him the strength and means to reduce past karma effectively. Since we now know past negative karma as the source of all unhappiness be it at the body or the mind level, the Yogi leads a lifestyle that prevents the formation of further negative karma that he has to again live with if accrued. In course of time, all his past negative karmas work out without the addition of new ones and the result is the pure soul free from all blemish filled with bliss.

This description of the cause behind all diseases/debilities and illnesses has been provided here with an intention of enlightening readers the connection between our actions and their results. The disease and the body by itself are only the mediums through which nature makes one realize an important lesson in the law of life via suffering. It is the cause which lies in the form of past karma that fuels suffering in the present. Hence one must lead a life of virtue, goodness and spirituality if one wishes for a better tomorrow.

The practice of Yoga with Brahmacharya thus puts man in the right track as regards to his future actions and efficiently starts burning past actions. Coupled with this the increased 'Ojas' (divine astral power) that accrues due to the conservation and transmutation of semen within the system, re-vitalizes and renews the debilitated parts gradually, leading to overall health and well being of body and mind. All organs slowly start getting restored to their default state of perfect working & function. The speed with which this process occurs varies from person to person based on his/her individual karma. Hence this mode of life is an endeavor well worth the effort for everyone wishing happiness & well being.

It is good to hear of your efforts at Yoga and Brahmacharya. Perform 'Paschimothânâsana' both in the morning and evening, daily without fail before Prânayâma. This works wonders in the control and cure of diabetes along with many other health benefits. Within a year of unbroken Brahmacharya coupled with the above mentioned âsana, prânayâma and a life of yoga, you will be able to see a notable improvement in overall health and a reduction in the severity of diabetes. It would not be surprising if continued practice totally annuls the problem by the grace of God in the years to come.

Question

Hello sir, I am a 26 years old man from northern india. I masturbated 10-15 times during a time span of 6-8 months when i was 15. But then i somehow came to know about brahmcharya and i quit masturbation for ever. I did have wet dreams every now and then and i still have them but not too frequently. It was like once every month or two months. Thereafter i always kept myself busy with my studies first and now with my job. But the question i want to ask here is that even after such a long period of purity and celibacy I notice no significant and positive change mentaly or physically in myself. I mean though i am not a dumb. Actually i was quite a bright student throughout my school and a topper in 10th. But i suffered in my later studies and now at my job too i can not say i am any better than an average at all. May be i m going too far and all this has nothing to do with Brahmcharya. But i sometimes just wonder, what is this big fuss about celibacy? The so called un-celibates too are doing fairly good (actually sometimes far better even) in this world.
This is truely my innocent submission. Plz reply.

Answer
Hello Sandeep,

Hope you are keeping well. This is an interesting question that you have posed which would serve to clear the doubts of many people out there as regards to the need for Brahmacharya. Coming to the queries,

Q1: "Even after such a long period of purity and celibacy I notice no significant and positive change mentally or physically in myself"
A: What do you think would be your physical, mental, emotional and karmic state if your last 10 years of life had been high on masturbation? On what basis can it be said that there have been no benefits? A strong & healthy man may say in a discontented tone - "There is nothing special about my health and well being". Ask a diseased, ill and debilitated man the meaning of health and he will say - " I'm prepared to give all my wealth, fortune and property if someone could fill this degenerated body of mine with health, robustness and well being. Oh! How I wish I could be happy and unmindful of my body like that child playing with abandon and cheer".

We often fail to recognize and acknowledge what we possess and do so only after we have lost it. A life devoid of evil habits such as masturbation goes a long way in establishing physical, mental and spiritual well being. Had you spent the last decade of your life high on this activity, the negative effects would have been very clear and transparent for you to see. Isn't it your good luck and God's grace that you didn't try out the nasty experiment?

Q2: " I sometimes just wonder, what is this big fuss about celibacy? The so called un-celibates too are doing fairly good (actually sometimes far better even) in this world."
A: It is a well known fact that alcoholism and tobacco consumption are bad for health. Does this mean that all people who smoke or drink become weak, degenerated and debilitated a few weeks or months down the line? No. Are the effects of tobacco and alcohol consumption seen vividly in all people soon after they start consumption? No. Some may get weaker in a few months, some in a few years, some others may develop lung or liver problems after a few decades while others may not show any negative symptoms at all for half their life only to be diagnoised with mouth and lung cancer due to excessive smoking or a damaged liver/kidney due to alcoholism in the evening years of their life...

The Practice of Brahmacharya and its effects run on a parallel note. The purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. If man were to limit his sexual activity at fathering children and conserve/transmute the reserve reproductive fluid through sublimation, it would target at building the finest bone, muscle, nerves and brain leading to a laudable intellect, memory, discriminative ability and overall well being.

If sexual activity on the other hand is used for recreation/entertainment the downside outweighs the pleasure by an incomparable margin. The sexual act shatters the entire nervous system. Since it creates great excitement, great agitation and such an intensity of feeling that as an aftermath it leaves the person exhausted and depleted. 'Dopamine' which is secreted during an orgasm and which is chiefly responsible for the 'high' that a person experiences during climax recedes soon after the act is complete. If man has to experience this 'high' again, he has to repeat the sexual act. Constant indulgence in the sexual act for enjoying orgasmic pleasure thus causes enormous loss of Prâna (vital life energy) leading to debility and disease over a period of time. In course of time, man gets addicted to the pleasure derived from orgasm but will soon find himself in a state where he can no longer perform sexual activity as he did before due to the enormous loss of vital energy which the body cannot regenerate through food.

Havelock Ellis, in his "Studies in the Psychology of Sex", quotes the observations of Dr.F.B.Robinson on this subject, as recorded in the New York State Medical Journal. He notes that when a stallion cohabits with a mare for the first time, after a short, vigorous coition, he is apt to fall down in a dead faint, which Robinson traces to brain anemia thus produced. He mentions one case of a mare falling dead immediately after. Young bulls frequently faint away after the first connection with a cow, and it is very common to observe a young bull so exhausted further to seminal loss that he sneaks off to a quiet corner and lies down for a couple of hours.

Dr.Melville Keith, M.D, The following is quoted from his work, "The Marriage Law":

" We tell you that at every emission of semen you are losing the food and the best portion of the (blood) corpuscles, inasmuch as every particle of semen which is ejected will be replaced by more taken from the blood. This is enough to convince you that when you are ejecting the semen which should stay in the body and become reabsorbed so as to go and form the oil for the joints, new muscles, the brain material, as well as every other part of the body, you are really destroying or throwing away your life. "`You eject the substance of the synovial fluid. You send forth, to gratify a moment's passion, the very material of which the brain is made. This is a fact which you will acknowledge when you consider that all this semen is the material of which all these substances are made and supplied, and when the semen is ejected you have selected the best part of the body to go out and become to you a useless inert mass, which can never be restored to you under any circumstances. It is lost and gone.

Then, the semen being out of the body, the sexual penalty comes apace. The penalty for this loss of semen is so far reaching and so concealed from the body of people of the present day that we do not know the exact spot to look for it.

But we tell you, when you see paralysis, palsy,apoplexy, rheumatism, brain softening, bent shoulders and haggard face; when you observe a young old man and the dried up young lady, in all of these cases, and in dozens of others, you may set it down that there have been sexual losses and a waste of the bodily substance from the sexual orgasm.

"`You will see this penalty all around you, and there is no place where you may go but you will see the fruits of this sexual indulgence to excess. The penalty may be denied, and all these diseases may be attributed to every other cause under the sun, but you will be right in laying it at the proper place and that is to the sexual drain which has sapped the blood corpuscles of the victim before you. We assure you nothing can be so very enervating as this sexual excess, and any sexual mating is an excess, providing it is not for the purpose of having children. "`The penalty for the disobedience of this law is in the shortened lives and the increased amount of disease which are everywhere around us." The resemblance of the sexual orgasm to the epileptic attack has been noted by many authors.

The sudden withdrawal of calcium produced by the seminal discharge biochemically produces the tetany-like symptoms of the orgasm, which are so similar to those of the epileptic attack which usually follows it in those who are constitutionally predisposed. According to Acton, the sexual orgasm resembles the epileptic attack both in its phenomena and its effects. The mental hebetude and physical prostration following the discharge of nerve force characteristic of an epileptic attack also follow the sexual orgasm. The latter profoundly affects the whole nervous system with such intensity that Acton says that "It is only mature individuals who can bear infrequent acts of copulation without more or less injury for procreation. In young persons all the vital powers should be conserved for growth and development." -- End of quote.

The above article throws light on medical opinion. Brahmacharya at the start is like a little plant sapling that needs to be tended, nurtured and attended to with great care and devotion till it grows into a large, mature tree. Only after it has reached this state can the cool shade, fresh air, rain and fruits that a tree contributes to the environment manifest. As a little plant sapling, there is little benefit or profit but the same sapling becomes a priceless tree when nurtured patiently.

The effects of abstaining from a life of masturbation would already be manifest in a person without his knowledge. It is again not very rational to compare ourselves with others and say - " He does not practice Brahmacharya but he is more capable and efficient than me". Each person has his strengths and limitations. It wouldn't make much sense if a horse compared itself to the elephant and said - " The elephant is stronger and more powerful than me"; nor can the elephant say - "The horse is faster and more agile than me". Each animal is a manifestation of power and energy but in different fronts.

Similarly, one's success in education or carreer in comparison with another make little sense. For every poor man, there are millions poorer and for every rich man there are many more who are richer. Our rate of success or failure at a given task is the net sum of innumerable factors. Lack of sufficiency of even a single factor sometimes leads to failure while a single brilliant idea sometimes leads to stupendous success in spite of limitations. What one should remember is that a life of Brahmacharya will improve and better a person's life in all fronts if carried out rightly and honestly. If there is a sensuous man wasting his vital fluid and yet strong, capable and intelligent the practice of Brahmacharya will make him even more stronger, more capable and much much more intelligent!

It is good to know that you lead a lifestyle devoid of masturbation and high on purity. Stick to your life of clean habits and focus on leading a life of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with adequate physical, intellectual and spiritual activity in the form of God-meditation. This is very important. Mere celibacy or abstinence is different from Brahmacharya. Sexual abstinence is only one part of Brahmacharya and not Brahmacharya itself. The sexual abstinence followed by a Brahmachari is more a by-product of Brahmacharya. A mere celibate is one who desists from sexual intercourse and nothing more. His mind may wander and harp on sensual desires and thoughts. This does not amount to Brahmacharya. A Brahmachari is a person who gives up all forms of sexual enjoyment in thought, word and deed with an aim of winning freedom from and raising above what is termed as the 'sex need' and succeeds in realizing his own self (Âtman or the soul) thus completing the very purpose of human existence. The particular way of life that is required to accomplish the above mentioned objective is called as 'Brahmacharya'.

There might not be much apparent difference between a beginner Brahmachari and a man not leading a life of Brahmacharya at the start. But over the years and decades, the changes at the physical, mental and karmic levels become exceedingly apparent bestowing him with the ability to excel in his respective field and so much to the point that the Brahmachari delves deeper into the real knowledge of his own self, God and creation resulting in evolution of the highest degree; the very purpose of the human life.

Remember the words - " The Brahmachari raises above and eventually becomes free of the sex need itself by establishing himself in the Âtmic or soul state". This is not a task small and sundry. It involves undoing and resetting the very fabric of acquired human nature that has ingrained itself into man through millions of past births in the animal form. It takes much time, efforts and devotion towards this mode of life along with the grace of God for one to reach this state. Till then, one has to guard, water and tend to the sapling and ensure that it grows into a full sized tree.

Question
Hello Dhanajay,

I want to thank you for your responses to other questioners...they have been excellent! I have a couple of questions...you mentioned in another response, to 'ease' into Brahmacharya, for a few days, then a few weeks, then a few months etc...do you still see benefit from part-time Brahmacharya...maybe a few months per year? I have been abstinent for a few weeks now, and have SO much energy that I do not sleep...I am still alert and energised. Is this common? Is it normal for a yogi to sleep only 2-3 hours per day?

Answer
Hello Dru,

Trust this finds you fine. Good to hear of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

A life of Brahmacharya will give benefits and nothing but benefits to man or woman, immaterial of their age, cast, creed, marital status and any other external factor. If a man stays for a single day in a state of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed he derives the benefit of that single day's virtue and purity, however small it might be. If he maintains the absolute state of purity for a week, weeks, months or years he derives the commensurate benefit that increases with time.

A person used to a life of sexuality will not be able to practice unbroken Brahmacharya all of a sudden. It is a divine and special mode of life that requires much change in the overall personality comprised of physical, mental and karmic elements. The grace of God and honest efforts are necessary for one to reach a stage where he can remain endlessly in the state and enjoy the immense benefits and power. Also, the bodily purification and cleansing of toxins that is required to make the mind and body fit for unbroken celibacy takes time, effort and consistent practice. Brief periods of illness sometimes manifest at the initial stages of Brahmacharya when the embedded toxins present within due to past karma surface in the course of purification. The Brahmachari has to brave all these odds and yet march on with determination if he wants to win the reward called unbroken Brahmacharya. Keeping the above fact in mind, it makes more sense to gradually increase the duration of Brahmacharya and finally achieve the unbroken state.

Is there any benefit from part-time Brahmacharya? As mentioned, Brahmacharya always has its benefits immaterial of the duration. The longer and more consistent Brahmacharya is, the greater and more pronounced are the benefits and power. If a person were to practice it for a few weeks or months he derives that much benefit as his efforts deserve. The benefits in terms of physical health and strength, mental calmness, emotional stability and increase in spiritual awareness proportionately increase with longer and longer durations of Brahmacharya and so much to the point that man gradually reaches a state where he will never be ready to loose his semen for the momentary excitement of sexual release that is followed by weakness, depression and emotional imbalance caused by the immense loss of Prâna as an aftermath of ejaculation. Once this state is reached where one is not ready to part with semen at any cost, it becomes all the more possible in taking concrete steps towards unbroken Brahmacharya; the gateway to the unfolding of all siddhis (divine powers) and finally self-realization in course of time.

What is very important is to ensure that adequate physical and intellectual activity coupled with God-meditation are practiced on a daily basis without fail. A life of Yoga with Prânayâma (as has been explained in past answers) if followed will accelerate progress to a great extent. Unbroken Brahmacharya comes very much into the reach of one established in Yoga with Prânayâma. Equally important is never letting lustful thoughts grow in the mind when they show their heads. One should not try to fight lustful thoughts but should instead displace these thoughts by replacing them with divine, virtuous and productive thoughts. If these points are ruthlessly enforced the state of unbroken Brahmacharya becomes very possible and reachable. This is the real, natural and default state of a human being. The sexual state is a state that is natural only at the time of copulation carried out for begetting a child and nothing more. People ignorantly extend this state to all domains of their life, thereby limiting their true potential, forgetting their divinity and immersing themselves in all sorts of physical, mental and emotional problems.

The conservation and transmutation of semen saves the body a mammoth amount of life energy. The initial stages of Brahmacharya do not involve resorption of semen but only involve non-production of the excessive amounts of semen that the body earlier had to generate. Since the loss has been stopped, the body correspondingly rests and reduces semen production. This rest that the body savors is of no mean magnitude but immense in proportion. It puts the body on the track where it starts restoring itself to perfect health. Sleep is a state where the body rejuvenates and refurbishes from stress and strain accrued while being awake . Since an enormous amount of energy is conserved through checking the loss of semen, the body is left fresh with much energy even after a days work, reducing the need for sleep and rest in the Yogi. For overall health and well being a Yogi is allowed not more than maximum of 7 hours of sleep at night. This duration may be lesser based on how much sleep each individual needs dictated by the intensity of his activity. Sleeping during the day when the Sun is up is to be avoided.

Question

Hello There,

I just wanted to ask,
can a brahmachari with immense ''prana energy'' or ''Qi energy'', cure diseases such as STD's or Aids?
& how long does a brahmachari would have to practice brahmacharya to attain those abilities if it is possible?

Answer

Hello Lee,

Good to receive your query. Coming to the answer,

From the subjective point of view (as regards to curing himself of such diseases), a life of Brahmacharya will gradually negate and throw out each and every toxin present within the physical, mental and causal bodies of man. The science of Yoga ascribes the cause of each and every disease or deviation from health to 'toxins' present within the system and inducted due to past negative karma. A life of Brahmacharya if carried out in thought, word and deed with constant God-meditation with an aim of realizing oneself puts man on to the track leading to purification and finally perfection. A disease such as AIDS is again nothing but the manifestation of past negative karma in the physical body of man. A life of Yoga is the efficient path to achieve the removal of all past karma both positive and negative and thereby reach the 'Shuddhâtma sthithi' (pure soul state), whereupon one realizes himself and achieves complete enlightenment. Since removal of all irregularities and impurities are mandatory to reach the above state, the removal of all diseases including AIDS should come within the purview.

This however comes with a caveat. The 'Prârabdha karma' (karma which is mandatory to be worked out in this birth) cannot be delayed, denied or sidestepped. It represents those past actions of ours that are to be worked out through happiness or suffering (based on whether they are positive or negative) in this very birth without fail. If a man has much merit in his 'Prârabdha' say to the effect that he is destined to experience a life of luxury and wealth, he will experience this state of plenty, immaterial of whether he wants it or doesn't and to the extent of the weight of the past positive karma till it is fully expended. Similarly a man who has much demerit in his 'Prârabdha' say to the effect that he is destined to suffer from a deadly disease like AIDS for three decades will undergo pain & suffering for that period of time but not more. This is the precise reason why many saints and realized souls themselves were afflicted with a deadly disease or suffered a painful death in spite of their holiness (as in the case of Jesus). Past karma that is ripe for unfolding makes no exception and does not differentiate whether a man is a Yogi or a layman. That which is destined to be experienced by this body and mind in this existence will unfold immaterial of whether one wants it or doesn't. Only an advanced yogi who has the power to decipher the details of past karma stored in his 'Kârana Sharira' (causal body) through deep meditation in Samâdhi (super-conscious state) can get to know the extent of his positive and negative past karma and their results in the current existence.

From the objective point of view (as regards to curing others who have been afflicted with such diseases) a very advanced Yogi with 'Siddhis'(superhuman powers) to cure diseases will be able to cure the diseases of those people who are destined for a cure or in other words deserve to be relieved of the suffering. In other words these diseased people have reached the state where they have worked out the karma and are ready to get free from the problem. The karmic cycle like everything else in the cosmos is fully governed by the laws of creation and the laws of nature. Even super-normal powers or miraculous powers fall within the purview of the law of nature and are really not miracles in the real sense. Being outside the ability of the common man, these powers appear superhuman, while in reality, they are only a representation of the unfolding of the limitless powers that the 'Shuddhâtma' (pure soul) possesses. But even the highest powers that the yogi possesses that he puts into action using his Prâna are still within the purview of the universal laws of nature and hence these cannot be made use of to cure a person who has not yet worked out his 'Prârabdha' and is hence not destined to get cured. Such a person has to go through the suffering with no other option.

All the cases where we see or hear of great Yogis curing people of diseases are those where the afflicted person has worked out most of his bad karma or has worked them out to such an extent that he deserves to get cured shortly. An advanced yogi who has developed these powers first connects into the 'Kârana Sharira' (causal body) of the diseased person and learns of the cause and nature of the disease by knowing the past karma that has caused the disease in the first place. He then also becomes clear on whether the person is destined for a cure and if so the method of transferring health and vitality by negating the particular toxin through the transfer of Prâna. The Yogi acts as the medium in relieving the person of the malady in the divine cosmic dream and does not in reality remove the disease. He is more like an agent of God working on God's behalf. It is the Almighty Lord who cures the man of the disease in reality further to all past karma having being extinguished or deserving to be negated.

The length of time one has to immerse oneself in a life of Brahmacharya and Yoga to achieve such powers is very arbitrary and varies from one aspirant to the other depending upon innumerable factors such as one's evolutionary level and the time, honesty, thoroughness, devotion and effort one puts into a such a life of virtue. Most of the saints and supermen who have these powers are those who have never aspired for such powers but have been awarded the same by the Almighty with the view of reducing suffering in society. These powers have been found to be under the reach of only those people who use them selflessly for the benefit of mankind and not those who employ them for selfish/questionable purposes. Even in cases of selfless employment the Yogi works only under divine order and not on his personal whims and fancies.

There are other minor 'siddhis' or powers that come to an aspirant after many years of strict Yoga and unbroken Brahmacharya which give him a certain amount of superhuman ability but on a lesser dimension. These include thought reading, thought transference, distant healing, telepathy etc.. All these abilities are put into use using 'Prâna' which acts as the medium of transference of divine will.

Question

Dear Sir
Hope you are well...

I have been practicing Brahmacharya i.e no masturbation and conversion of lustful thoughts to divine(in my case)for the last 15 days.I have felt some changes in myself.I can now study with more concentration and lift heavier weights than before in the gym.I wish to know can this be the result of Brahmacharya?You have said in your previous answers that conversion of semen to ojas takes place after at least 6 months of strict Brahmacharya.I have been into Brahmacharya for only two weeks!

Secondly; I usually feel a tickling sensation inside the testicles 4-5 times a day since I have started observing Brahmacharya.What might be the reason?

Kaushal

Answer

Hello Kaushal,

Good to hear of your efforts at Brahmacharya. Keep up with the practice. Coming to the answers,

As explained in previous answers, a life devoid of sex, masturbation and lustful activity carried out at the physical, mental and spiritual levels with adequate and regular physical exercise, mental work and spiritual God-meditation on a daily basis helps man progress on the track of Brahmacharya. Further to a few weeks of unbroken Brahmacharya the body having being relieved of the vitality consuming task of producing semen rests itself with each passing day. This results in an increase in energy levels across all domains. This will explain the better mental concentration and physical energy at your disposal.

These initial periods of Brahmacharya represent the stage where the body first relaxes and rests from constantly producing large volumes of semen that it earlier had to. Further to three months of unbroken Brahmacharya, the body reaches the next stage where it starts making use of the conserved semen into revitalize, refurbish and restore all internal organs and the brain of whatever repairable defects/degeneration they have accrued during one's lifetime. This stage after around six months of Brahmacharya mostly consists of restorative activity and a very small conversion of Rethas (semen) into Ojas (divine astral power). The body, still being busy with restoring itself to better health will not yet have shifted into the mode of completely transforming semen into Ojas. The duration of this stage depends on the damage/degeneration levels of the body. A person who has formerly lead a life high on seminal wastage and who has thus degenerated his internal organs to a greater degree will spend much time in this second stage as the regenerative work that is to be carried out is high in magnitude. A person who on the other hand has formerly lead a life low on seminal wastage and high on good health giving habits such as exercise will spend relatively lesser time in this second stage as the restoration work is lesser in volume.

If the practice of Brahmacharya is carried out unbroken and uninterrupted beyond this level the first two stages generally complete in a year to a year and a few months in case of the normal person with good general health and well being. It is only beyond this year or more of unbroken Brahmacharya that the third stage or real Brahmacharya in terms of increased abilities of the mind and spiritual progress due to sublimation of semen into Ojas starts on a large scale.

Since the first two stages mostly involve changes at the physical body level with the exception of a few mental changes, different people experience different sensations within their bodies. These sensations range from an increased sexual awareness, a feeling of heat from within, change in the body smell etc.. The tickling sensation you mention is only one among the numerous reactions of the body to its new found lifestyle.

Unbroken and long Brahmacharya can be carried out only with strict efforts in thought, word and deed and by the grace of the Almighty. Hence regular God-meditation is an important key to attain success.

Question
hello there,

I wanted to know; does taking (cold showers)
transmute semen into 'Ojas'?
& does cold showers relieve sexual tension?

Answer
Hello Jay,

Cold water baths or showers as regards to the Brahmachari serve the following purposes:

1. Cold water has the tendency to cool down the nerves and thus helps negate sexual desire and duress. Mind in the sexually charged state can be freed from the effect of lust to a large extent by a cold water bath.

2. Cold water has immense amount of Prâna (vital life energy) and the same gets transferred into the bather. This immediately drives out laziness, inertia, slumber and stupor the qualities that help promote lust thereby making the mind alert, active and dynamic.

3. Cold water can be applied to the entire body at the end of a day when tired or fatigued and then rubbed with a towel. This recharges the body with fresh Prânic energy derived from the cosmos and removes fatigue.

Cold water by itself does not convert semen into Ojas but is a means to reduce sexual currents.

A good technique for moderation is to have cold water baths every alternate day or when one gets troubled by lust. However, it is a better idea to gradually reduce the temperature of water for daily morning showers and not drastically use cold water all of a sudden as this shocks and chills the nerves. The temperature of water should be slowly reduced over a period of time and to one's withstanding ability. If one feels chills and extreme cold, it is an indication that the water temperature is beyond one's withstanding limit and needs to be warmed up a bit more. A bath should be refreshing and enjoyable and not chilling!

Question

Hello sir,

I have read all your articles and answers on the celibacy.

you have mentioned to avoid noon sleep. I like to know that wht is the reason behind it??

Thanks for sharing your experience & knowledge with us.

Answer

Hello Nikul,

Good to see of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

Day and night are the two opposites nature has made with two different and important purposes.

Rising of the Sun represents life, dynamism, energy and movement. It signifies the heralding of a new day made by God for man to evolve further. All life on earth derives the energy required to sustain through the Sun and there would have been no life on earth without the Sun. Sunrise surcharges all animate and inanimate objects on the earth and sky with immense cosmic energy which is nothing but Prâna (life energy.) The solar energy thus generated is the chief source of Prâna for plants, animals and man to sustain themselves. Sunrise fills the entire cosmos with 'Sâthwic energy' (energy that supports purity) and 'Râjasic energy' (energy that supports activity). All processes within the human body right from digestion, assimilation, circulation and excretion including functioning of the brain occur due to the Prânic energy that the Sun gives. The food we eat is again a product of Prana. All plants yield fruits and vegetables using solar energy. These fruits or vegetables are then eaten by man or animals and the Prâna finds its way into the human system either directly or indirectly. The Prâna thus inducted through food which undergoes digestion followed by a seven stage process leads to the formation of Rethas (semen). Thus semen represents the seventh and last tissue element of life process at the gross level. It is the subtlest and most powerful form of Prâna in the gross bodily level capable of producing another life.

Now to understand why one mustn't sleep during day time, one has to also know the properties governing night. Sunset followed by moon rise represents the end of a day and withdrawal of life energy. Birds automatically go back to their nests and retire for the day. Moon representing female energy, cools the atmosphere making it more conducive for plants, animals and man to rest, relax and recuperate from the toils of day. The advent of night is an indication for man to stop activity and rest. Moon rise increases the 'Tâmasic energy'(energy promoting inertia/inactivity) in the cosmos so as to help life forms retreat and rest. The energies prevalent at night are unsuitable for activity but have been created for rest and rejuvenation. Numerous biochemical, physiological, and psychological functions occur during sleep.

What happens if a man were to sleep for a few hours during the day? Firstly he indulges in an activity that is against nature. At a time when the energies in nature are fully conducive for activity, achievement and progress he immerses himself in something exactly the opposite. At a time when 'Sâthwic' & 'Râjasic energy' is predominant, he indulges in sleep which is 'Tâmasic'. At a time when nature has made it fully conducive for man to progress and evolve he does the exact opposite by immersing himself in slumber through sleep. This has serious repercussions at the physical, mental and karmic levels. Firstly, the mind and body having rested during the course of the day become less prone to sleep at night which is actually the correct time to rest. A man who sleeps during day time cannot get deep and dreamless sleep that is required for revitalization and detoxification of the body at night. On the other hand a man who has not slept during the day will naturally be more fatigued and tired by night and thus synchronizes with nature through deep sleep.

By not sleeping well at night, various bodily hormones (such as Melatonin) and secretions necessary to detoxify, refresh and revitalize the body with health that are produced only during deep night sleep do not get secreted. The non-release of these hormones results in health disorders and rapid ageing over the course of time leading to ill-health. People who sleep during the day and thus suffer from lack of deep sleep at night are prone to irritation, agitation, lust, anger and other negative emotions. Sleep disorders such as insomnia and sleep apnea manifest in many. By going against nature, man creates an imbalance within his own self for which he has to pay a penalty.

From the angle of Brahmacharya, people who sleep during the day and thus remain awake at night become unfit for a life of virtue and purity. They cannot hold their semen beyond a certain period. The energies prevalent at night are meant for man to rest in deep sleep. Instead, if man were to be awake, these energies evoke lustful and sexual undercurrents within a person causing the mind to wander over sexual objects. This will eventually result in frequent wet dreams. The person becomes more prone to lust attacks and finds himself constantly being hammered by lustful thoughts even the day after.

Also the best health benefits accrue further to sleeping in a pitch dark room at night without any light. Among the various health giving hormones released at night the smallest amount of light for example prevents the release of the hormone Melatonin which is ideally released from the Pineal gland in the brain between 2.00-3.00 A.M when man is deep in sleep. For this reason, Melatonin is also called as the 'Hormone of darkness'. The hormone Melatonin has been known to act as an active ingredient in the prevention of cancer, immune disorders, cardiovascular diseases, depression, sleep disorders, delirium, infertility, headaches, gallbladder stones, obesity and mood swings including protection from radiation. The slightest amount of light however prevents this hormone from getting released into the blood stream and hence the need for total darkness. There are numerous other health giving hormones which get released only during deep night sleep and not otherwise.

The correct way of ensuring a healthy lifestyle is to go to bed no longer than 9.30 P.M and wake up before Sunrise while still dark. Brahmacharya again becomes beyond the reach of a man who stays in bed beyond Sunrise. This period before Sunrise is highly conducive for the Brahmachari wanting to meditate and evolve spiritually. It a time which is neither day nor night but in between and hence promotes the meditative state which is beyond duality.

Question
Hello Sir,

When does the sexual impulse get activated in a man? I mean at what age? For example, consider four adolescents who start masturbating at the age of 13, 15, 17 and 19. How much spiritual progress would each have accrued till their respective ages. Also, if all of them engage in regular masturbation for an equal period of time (say 5 year), will the mental and physical degeneration be same for all? Also, if they now decide to lead a life of celibacy (after 5 years of sexual activity), which adolescent will be successful quickest?

Thank you,
Amit

Answer
Hello Amit,

Trust this finds you keeping well. Coming to the answers,

The manifestation of sexual energy starts in a person at the onset of puberty, whenever that happens. This may vary from person to person. In men this generally occurs between the ages 13-16. Till this period, Prâna (vital energy) that is produced is locked in within the system to ensure complete growth and development of the body and the brain of the child. This shows the importance and significance of the power of vital energy. Even nature dams and conserves this great power during the first few years of the development of the child to ensure complete and thorough growth of the basic physical body and brain system. Once this development has reached a certain level, puberty occurs and the adolescent person becomes capable of the act of reproduction.

Spiritual progress in a person depends on the evolutionary level already reached by the soul in its past birth. We must remember that birth and death are only a change in the body and circumstances the same embodied soul finds itself in. Just as a man casts away his old clothes and wears new clothes, the soul casts away its worn out body and takes birth in a new body to continue with its evolution. One might ask the question, "Then why do young children or young adults with bodies that are in good condition die? In cases where a young child or person dies the particular circumstance and setup the soul found itself in was already worn out and unfit for its further progress and evolution and in working out its karma. Whatever degree of evolution was possible for the particular soul in that particular existence has already been achieved. It has no chance to progress further in this setup. By circumstance, we here mean its upbringing, parents, society, state of life, overall conditions of existence etc.. So the embodied soul gives up the present body and circumstances and goes in search of another body in another circumstance which will then offer it the required conditions necessary for its further evolution. This is what is called as death and birth. To the soul, these are as trivial as discarding one's old and worn out clothes and wearing new clothes.

The earlier a person starts masturbating, the faster will be the degeneration and decay. The question of the actual age when puberty onsets does not matter as masturbation starts only after puberty and not before. If people of all the age groups mentioned above masturbate equally for a period of five years, all of them will degenerate more or less to the same extent. However, those who start masturbating later have a somewhat lesser degree of debility as compared to those who start it right at the onset of puberty. This is so because the body has been given a longer time to grow, develop and fully form during the growing years (men grow up to the age 21) without the wastage of semen. In the same way, the person who started masturbation very late has a higher chance of recovery in terms of time.

hello ,
i have read much about sexual abstinence and like the idea of it . I am wondering if talking to girls would result in a loss of energy . i know this sounds stupid but sometimes i kind of get turned on by talking to them sometimes subconciously . i really dont wish to because the only reason i talk to them is for studies and general friendship. i have been thinking if i should cut out all connections to girls. i am 18 years old guy. please advice, thanks .

Answer

Hello Andrian,

Hope you are doing good. Coming to the answers,

While the act of talking to a member of the opposite sex by itself is in no way wrong the beginner Brahmachari should remember that his past tendencies generated by past karma position him in a state where even innocent and honorable contact carried out with a well meaning intention often ends in lust. Lust and desire are tricksters of the highest order. Lust has the uncanny ability of showing its head from the most innocent of contact. It is in the nature of lust to creep into situations where one might think there is little chance for lust to flower.

Again it is not lust itself which is the cause behind its appearance but the ignorance around the Jivâtma (embodied soul) that makes the lower self susceptible to lust. The individual embodied soul having fallen from its lofty state of matchless purity and bliss tends to run after anything and everything that appears to promise some degree of pleasure. Not having realized that desire and lust always end in pain, the embodied soul tries to carve out sexual situations from perfectly normal and honorable situations. For this reason, a Brahmachari wishing to evolve through Brahmacharya and become all powerful would do well in maintaining brief and limited contact with members of the opposite sex, restricting it to necessity and nothing more.

Relationships such as 'friendship' with members of the opposite gender turn into nothing more than disguised relationships with sexual intentions. This is so because at the innate level, the very first intention behind approaching the woman was fueled with lust and nothing else. If a man or woman were to have perfect and ideal love for another as the 'soul' and nothing more there would have been no danger from sexuality. But how many people can relate to another person at the 'soul level'? How many people can view the other as not the body, mind, intellect or consciousness but only as a soul? It is a task totally beyond the ability of society in general. Most attempts at 'friendship' are intentions of sexuality disguised behind the term 'friendship'.

Can the man who claims he is looking just at 'friendship' be interested in befriending a woman who is disfigured? An invalid woman without hands or legs? A woman deep in the grip of a cancerous disease with pus oozing out of her body, teeth rotting, hair gone and flesh dried to the bone?...

Similarly, would a woman claiming genuine love & friendship unto death with a man she knows be interested in continuing the friendship if the man lost all his money, his job, his strength, his good looks, his high-powered sports car and became wheelchair ridden being a victim of third degree burns with his face and body burnt to extreme ugliness in an unfortunate accident? The lady who had claimed of undying love, the lady who had written love letters terming each other as 'soul mates', the same lady who had said "I will love you and be there for you even if death do us apart" would be busy changing her cellphone number so the unfortunate man doesn't ever get in touch with her again!

This is always the result of looking at another person with a selfish, dishonorable and covetous intention. Most of the 'relationships' that exist fall into this category. People disguise their real & selfish intentions behind the words -- 'love', 'friendship','relationship' etc.. All these relationships are nothing more but informal contracts for the benefits of wealth, sex, power, name or position. Such acts of falsity are a disgrace to the real meaning behind the term friendship or relationship. Why indulge in such frivolous contact? A sensible man would do well in staying clear of these falsities of the external world and instead spend his time and efforts at achieving something more concrete and of substance.

If the man could look at a lady at the 'soul level' he would feel the same love for the most beautiful woman and for the above mentioned diseased woman emitting unbearable stench... If the lady could look at a man at the 'soul level' she would feel no difference in her love for the man, both before the accident and later...

The self-realized man or woman of absolute perfection perceives each and every other person as the 'soul' -- The manifestation of the Almighty. He sees himself in all others and all others in his own self. To him, doing good to another is doing good to himself. Doing the slightest harm to another is causing that much harm to his own self; for the underlying principle is that all souls are nothing but the Almighty. This is called as being established in the 'soul state'. Such a man would be unaffected by the condition of the bodies of both the beautiful and the diseased woman for he never looked at them as 'bodies' in the first place. His perspective was something higher and of immense substance right from the very beginning. This qualifies as the truest form of love or friendship, for the basis of love is beyond that of petty and temporary things such as the promise of a beautiful body which will decay with time or wealth which will eventually desert man only to leave him in pain. It thus follows that only the self-realized man becomes capable of infinite and boundless love in the universal sense.

Scriptures cutting across religions viz. The Bhagavad-Gita, The Bible, The Quraan and many more point out that such a man, further to having reached the 'self-realized state', as a reward for his efforts attains to incomparable and infinite bliss forever, a million times more pleasurable than the most intense sexual orgasm. This state of infinite bliss and pleasure is in reality the default state of the soul. It is the state which we have all forgotten through degeneration into matter (The Body). It is the state that has been lost due to the soul getting embodied in the physical and mental bodies due to karma. If one has to reclaim this original state, one has to undo all the negative and positive karma that lead him to the degenerated state and not do any new karma that would bind him to this state.

The enlightened Brahmachari after attaining self-realization see's no difference between an insect, a dog a cow and a beautiful woman. To him, all are manifestations of the Almighty Lord and hence as dear to him as he himself. The external dress worn by the soul in the form of the body of an insect, the body of a dog, the body of a cow or the body of a beautiful lady are of no value to him. He is established in reality through realization of the fact that all these bodies will one day age, die, decompose and vanish. Only the soul remains, for the soul is nothing but the Almighty Lord and it is the only thing of substance. Hence he sees all living creatures and non-living things as an essential part of he himself in terms of the absolute reality of the soul.

This is the ultimate state that Brahmacharya finally leads to -- Self-realization. This is the correct reason why one must follow a life of Brahmacharya with God-meditation. This is the exact reason why self-realization is the highest and most superior of achievements of this human birth. There is nothing more that man needs to do after having reached this state. For the self-realized man the very purpose of the human existence is over and done with. He is freed forever from the cycles of births and deaths on earth and merges into union with the Almighty, residing forever in incomparable bliss.

Till such a state is reached, man cannot view another as the 'soul' in the true sense. There will always be some amount of bodily identification even in the very advanced Yogi who has not yet attained to self-realization. There will always be a chance that he views another as the body with a selfish motive and hence a chance for fall from his state of Brahmacharya. For this reason, a Brahmachari must maintain as little contact as possible with people in general and members of the opposite sex in particular.

The answer to the question posed has been extended and elaborated in detail with a view of enlightening readers about life, self-realization and the significance of Brahmacharya.

Question

I was practicing meditation yesterday and I had a massive erection and accidently looked at my penis and rubbed my underwear against it and my trousers, which caused a discharge. I feel terribly guilty, as I was coming up nearly two years no discharge in the waking state- will I have to start from scratch again?

Answer

Dear Sanj,

The episode that you describe is generally a result of past karma unfolding and working itself out. When the seeds of very strong sexual 'Vâsanâs' dating back to many previous births start to surface while being vacated, they manifest the quality and nature of the action that they represent. The surfacing of past karma during the course of its evacuation is a process that is inevitable and unavoidable in each and every aspirant. Depending on the nature of the past karma embedded in the causal body, different people experience different kinds of occurance.

The discharge of semen, either voluntary or involuntary in the waking or the dream state further to sexual thoughts amounts to a break in the 12 year cycle. However, what one needs to remember is that unbroken and uninterrupted Brahmacharya is impossible without the evacuation of embedded past 'Vâsanâs'. This loss of semen further to stimulation was necessary in the karmic cycle to make you realize the fact that more stringency and efforts are required from your side as regards to keeping the mind free from contemplating on sexual thoughts. It was necessary to take you a step closer in realizing the pain and distress that comes from sexuality and the bliss and life that comes through continence. An important fact unknown to most people is that Rethas (semen) gets into the 'ejaculatory mode' even through fantasy or sexual contemplation without ejaculation. Each and every time sexual thoughts are let to flower and develop the 'Ojas' that the Brahmachari has conserved reverses into Rethas (semen) in the ejaculatory mode and becomes sexual in nature. Once 'Ojas' reaches this state, it has to be thrown out. There is no other alternative. Rethas (semen) which is being produced by the body can be converted to 'Ojas' through conservation and transmutation but the 'Ojas' which is thus produced, if reversed back into Rethas (semen) through sexual fantasy cannot be re-converted to 'Ojas'. It is a unidirectional process and not bidirectional. Suppose a man spends a few minutes each day fantasizing on the opposite sex and but does not ejaculate or masturbate, a certain percentage of his 'Ojas' reverts back to Rethas. But he has not masturbated or ejaculated, so this reconverted Rethas stays as physical semen. After a few more days or weeks of continued sexual fantasy, more and more 'Ojas' reverts to the Rethas state, a little at each fantasy. Once this volume of degenerated 'Ojas' that has been reverted to the Rethas state reaches a certain volume, the body expels it through a wet dream or even an ejaculation in the wakeful state through some form of physical stimulation.

The reason behind the process of transmutation being unidirectional is that 'Prâna' that semen is surcharged with gets dissipated with each and every sexual fantasy. Each and every time man contemplates on the opposite sex with sexual intentions, 'Prâna' (vital life energy) that semen has been surcharged with dissipates and escapes from the fluid. Further to being sapped of its life energy, the fluid called semen becomes a lifeless and dead fluid of little use to the body. The body now recognizes it as a waste product and expels it at the earliest. This is the reason semen that is produced through the digestive process can be transmuted to 'Ojas' whereas 'Ojas' that degenerates back into Rethas further to sexual fantasy cannot be sublimated. It can only be thrown out.

The nature of the mind itself is thought. Sexual thoughts arise and appear due to ignorance around the soul accrued through past karma. So one need not worry much on the appearance of a sexual thought. What is very important is to immediately displace these sexual thoughts and replace them with an opposite and constructive thought. This is where most people err. Instead of displacing sexual thoughts by replacing them with opposite thoughts by diverting the mind on some constructive thought pattern or activity, people try to fight and wrestle with sexual thoughts head on. They try to convert sexual thoughts into pure thoughts which is impossible. This is like trying to make the fire radiate cold. The nature of fire is heat. Heat and fire go together. Can anyone succeed in parting heat from fire and succeed in making fire radiate cold? Impossible. Sexual thoughts are exactly alike. One cannot fight them and try to find some semblance of virtue within a sexual thought. If wants to get rid of the thought, one should replace the entire chain of these thoughts with an opposite chain of constructive and virtuous thoughts. This can be accomplished through constructive activity and contemplation on God and by no other means.

This is what a successful Brahmachari does. It is not that through Brahmacharya he becomes free from sexual thoughts all of a sudden right from the start. As long as past 'Vâsanâs' or tendencies that have been formed through past karma have not been fully cleansed, sexual thoughts show their heads every now and then when previous karma unfolds. There is no need to worry or fear when this happens. What is very important is to immediately delete these thoughts by repleting the mind with opposite thoughts. If one does not do this and instead continues to fantasize or wrestle with these thoughts, he will be fighting a losing battle. There need be no doubt about this. Sexual desire is a product of 'Mâya' or the illusive power of creation. One cannot fight 'Maya' through the reason or rationality of intellect. 'Maya' can only be displaced by replacing it with 'Vidya' (knowledge of the self). Hence the need to keep the mind free from situations that generate sexual thoughts and anchor it to God.

Coming to the break that you experienced, worry not about the happening and do not get depressed. What has happened has happened and is over. You have repented for the break and have realized the mistake. This is very important. Never repeat the mistake again. Lust has the uncanny ability to surface out of nowhere and take hold of situations. It fools and defeats the most clever and wise of men without a moments notice. Again it is nowhere but within our own psyche and imagination. Within our own past actions and tendencies. It is not the woman who is dangerous to a Brahmachari but dangerous is his perspective towards the woman. If one strives to look at all women as 'souls'- The manifestation of God, discarding the external body, Brahmacharya becomes very easy. It may not be easy at the start but becomes easier with constant efforts, prayer to God and his grace. Hence none are to be blamed for failure but we ourselves. Take it as a learning experience and continue your efforts with more zeal and fervor.

Question
Dear Sir
Today I have completed 1 month of Brahmacharya; which involves no loss of semen either in waking or dreaming state. I have a few questions to ask you:
a)I wear a 'kaupin' like undergarment at night which is usually used to support the back during gym exercises.It is quite tight on the genitals.Due to it I have been able to stop night discharges.Is it safe to wear?

b)Though my Brahmacharya is perfect physically, but I am ashamed to admit I had few lustful thoughts during the last month? Is my practice of Brahmacharya broken? Can night emissions(not in my case) and rare lustful thoughts(very much in my case!)destroy our commitment to celibacy for 12 years?

c)And last, I have not taken a Brahmacharya vow before any guru or any spiritual leader.Devdutt(Bhishma)was known to shout out his Brahmacharya vow to the world.In my case no one knows about my practice except me.Is this why I have not felt any significant changes in my body? Is it necessary to take a vow before any guru or in a temple etc.?

Thanks in advance..

Answer
Hello Kaushal,

Good to hear of your efforts at Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

1. A Brahmachari should NOT wear any undergarment such as a brief, supporter or kaupin at night while going to sleep. The penis and testicles being in a state of compression and held tight during the course of the day should be allowed to relax and rest at night by letting them free and loose from the grip of any undergarment. This ensures that the scrotal skin and the penile skin are able to rest, breathe and revitalize themselves and adequate amount of blood freely flows into the genital area. Also during REM (Rapid Eye Movement sleep - involving random movement of the eyes during sleep) which occupies a period of close to an hour and half to two hours the penis naturally gets into a state of erection. This is a healthy mechanism of the body that ensures that the penis is pumped with rich oxygenated blood for revitalization. This erection is not sexual in nature or a result of sexual currents but a healthy body mechanism to ensure health of the genital region. Depending on the bodily function, it is common for a normal healthy male to experience between two to five such erections unconsciously while being asleep with no sexual thoughts. Sometimes these erections extend up to early morning just before one wakes up. Since wearing an undergarment prevents the penis from getting erect due to constriction of blood flow, one should not wear an undergarment while sleeping at night.

2. As explained in the previous answer, sexual thoughts surface with an intensity dependent on the past tendencies stored on the causal body due to past sexual karma. With increase in the duration and honesty of true Brahmacharya, these thoughts gradually lessen over a period of time and finally taper off when the aspirant reaches a high state of spirituality further to cleansing of karma after a few years of honest Brahmacharya. One need not worry or become depressed at the advent of sexual thoughts but what is very important is to ensure that these thoughts are not allowed to grow and flower into desire and lust. At the slightest hint of a sexual thought arising, one should displace these sexual thoughts and replace them with the opposite thoughts of virtue, purity and constructive activity. The key is to immediately divert the mind away from such thoughts and bring it back into the realm of opposite thoughts. Sexual thoughts if let to flower and grow blossom into desire, lust and fantasy finally ending in a wet dream.

3. There is no better guru or master one can have in Brahmacharya than the Almighty Lord. It is only through his grace that one even gets to hear the word 'Brahmacharya' and then the mind to try and practice such an austere mode of life. The very fact that a person is striving towards Brahmacharya is an indication that the Almighty Lord has willed the person to get established in this divine mode of life; for progress in Brahmacharya is impossible with mere human effort. It requires God's grace, his will and his blessings. The best way to avail of his guidance and blessings is to wholeheartedly surrender to him with devotion, love and commitment through constant god thought, prayer and meditation. If the intentions and desire of the Brahmachari to get established in unbroken Brahmacharya are sincere and genuine, God undoubtedly extends his helping hand and guides the aspirant.

It is advised to keep the practice of Brahmacharya a secret. Brahmacharya being a divine and virtuous mode of life is of a sacred nature and not the kind of a topic which is to be shared or talked about with all and sundry. A successful celibate always practices Brahmacharya in secret and keeps it as a divine relationship between him and God. It is only an unwise man who boasts or talks about his Brahmacharya with people and this will undoubtedly end in a break.

The great saints and masters who advocated Brahmacharya were self-realized souls who had already gone through the tough and rigorous discipline of achieving absolute and unbroken Brahmacharya beyond twelve years and sometimes many decades. They had accomplished the very goal of Brahmacharya - self realization and were beyond the effects of lust or desire forever. The story goes that Lord Jesus himself had disappeared from the view of the world for a period of close to 18 years before he gained recognition, name and fame as the Jesus known today. No one knew of his whereabouts and activities during those eighteen years. This period was nothing but a state of withdrawal from people and the mundane illusions of life to concentrate and focus on a life of austerity, discipline, meditation and Brahmacharya. It is only after he reached the supreme state of self-realization that Jesus wisely decided to come forward and work for uplifting mankind.

Same was the case with Bhishma. Known as a Brahmachari of unquestionable caliber, Bhishma had achieved a very supreme state of Brahmacharya and spirituality in his previous births much before he was born as Bhishma. His advancement was to such a degree that there were no sexual tendencies lodged within right from birth. He thus became capable of advocating Brahmacharya without the fear of falling and with courage intended with a well wishing perspective.

Till one reaches the supreme state of self-realization through Brahmacharya, the practice should be kept a secret and away from the prying instincts of people.

Answer
Hello Kaushal,

The regular yogic practices of Âsana, Prânayâma and meditation are of much use to the Brahmachari wishing progress in the spiritual path of realizing himself. However, most people forget to strictly practice the Yama-Niyamas of Yoga. The principle of Ahimsa (non-violence) towards all plants and animals, the practice of truth in speech, non-stealing or non-acquisition of objects, titles or positions that do not belong to oneself and non-possessiveness (me, mine concept) regarding worldly objects and ego related emotions is very important if success is desired in unbroken Brahmacharya.

Most people straight away expect to achieve unbroken Brahmacharya, merely trying to win over the sex impulse whilst leading a life that may be high on himsa (violence), speaking the untruth, accepting gifts or grabbing things that come for free and cultivating the tendency of possessiveness. These traits are always accompanied by the sister traits of passion, anger, attachment, greed, arrogance and jealousy. Merely trying to subvert the sex temptation in the midst of a life high on such traits is like trying to blow out a fire that is constantly being fed with fuel. Brahmacharya is not merely winning freedom from the sex impulse alone but is of a much wider dimension. True Brahmacharya is restraint of negative emotions in all domains and finally achieving freedom from such negativity. Hence a Brahmachari wishing true progress should work at becoming a better human being in all fronts along with rising above the sex plane. This automatically makes annihilation of sexual urges a very natural process.

On a parallel is the practice of Niyama. One should strive at maintaining 'shaucha' or cleanliness. Cleanliness here isn't limited to external body cleanliness. Equally important if not more is maintaining a clean and pure mind and not letting external factors and circumstances alter this pure state. With shaucha being established, it becomes easy to maintain 'Santosha' or gladness. A Brahmachari should develop the attitude of being content and glad with what is provided by the Almighty to sustain himself and focus his energies into a life high on God-thought and meditation. The underlying principle is to make God as the source of happiness and not external objects or sensations. Along with this it is important to practice austerities such as waking up much before sunrise followed by a bath and meditation, not over-eating, practicing clean habits and being virtuous and pious. The study of scriptures related to self-realization such as the Bhagavad-Gita and surrender to God form the important requirements necessary for spiritual progress.

Regular and sustained practice of such a life will slowly aid cleansing of past Vâsanâs. All good things take time to fructify and so is spiritual progress and Brahmacharya. A good Brahmachari is always patient, tenacious, determined and sincere in his practices to realize God. A good Brahmachari never worries about siddhis/powers or results in terms of quantity or time but keeps himself intent on God-thought through 'Bhakthi' (devotion). If our efforts are genuine and consistent the Great and all merciful Lord will always reciprocate with love and understanding, guiding the Yogi in the right direction.

This is as much as the aspirant can do. His sincere, honest and truthful efforts are as much as he can indulge in. The results of Brahmacharya and success are always bestowed by the Almighty. Success is not something which is in our hands but rests with God alone. Ours is to try and persevere without giving in and without giving up. One's attitude and action must be - "O Lord, I shall try to the best of my ability to honestly practice the divine science of Brahmacharya with the aim of realizing myself and thereby realizing you. Kindly guide me and help me achieve success in this endeavor. Let me not become a victim of Mâya and loose sight of the aim. There is nothing more important to me than achieving self-realization through Brahmacharya". Such a perspective is the best path to progress.

If one is following the above mentioned lifestyle with an attitude of sincerity and devotion, he need not worry or fear of wet dreams. Wet dreams will gradually lessen in frequency and finally taper away. One needs to fear only when there has been a lacuna in his efforts while being awake. If the efforts while being awake at maintaining clean thoughts and actions is adequate, wet dreams have no other go but to reduce eventually as the sub-conscious mind gets free from such thoughts. As and when strong Vâsanâs (past tendencies) in the causal body start reducing, wet dreams will correspondingly reduce.

Question

I have been practicing celibacy for the past 2 months.Now my college will open after the vacation. I request you to please tell me some way to keep my mind unpolluted from lustful talks of my college friends.

Secondly,in my vacations, I had connected to the ISKCON people near my home to gather more knowledge about spirituality and Brahmacharya.They told me that it is impossible to practice Brahmacharya in this present age of Kali, and the pranayama and asanas cannot liberate anyone.They told me to just chant the Hare Krishna Maha Mantra.Do you think I should trust them to guide me properly?I think they are themselves illusioned. After all Brahmacharis like Swami Sivananda,Vivekananda and Ramakrishna Paramhansa existed in the Kali Yuga.

Answer
Hello Arjun,

Good to hear of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

One should first decide which is more important to him or her; being popular and in stride with peer groups in college/school or getting established in Brahmacharya and savoring the bliss, character, strength and greatness that comes further to a life of Brahmacharya. The presence of one generally acts as an impediment to the other. A student who spends much time talking and thinking about sex/women and associates himself with tobacco, alcohol, parties and idle talk with his friends becomes unfit to practice Brahmacharya. Similarly, a person devoted to a life of Brahmacharya finds no interest with such associations. Such a Brahmachari is polite and amicable with the most characterless of his friends but limits his contact and interactions to the minimum and out of necessity. Just as the wanton and wayward man is wedded to his life of sexuality, the Brahmachari is wedded to his life of purity. This awareness is very important and necessary. A Brahmachari should not waste his time and energy trying to broadcast the practice of Brahmacharya among his friends but should avoid unfavorable company and make it clear to the few remaining friends of his lack of interest as regards topics of sexuality. Once people realize of the intentions and firmness behind such a resolve, things start falling into place.

The correct way to stay free from being polluted by lusty talk is to avoid such company. It is a task beyond possibility for a beginner Brahmachari to be in the presence of wrong company and yet maintain purity. Hence one's contact with friends must be limited.

Prânayâma and Âsana in a life of Yoga are time tested and efficient methods that help a person achieve purity and progress in Brahmacharya. These have been, are and will always be applicable in achieving spiritual progress and efficient evolution. Just as the rays of the Sun do not become dark because someone says so the efficacy of Yogic practices does not change with time, place and circumstance by someone's statement or non-statement.

Let those who think on the contrary remember the words of Lord Krishna in the Bhagavad-Gita which has been intended for the present age--Kali Yuga :-

" Yogasthaha kuru karmaani sangam tyakthva Dhananjaya |
Siddha Asiddhayoho samo bhuthva, Samathvam Yoga Uchyathey" ||
- Chapter II/verse 48 - The Bhagavad-Gita

| " O Dhananjaya (Arjuna), forsaking attachment to the fruits of your actions, thou indulge in Yoga. Accepting success and failure with an equal vision, this evenness of mind is called Yoga" |

Just as adequate exercise aids in promoting good health when combined with healthy food, the practice of Yoga aids the Brahmachari when combined with God-devotion and meditation.

Lead a life of Brahmacharya and Yoga with devotion and love to God, following which the Lord eventually makes the path easier and free from obstacles.

Question
Dhananjay,

I have kept myself deeply engaged in work and have found it effective in helping to control my mind and preventing the formation of lustful thoughts. I allow myself to indulge in 1/2 hr of watching television at the end of a tough day as a way to de-stress. It does not seem to cause many problems (ie I can go several months without any seminal emission), but I've noticed that if I allow myself to indulge in sense experience for several hours (e.g. watching tv for several hours, etc.) then my mind will wander and subconsciously sexual thoughts may form. When these thoughts add up, overt sexual thoughts come to the surface.

I have 2 questions:
1) Although this question has been asked before, I have not found any way to deal with sexual thoughts when they definitely seize the mind. Fighting the thoughts, displacing it with positive thoughts, reasoning with it, trying to sublimate it, etc. only seem to intensify the thoughts. I have found the lesser of 2 evils to be to allow a voluntary emission to purge the thoughts (and start all over again) rather than to burn with desire and allow these thoughts to reproduce (even if fighting it may build will power). Please tell me frankly if anything can be done to remove these thoughts, or is the conclusion inevitable?

2) Obviously preventing the formation of these thoughts is much better than having to deal with them when they arise. I am trying to understand the right way to prevent them while living in a world of sense experience. I have likened the process to how we save and spend money. When I engage in meditation and spiritual practice I am storing up positive energy and when I engage in sense eperience I am using up that store so that if I indulge too much (beyond what I've stored), then sexual thoughts will arise. Can you confirm if this is the right way to view the matter? Am I correct in believing that If I engage strictly in meditation for many months, a few hours of sense experience should have little effect?

I am trying to understand the whole science behind this process, as extreme measures such as avoiding all sense experience is not practical for me. I need to very carefully regulate how much meditation I do and how much I allow myself to 'live in the world'. I appreciate any help you can offer.
Thank you,
John

Answer
Hello John,

Trust this finds you keeping well. Coming to the answers,

A1: It is impossible to reason, rationalize, analyze or convert sexual thoughts into pure thoughts. Just as the nature of water is moistness, the nature of a sexual thought is desire, lust and agitation. There is no other way but to be very strict in not letting sexual thoughts grow bigger when they arise. A Brahmachari must try his level best to always prevent getting involved in any kind of a situation that will let sexual thoughts flower. If watching certain kinds of programs in the T.V, internet a magazine or a book seem to be stirring up these thoughts, one will have to ruthlessly prevent oneself from further indulgence in such activity. The smallest indulgence in such activity or continuing it whilst being stirred sexually will eventually take one deeper and deeper down the slippery slope. This is the mistake most people make while practicing Brahmacharya. They try to convince themselves that a little deviation won't hurt. They fool themselves with an auto suggestion that they will draw a line and not cross it. What is the basis of demarcation? Lust is lust in all forms, however minute, insignificant and petty. The act of looking at a fully clothed woman with a sexual intention even in an apparently innocent T.V program will always lead to the next step -- fantasy followed by imagination at a more intimate level. This act of sexual contemplation automatically results in 'new sexual karma' resulting in 'new Vâsanâs' or tendencies within the causal body. These newly formed tendencies add to the already existing tendencies that the Brahmachari is struggling hard to remove making his task that much tougher. Within a short span of time, such Vâsanâs reach a level where there will be a voluntary or involuntary loss and Brahmacharya is broken in totality. It is not the woman or the act of looking at the woman that is wrong. What is wrong is one's own perspective in the look. It is the sexual intent behind the look that is wrong. Hence till one reaches a state where one is capable of looking at a lady without the slightest trace of sexuality but only as a soul, one should stay clear of all unnecessary contact through sight or talk. Such a state becomes available only to one who is self-realized and is beyond the fetters of sexuality forever.

If sexual thoughts are intensifying in spite of efforts, it is an indication that there is much suppression or repression. Brahmacharya cannot succeed through suppression. One should always remind oneself of the falsity behind the apparent physical beauty of a woman. If the sight or thought of a woman is troubling, let one think of how the same woman will look under her skin. Minus the hair and minus skin the human body has the very disagreeable smell of raw blood and flesh. It appears exactly like the cut up carcass of an animal at the butchers. Human skin and hair add a 'desirable' dimension to a body which is very similar to the texture of the body of a goat or a lamb. This is the work of 'Mâya' the illusive power of creation. This is a body that is filled with foul smelling excrement, urine, blood, pus, phlegm and other secretions which one would shun away from at all occasions. Even the flesh under the skin smells bad. Try smelling an open wound or cut on the body, the smell of blood and flesh is very repulsive. A man who is fantasizing on the body of a woman is fantasizing on nothing but a flesh bag filled with excreta, urine, pus and phlegm. A man imagining physical intimacy with a woman is getting intimate with a bag full of such waste. And a man wasting his divine and precious vital fluid on a woman is wasting all the strength, greatness, glory and power that nature has bestowed on him and that which he has built with great effort over many births on this bag of waste products. On this well disguised, well covered bag of evil smelling flesh stuffed with stool.

Where is the beauty when a woman wakes up in the morning with bad breath? Where did the beauty of a girl in her teens vanish soon after she bore a child or two? Why do people wishing to impress the opposite sex smear themselves with fragrant cosmetics, perfumes and sprays? Where is the beauty in a woman down with an incurable disease that has resulted in her flesh drying up to the bone and loss of hair? Where is the beauty once she gets old with wrinkled skin, scant hair and flesh bereft of luster? The answer to all these questions is one and the same. There is no beauty in the real and true sense right from the start in this thing called a body. The whole thing is an illusion. If the body was true, real and filled with beauty, it would never give out foul smelling breath or saliva. If the body was true and real, it would never age in spite of bearing children. It would need no external cosmetic application. The sweat, odor, excrement and secretions emanating from this body are a give away of the fact that it is anything but beautiful on the inside in terms of beauty. A woman wishing to impress a man and impress herself applies a heavy dose of mouth and body sprays for this very purpose...To hide the reality behind the foul smelling body and fool him, her included with an opposite impression of beauty.

Indulging in a voluntary emission of semen causes a person to get back to square one. He will never be able to get over and rise above the sex temptation. He will forever be a slave to the master called desire. The reverse can never be achieved. In terms of spiritual evolution and getting free of the sex trap, the person cannot hope to proceed. Hence a Brahmachari should never, ever voluntarily masturbate. It crashes all of his karmic progress. The right way is to always keep the falsity of physical beauty as a bag of refuse in the mind and stay clear of letting thoughts grow bigger. One need not worry when a sexual thought surfaces. These thoughts surface every now and then till the past seeds of sexual karma exist and are not fully cleansed in the causal body. But one should immediately divert and take the mind away from such thoughts and not let them snowball into larger proportions. If the Brahmachari fails to do this by telling himself "Just a little bit will do no harm" then he has erred. He has made the first mistake. He has himself personally opened the door for the cheat called lust to step into his house despite knowing it to be a cheat. This mistake will prove to be costly in terms of robbing him of his months or years of efforts. A voluntary emission repletes the causal body with more karma and more Vâsanâs. The mind gets a shot in the arm in terms of past memory of sexual activity. The cycle becomes vicious and endless. He can never progress concretely.

A2: Saving and spending money works when a man is continuously earning, for his spending is proportional to the saving which is proportional to his earning. So a man can spend a part of his savings further to earning. But how will a Brahmachari get over and get independent of his sexual urges and attain enlightenment if he spends his entire life in expending his vital force, building it up again only to expend it repeatedly? His entire life gets spent in 'earning, saving and spending' his vital force. It becomes an endless cycle. Attaining the highest states of bliss, getting over the slavery of the sexual urge forever and attaining an immense sense of freedom through self-realization requires that the lower realms of sexuality are not revisited and vital force is instead conserved without loss. It is like the force required to put a satellite into orbit. Unless the speed of the launcher rocket is powerful enough to counter the gravitational pull of the earth, rise above the earths gravity and drop the satellite into space much beyond the earths orbit, the satellite will crash down. It can float in space only after it has crossed the earths orbital gravity. Then nothing can reverse its flotation. It will soar through the heavens without the slightest tendency to drop down back into earth, however strong be earth's gravity. It has reached the point of no return. Brahmacharya is like a launcher rocket carrying the satellite called the 'Jivâtma'(embodied soul) out of the gravitational pull of lust belonging to a planet called ignorance and destined for the heavens of self-realization. Even the slightest reduction in the speed and force of the rocket (Brahmacharya) through an emission will prevent it from escaping the gravitational pull (lust) and crashes it back to the planet (ignorance). Hence the money earning and saving analogy does not apply to Brahmacharya if one wants to sail above the gravity of lust and desire. A continuous and sustained progress with constant improvement is necessary.

One needn't loose heart even a little bit. If efforts at the waking state are honest, sincere and sustained with the required physical & mental activity, life of Yoga, God-meditation and an awareness of the falsity of sexual attraction, progress gradually ascertains itself. The time taken may wary from person to person. Let it be so...let one be patient and calm and anchored to the fact that improvement and grand success will always dawn further to consistent efforts in due course. Let one not get impatient, irritable or anxious that lust hasn't been overcome. Let the efforts from one's side be complete and total. The seeds of past actions have ingrained themselves over the course of many lifetimes and hence take some time to be negated. It is only when a person short-circuits his progress through voluntary sexuality born out of despair and temptation that the downturn begins. With persistent efforts and devotion to God, many have reached the shores of self-realization and many more will. Our purview ends at constant and honest efforts, the results are in God's purview and the all merciful and just Lord will bestow them unfailingly as we progress.

Question

Dear Sir,

Having been inspired by the spiritual and intellectual avenues that Brahmacharya can open, I have been trying to observe it strictly. Unfortunately, I have a bad history with lust and have lost semen (the white stuff, as opposed to the watery transparent stuff) through emission about 3-4 times in my life (sometimes while awake, rest while asleep). I have had around 15 wet dreams, but most of the emission was transparent, and I have read Swami Sivananda as saying that this fluid is not as valuable as the white matter. Please correct me if I am wrong here.

Secondly, Swami Vivekananda has attributed his phenomenal spiritual and intellectual character to his strict observance of Brahmacharya for 12 years. Since semen, once lost, cannot be replaced by the body, does this mean that with each emission, we are automatically reducing the maximum results that we can hope to attain out of Brahmacharya, provided that all of what remains is converted into Ojas? I realise that Brahmacharya is (really) a lifelong state of living, so the 12 year figure is just the bare minimum. But hopefully you understand what I am trying to ask.

Thank you very much in advance. God Bless you for your noble work in helping aspiring Brahmacharis.

Answer
Hello Sen,

Good to know of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

A1: Semen lost in the course of a wet dream is a little less debilitating to the body, mind and psyche as compared to that lost by voluntary emission. Firstly, the dream state involves activity at the astral plane and not the physical plane. Secondly, the dream state consists of activity sourced from the sub-conscious mind and not the fully conscious mind that functions while being awake. Due to the above reasons, the Vichâra shakthi (power of discrimination) and the Buddhi shakti (power of intellect) in the dream state are very minimal, scant or absent. The Jivâtma (embodied soul) is in a kind of a state that may be compared to a floating piece of wood on the waters of the ocean. The piece of wood has no sense of direction, purpose, trajectory or definite path. Its movements are fully in the grip of the ocean currents. It floats and moves around hither-thither depending on the nature of the oceanic flow. Based on the past Vâsanâs (tendencies garnered from past actions) embedded in the Kârana Sharira (causal body), the recent actions and the mental state of the person before retiring to bed, dreams manifest in various degrees and proportions.

Since involvement in sexual fantasy during a dream is generally at a more superficial level, there is a lesser chance for all components of semen to get ejaculated in totality. But this statement comes with a caveat. If the frequency of wet dreams becomes high and if the intensity of involvement in the sexual act in the dream state is of a high magnitude (due to the presence of say strong fantasy while being awake), the viscosity and substance in the ejaculate also increases. More Prâna (vital energy) will then go out through the ejaculate semen. It will then no longer be akin to the occasional wet dream that depletes lesser energy but will get close or become on par with a voluntary ejaculation due to the frequency and intensity. Hence one should always practice absolute Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed while being awake to the best of one's efforts by not letting sexual thoughts grow. Voluntary or involuntary; an ejaculation is always debilitating and depressing to the Brahmachari. It causes an interruption and hiccup in his practice towards enlightenment. Semen is brightness, strength and one's very self (Âtman). The real Brahmachari will never be in a frame of mind to lose it either way. To him, his semen is the very own essence of his life in the gross form. Losing semen is equivalent to losing a part of his very own inner self.

It is for this reason that a Yogi always meditates on God before retiring to bed at night and fills his mind with God-thought and vibrations, putting aside all thoughts. The last set of thought patterns before retiring to bed play a strong role in determining the nature of sleep. The last thought in the mind should hence be that of the Almighty Lord and nothing else. A dream is basically nothing but activity in the astral plane without or with minimal involvement of the power of discrimination and intellect through the sub-conscious mind as the vehicle of movement. If one fills the mind with the thought of the Almighty Lord, the possibility of the 'Jivâtma' to experience 'Nidra' (deep, sound and dreamless sleep) become manifold. The probability of disturbing, violent or sexually related dreams becomes minuscule. Thus the chances of occurance of an erotically stimulated dream that may turn into a wet dream also reduce. Hence a Brahmachari should cleanse his mind of all thoughts without exception at least an hour before he goes to sleep and contemplate on God, filling his mind with Godliness and expanding his consciousness to infinity. In course of time, as past Vâsanâs start slowly getting vacated through his practice of Yoga and Brahmacharya, he will experience deep, sound, dreamless sleep that relaxes and rejuvenates his system to an extent that is impossible for the non-Yogi. This is called 'Yoga- Nidra' (Yogic method of relaxation). This is sleep at its best. Such a Yogi gets refreshed and relaxed with just a few hours of Yoga-Nidra unlike the non-Yogi who may not be fully refreshed even after eight or nine hours of sleep. A Yogi who has mastered the art of Yoga-Nidra is bright, cheerful, smiling, energetic and full of happiness like a playful squirrel when he wakes up early in the morning much before sunrise. He has a mind that is eager and yearning to re-immerse itself in Yogic practices and involve itself in meditation. Brahmacharya becomes natural and easy through such an approach

A2: The production of semen is at its maximum and utmost from the onset of puberty in the early teens until the early twenties and very early thirties. The body of the child, having being in a state of natural Brahmacharya since birth is filled with much vigor, vitality and well being. Nature imposes this mandatory, automatic and total state of conservation of vital life energy in the child so as to aid the complete growth and development of the body, brain and the powers of intellect.This is what is referred to as the 'Fountain of youth'. This is what people unconsciously refer to when they say " Oh! The strength, alertness, agility and indefatigable tendency I earlier had when I was a young boy in my teens". This state is nothing but the result of the twelve to fourteen years of unbroken and natural Brahmacharya from birth to teenage. The production of vital energy in the child right from birth is continuous. It is only that this vital energy or Prâna is not converted to physical semen and let out of the body prior to puberty. Life energy is dammed and utilized to aid growth of body and intellect. Mark how nature herself takes recourse to 12 odd years of Brahmacharya in this context. With the onset of puberty, nature opens the downward channel of flow of this Prâna to enable reproduction via production of semen. With the onset of puberty, it is a signal from nature that the body and intellect having reached a certain stage of development, the reproductive ability to further the species is now available. This does not in any way mean that the mature youth can now squander and waste his vital essence through the downward channel. It only means that he has now been vested with the power of furthering his legacy through forming a family and producing offspring. This is the sole purpose of the sexual act, period! Enjoying sexual pleasure is not its purpose. For enjoying bliss of the highest order, there is another correct, permanent and everlasting avenue -- Self-realization. The sexual act has been laced with sexual pleasure to induce and tend the now mature youth to go forth and multiply through marriage. Note this point very carefully. If there had been no pleasure associated with the sexual act, the chances that a person would take the responsibility and effort required to form a family would become very less. So adding the pleasure component to the reproductive act is a clever ploy by nature to ensure continuation of the species and nothing more.

The 'Fountain of youth' which people refer to can stay alive and forever even after a man advances in age if there is no loss of semen except for procreative purposes. The weakness, disease, loss of memory and the loss in physical & mental ability which people complain of with advancing age is a result of misuse of this vital fluid for recreational purposes. Nature made the vital energy available for reproduction and what did man do? Instead of fathering a child or two and continuing with the natural state of conservation, he started regularly wasting this great life power to enjoy sexual pleasure. The pleasure that was created by nature to induce man into forming a family started getting misused into a form of recreation and entertainment. Meddling with the ways and laws of nature always comes with a stiff penalty. In this case the penalty is of a severe magnitude. The penalty is in form of disease, weakness, loss of memory, deteriorating eyesight and a host of many more degenerative problems at the mind and body levels. Behind all these problems and many more, the root cause is the wastage of seminal fluid and nothing else. A Brahmachari who has conserved and transmuted his semen, limiting its expenditure to fathering a child or two will have good strength, an agile, lithe and flexible body, excellent eyesight and robust/radiant health immaterial of his age. He falls ill very, very rarely only due to remnant past karma unfolding and recovers from his illness in no time.

Now the production of semen surcharged with a large amount of Prâna (vital energy) is limited to the age of 32-34 in case of a male, provided he has lead a healthy lifestyle with adequate and nutritious food, exercise and hasn't wasted much of his vital essence since puberty. This is the upper age limit beyond which the ability of the body to produce vital life energy starts declining in the absence of conservation. Beyond this age, a person who does not conserve and transmute his semen starts to age rapidly and with acceleration. His semen starts losing the immense life power that it earlier had. For this reason, the scriptures state that a man should get done with his fathering objectives and strictly lead a life of Brahmacharya without any more voluntary losses at least before the 32-34 age bracket. A Brahmachari wishing to develop the superhuman powers that come further to 12 years of unbroken Brahmacharya (without voluntary or involuntary loss) should start his unbroken Brahmacharya at least within his 32-34th year. The earlier the better. Those who start their practice right at teenage without getting caught in the trap of sexuality experience even better and faster results. Each and every emission of vital fluid no doubt debilitates the body to a certain extent. It is irreversible. The degree to which the body debilitates is somewhat lesser in the teens, twenties and early thirties in the ascending order of magnitude but becomes very rapid and fast after the mid thirties. So while each loss no doubt sets one back by that extent, a Brahmachari who has started the practice of unbroken Brahmacharya much before his 32-34th year has a very live chance of achieving all the benefits/powers of a life of conservation and transmutation that leads to self-realization. The surcharge of power into his semen in the form of Prâna does not reduce even beyond his thirties. The emission of fluid that has occurred before the practice of Brahmacharya, if within moderate limits could be compared to the removal of a few cups of water from a pond containing water. While the removal of each cup of water no doubt lessens the total volume by that extent, the net volume could be assumed to be more or less the same in terms of the total volume of water in the pond. Hence one should stop a life of wastage at the earliest and board the boat of Brahmacharya.

As rightly understood by you, the designated 12 year period is the bare minimum. Also, those who have succeeded in 12 years of glorious Brahmacharya will never have the mind or tendency to break the practice after this period. Does a man who has tasted the freshness and aroma of freshly cooked food go after stale and rotten food? A Brahmachari who has tasted the bliss of Brahmacharya will never be interested in the stale and rotten taste of sexuality. Brahmacharya is really the default state of the soul. It is the natural and native soul state. The sexual tendency or 'need' is really an acquired second nature further to eons of sexuality and not one's default and original state. It is a result of ignorance wound around the soul through 'Mâya' (illusion) and not in any way a part of one's nature. The Âtman (pure soul) has no birth and the Âtman has no death. So Brahmacharya is not just a lifelong practice, it is a practice unto eternity! After one has achieved self-realization and after losing this physical body through death, the Âtman merges into the Almighty creator and lives there for ever in a state of undiminished bliss and ecstasy, ever free from the sorrows and limitations of earthly life.

Question
Hello Sir,

I have 2 questions.

1. I read your previous answer regarding conversion of Ojas into semen and that the process is irreversible. When exactly does this happen? How can one know that this has happened and how can one prevent it?

2. Is it true that fat in the belly is due to excessive loss of semen? How can one reverse the process and gain a flatter belly? I used to have a flat belly earlier but now I see that I have a bulging belly. Recently I have masturbated up to 3 times day. Is the belly fat due to this behavior of mine?

Thanks,
Amit

Answer
Hello Amit,

1. The reversal of Ojas into semen occurs every time sexual thoughts that arise in the mind are let to grow into desire and lust. This does not occur when a thought which has risen is displaced through diverting the mind. It occurs when the thought is let to grow. With every stimulus of desire that grows into lust, there is a response in terms of retraction of Prâna from all over the body and Ojas (from the brain) into semen. The process of conversion of semen formed by the digestive process into Ojas is transmutation. The reverse process of retraction of Ojas into semen through lust is degeneration. The degenerated semen, bereft of its share of Prâna, then gets emitted through voluntary or involuntary means.

2. Fat in the abdominal region could be the result of various factors. However, one should bear in mind the fact that the transmutation of semen into Ojas repletes the body with healthy and potent cell matter and signals the release of hormones that inhibit ageing. Cell multiplication is thus curtailed, reducing the tendency towards obesity and body fat. The release of these hormones is rife at childhood which results in the glow, tautness and luster that children possess. Adults start losing it further to a life of seminal wastage. This automatically accelerates ageing which triggers an increase in the number of cells leading to obesity. In a Brahmachari who has succeeded in years of conservation, the body again starts becoming taut, fresh and wiry as cell multiplication is curtailed and ageing slows drastically.

The only method to prevent defects such as obesity arising from seminal wastage is to lead a life of unbroken Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with adequate physical, mental and spiritual activity to transmute and sublimate semen.

Question
QUESTION: I have a son who is aged about 10.5yrs.
What do you think is the right approach to guide him with respect to impending sexuality, teen age and induct him into brahmacharya practice, etc, etc? Appreciate if you can also give good suggestions for any good literature, "must-read" books, etc...

ANSWER: Hello Chandra,

Good to know of your intentions as regards your son.

If you happen to be a Brahmin by birth, the son of a Brahmin should be invested with the sacred thread or 'Yagnopaveetham' through the ceremony called 'Upanayanam' between his 8th-9th year. This ceremony marks the induction of the child into a life of Brahmacharya for the study of Brahma vidya (The real knowledge to be gained and the purpose for which the human birth has been accorded). As per the Hindu Dharma, a Brahmin child should be put on the path of Brahmacharya (contemplation of the Brahman) by the age of 9 so as to help him receive puberty with a spiritual perspective by age 13 or 14.

Who is the real Brahmin? One who is constantly persevering to realize the Brahman (Almighty Lord) by acquiring Âtma Gnyâna through a life of Brahmacharya, study of scriptures, meditation on what he has studied in the scriptures and a life governed by the Yama-Niyamas is alone a Brahmin and not one who may be born to Brahmin parents but spends his time in contemplation of money or other sense pleasures.

Similarly who is a Shudra? Any man whose mind and activities revolve around the enjoyment of sense pleasures, who constantly perseveres to enjoy the external pleasures of sexuality and who cannot be content and happy without such sense stimulation and the apparent intoxication of money fits into the class of a shudra. The body is the chief form of trade here. Everything is done through the body, for the body and by the body in such a man. He considers himself as the body and nothing more. This is termed as 'Dehâtma Buddhi' or thinking 'My body itself is the soul or the real me'. The mental faculties for achieving the higher realms of knowledge and Godliness are absent or dormant.

A man who may be born to Brahmin parents and yet leads the above class of life is a Shudra.
A man who may be born to Shudra parents and yet leads a life constantly in the thought of Brahman, persevering to realize him is a Brahmin. Sage Valmiki is an example.

As per the scriptures, a child when born even to a Brahmin remains a shudra (one who is attached to the senses) till his 'Upanayanam'. Why is this? The soul might have been leading the life of a Shudra (in action and not birth) in its previous birth. It might have been devoted to such a life of sense pleasures in its previous incarnation. By some good merit, it has now been born to Brahmin parents. The ceremony 'Upanayanam' means 'Opening of the additional eye' (Upa-additional, nayanam- eye). It represents the induction of the child into a mode of life that will help it open its third eye (In between the eyebrows where the three Nâdis-Ida, Pingala and Sushumna meet). The ceremony is the initiation of the child into a new lifestyle that will help it raise above the senses and get Brahma vidya by making use of the third eye further to its opening.

What is this third eye? It is nothing but the eye physically represented at the place between the eyebrows by which the most subtle, most divine nature of the Âtman is realized. It is also called as 'Thrikuti'. Things that are seen through the Thrikuti are seen on the mental screen that appears when one closes the eyes and meditates at the region between the eyebrows. This screen remains blank and dark in the Shudra (one attached to the senses). In the Brahmin or Yogi striving for self-realization, this screen lights up with different colored lights after a few months/years of practice during meditation and eventually reveals all knowledge of the Parabrahman (Almighty). Âtma Gnyâna cannot be obtained through the external sense of sight, sound taste, smell or touch. It can only be perceived through the third eye. For this reason, the Yogi curtails a life of senses, makes the mind one pointed and directs it to the Thrikuti through meditation on the supreme. This eye is the subtle and divine eye through which the Yogi becomes able to see everything that pertains to creation and foresee things that might happen in the future. The sight obtained through this eye is hence called 'Divya Dristi' in Sanskrit.

After performing the thread ceremony, the father of the child should now direct it in the path of acquiring Brahma Vidya. The practice of 'Sandhya' through Gayathri Mantra is intended at this purpose. But the practice of Sandhya in the correct form involves the chanting of many pages of mantras and is ritualistic. The correct form of Prânayâma is never performed by those performing Sandhya in the present day. They mechanically flip through the process without understanding the significance of proper Prânayâma after Âchamana. Hence it would be a better and a more efficient idea to make the child follow a life of Yoga which is the most direct and efficient means to attain Brahma Vidya.

I will outline the procedure of lifestyle that is to be followed after performing the 'Upanayanam' which assures excellent success in natural Brahmacharya and the attainment of a high spiritual, moral and intellectual character that eventually leads to establishment in Brahma Vidya.

1. The child should be made to rise every day at least by 5.00 A.M and immediately have a bath. The father should teach the child the 'Gayathri mantra' and make the child give three 'Arghyams' (oblations of water) to the Lord Sun by chanting the mantra.

2. The child should then bow to the Parabrahman (Almighty Lord) either mentally with devotion or through prostrating to the Family-God and make a mental request asking the Lord to ward away all ignorance and help establish oneself in vidya or true knowledge of the soul.

3. This should be followed by the practice of 'Shirsana' or head stand to initiate flow of Pranic energy from the base of the body to the head through the spine.

4. Next to be performed is 'Tribandha' (Mula, Uddiyana and Jaalandhara Bandhas). This is of much importance.

5. Next is 'Nadi Shodhana' (Refer previous posts on Yoga, Prânayâma and Brahmacharya for the method)

6. Next is Prânayâma (very important) which is to be gradually increased in duration over a period of many months (Refer earlier posts again).

7. Finally the child should be made to meditate on the formless and attribute-less Lord (preferable) or else on any other God with form such as Lord Krishna, Rama, Vishnu, Venkateshwara or Shiva without thinking of anything else for about 10 minutes. During this meditation, one should constantly remind oneself that the Lord is all-pervading and omnipresent everywhere and that this entire world including oneself is Brahman ("Sarvam Khalvidam Brahman")

This procedure is to be repeated anytime between 5.00-6.30 P.M (before sunset) in the evening. This is the gist of 'Sandhya' but without the ritualistic and mantric approach. This mode of lifestyle if carried out rightly, will establish one in Brahmacharya and ward away all base and unwanted thoughts thus enabling contemplation on Brahman. It should be followed regularly and without fail.

The parents of the child should always create a spiritual and holistic atmosphere in the house through talks on the Bhagavad-Gita, Upanishads, Âtma Vichâra (discussions about life, soul and God) and constantly remind oneself and the child about the unreal and false nature of the external world/senses and the truth behind God. A child should be made to understand right from its younger days that the aim of life is not to earn money, wealth or enjoy sensual pleasures but to gain knowledge of the self. A career, job, salary and monetary growth are only incidental and the means to sustain oneself with food, clothing and shelter. These are not the aims of life. These should be made use of to help sustain oneself in the quest for Brahma Gnyana. Based on one's past karma and divine will, God always shows a path for each and every creature on earth to earn enough for sustenance. This path is called 'Dharma'. One man might become a doctor, another an engineer and a third an accountant. These are all different 'Dharmas' and nothing more. They are only the paths of sustenance shown by the Lord. One should not make the error of thinking these paths themselves to be life. Immaterial of one's path in 'Dharma', a man riveted to a life of Yoga is always assured of liberation. Which is why Lord Krishna tells in the Gita: "Naasthi Yogaath Param Balam" - "There is no strength higher than that of Yoga"

Just before the child attains to puberty, the father should take the child into confidence and instruct the child on the functioning of the sexual mechanism in the body and the method of working of Brahmacharya through transmutation. The importance of physical exercise, sports or Yogic asanas must be emphasized. The child should be very clearly made to understand that the purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. This is very important. If the correct and right perspective to the purpose behind sexuality is ingrained into the child at puberty, the child will not wander behind wrong associations/friends trying to get an idea of what sexuality and the physical changes in him are all about. He has been rightly instructed by his parents (whom he trusts) at home about the purpose behind the occurance of puberty and hence is assured of the facts that govern it. The life of Yoga that he has been following for the past four to five years (from age 9 to age 14) with Prânayâma, God-meditation and constant discussions between the parents regarding God, soul and the purpose of life give him an inclination for the natural and effortless practice of Brahmacharya. These years of Yogic practice will have automatically channelized his energy upwards and the tendency for downward flow reduces greatly. He will shine well in his studies, be of a good moral character, affectionate and lovable with his parents and siblings and will have a strong yearning to acquire Âtma Gnyâna. The practice of Brahmacharya will make him shine like a star in whatever field he chooses and establish him in true happiness and well-being.

The Bhagavad-Gita and stories containing morals from the Mahabharata make for good reads. It is a good idea to read and discuss these stories and the meaning of the Bhagavad-Gita with family members to produce spiritual and Godly vibrations at home.

QUESTION: Thanks a lot for the detailed reply!
I have performed his thread ceremony recently in the 11 th year finally, as there are some objections and obstacles created when I wanted to do that in 7-8 th year itself.These objections also are mental blocks created in people's mind due to ignorance and wrong feeding into their minds, about which I am not discussing now anyway...
But I am finding it very difficult to get someone instruct him (and me also) in the correct way of doing sandhya etc.

So actually in my experience, I feel that combining yoga and reading good literature like Ramayana to be more effective than doing a ritual blindly, without understanding and without putting the heart and mind into it.
But still we have the emotional attachment towards the tradition and the ritual, which I can't leave, so just struggling to understand the full essence of it, find someone who can teach me correctly along with meaning of each and every step, and how to adapt it to different situations in the current modern life, etc....Its like understanding step by step and making it better day by day.....
In this context I would like to ask you another question:
1) In the current modern lifestyle, in which we are locked, we may not be able to follow all the traditions as listed by our traditional culture(for eg: a brahmachari should carry a staff, should walk barefeet, or with wooden sandals,put on a shikha, etc, for eg ref this link:http://www.kamakoti.org/hindudharma/part17/chap4.html), how do I ensure that I adapt the essence of all these rules,which I guess are for our protection only, and see that the energy or mind is not lost or there is no downfall, but there is some sure and steady progress, however small it may be, and also which is compatible with our current lifestyle, mired in school, career like things, which may be the prarabdha we may be working out now....

Answer
Dear Chandra,

The practice of Sandhya and emphasis on the chanting of veda mantras is the ritualistic and orthodox approach to evolution. While the final destination of each and every path be it ritualistic or non-ritualistic is the same (self-realization), the practice of Yoga (life of Yoga and not merely performing Âsana) is the most direct and tangible approach.

For the full effects of Sandhya to bear fruit, one must first master the involved mantras with 'Svara' correctly, then get to know the meaning and finally meditate on the meaning while chanting the mantra. This is always accompanied by external mandates in the forms of appropriate dress for the ritual, shikha, woodden sandals, staff etc.. Following this method in completeness may not be possible to all under all circumstances. Hence it falls short of being universal.

A life of Yoga comes without these limitations. Nothing external is required for the practice of Yoga and Brahmacharya. All that is required is an iron will, determination and absolute devotion to God with a mind intent on self-realization. A yogi might sit in the Padmâsana and merge into complete union with God just wearing a piece of cloth, a track pant or a pair of shorts. His external dress has nothing to do with his progress. When this body itself is 'Mithya' or false why worry about the mode of dressing? His approach is based on the highest truths of life transcending ritualism and orthodoxy. Except for the soul which is an extension of the Parabrahman, all else is falsity for the Yogi. Hence he does not waste time on external things and concentrates solely on the goal. The yogi starts his practice beyond tradition and moves ahead scientifically by understanding the meaning behind the do's and don'ts through experience.

The vedic approach which hinges on ritualism became cumbersome and less appreciated with the advent of Kali yuga. For this reason, Lord Krishna tells us in the Bhagavad-Gita to immerse oneself in a life of Yoga as the most efficient and proper means of attaining self-realization for this age and time.

Merely practicing vedic rituals without knowing the meaning behind the mantras and rituals is of little use. For this reason, many vedic scholars have remained just that...scholars and nothing more. Their practical application and evolution are in scant proportions. Most of them have failed to rise even above lower emotions such as anger, greed, jealousy and passion. It is not the vedas or the rituals that are responsible but the lack of correct understanding of these methods. This problem does not arise in Yoga. Here the emphasis is on experience at the first hand level. Until and unless the Yogi achieves a particular state of knowledge, advancement and experience at the realistic level, he cannot go to the next level. Mere theory produces no advancement. The Yogi has to practice it and gain 'Svanubhava' (personal experience). Hence a life of Yoga with strict Brahmacharya applies more realistically to the present day circumstances. The practice of honest and true Brahmacharya with a life of Yoga will put the aspirant on the right track towards improvement on all fronts. Following the methods listed in the previous answer with dedication, devotion and commitment will yield results and help one move towards the goal. This is based on my personal experience and is beyond doubt.

Question
Dear Sir

I would like to take a vow of lifelong Brahmacharya;so that my determination to achieve self realization via Brahmacharya becomes much more stronger.I would like to know how to take the vow? Can I take it in the prayer room of my house? What might happen if a wet dream occurs after I have taken the vow?
Please tell me the entire procedure.

Answer
Hello Kaushal,

Good to hear of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Coming to the answer,

A Brahmachari would be more wise and practical in taking a vow of Brahmacharya in the realistic sense than in the sense of becoming a 'Naisthika Brahmachari' (one who practices Brahmacharya without getting married at all). What is this realistic sense? It involves a vow to practice honest and true Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed at all places and times in the real sense. This means he can marry and lead the life of a 'Grihastha' (married man) but limits the sexual act only for the purpose of progeny. Such a man though married, derives the full and complete benefits of a life of Brahmacharya and becomes very eligible for the attainment of self-realization.

A vow of 'Naishthika Brahmacharya' (life long Brahmacharya in the single, unmarried state) may not be in everyone's destiny. One must always remember that it is not we who decide upon our mode of life but the Almighty Lord. It is only through his grace and will that the world was created, exists and will one day dissolve away. Each and every being is completely controlled by the Almighty and subject to his commands whether one wants it or doesn't. A Brahmachari may feel very devoted and interested towards 'Nasithika Brahmacharya' and feel like taking a vow and the Almighty might have other plans for him in terms of marriage and children. He may find himself in a state a few years ahead where he has no other option but to marry through the working of destiny. What will he do then with his vow? A vow is a very serious thing and not something that can be broken casually. A vow involves taking an oath or promise in the name of the Almighty creator and standing by it even if it means death, loss of honor and destruction. How many people are fully geared for such determination and surrender?

Keeping all these practicalities in mind, a beginner Brahmachari would do well to take the vow of Brahmacharya for the period until his marriage. After getting married and fathering a child, he can renew his vows and then try for life-long Brahmacharya if he so wills and if God wills. One must after all remember that the purpose of the sexual act is to produce offspring and thus contribute to continuing the human race. It is only very few souls who have been absolved of this responsibility by the Almighty Lord and such countable number of people take recourse to 'Naisthika Brahmacharya'. The Brahmachari at the start of Brahmacharya does not know if he or she belongs to this minority. If yes, he will remain unmarried and practice absolute Brahmacharya through his life. If no, he marries, produces offspring and then continues with the practice of absolute Brahmacharya. Either way, if his Brahmacharya is absolute and true with devotion and love for the Almighty, he achieves the same goal namely self-realization. It is not that all Naisthika Brahmacharis have attained self-realization or that those who have married haven't attained to it. The marital status of a person has nothing to with attaining self-realization. A man might be an unmarried Sanyasi (monk) and yet be full of sensual desires. Another man might be married and yet be anchored to God with devotion and surrender without desire for sense pleasures. A sensible Brahmachari lets the decision regarding his marital status to God and does not try to write his destiny. Ours is to accept what the Almighty wills and abide by his decision.

To take a vow of Brahmacharya, one must as always wake up early in the morning much before Sunrise while still dark, have a bath and then meditate on the Lord for a few minutes. He should then raise both his hands straight above his head and mentally proclaim - " O Lord Parabrahman, the great creator, preserver and destroyer, today I take the vow of Brahmacharya with the promise that I shall follow the tenets of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed at all places and times to the best of my efforts. Kindly give me the strength and ability to raise above Mâya (Illusion of this world) and help me establish myself in 'Âtma Gnyâna' (knowledge of the Âtman). Let my Brahmacharya be unbroken and honest. Bless me, bless me".

Further to taking the vow, the Brahmachari must continue with his daily Yogic practices of Tribandha, Prânayâma and meditation regularly and without fail. He should never willingly let a lustful thought grow and develop during times of arousal. His efforts at practicing Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed must be complete and to the best of his efforts in the wakeful state. He should regularly subject his body to physical exercise (or Âsana), intellectual work and God-meditation. He should follow the Yama-Niyams of Yoga and try as much as possible to stay in God-thought during the course of the day. What is very important is to stay very clear of letting sexual thoughts flower and develop. Whenever he is troubled by the sight of a woman, the Brahmachari should tell himself of the falsity of the body by reminding himself that the female body attracting him is nothing but a bag of flesh containing excreta, blood, fat, pus, phlegm and urine. He should remind himself that it will age, wrinkle, get diseased and finally decompose. This is as much as one can do. If the practice is honest, sincere and correctly carried out, God will undoubtedly extend his helping hand and wet dreams will gradually reduce and taper away over the course of time.

Question

Respected Guruji,

Hope you are doing well. Many of our doubts are cleared in these forums. Many thanks for that. I have following questions:-

1. Whether one should strictly avoid sleep in the noon even if one hasnt had a full 7-8 hours sleep in the night? If NO what is the exact or good time to sleep.

2. Is it good to take Makardhwaja to get the strength.

3. Also man gets aousal in the morning.. Can it be avoided? Whether one should avoid it purposefully? If one cannot wake up early in the morning say 4:30 AM.

Thanks,

Hari Om..

Answer
Hello Suresh,

1. Sleep during daytime is to be avoided. On occasions where one is extremely tired or unable to control sleep sleep during the day due to lack of sleep at night, the nap taken during afternoon should not exceed 30 minutes. Sleeping beyond half-an-hour will cause undesirable effects.

2. Makaradhwaj is an Ayurvedic medicine resorted to by people afflicted with a disease or condition that has caused a loss in procreative power. There is hence a need to boost their fertility and sexual ability while trying for children. Why would a Brahmachari have such a need? The true Brahmachari does not require external supplements or medicines to maintain his strength and vitality. Strength and virility are naturally at his disposal and in abundance further to the true practice of honest and sincere Brahmacharya.

3. Erections occurring due to sexual thoughts or impressions flowering in the mind if found very difficult to control are to be curtailed by washing the urinary organ with cold water and meditating on God. Natural erections that occur during sleep or early in the morning WITHOUT any sexual thought being present occur when the body pumps blood to the genital area to re-vitalize the organs. There is no need to worry regarding such erections that are not the result of sexual thoughts/dreams. This is a perfectly healthy phenomenon. A Brahmachari should wake up at least by 5.00 A.M, have a bath and start his yogic practices and meditation if he wants to achieve unbroken Brahmacharya and get free from wet dreams. Lying in bed beyond Sunrise will make it impossible to practice absolute Brahmacharya. Ojas gets depleted further to sleep beyond Sunrise.

Answer
Hello Priyesh,

Good to hear of your interest as regards Brahmacharya. Coming to the answer,

The struggle and effort that goes into the initial stages of Brahmacharya is something which none are spared from. Having lead countless lives in animal form and many births in the lower human form attached to sexual pleasure, the past tendencies that have been acquired by the 'Jivâtma' take time to nullify. This can only be achieved with constant God-thought, God-surrender and God-meditation. One has to constantly remind himself of the falsity behind the beauty of the female body. One has to remind himself, every now and then of the reality behind the impermanent nature of bodily attraction. One has to busy his body, mind and psyche with regular physical exercise, intellectual work and God-meditation. One has to keep himself away from all kinds of situations and people who fire up the sex plane to the best possible extent. A good Brahmachari always carries out his practice of Brahmacharya in secrecy and does not advertise or discuss it. His contact with the world and its people is very brief and that too out of necessity. All these disciplines are very important at the initial stages when the mind is weak and vulnerable to temptation.

One should always remind himself of the reality behind creation. This world, people, the stars, planets and the entire cosmos is only a dream creation of God and not real. Just as the Lord created them, he will one day destroy them and dissolve the objects of his creation. Then why has he resorted to their creation if the final objective is destruction? The whole purpose behind creation is to make the individual soul realize its oneness with the creator. The purpose is to make the individual 'Jivâtma' get over its ignorance and reclaim its default and original state of knowledge. For this purpose, the great Lord subjects the 'Jivâtma' to various births in the insect, animal and human form. With every passing birth, the 'Jivâtma' gets one step higher in progress, knowledge and thereby evolves.

The best example for evolution is the Brahmachari himself. Prior to the start of Brahmacharya, he was wedded to sensual pleasures and their enjoyment. After a few months of Brahmacharya, he starts to realize that the path of senses is wrong and that the path of Godliness and chastity is right. This is evolution. This is progress. He has now risen a step above his former self. He now strives to lead a life of strict Brahmacharya. If his efforts are genuine and his love and devotion to God strong, he will gradually reach the next step where interference and hiccups from temptations become much lesser. He will slowly start reaching a stage where his Brahmacharya becomes more effortless and natural. He starts getting closer to the shores of his default state of God-bliss.

One's real nature is beyond sexuality. There is no male or female in reality. Man and woman are only an illusion in this creation. After death, the physical male or female body decomposes and vanishes. The soul then moves in the astral and causal bodies for sometime to be reborn again as a man or woman. And so does the soul continue in these cycles of births and deaths, slowly but surely, evolving a little with each innings, till it attains to the state of self-realization. Upon self-realization, it fully reverts to its default state of Godliness and infinite bliss, fully content in itself, having realized everything but itself (God) to be false. This instantaneously merges it forever into what the non-realized man calls 'God' or Almighty, a concept distinct and separate from himself. In terms of absolute reality, there has, is and will forever be only one entity namely the Almighty. The layers of Ignorance around the soul make it think of itself to be separate from the Almighty. In reality, the soul was, is and will always be the Almighty as the drops of water in the ocean are the ocean themselves and not separate. This is what all the scriptures mean when they say "Thou art divinity manifest". The soul and the Almighty are one and the same; just as the drops of water in an ocean and the ocean are one and the same. Untouched and undisturbed, there is one thing called the ocean with infinite water. Put your hand into this ocean and separate some water into drops, the concept of the soul is formed. Put these drops back into the ocean and the drops (soul) merges back into the ocean (Almighty) and there is one single entity called the ocean (Almighty) again. This is the exact reason why each and every living and non-living creature, in other words everything in this cosmos is divine and the creation of the Almighty. For this reason, the sensible man respects and treats all creatures as his own self. Inflicting the slightest harm unto even a minuscule worm is causing that much harm to his own self.

The Lord has given a male and a female form around this thing called a soul so as to make the soul realize falsity and reclaim knowledge. After innumerable lives devoted to a life of sexuality and unreal sense pleasures, the tired and disillusioned individual soul, enveloped by Avidyâ (Ignorance) that has made it forget its true nature of knowledge & bliss finally realizes that there must be some other method to attain to permanent bliss and free itself of the problems and pains that come with this world and its workings. It realizes that the path of sense pleasures can never lead to a definite destination. Feed them more, the more indulgence they seek and at the cost of health and well-being. There is not one man or woman on earth who has taken the path of sense pleasures and can honestly say he is perfectly content and happy. Desire can never be sated. It always wants more. Hence the sensible man works are getting free from desires through Brahmacharya and self-realization finally becoming self-content in himself; the soul, Almighty, never to be reborn again in this physical form.

The soul is neither male nor female. The soul is beyond these distinctions and limitations. Hence the soul in reality is bliss of the highest order and beyond the unreal concept of sexuality. It is God himself in actuality. One must constantly remind himself - " I am only the Âtman (pure soul) who is knowledge, bliss and existence himself. I have no need for sexuality which is not my real state. My real state is God-bliss at the highest level. Due to many millions of past lives high on sexuality, I have mistakenly assumed that I am male or female and that I have a sexual need. This is incorrect. I will try honestly and sincerely to the best of my efforts to reclaim my lost divinity. By the grace of the all merciful Lord, I will succeed in restating myself to this high and ultimate state".

Constant efforts, a life of Yoga, waking up early in the morning while dark before Sunrise and meditating, limited food and sleep, avoiding unfavorable company, regularity in physical, mental, spiritual efforts and persistence in the above train of thought; by these means does the wise Brahmachari wishing to free himself from painful worldly entanglements ascend the ladder of enlightenment.

Question

Dear Sir

Swami Sivananda recommends japa of a mantra daily 108 to 21600 times for spiritual advancement and also to strengthen Brahmacharya.I would like to ask you which mantra can we use for japa? Can we use the mantra"Om Shri Ram Jai Ram Jai Jai Ram"? Is it necessary to use a japa mala or can we use the mantra mentally during meditating on Lord Ram?

Thanks in advance.

Answer
Hello Kaushal,

There is ultimately one, single, supreme entity which has created this world and is responsible for all creation, preservation and finally destruction -- The Almighty Lord. The various forms of God's such as Rama, Krishna, Vishnu, Shiva, Christ or Allah are merely the different names by which different people address this one and only Supreme. Based on their individual beliefs, approach and perspectives, people apply a different form, name and concept to the one universal Lord. There is a beautiful saying in the Upanishads addressing this phenomenon:

|| "Tad ekam sat, Vipraha bahudha vadanthi" ||

- "He is only one, he alone is real, the sages call him by various names".

It is the intensity, devotion, surrender and love behind prayer that matters. The purpose behind Japa (mental repetition of God's name) is to inundate the body, mind and psyche with positive, divine vibrations and help develop a spiritual state that leads to single pointed mental concentration towards God. One should focus the mind and thought completely on God during Japa and not let any other idea crop up. Deviations that occur in the mind are to be displaced and replaced with God thought.

There are four kinds of God contemplation through Japa. Each method is higher to the previous.

1. The first kind where the person closes his eyes and chants the name of the Lord, aloud, repetitively.
2. The second kind where the person chants the name silently but with lip movement.
3. The third kind where there is only mental repetition of the name without lip movement.
4. The fourth and the highest kind of contemplation where God-thought, love for God and yearning for God have reached such intensity that the mind and Prâna merge into God. There is nothing but God everywhere to the meditator and the person loses external consciousness further to complete internal union with the Almighty. This is the 'Nirbîja Samâdhi' of Yoga or the highest state of super-consciousness.

The Upanishads describe this state as that where the 'Jivâtma' (embodied soul) swims in ecstasy like a fish in the 'Oceanic bliss of Brahman'. Shri Ramakrishna Paramahansa the great saint described the bliss of 'Nirbîja Samâdhi' as being equal to the pleasure derived from a million sexual orgasms if they were to take place all at once and in continuum, so the common man could get an understanding of its intensity. All physiological functions of the body such as those of the brain, heart and lungs stop in this state. All organs stop working. There is no inhalation or exhalation of air. Yet the person is fully alive. Great Yogi's stay in this 'Nirbîja' state of super-consciousness for days, months, years and decades savoring the bliss of Brahman and in complete merger with the Almighty occurring at the 'Sahasrara chakra' located in the brain. The body of the Yogi is fed by 'Amrita' or divine nectar that flows down from the brain to keep the physical body in a state of disease-free and death-free suspension. The Yogi can defy death and stay for very long periods of time in this state if God wills. He gets the ability to burn many of his past karmas. There are great Yogis in the inaccessible depths of the Himalayan mountains, unseen to people and at places very much below sub-zero temperatures who are in this state of Tapas from hundreds of years in God-contemplation. Physically speaking, their bodies are hundreds of years old and yet not ravaged by the effects of time and age.

The 'Amrita' or divine nectar which is spoken about is nothing but the transmuted and sublimated 'Rethas' (semen) which after rising up to the brain has become 'Ojas' and finally 'Soma' or 'Amrita. Hence a Yogi who wishes concrete progress in a life of meditation leading to 'Samâdhi' and finally self-realization conserves and transmutes his 'Rethas' with absolute efforts and by never letting sexual thoughts grow; for unless there is an enormous store of 'Prâna' in his body through complete conservation and transmutation of semen leading to production of much 'Soma' or 'Amrita', the body can never go into 'Samâdhi' or sustain itself in the state of super-consciousness without breath. In a complete 'Urdhvaretha Yogi', there is constant production of 'Amrita' for as long as he wishes.

Ram Naam can be used for Japa. The preferred mantra among Yogis aspiring self-realization is "Om Namo Nârâyanâya"-- which means "Salutations to the supreme being who resides in the heart of all mankind"

Chanting the mantra mentally is always much better than using a Japa Mâla; for the physical rosary of beads is a mental distraction. One's mind should be immersed in God and not in counting beads!

Question

QUESTION: Sir

I am practicing celibacy 5 months ago and till this date, My mind become pure one and I can enjoy the spiritual joy as in the childhood days I have, Still I have 3 doubts, If these doubts are foolish questions please accept my apologies

1. If Semen mixed with blood in the body by using injunction and any other equipments what will be the results?

2. I heard that semen retention will cause fat reduction in the body by its heat, and will become thin. But I saw several yogis have fat and bulk bodies (like Yogi Nityananda swami, Paramahamsa Yogananda, Trilanka swami etc) How is this?

3.by brahmacharya we can overcome fear?

I am very thankful for your valuable help to keep brahmacharya. God will bless for your great effort to move the bachelors towrads God

ANSWER: Hello Vijith,

Nice to hear of your efforts at Brahmacharya. Coming to the answers,

A1: The act of trying to physically and directly inject ejaculated semen back into the bloodstream could lead to death.

A2: By the conservation and transmutation of semen, a Yogi becomes capable of maintaining his strength and energy with lesser quantity of food as compared to the non-Brahmachari. The sublimation of semen, regular physical activity through Âsana or exercise and consuming lesser quantity of food result in reduction of excess fat.

The great Yogi's you have mentioned above were complete Urdhvarethas. After attaining to the stage of a complete Urdhvaretha, the Yogi develops the power to control the very production of his semen at the astral level. He can make use of his Prâna to control or fully stop the production of physical semen and instead divert that energy for advanced spiritual activities such as staying in Samâdhi for long periods, negating the karma of a disciple etc.. Being in a very advanced state or having attained to self-realization and thus having realized themselves not to be the body (unlike the normal man who thinks the body to be himself and is affected by physical health or disease), such Yogis have gone past the stage where there is a need to maintain the body in form and shape through physical exercise. Such Yogis are past the stage where regular physical activity is required to transmute semen into Ojas. Complete mastery at stopping the very production of semen at the astral level is within their reach.

The body in reality is only a tool to help the soul attain self-realization. Hence there is a need for the common man to maintain health and strength in this body. Of what use is the body to one who has attained the final state? Of what use is the body to one who has completed the very purpose of human birth and has no more births or deaths?...

...A boat is necessary for a man wishing to cross a river and reach the other bank safely. Till then, it is very important that he maintains the boat in perfect working condition, lest he drowns. But of what use is the boat after he has reached the other side? Especially, when there is no return for ever to the side of the river he started from ? Such a man who has reached the destination shore permanently does not worry about the condition of the boat. To him, the boat is no longer a matter of concern. His mind is focused on more important things on the new shore. Self-realization is like the destination bank and the human body is like a boat. To the one who has attained to self-realization or is very close to it, there is no further use from this bag of flesh and bones called the body. The body has worked out all the karmas it had to go through. It does not matter whether the body is thin or stout, wiry or bulky. It has already served its purpose. It's physical state, state of health or appearance does not matter. Hence such advanced souls do not feel the need to maintain it with exercise or Âsanas. They focus themselves on the reality, bliss and substance of the state they have attained and abandon the efforts that the common man needs to apply to maintain his body. Based on the natural and default constitution of the body, those Yogis whose bodies have a tendency to put on weight become bulky and those Yogis whose bodies have a wiry tendency remain thin. These things are of no concern or value to such advanced beings and they generally don't interfere as regards to matters concerning the physical state.

A3: Yes, one overcomes fear through the practice of Brahmacharya. The correct practice of Brahmacharya with God-meditation and devotion helps one develop affinity to reality and helps one overcome the influence of falsity. Fear is faith in the negative. The true Brahmachari becomes positively oriented and gradually starts to see everything as a scene in this drama called life. A scene which is unreal and only a make believe illusion. The only things prone to injury or harm are this body, mind and ego. And even these get subjected to pain further to past negative karma and not by fluke. No one suffers or enjoys without past karma. Brahmacharya helps a person to accept life as the dream-drama of God and helps accept each and every occurance as a part of this divine drama without question. The true Brahmachari starts moving towards the state where he starts to recognize himself as not the body, mind, intellect, consciousness or ego but only as the soul. To the soul which is formless, colorless, shapeless and beyond matter what is there that can cause injury or pain? Who can harm, kill or cause the destruction of such an entity? This realization will slowly start to dawn with progress in Brahmacharya to each and every sincere Brahmachari in course of time. Fear reduces and finally vacates with this advancement.

The great sage and founder of Ashtânga Yoga, Maharishi Pathanjali, the scriptor of 'Yoga suthras' who lived more than 4000 years back, sums up the effect of Brahmacharya with these words:-

"Brahmacharya Pratistâyâm, Veerya Labhâha"

- "Through establishment in Brahmacharya comes gain in Veerya"

The term 'Veerya' in the Sanskrit language, among many meanings denotes semen, bravery, courage, valor, strength, determination, confidence, persistence and grit. The Brahmachari is eventually assured of all these gains if his practice is unbroken, consistent and correct.

QUESTION: What happens to the preserved semen after 12 years brahmacharya? After the turning of semen in to the blood what happens to such blood what is its character(blood)? Semen prodution of the body is a continuos process in the period of brahmacharya? what is the power of semen?

God bless you, thanks for the sudden reply

Answer
Semen that is conserved and transmuted first nourishes the entire body with health and vitality. It then goes towards the brain and tones the mental faculties of memory, intelligence, reasoning, intuition and other mental abilities. The third step is the conversion to Ojas or divine astral power (also called personal electricity) which gives a man the ability to excel in any given work and become very impressive in his looks and aura. This is followed by Tejas or luster in the face and body. Finally it becomes Amrita or Soma that is stored in the brain and used in the state of super-consciousness.

So in reality, semen never stays in the gross, physical form beyond a short period of time in the Brahmachari who is constantly sublimating it. Its essence in the form of Prâna goes on increasing in subtler dimensions through Ojas, Tejas and Soma. It is the essence of Prâna in semen that surcharges the blood. Semen never becomes blood directly. The Prânic energy within semen if conserved charges the blood with energy and vitality leading to immunity against disease and bestowing excellent health. Further to 12 years of unbroken Brahmacharya without any voluntary or involuntary loss, the level of Prâna reaches a state where the Yogi develops superhuman powers and abilities and attains to self-realization if he so wills.

Kindly go through all the past answers to get a better idea of the process.

Question
sir , is meditation essential in the cource of celibacy?

Answer
Hello Aman,

Yes, Prânayâma and meditation on God become very necessary if unbroken Brahmacharya through continuous conservation and transmutation of semen is the objective. There are exceptions to this rule in the form of some very advanced souls who do not particularly sit in a formal meditative posture and meditate. But such people are blessed with immense devotion, love and surrender to the Almighty and to such an extent that their minds are constantly in the thought and contemplation of the Supreme by default. In their case, the physical discipline of setting aside some time of the day for meditation, sitting in the spine-erect posture and meditating may not be necessary, for they are constantly in effective meditation at almost all times! In such cases, it can rightly be assumed that these people have got done with the discipline required for a beginner in their past lives and have now reached a state where the initial requirements of a formal Yogic discipline may not be necessary.

An example for such advancement was the great saint Shri. Ramakrishna Paramahansa. His spiritual advancement and realization was to such a degree that there was no other thought but that of God in the wakeful and dream states. The sight of mating animals reminded him of the union of the soul with the Supreme Lord and drove him into Samâdhi! Such was his purity, divinity and realization. He would sit with his spine curved in a hunch and yet be in complete union with the Almighty through Nirbîja Samâdhi, unaware of his surroundings.

So as regards to the neophyte beginner or even one who has made some advancement, a strict and regular discipline consisting of all the eight Angâs of Yoga as a part of lifestyle is mandatory. After reaching such an advanced state, these limbs of Yoga become effortless and natural.

Question
hello sir, i m having a problem regarding consentration, sir my consentration power is so week, that i can nt sit and study for more than 1 hour. Now m 19+ and goning to b twenty soon in november.... Is consentration problem is due to masturbation? Yes, i use to do earlier, but after reading your answers i completely stoped it before 2 weaks.... I use to do some cardio and weigh training in order to get over this habbit.... And my health is also nt gud.. M 6 feet 3 inch skinny guy.... But this in nt my serious problem.. The problem is regarding my studies/ memory /concentration HELP ! HELP ! HELP thanx

Answer
Dear Aman,

Masturbation is to be shunned at all costs. Follow a strict life of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with consistent and adequate physical exercise, academic intellectual work to expend mental energy constructively and God-meditation on a regular basis. This will help channelize sexual energy into productivity as regards studies. Lead a life governed by the tenets of Yoga through balanced and limited food, regulated sleep and clean habits. Avoid being awake beyond 9.30 P.M and avoid being in bed beyond 5.00 A.M. This sleeping and waking up routine is to be strictly followed. This will give excellent sleep and rest to the body & mind leading to good memory, concentration and focus.

The root cause of restlessness, irritability, anxiety and stress is loss of semen. The man who loses his vital fluid is losing a part of his very own inner self each time he wastes it. A man who wastes his spermatic fluid regularly for a purpose other than the rightful purpose (progeny from his lawful wife) will undoubtedly degenerate and fall at the physical, mental and psychic levels and attract all sorts of problems and difficulties due to his misdeeds in the karmic plane. The life of such a man eventually becomes rife with misery and pain. These negative results will generally not be very evident at the start of such a life, but become pronounced and notable in due course. Violation and misuse of the sacred fluid for a wrong purpose always ends with suffering and misfortune. This is the absolute truth and there is no doubt about it. There are innumerable examples of men and women who have paid a heavy penalty further to such misuse. Men and women of name, fame, fortune, achievement, ability, talent and greatness have lost all further to recreational sexuality. It is a slow and slippery slope which leads to only one destination - Destruction. So the wise man avoids all forms of recreational sexuality and instead diverts his mind to God.

The conservation and transmutation of semen into Ojas on the other hand makes it very easy for a man to sit for hours concentrating on any necessary activity without the least fatigue. Mental concentration and focus flow seamlessly and with ease. A man who has much Ojas in his Astral body can solve and win over the problems of life very effectively. His aura is charged with cosmic energy and cuts through difficulties with the ease of a sharp knife. Ojas gives the peculiar ability and power of being calm, cheerful and undisturbed even in the most trying of situations. The level of Prâna goes on increasing within the body of the true Brahmachari with every passing day and gives him superb poise and stability. Large amounts of Ojas neutralize and subjugate negative vibrations directed at oneself from others. An entire book can be written on the positive effects and powers that come from Brahmacharya and one would yet fall short of doing justice to elaboration on the benefits. To the man who is continually conserving and transmuting his semen year after year through unbroken Brahmacharya and devotion to the Almighty, the impossible becomes possible.

Kindly go through all the past answers to get clear with how to carry out a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya with Prânayâma and meditation which are very beneficial in toning up mental faculties and in helping effective transmutation of semen.

Following such a regimen will reduce the problem within 6 months and completely solve the problem within a span of 1 year, awarding excellent health, strength, vitality, concentration and memory along with a cheerful and peaceful disposition of mind.

Question
I have come to the point of physically restraining myself. I find it hard to have mental control though. It's the quality of brahmacharya that is important, although the quantity is also important, as I felt gutted when I slipped after nearly making 2 years.

I also do quite alot of reading on celibacy. I can just marvell at the idea of becoming a naistika brahmachari who is totally fearless of anything, and who experiences a happiness many trillions of times greater even than Indraloka. I guess this is no easy task, as alot of samskras have to be worked out.

Also the dream state is the hardest to conquer during the potential period- as even if there is not waking break, a wet dream still renders the 12 year period useless- so that means to become urdhavereta means 365 x 12 waking state + 365 x 12 dream state for semen to flow upwards- I'm sure that is harder by countless trillions times than reaching the top of a sport like tennis or table tennis!

Answer
Hello Sanj,

Good to hear of your efforts at Brahmacharya. Mental control through displacement of unwanted thoughts is the region one should focus sincerely once physical restraint has been achieved; for the body is only a tool of the mind. The body by itself has no tendency, urge or wants and is only the medium of thought transference into action.The term physical restraint by itself does not mean restraint of the body. It is a term that denotes restraint of physical action fueled by mental thoughts. Once this is achieved, one should seriously start working towards negating and erasing the past Vâsanâs which are the result of past Samskâras or impressions stored in the causal body. To achieve this, one should very importantly prevent formation of new impressions and tendencies along with the removal of past impressions and tendencies.

Contrary to common perception, the mind is again another medium and not the source of wants, desires and urges. It is a medium that is at the next subtler level as compared to the body. It is a medium that transfers the urges, desires and tendencies stored at a more subtler location through what we call thought. So the mind by itself is not the cause of the effect called desire. There is one final location which is a storehouse of past tendencies and impressions. This is the 'Kârana Sharira' or the causal body. It is the repository of karma generated by all past actions. It is that source which makes one man different from the other in gross terms. It is the final storehouse of all ignorance wound around the soul. So the Yogi intent on Brahmacharya and self-realization works at cleansing the causal body. But this task cannot be carried out all of a sudden. The Yogi has to first cleanse and purify the physical body, then the astral or mind body and finally the causal body. The whole concept of a life of Yoga starting with the Yama-Niyamas and culminating with Samâdhi leading to the final objective of self-realization is designed to cleanse these three bodies of impurities, whereupon the 'Jivâtma'(embodied soul) becomes the 'Shudhâtma' (pure soul) and attains to its default state of infinite knowledge, existence and bliss, being content in the self by the self. So Brahmacharya along with meditation and Prânayâma is really the means to attain the end called self-realization.

As an when the body, mind and the causal station start getting purified, Brahmacharya becomes more natural and effortless in both the waking and the dream state. Just as he develops the ability to stop a lustful thought from growing larger while being awake, the aspirant will slowly start getting the ability to curtail and stop sexually oriented dreams from snowballing into larger proportions even in the dream state. In the normal man, the power of Buddhi shakti (intellect) and Vichâra shakthi (discrimination) are absent or very dormant in the dream state and the sub-conscious mind is in the lead. Hence he finds himself unable to reason or stop growing thoughts while being in a dream. After a certain degree of advancement in case of the true Brahmachari, the ability to stop a sexually oriented dream from progressing into larger and dangerous proportions starts getting pronounced. His intellect and reasoning can be made to work even in a dream. But for this, one first has to work hard at accomplishing the same while being awake. It is then only a continuation of what is done in the wakeful state into the dream state. Let us say there is the incidence of such a dream in the middle of the night while being asleep. One can actually break and dissolve the sexually oriented dream using the power of the intellect and reasoning and become awake just as was done during wakefulness, thereby completely stopping the occurance of a wet dream and the resulting seminal loss.

The best approach for success is to carry out a life of Brahmacharya through a life of Yoga with unswerving devotion, love and surrender to God, while keeping in mind this entire world and its happenings to be nothing more than a dream far from reality. By keeping in mind the fact of all sense attractions being nothing more than sugar-coated falsities.

Question
Hello Dhananjay, hope that you have been well. I ran across something tonight that disturbed me. It involved the genetic manipulation of human and animal dna to produce hybrids in a lab. The video showed how the cell was split by a laser and after the splice was shocked by a small amount of electricity to induce life.

This brought me to the question of the soul and also how our human seed creates life.

My question is this: At what point does a soul enter a material body? ie, embryo, womb, prior to birth? And are these genetic manipulations being created in labs capable of carrying a soul? It seems that clones aren't as bright as the original also but are capable of living for a short time. Do they not have souls? Thank you for your diligence and dedication.

Answer
Hello Shawn,

Trust this finds you well. Coming to the answers,

Q1: When and how does the soul or 'Jivâtma' enter the body?
A: This topic has been dealt with in the 'Chândogya Upanishad' a great treatise concerning the soul, the Almighty and the methods one should follow for final emancipation. There it is said:-

"The soul of a man who has residual karma in his causal body, after death, rises in its astral body to the Lunar orb where it spends much time in a state of enjoyment or pain depending on the nature of its actions while alive. After spending the stipulated amount of time there and after having exhausted the period of enjoyment or suffering due, based on its merit or demerit, the Jivâtma (soul) falls from that location, reaches the electric zone of Earth's atmosphere and enters a rain bearing cloud. Upon dissolution of the cloud into rain water that showers on earth, the drop of water containing the soul falls on a vegetable or grain producing plant and is then inducted into the seed of the crop. This grain, further to harvest is eaten by the man who is destined to be the father of the child which will embody the soul. The vegetable or grain containing the 'Jivâtma' after being digested by that man becomes his 'Rethas' or 'Veerya' or seed. This is then through the copulatory act thrown into the womb of the woman who will bear the child. In a period of six months, the embryo develops all physical characteristics that are a part of the human body and in the seventh month, the soul manifests itself. After nine months, the body of the child being fully developed comes out of the womb and into the external world to continue with working out its previous karma and objectives"

Thus for all practical purposes, the soul is considered to manifest itself in the seventh month of conception. Till this time, it is in a state of sleep, unaware of its surroundings in the womb. In the seventh month, the scriptures state that the 'Jiva' comes into awareness and becomes attuned to its new state in the womb within the fetus.

Q2: Do genetic manipulations carried out in a lab involve the soul?
A: Unless there is the will of the Almighty behind a soul to embody a new physical body, thus creating life, no amount of efforts by man can result in creation of a new life. This explains why many married couples fail to produce offspring in spite of being perfectly fertile and even after efforts through many years of marriage. The same applies to artificial methods of producing a child. Lack of will and direction by the Almighty cannot induct a soul and thus life into the physical body, however strong and consistent the efforts of a scientist be. If a scientist, at a lab has succeeded in cloning a child, it is only further to the Almighty having directed a soul which has the karma to be born in such a body to occupy it. So the scientist is at-most the means of such creation and not the cause, just as a brush is the means of producing a painting and not the painter itself!

The presence of life in a human body denotes the presence of a soul along with the presence of the five vital Prâna's, the five elements, five senses of perception, five senses of action, the mind, intellect, consciousness and ego. Hence one can presume that there is a soul involved in a life form produced by genetic efforts in the laboratory. How capable, universal, durable, defect free and perfect, the life derived from such means is another question altogether.

Question
What is wrong with sex if it is pursued strictly within the dharmic limits, ie, with one's own wife, even if it is getting into recreational mode?
I guess the scriptures don't object to this or atleast the message is vague here...

Answer
Recreational sexuality within marriage, more than being a question of wrong or right is a question of how soon and how directly one wants spiritual progress. And spiritual progress is the only progress which can be termed progress in the real sense. Everything else is falsity. The highest levels of materialistic progress do not evolve man even by a hair's breadth. Rather, such involvement in materialism has a higher tendency to degrade man further in terms of evolution. Spirituality is the door to the highest bliss. It is real life and real living and spirituality cannot surface and blossom as long as there is sexuality. So one has to first decide if he or she wants the petty dimes and nickels of sexuality or the priceless treasure of Âtmic bliss.

There is one and only one purpose for the sexual act namely progeny. The moment this purpose is set aside by extending sexual contact to recreation, degeneration slowly starts at the physical, mental and karmic levels. One gets rooted to his body consciousness and finds it impossible to rise above. This is the absolute truth and is beyond doubt.

What is the limit to this recreation? what is the yardstick which shows the extent to which it can be indulged in? And if one does set up a yardstick, how will he refrain from not pondering and fantasizing on sexual pleasure even at other times when he is not physically carrying out the act due to the applied yardstick? How will the couple thus addicted to sexual pleasure source it after both become old, wrinkled and bereft of luster? Further to leading a life high on recreational sexuality with each other, man and woman both become anchored to sexuality as the source of pleasure, entertainment and relaxation. They cannot think of anything beyond sex as regards to penultimate pleasure. How then will they come to terms with this monstrous need that has been nourished all through their youth on reaching old age? It is the body that ages and not the mind. The mind of a man without a spiritual life is as young as that of a youth when it comes to desires of the mind, even after reaching old age. Physical, social and health constraints coupled with the lack of a suitable partner may prevent him from further exploring into the realm of sexuality in old age; but rest assured, his mind will always wander behind the sex concept, dreaming about it, fantasizing, draining his vitality and making his mind and body fully unfit for spiritual progress.

So the entire life has been wasted in sexuality, setting aside the very purpose of human birth. There is one and only one Dharma for the human being, that being self-realization. One's occupation, career, leisure, sleep, marital status and what not are only incidental to this central purpose. They are to be made supportive, conducive and helpful to the attainment of self-realization. This is 'Manava Dharma' or the duty of the human being. Recreational sexuality is not 'Manava Dharma'. It is 'Adharma'. Through indulgence in recreational sexuality, man loses immense amount of 'Prâna' or vital energy. The mind becomes fickle, unstable and unable to concentrate on a life mode necessary to realize oneself. Determination and strength reduce and taper away. The mind gets fooled by the temporary, impermanent and false nervous tingling produced by an orgasm thinking it to be the ultimate source of happiness and pleasure.

Sexual pleasure is really no pleasure at all. It is only a tingling of the nerves and no where close to the bliss of the Âtman. Finally, at old age, the man and woman who have lead a life high on recreational sexuality find themselves very attached and in need sexual pleasure but find that they can no longer enjoy it as they did. Such a mentality leaves them with a mind which is agitated, irate, depressed and wholly unfit to pursue the aim of the human existence. It is then too late. All their youth, health, strength and time has been lost in pursuit of sexual pleasure and their life is nearing its end. The purpose of the human existence has still not been met. This entire life in other words has been a waste and a complete zero in terms of its actual purpose. To add fuel to fire, the body, mind and psyche have become degraded and know of nothing more than sex when it comes to the need for bliss. A heavy karmic burden has been created in terms of attachment to the concept of sex. Many births will be required to undo this karmic burden. The nature of sexual pleasure is such that it can never be sated or limited with a certain amount of sex. Tolerance develops within the mind and body as regards the pleasure attained and one wants more. Such a couple will pass away with all their lower desires intact and in strength, only to take a new birth to pursue another life rife on sexuality. It becomes a never ending cycle filled with ill-health, depression and passion. The 'Jivâtma' completely forgets its purpose to realize itself as the 'Âtman' full of knowledge and bliss and hankers after sexual pleasure birth after birth knowing nothing more. It is a sad and unfortunate state like a man who has a great treasure buried right under his house but leads a life of extreme poverty without knowing of its presence.

The scriptures advocate a life of sexuality with one's wife as free from sin further to the purview being progeny and nothing more. Rather than having encounters with many women and exposing oneself to the dangers of promiscuity and the sin of adultery, it is much better to limit sexual interactions with one's lawful wife. This is the first step to be taken to evolve further. Not the last step. It does not in any way mean that one should lead a life of recreational sexuality with his wife forever. After achieving the state of being fully loyal and devoted to his wife, both man and woman need to work at becoming loyal and involved to the Almighty; for a life merely limited to loyalty with each other, bereft of efforts to realize oneself is again incomplete. The purpose of the human existence is in no way served to completion. Hence the need for Brahmacharya.

True spiritual progress starts only when one puts in the effort to raise above body consciousness and starts realizing himself to be something more than the body, mind, intellect and ego. Lust and passion are the grossest forms of body consciousness. They strengthen the concept of a male and female body in terms of objectivity, while in reality there is nothing called male or female. All is the Âtman...unbound, unembodied and unlimited. How then can a man or woman attached to recreational sex ever rise above body consciousness and make spiritual progress?

Through the practice of Brahmacharya and God-contemplation, man becomes capable of rising beyond the complete gamut of lower emotions in course of time. He becomes refined, civilized and honorable in the real sense. His higher personality denoted by the soul starts to shine through. All virtues of the highest order start to manifest. This is beyond doubt. No other means but true Brahmacharya can give true and Herculean strength to the body, mind and psyche. He will have the superior energy, strength and determination required to aspire and work at realizing his self. His health becomes robust and radiant leading to a peaceful and enjoyable state of well being. He starts becoming capable of seeing the presence of God in all creations of God.

Keeping all these facts in mind, a married couple wishing for progress, happiness, health and evolution in the true sense can give up on a life of sexuality further to the birth of a child or two and focus their energies into the objective of life namely self-realization through Brahmacharya. It is only through Brahmacharya in marriage that a couple will be able to develop selfless love for each other as souls and not through recreational sex. It is only through Brahmacharya that each will reach a state where they expect nothing from the other and yet have a marriage which is rock solid, strong and firmly anchored. This will bring a deep sense of happiness, understanding, trust, true love, loyalty and togetherness as life partners, aiding them to work towards the most important goal of the human existence.

Question
Hi Sir,

I am finding difficult to maintain the brahmacharya in "THOUGHT" process. Please guide me. None of my thoughts are sexual but they are little negative which ultimately make me tired. Also they come suddenly just like a rocket when I observe them. Please guide me.

Also help to become thoughtless. Sometimes my thorughts are pure but they are not strong. One negative thought takes over..Is it because of watching TV or sitting infront of computer. Please give me some strong remedy.

Also as Swami Vivekanda said “Brahmacharya should be like a burning fire within the veins!” Can you tell me how it is possible? or How to follow this.

Also please tell me how to increase love & devotion to god. And how to destroy ahankara. Is it continuously praying, visiting temples regularly or doing namaskara to each temple as you walk on the road...

Answer
I. Maintaining Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed should always be the objective. The right way to maintain clean thoughts is by observance of the following:
1. Displacing negative thoughts with positive, as and when such thoughts arise and immediately diverting the mind to constructive activity or thought.
2. Preventing situations, circumstances and avoiding the company of people who contribute directly or indirectly to negative thoughts. This should be carried out to the best possible extent and at all times.

3. Maintaining a life of Yogic discipline through the eight limbs of Yoga and through right food. (refer details on food answered in previous posts)
4. Constantly reminding oneself that the world is a product of Mâya and hence unreal as in a dream. The Supreme is the only entity or force who is real. Hence chant God's name and be in God thought to the best extent possible and carry out all activities as an offering to God. It is God who has created this body and life circumstances to evolve the embodied soul. Life is like a stage performance where the soul evolves and undoes its mistakes to finally merge with the Supreme. So don't be attached to the happenings of life but carry them out as the duty bestowed by God for evolution of the embodied soul.

II. One can become thoughtless only in the state of 'Nirbîja Samâdhi' (complete merger with the Almighty while in the body through super-consciousness) after many years of Yoga and unbroken Brahmacharya. So one has to persevere and strive to reach such a state through a lifestyle based on the 8 limbs of Yoga. A serious Brahmachari must limit his interactions with the external world and all forms of external news mediums such as the T.V, internet, magazines, news papers etc.. to basic necessity and nothing more. The idea is to prevent adding the fuel of temptation to the fire of lust which is raging within. This will be very much required during the first few initial years of Brahmacharya when the mind and psyche are very vulnerable to lust and temptation. Just as a diseased and weak person is kept in a clean and sterile environment while being treated, till he gets well and develops immunity, it will be necessary for the Brahmachari to ensure that he stays clear of each and every source or object which stirs up his lower tendencies. In life situations where he cannot carry this out entirely, the contact with such people or circumstances must be brief, to the point and out of necessity. Nothing more. There will undoubtedly be a downfall if this matter is treated with laxity. This is to be followed very strictly till the time one becomes stronger and more spiritually evolved, whereupon there will be a lesser probability of fall.

III. The Urge to follow a life of Brahmacharya with a burning desire comes to a person gradually based on his efforts in reality. After having suffered much in the hands of the senses and after having realized a life of sexuality to be sweet in the beginning and very painful in the end, the tired and disillusioned Jivâtma realizes that there must be some other means to overcome the problems of life and reach permanence as regards the solution. After much efforts in its quest to know of such a method, it comes to know about the science of Brahmacharya through God's grace. This process has been described in the scriptures with the following analogy:

" The Jivâtma at this stage is like a drowning man in the middle of the ocean, thrown hither-thither by the mighty waves of sexuality and delusion, totally powerless and helpless against the monstrous waves and desperately trying to stay afloat. He knows the cause of this dangerous and perilous state as the result of his attachment to money and woman, but can do little to save himself. Then, the all merciful Lord of creation, out of sheer compassion and kindness, picks up the struggling and suffering Jivâtma which has undergone great pain through association with Mâya (cosmic illusion), thinking it to be real and places it in the boat of Brahmacharya".

Hence each and every aspirant who is into the practice of Brahmacharya should consider himself lucky to have been saved from the monstrosity of the ocean of sexuality and placed in the boat of Brahmacharya by the grace of the Almighty. He should make the best use of this opportunity by giving his all at being an honest and sincere student. His efforts should be persistent, determined and unfailing, following which the same hands of the Almighty guide and support him to progress further and reach the shores of Brahman without the fear of drowning in the mighty ocean of Samsâra (creation). Many tests, trials and difficulties come to the Brahmachari in the course of his voyage to reach the destination shore of self-realization. But one who is devoted to God with sincerity and longing is assured of support and success. Such a Brahmachari considers his state of purity and God-contemplation as more dear than anything else. To him, his state of Brahmacharya aimed at God-realization is a part of his very own self. Nothing is higher or greater. It becomes his highest priority in life. This is what Swami Vivekananda means through his words. Continuous and unbroken Brahmacharya with constant God-devotion and contemplation will lead to such a state.

IV. One should follow the discipline of Yoga to the best of his efforts and ability with constant God-contemplation, prayer and God-meditation. One should longingly pray and request God to show the right path and help one overcome Avidyâ (ignorance). This will unravel the default state of God-devotion and love present within each and every man, for the default nature of all creatures is God-nature itself. Ignorance and its results are an acquired trait.

What is Yoga? That mode of activity which leads man to a state where he gets closer and closer to the Supreme (his true self) by constant and sustained reduction of ignorance wound around his soul and finally merges into the Supreme through self-realization is Yoga. One who is striving for such an end is a 'Yogi'. Nothing more.

Unlike common perception and the incorrect western assumption of the concept of Yoga as mere physical postures, mere performance of 'Âsana' or physical postures is not Yoga. Âsana is only one limb of the 8 limbs of Yoga aimed at helping one develop a sound mind through a sound body. A man with a diseased, weak and a degenerated body cannot focus his mind and energies on the Herculean effort needed to attain to Yoga, so Âsana aims at relieving him from physical debilities and help reach a state where his body and mind are geared to take up the challenge. But this performance of Âsana should be parallely followed with a Yogic lifestyle starting with the Yama-Niyamas and culminating with God-contemplation which eventually leads to Samâdhi. Else, its use becomes partial and not complete. If another man can attain to a strong, healthy and robust body by some other sport/exercise or physical activity, that is equally fine. He can regularly play the sport or exercise and combine the other seven components of Yoga, deriving the same benefit and ascend in Yoga. What is important here is to refine oneself at the innate level and reduce one's ignorance. All the 8 limbs of Yoga are aimed at this effect and nothing else. Following the cleansing of the body, mind and psyche to completion, the Jivâtma (embodied soul) becomes the Shuddhâtma (pure soul) through self-realization and reverts to its Lordship.

This is why the human birth is so special and superior. It is the only birth where the faculties to think, analyze and execute at a higher dimension are made possible. Think of what? Think of ways to know oneself. To think of how to get free from repeated births and deaths and reach the state of permanence and bliss. An animal cannot do this. The soul within a dog or a cow or an insect is equally divine, but has a thicker layer of ignorance around it. So thick, that the animal knows of nothing more than survival and self-preservation. So the entire life is spent in survival without the animal knowing who it is or why it has been created. This is not so in the case of man. He has a sharp and keen intellect with which he can work at understanding things and gain knowledge. He has an advanced mind with which he can persevere towards the goal. In other words, he is fully geared and ready to unravel the mystery of who he is, why he has been born and what he should do next.

The human body and mind is hence the Almighty's gift to the human soul. It has not been given to the animals. So it follows that one should fully make use of these faculties and work at evolving further. To effectively do this, one should fully stop those actions that bind oneself to the lower domains and lead to degeneration. If man does nothing more than eat, earn money, have sex for pleasure and sleep, day after day, month after month, year after year and life after life, he is leading a life worse than that of an animal. He is ignoring and neglecting all these advanced faculties that have been provided so he can reach the highest states of knowledge and bliss permanently and settling for the petty, minuscule, temporary pleasures of the senses. Having gone against nature, he will pay a costly penalty for this act of ignorance. This is why Brahmacharya is to be followed; so that he conserves the most vital of his energy to take him higher in understanding, negate his past karmas and finally realize himself. An endeavor of such magnitude requires enormous life energy which can be had only through the conservation and transmutation of reproductive energy. This is the purpose of the human birth; to attain self-realization and know who we are. All other activities are to be incidental and supportive to this aim and not contrary or at a tangent. And any activity that poses itself as an obstacle to this aim is to be shunned and avoided.

True love and devotion to the Supreme comes only by the grace of the Supreme. Only by the kind and merciful stroke of the Almighty to one who is deserving. To one who has such love and devotion, his body itself is the temple. He strives morning, noon and night to keep this temple called the body clean and pure physically, mentally and spiritually so it is fit for the Almighty to come and reside. For such a person leading a life of God-contemplation and Brahmacharya, where is the need to blindly visit a temple, perform a religious rite or abide by rituals? He is contemplating and meditating on the Almighty day in and day out through this temple called the body. He is making use of the mental faculties of intellect and imagination to ponder, contemplate and think of the Almighty as many times as possible, doing his worldly duties without attachment.

Most people blindly visit temples, perform religious rites and blindly follow rituals without knowing that none of these rituals will bear fruit in the absolute sense as long as there is no inner cleansing. Of what use is it to visit a temple or donate huge sums to charity if the man is constantly thinking in terms of his lower desires and sensuality? How can God be pleased when man has forgotten and has totally neglected the very purpose of the human existence, is acting contrary to it and merely goes to the temple, praying to God for good luck and fortune? On the one hand, God has provided the human body and mind so man could evolve further and reach the highest. On the other hand, the same man leads a life rife on wanton sexuality, cheating, debauchery and misconduct, whilst merely paying regular visits to the temple and performing religious rites. Such a life is the contradiction and falsity of the highest order. It is of no use in terms of the net result.

So for the man who is leading a life of purity & virtue, kindness, non-violence, truthfulness, Brahmacharya, constantly endeavoring to correct upon his mistakes as regards himself and others through applied action and God-contemplation, it does not matter whether he visits a temple or doesn't. The common man may spend most of his time thinking of himself and thinks of God when he visits a temple. Where is such a need for one who has surrendered to God through love and devotion? To one who has construed this body to be the temple and the soul to be God? To one who is ever grateful to the Almighty for this human birth and who has aligned its purpose with the purpose intended by God? To one who is striving for self-realization? Such a man is constantly in God-remembrance and God-thought through each and every action. It doesn't matter whether he contemplates on the Supreme within the precincts of his house, his workplace or the temple. The only thing of importance to him is being in God-thought with intensity, love and devotion. The physical building that he occupies may be his house, a temple or the middle of the road. It is really not of much concern.

So one should always fondly remember God as everything with love, surrender and devotion. It is enough if this is felt with strength and intensity. As an when one finds time during the course of the day, one should sit and meditate on the formless Supreme requesting the Lord to bestow Vidyâ (knowledge of the Supreme). If this is done with devotion and sincerity, it doesn't matter whether one visits the temple or doesn't; for in essence, the objective of visiting a temple is exactly the same -- God-contemplation. This is what God intended the human birth for, so man would make self-realization the chief objective and one cannot please God more than through sincere, honest contemplation via devotion, love and surrender. Such an attitude that God is everything and the ego nothing will automatically negate Ahamkarâ (ego) in course of time.

Question
Dear respected Sir,

I am Vijith, I am practicing brahmacharya from 5 months ago and till this day? You cleared my previous doubts wonderfully, Now I wants your help about the subject of divotion.

1).All aspirants said that in Kaliyuga , Bhaktiyoga is important. How can I improve the divotion to the Lord? I want to cry for God, but at temple my eyes cant produce a little eyedrops for God? Is any relation with brahmacharya and divotion?

Loving u as a Guru, Hope u for a wonderful answer

Answer
One's efforts at God-contemplation and God-surrender should be continuous and seamless in the midst of everyday life and its activities. When this is coupled with the honest, consistent and unbroken practice of Brahmacharya, devotion to God will flower by itself. The nature of conserved Ojas is such that it makes the higher nature shine through, following which all improvements occur in course of time and the best of one's hidden talent starts to surface.

What is important from this point of time is not to get carried away with the power one derives through Brahmacharya. The lower self or ego will initially try to take credit for the new-found improvement and power. It will as usual try to raise its head and fill the aspirant with the feeling that he has performed a great achievement. This will cause pride and self-importance to mushroom. This is when downfall starts; for the real achievement has occurred from the powers of the Âtman (the Almighty himself) shining through Brahmacharya and not because of the ego. We, in sense of people are not the doers of any superlative action, the Almighty is. All credit goes to him. The ego is nothing. We, as the ego are nothing. We, as the Âtman are everything . But one cannot fully think of himself as the Âtman in reality till one has reached the state of self-realization. The lower ego has much scope till this time. So one should always remember God as the doer of all actions and snub the ego into oblivion, not letting it raise its head. This should be always remembered and one should stay humble and rooted to this reality.

One should always remind oneself - " This lower nature of mine denoted by Ahamkarâ (ego) is false and devoid of substance. It is unreal and the product of Mâya (illusion). It is this Ahamkarâ (ego) which makes me react with desire, lust, anger, passion and other base qualities. So I will not let this ego surface every now and then to ruin my inner state of goodness, peace, tranquility and serenity; for in reality I'm the Âtman who is beyond these lower tendencies. There is no need to feel depressed, angered or irate further to someone saying something against me. Neither is there any need to feel elated, excited and proud further to an achievement or accomplishment. There is no need for anger as the Âtman (pure soul) is pure and blemish-free like the fire and I'm only the Âtman. Just as the Sun is least affected by whether people praise him or ridicule him, by whether people label his rays as bright or dark, by whether people call him hot or cold, in the same way, I'm the Âtman who is unaffected by the doings or sayings of people. Hence rebukes and insults cannot touch me. There is no need for elation, excitement and pride as positive qualities, abilities and achievements are again the result of Âtmic qualities bestowed by the Lord and are no way connected to the lower self or ego. So I will not let the lower ego take credit for such achievements and behave like a proud, intoxicated monkey in times of success but will always be humble and down to earth, remembering that the Almighty is the cause behind all success. I'm only a tool of the Almighty and will abide and accept by what he wishes."

Continuous practice of such an attitude will help displace the ego in course of time. As the ego starts reducing in extent, one's higher nature emanating from the real self namely the Âtman will increase in effect. This will automatically increase devotion, gratitude and awe at the workings of the Almighty. Man starts realizing himself in terms of the ego as a non-entity and the Almighty as the only entity of substance.

Question

Sorry I have 1 doubts also

Is brahmacharya results in Prostate cancer?

Thanking u

Answer

The practice of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with adequate physical activity, intellectual work and God-meditation, if carried out rightly leads to the conservation and transmutation of semen into Ojas. This eventually weeds out all diseases of the body and mind, installing excellent health and strength.

The incidence of any disease is due to past negative karma. Brahmacharya negates past karma and takes man towards self-realization, not the reverse. It can never lead to any disease. Contrary to developing such a complication, the chances of prostate cancer get reduced in the Brahmachari as the prostate gland is rested and rejuvenated further to the transmutation of semen. The incidence of prostate cancer is unheard of in Brahmachari's who carry out Brahmacharya through correct Yogic methods.

Question

Hello brother, Thanks to show me right path.I follow bhramcharya last few months yet i have heavy monthly period,that means i am not pure?? Due to this reason bhramcharya do no benefit me.And my mother also says me not to chant any mantra during monthly period(reason is monthly impurity),Is it right?? please solve my confusion. thank you.

Answer

Aren't a few months of Brahmacharya very small as compared to the millions of past births of 'Abrahmacharya' (non-continence)?

All good things come to one who waits and perseveres. Progress in Brahmacharya is no exception.

One's true nature itself is that of Godliness. One is only the 'Âtman' (soul), an extension of the Almighty and not this body, mind, intellect, consciousness or ego. Hence contemplation on God is everybody's birth-right and at all times. It is in fact one's foremost duty. The aim of a mantra is to induce the divine vibrations and positivism that come from taking the Almighty's name and thinking of his glory. Gender, age, health... these are conditions of the body and not of the soul. How then can it be wrong to think and contemplate on one's true and default state of Godliness at any point of time? This is what one is doing while contemplating, chanting or thinking of God with love and devotion, Is it not?

Does a mother get angry when her little child thinks of her, calls her and takes her name at the point of time it has soiled itself? Does she consider it wrong or insulting that the child took her name when it had dirtied itself? NO. Her love and affection for the child are immaterial of its state of cleanliness and unconditional. This is why she is called a mother, because her perspective as regards her child is something beyond the physical state of the child. She connects with it through a view that is independent of its physical cleanliness, its looks, color or intelligence. She attends to the child at once with fondness and dearness. The Âtman is akin to a child of God. The Almighty Lord can never be insulted or angered by the earnest, sincere and fond calls or thoughts of his devotees as regards him, regardless of their physical state. To him, all creatures are equally dear and important, being extensions of his very self. So one can take the Lord's name, think of him and contemplate on him at all times, as long as one's attitude is that of prayer, love, surrender and devotion.

If one's body is thought as being impure during the monthly period, then one might as well assume it to be impure at all times; for this physical body is always filled with urine, stool, phlegm, blood, flesh and bones. All of them falling under the category of impure substances in the gross sense and it should hence follow that a person should never chant a mantra, contemplate or meditate as long as he or she has this physical body but wait for death to lose the physical body!

The menstrual period of a woman is a natural phenomenon devised by nature to eject the unfertilized egg. This process occurs as long as eggs are being produced and are not fertilized. Just as an Urdhvaretha Yogi stops producing sperm after reaching that high stage, a woman who has reached such an advanced stage stops producing the egg. Till then, nature will take its usual course. One need not let this interfere with God-contemplation. It will however be necessary to avoid performing Âsana and Prânayâma by a lady during those days as these involve physical activity which could cause discomfort and fatigue, the energy being low at those times. Mental contemplation and chanting can be carried out by all means and pose no risk.

Question
Hello Sir,

Thank you so much for providing this service and inspiration for people seeking perfection in their quest toward Brahmacharya. It is a tremendous help. My question is about caffeine and how it effects the body and mind of a Brahmachari. In your opinion, would it be absolutely necessary to give up caffeine consumption in order to achieve lasting success in Brahmacharya? I'm aware of caffeine's effects and I suspect I know what your answer will be, so, I guess I'm just asking for some "tough love" motivation for breaking this habit. I have tried to quit caffeine several times without success. I both love coffee/caffeine and hate it. Please advise.

Answer
The means to achieve concrete progress in Brahmacharya is to gradually start moving away from everything non-self and towards the self. What does this mean? It means one slowly but surely starts breaking one's link from dependence on everything external.

It is one's craving, attachment & dependence on objects external to oneself that has made the individual forget his default state of Âtmic bliss and has made him develop an external need of objects to keep himself happy and entertained. This itself is a vicious cycle. Sense pleasures, be they in any form cannot give lasting happiness. Sense pleasures are only sensations of nervous tingling and not anyway near true bliss. So the man who resorts to sense pleasures as a means for happiness, entertainment or relaxation fools himself with a method which has no end. A method which needs to be repeated over and over again and with increasing intensity over the course of time to give the same pleasure or 'kick ' derived earlier. This will ultimately leave man in a state bereft of happiness, peace of mind and well being, much worse than earlier.

What is meant by dependence on external objects or non-self? The non-self includes everything other than the self or Âtman (pure soul). The ancient Indian sages describe the non-self by the term 'Asath' (unreal), that which is false and the self or Âtman as 'Sath' (real). The Âtman, being the Almighty is the only 'Sath'. Desire for the sight of something beautiful, smell of something pleasurable, taste of something delicious, sound of something stimulating, touch of or by something enjoyable, memory and then fantasy of past associations with the above five senses. These constitute the enjoyment of the non-self. They are the thieves who rob man of his ability to perceive the bliss of the soul. The mind gets distracted by these thieves, gets involved in their sensations and forgets its default state of infinite bliss. Even one's body, mind, intellect, consciousness and ego are the non-self. Dependence on even these as sources of pleasure has to be severed. The Âtman alone is the self. He alone is real.

The whole aim of Yoga and Brahmacharya is to rid man of this state of dependence on the above five senses and help him revert to a state where he experiences true bliss of the Âtman (his true self) to a magnitude of infinity and for ever, finally merging into the Almighty. But for this, one has to first strive to raise above the five senses through determined and sustained effort; for unless man gives up his attachment for the five sense perceptions and thereby develops dispassion for their enjoyment, the doors of Âtmic bliss do not open. Unless one distances himself from these external enjoyments, and finally overcomes even the least craving as regards them, attaining to independence, the bliss of the Âtman cannot be perceived. This is the reason why the Yogi gives up contact and dependence with everything external beyond the limit of necessity and instead focuses his energies on God-contemplation. He is giving up the impermanent dimes and nickels in his quest for the priceless treasure of the Âtman. The pleasures from the five senses reduce in intensity over the course of time, need more and more indulgence and finally rob man of his health and well being. Whereas the bliss of the Âtman is permanent, eternal, timeless and is one's default state. This is why the human birth has been awarded by the Almighty, so man can realize himself as the Âtman and reclaim his lost kingdom of knowledge, existence and bliss. It is a cause well worth the effort.

If a person has an affinity for drinking coffee as a source of pleasure, entertainment or relaxation, it is one of his associations with the non-self. The harm is not in the mere act of drinking a cup of coffee once a day, the trouble starts when this activity increases in its frequency, intensity and duration. Man first starts his tryst with the drink once every morning. He does this a few months and derives some satisfaction or pleasure. After some time in this state, he recollects the sensation of the taste and kick he derived through the drink at the middle of a day. He wants that sensation again. So he has another cup in the afternoon. Soon, he feels it better to have a third drink, late evening, for the cup of coffee gives him an unknown sense of happiness and satisfaction. Why not enjoy the sensation once more? After a few months @ three cups a day, his system develops tolerance for the strength of coffee he has been drinking and he feels the sensation reducing in intensity. What is the solution? Make it stronger and increase it to four cups a day. In this way does his dependence on the non-self called coffee increase. It finally reaches a state where he has become an addict. He needs some strongly brewed coffee every now and then, when he is tired, happy, sad, excited, depressed, stressed, anxious or bored.

Without his knowledge, a very strong affinity and craving has been nurtured towards the non-self called coffee as an inseparable part of his lifestyle. The consequences are anyone's guess. At the physical level, regular consumption of large quantities of caffeine and sugar cause him various health disorders in the long run. At the mental level, he has become a slave to this habit. He cannot think or function properly without coffee. And at the causal level, this has further strengthened the ignorance around his soul. The strong impressions produced in the mind through constant induction of the drink as a source of pleasure have created Vâsanâs (tendencies) that will always make him run towards his cup and not towards the Âtman, every time his mind needs to get away from the highs and lows of life. Much effort and energy will have to be spent to de-addict oneself from such a state. It is a state of dependence that is excruciating to the addict after a period of time. It is like being caught between the devil and the deep sea.

This is just an example of the results that arise through attachment to anything external and non-self. The above analogy can be equally applied to all other addictions to alcohol, tobacco, drugs, recreational sex, food, partying, sleeping, gambling, money making and many, many more. There are numerous other activities which appear harmless and innocent but are dangerous. Many people are addicted to boasting, talking and gossiping. They have to resort to these activities every now and then, or they feel empty. Some others are caught up with their looks, their clothes, cars and money. The slightest signs of ageing, lack of money, looking a little less pepped up or being unable to wear the dress they have in mind leaves them feeling anxious, irritated and empty. This is another addiction to something external. These external objects such as money, cars, clothes, perfumes, looks and more have become the central purpose and aim of life. They feel dead and lifeless if one of these things is unavailable to them.

Such a man will say " A life without money, fast cars and women is no life at all, I'd rather be dead or would rather sit at home than go out without these". The man has forgotten who he is. He has forgotten that these are things which are to be used in life incidentally and within the limits of their rightful purpose and nothing more. Through addiction to these things of the non-self, he has made them the purpose of his life. He now lives for them, with them and through them. Without these, his life is a big zero. Such a man goes into a serious state of depression, unhappiness and agitation, if by some stroke of destiny, these things are snatched away from him. His aim of life is to eat, drink, sleep, party, talk all sorts of non-sense and develop physical contact with as many women as possible. To him, these are the central activities for which God gave him the human birth. This is living and everything else is no life at all. To successfully carry out such a life, he needs an inexhaustible supply of money. So his next objective becomes acquiring money. Lawfully or unlawfully, it matters little. He is prepared to cheat, lie, injure, use and even take the lives of other people to sate this central purpose. This is how criminals are born. The deviation from his true self, his real purpose of birth, his default state of bliss and divinity are all lost, thanks to his addiction with the non-self. It is a deplorable and tragic state of affairs. It is like an innocent, beautiful and extremely well mannered child having fallen into wrong company and having become a criminal of the lowest order. This is what it is in reality. The Âtman or soul being a child of God has forgotten its greatness and has reduced itself to scum. It suffers incessantly and to endlessness not knowing what to do, caught in the ocean of senses and having to revert to its addiction at all times.

I have gone into the elaboration of this topic to point out the effects which come from making anything non-self as the chief source of one's happiness. The association with anything non-self on a sustained basis, as a source of pleasure, and beyond its rightful limit or purview is always a slippery slope that slowly draws man into its vicious jaws, reaching which it is very hard to escape. So a man wishing happiness and progress in life and the culmination of his existence into something fruitful should gradually distance himself from everything non-self and instead apply his mind to God-thought and God-meditation through continence. One does not require anything external for happiness. The greatest bliss is right within oneself in the soul. This need that one feels for something external is an acquired trait and false. One only needs to ensure that he does not follow the non-self but sticks to the self through a life of Brahmacharya and God-contemplation. This is very important. It is mandatory that the mind which has been freed or is being freed from the non-self has to be applied to the Âtman or self through God-contemplation and Brahmacharya, else it will revert to the non-self again. This mind is like a monkey which should always be tied to the post called God and made immobile in his contemplation. Let loose, it starts its journey towards the non-self and takes man into the jaws of pain and suffering.

As to the effects of caffeine, large intake has an effect similar to nicotine, tannin and alcohol. All these intoxicants burn away 'Ojas' and lead to drying up of the final tissue element of digestion namely semen. Vitality reduces. Caffeine addiction causes symptoms such as insomnia, nervousness, headache, increased heart rate, anxiety, upset stomach, irregular heartbeat, irritability, GI irritation, increased blood pressure, agitation, heartburn, high cholesterol, diahorrea and nutritional deficiencies. One wishing progress in unbroken Brahmacharya should completely and fully give up coffee, tea, alcohol, aerated drinks, meat, eggs, tobacco and any other stimulant or intoxicant including drugs. Food should be wholesome, light, fresh and limited. Overeating always unsettles Prâna and an unsettled Prâna will lead to loss of semen. One should talk less and strictly avoid gossiping, getting angry, tale carrying, back biting and in general all activities that deviate oneself from the self leading to the non-self. Silence through God-contemplation is the best means. This is how Brahmacharya becomes rock solid. The peace, strength and ability that come from such a life leads to true Brahmacharya. Such an aspirant will make fast progress in Brahmacharya.

Question

Hi Dhananjay,
I'm on my 7th day of Brahmacharya & I'm feeling a lot better about myself:). During the beginning on the 4th day when things started getting better & started getting supercharged with energy & prana again & less lethargic. Then as the days went by on the 7th day which is today, I started feeling lazy even though I slept good.

So my question is, am I just going through withdrawals or what??

I'm really observing this practice every single day. The last time I did this practice was when I went out to Seattle for work and abstained from ALL lust for 18 days & my spirits were lifted higher than ever. waking up at 3am everyday to work was no sweat & all fear was lost.

I felt lighter(my body was light while running or jumping around, it felt effortless) & more spirited.

Is it really possible to experience these symptoms as early as that?!

& I've never felt this before but I'm trying to keep this going permanently.

So the ultimate question to sum this up is, would it take about 18 to 30 days to feel no laziness and more energetic & more spirited?
I just want to hear it from a professional to confirm my experiences.

Answer
The first few months unto a year of unbroken Brahmacharya is the time when the body, mind and psyche are getting adjusted to an entirely new lifestyle considering that a life of conservation and transmutation was not applied before. Various changes occur in the physical and mental planes during this time resulting in the corresponding changes in one's attitude, perspective, energy, strength and mental focus. Continued and unbroken Brahmacharya beyond three months generally results in the embedded disease causing toxins slowly surfacing whilst being vacated. The illness represented by that particular toxin might then briefly manifest and go away.

The high you describe is the result of the body charged with energy further to lack of seminal loss. These initial states vary in nature from person to person and cannot be generalized in terms of results, experiences & magnitude. Energy conserved must be channelized and expended through physical activity, intellectual work and God-meditation on a daily basis. Failure to apply the conserved energy into productivity can result in inertia or laziness which finally results in a wet dream. One should remember that seminal energy conserved and transmuted is of mammoth power and needs a worthy channel to be safely and constructively utilized. Failure to do this makes the energy find a less worthy outlet!

To sum up, correct Brahmacharya carried out in thought, word and deed without a break results in overall improvement at all fronts in the course of time. The right approach is not to think too much regarding the effects on a day to day basis but instead focus on leading a life of Brahmacharya sincerely and committedly, following which, this mode of life starts becoming more effortless and natural. The benefits and accomplishments that happen will occur on their own accord at the right time.

Question
Hello Dhananjay
thank you for sensible & detailed responses.I have a few more questions.
1.what are the dangers of suppression & repression of lustful thoughts and preventing semen coming out of penis(for example before or during orgasm)?although I think avoiding of lustful thoughts is better than of falling in the trap of it leading to masturbation or wet dream but we must try to keep on brahmachrya more natural & effortless . sometimes displacing of this thoughts with positives ones is difficult & along with inner pressure felt physically in heart,stomach & sometimes in head.
2.if we fallow brahmacharya in thought,word & deed even without wet dream but experience negative emotions such as worry & regret &etc we made a break in brahmacharya?if yes how much &how quality of vital force we lose?

3.you said we all are a puppet on the hand of almighty lord.if all actions,thoughts & emotions of ours are due to will of almighty lord so what is our role in our life?how could we resolve this paradox with ourselves?
4.you emphasis on god meditation & remember him in all circumstances &repeat his name.but actually I don't have faith in almighty lord with whole heart.how can I develop my faith & see him in all circumstances & conditions?

thank you again & forgive me for these all questions.

Answer
1. Suppression of sexual thoughts will lead to irritation, stress, anger, ill-health and finally a wet dream. It is not possible to prevent the expulsion of semen further to an orgasm. If semen is conserved, it has to be sublimated and transmuted. Else, it has to be ejaculated. It is not possible to indulge in lustful thought or activity and yet conserve semen. Hence the correct method is to avoid the incidence of letting lustful thoughts grow and keep the mind occupied on constructive physical, intellectual and spiritual pursuits.

2. Yes, letting oneself be overcome with base emotions such as anger, attachment, greed, arrogance and jealousy along with getting stressed and agitated results in the loss of Prâna or vital energy. Since semen is the gross most representation of Prâna, loss of Prâna destabilizes the harmonious flow of energy within the body resulting in weakness and eventually the loss of semen. The quantity of energy lost depends on the intensity and duration of the negative emotion.

3. Yes, everything in this world and beyond is under the final will and direction of the Almighty. This is because everything in this world is the result of the creation of the Almighty and is within the Almighty. There is nothing in the entire universe including space that is beyond the Almighty or which is not a product of his creation. The scriptures point to the fact of the Almighty being the most primal force which has always existed and will always exist. Being beyond birth, death, physical form and imitations, the Almighty may be conceived to be that infinite and eternal force form which is responsible for all creation. He is described in the Upanishads as 'Sath-Chith-Ananda' which comes close to Knowledge-Existence-Bliss. This means he is the source of all knowledge, the state of eternal existence and infinite bliss. One cannot get the complete concept of what the Almighty is as long as one is not self-realized.

The natural doubt that arises in the mind of a person then is, if the Almighty is everything, the only reality who supersedes all other things and is the cause behind all actions, then what is this world? Who are we, and what are we? It must then follow that this world is false, all objects are false and we ourselves are false and do not exist since the Almighty is alone the reality and the Supreme truth!

Yes, the Almighty alone is reality. The world is false, objects are false and we ourselves in terms of our body, mind, intellect, individual consciousness and ego are false in gross terms. It is our true self, the Âtman (pure soul) which is true and hence the Âtman is no different from the Almighty itself, it being the only true entity. Note the word 'gross terms'. By 'gross terms', we mean all those things that are the product of two or more things. All those things that are divisible and all those things which cannot exist independently by themselves. Let us take the example of the human body to get clear with the concept of falsity of matter and the reality we call the Almighty.

Now the human body is the product of various things. It is compound in nature, being the combination of things such as blood, flesh, bones, nerves, skin etc.. If we go a little further and analyze these things in particular, say the bone, we will find that the bone is again a combination of various materials such as calcium, fiber, protein and collagen. If we go much further and analyze a protein cell in the bone, it is seen to consist of various amino acids. Further analysis will make us learn that the amino acid is itself made of molecules of a particular group. Split these molecules and we get elements such as carbon, hydrogen, oxygen and nitrogen. On analysis of the individual hydrogen atom, we learn that it is basically an electrically neutral atom consisting of a single proton and a single electron bound to the nucleus. Suppose we were to go further and try to find out what a proton or a neutron or the electron within an atom is made up of, we would arrive at the final conclusion that these individual constituents of an atom are really forms of energy and not matter . It is the final and indivisible state. The magnitude, nature and application of this energy differently results in the formation of atoms with different number of protons. The quantity of protons in an atom is what we call the atomic number of the resultant element. No two elements have the same atomic number or in other words the same number of protons. So the presence of different numbers of protons in an atom gives rise to different elements and finally different substances or different kinds of matter such as a stone, a piece of wood, a piece of glass etc... It is this final energy called atomic energy that is used in a nuclear reactor through nuclear fusion, where two smaller nuclei are fused into a larger nucleus releasing energy as a by product. A similar but reverse process occurs in a nuclear fission reaction, where a single, heavy, atomic nucleus splits into free protons and photons with the release of a very large amount of energy. It is a well known fact in science that these free protons and photons are really nothing but forms of light and light again is nothing but a form of energy.

So on scientific analysis of any form of matter that we see all around us, be it the human body, the earth, air, water etc.. we come to the final conclusion that all matter is a form of energy. That the physical things called a stone or glass are not really physical in nature at the innate level but are forms of energy in their own frequency of vibration. The dense conjugation of energy results in what we call matter, which in reality is only energy in a frequency of vibration . So all physical objects are forms of energy and nothing more. This entire world with its objects is hence energy and not matter, speaking in terms of reality. We can thus infer that the world of objects we see all around us including our body are not real but only concentrated forms of energy in a state of vibration. Similarly, our mind and its wants and desires are also energy forms through the medium of thought.

What is that source or origin of this energy? There must be a source from which this energy has coalesced into matter. Some source which is intelligent enough to create such an energy and bind the protons and electrons within an atom to form matter. The protons and neutrons are after all lifeless and do not possess a mind or intelligence to behave in the way required to form the nucleus of an atom! Yet they are held together by some mysterious force through the means called atomic energy. Some source which has the high degree of intelligence to design the beautiful mechanism of function of the stars, planets, human body and everything in creation based on this principle of the Atom. This one, single, universal force which is indivisible and the master creator and controller of all forms of energy is what one might call as the Almighty. It now follows naturally that all forms of energy and hence matter, originate from this Almighty. That these forms of energy are juggled in different ways by the intelligence of that superior being resulting in the different objects of creation. Hence it should be, that this superior being or Supreme is independent of all forces and unaffected by their presence. It is a being that is beyond destruction and hence the only reality; for it is the cause behind everything and not the effect. The objects of its creation are only forms of energy that are held together by its will. A contrary-will from this controlling entity can hence dissolve these forms of matter into their constituent energies and finally even this energy can be withdrawn into that Supreme, following which the Supreme alone remains as the one final reality and every other effect in terms of matter or otherwise dissolves into nothingness. This is what is meant by saying "The world is an illusion and false".

Here we come to the exact concept of the Almighty as -"The one who is the supreme cause of all causes, while He Himself has no cause." Thus one can rightly conclude that the Supreme being controlling these forces of nature, matter and non-matter is beyond decay, death and limitation. That it is an entity within whom everything is contained and not something superseded by any force, matter or non-matter; for there cannot be anything beyond it in terms of the cause behind existence, knowledge and creation. It is this indivisible nature that makes it the only reality of permanence and continuum, beyond the fetters of change .

This principle is demonstrated very clearly when we see that anything and everything which is a compound is subject to change and finally destruction. In other words, everything which is the sum total of two or more substances is impermanent, prone to destruction and only an illusion. It is an illusion both in terms of our perception and most importantly in terms of the absolute reality . A stone, a piece of glass or wood, the human body, the planets and stars and even the air around us are all compounds and hence always subject to change, alteration and finally destruction when the form of energy holding these things together changes in magnitude or withdraws. These things then revert to their true form namely energy and even this energy being an effect of that Supreme entity which has created it merges back into the source - Almighty. Then, this formless, shapeless and featureless source of all energy called the Supreme alone remains, as was before creation; This is beautifully described in the Bhagavad-Gita -

"Aham sarvasya prabhavo mattah sarvam pravartate iti matva bhajante mam budha bhava-samanvitah" - Chapter 10/Verse 8.

Meaning -"I am the source of both the spiritual and material worlds. Everything arises from me. The wise who know this engage in realizing me and worship me with all their hearts".

This Supreme alone is the final, indivisible, unalterable state of existence which is above, beyond and in full control of all effects, being the cause of all effects. This is what the scriptures mean when they say -"O man, this world is unreal, it is falsity, it is the cosmic dream of the Supreme being, devised to evolve the Jivâtma (embodied soul) and make it realize itself as nothing but Almighty itself; for in reality, if there is but one absolute reality called the Almighty, then the Âtman (pure soul) can be no different than that. Just as drops of water in the ocean are the ocean themselves and are perceived as drops when separated, the concept of individuality in man is born out of the ignorance surrounding the Jivâtma (embodied soul) which makes him think himself as separate from God and results in suffering. Upon losing this ignorance through self-realization, the drop of water called the individual soul merges into the ocean of water called the Almighty to realize itself as nothing but the Almighty. So waste not your time and energy by attending to the senses and their unending needs. Devote your heart and soul to the attainment of the absolute, following which all suffering comes to an end and one gets established in permanent knowledge, existence and bliss which is the nature of the Almighty".

We can now know the reason behind calling ourselves as puppets under the Almighty. The ignorance surrounding man makes him think of himself as separate and distinct from the Supreme. God's purpose behind evolution is to reduce and finally erase these layers of ignorance around man or animal. This whole process called evolution is a part of God's cosmic dream where the embodied soul suffers on thinking itself to be separate and reclaims its lost kingdom of Godliness upon realizing itself to be indistinct. Hence the statement "God is the final doer of all actions, not man". This means that all circumstances, situations and results that one encounters in one's life are staged by the Almighty in this cosmic drama called life so that the embodied soul improves, corrects, raises above its mistakes and gets closer and closer to its default state of Godliness, finally merging into that Godliness.

As long as one considers oneself separate from the Almighty, one's actions will be either good or bad and one thus incurs the karma of these actions which are again good or bad. One has to suffer for his misdeeds and enjoy for his good deeds. He has to suffer or enjoy because he was conscious of himself as "I am the doer" while performing the misdeed or good deed. What karma or result can accrue to one who has given up his ego, his individuality and his distinctness as regards the Almighty? Such a person is neutral and fully aligned to the workings of God as regards this dream world and its happenings. He performs his duty as assigned by God with honesty and sincerity and does not worry about the results of his actions, knowing fully well that the Almighty is working through him to elevate him to his default state of Godliness and he is only a medium. Knowing fully well that this world is an illusion and false and God alone is real . Then, all actions of such a man become the actions of God in terms of absoluteness. Such a man can do no wrong as long as he is hinged to this truth. It is only as long as the individual ego, desires and wants exist that man considers himself separate/distinct thereby accruing karma, and performs wrong actions. This individual ego cannot fully dissolve as long as self-realization is not attained.

So our role in life as individuals is to take the path shown by the Almighty and bravely endure the ups and downs of life, knowing them to be measures taken by the Almighty to help us correct and improve in terms of absolute reality through this dream drama called life. These are only lessons to the embodied soul, thought in the classroom called life. Our role is to lead a life of purity, virtue and divinity and strive to realize ourselves; for then, our efforts become concurrent and in line with what is proposed by the Almighty and not against. A life devoted to sense pleasures as the life aim takes man away from this concept and instead strengthens the concept of individuality, while the correct objective is of universality.

What is the benefit of such an approach? The benefit is that we would be sparing our mind and body of the unnecessary suffering and pains that come from the wrong concept of ourselves being the doers and thus having expectations for the results of our actions. A man who follows this correct approach with the firm conviction - "God alone is the doer, I'm only the medium. Hence I will keep my mind and body neutral and align my mind and body to receive and act on God's commands without desires, wants and expectations. I will sincerely carry out and co-operate with that which he intends for this birth of mine without attachment or expectations for the fruits of my actions and with full surrender. My present suffering or pain is the result of past karma which is being worked out. Let it work itself out. I will not indulge in more negative action but make myself neutral and fully poised to act upon the way shown by God through destiny. My life objective will be the attainment of self-realization, for that is also the Lord's aim in giving me this human birth. All other activities such as my occupation, leisure, sleep and other things will be incidental to my life and not the central purpose or aim of my life."

This is our role in life. It is only this much and not more. Our role is to stay riveted to the ideals of virtue, purity and divinity to the best of our ability and that too without expectations, whilst being sincere and honest to duty through the path shown by God. Let him make us a doctor, engineer, fisherman, film-actor, fire fighter or a businessman or something else. None of these things matter; for all these are akin to one's role in a drama and unreal. Just as an actor in a drama does not really suffer or enjoy by being ridiculed or praised in the drama, one's materialistic achievements or non-achievements don't really count in terms of the absolute reality, considering this world is an illusion. Our duty as actors in this world drama is to give our best at performing honestly and convincingly in whatever occupation or career that destiny provides, without being attached to the career itself . It is one's spiritual state and advancement that count, for it is through spirituality that man comes out of this dream called life and establishes himself in his default state of reality - Godliness. Our role is to strive to the best of our ability to indulge in all efforts that will take us towards self-realization and not indulge in any effort that will take us away from Godliness, virtue and purity. This is the highest and best religion, call it by what name you want. The tenets of all true religions of the world finally advocate this attitude and nothing more. The means and approach may be different, but the end is the same.

4. This entire dream drama called life has been scripted by God so man realizes himself to be not different from God. These 'apparent' physical objects made of atoms are held together by the energy we discussed for this very purpose, giving a sense of reality to this world, but whose actual nature is falsity. What is self-realization? Realizing one's true self, the indivisible Âtman as the Almighty and things such as the body, mind, ego and the manifest world to be falsity comprises this enlightenment. So whether one wants it or doesn't, one will eventually gravitate towards Godliness and spirituality in course of time. It is a very natural process. The Supreme Lord has devised this drama called life with this very objective and each and every embodied soul, from the smallest insect to the most staunch non-believer of God will realize himself as not being separate from God in course of time, immaterial of whether one wants it or doesn't. The question is not whether one believes in God or whether one wants self-realization, but how soon one wants self-realization . The aim of a life of Yoga with Brahmacharya is only to help one reach this state earlier and faster and thereby prevent oneself of the troubles and suffering which come from an opposite kind of lifestyle. Finally, even this decision on whether or not to adopt a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya is taken by the Almighty; for it is through his grace and directions alone that a person gets the mind to follow such a life and attain success.

"Why not strive in the direction of God's wishes rather than taking a contrary path based on one's whims and fancies? This will soon help one turn into a believer. Especially, when the fact remains that one can never go against what he has decided for us..." -- Is the question a person doubtful about all that has been written should ask himself. For those who still don't believe in God, there is always the drama called life scripted by the 'Master Director' called God which has its own methods and techniques of turning the strongest non-believers of God into believers.

Question

Hello brother,thank you for your last reply.I want to only know what things break woman bhramcharya ??

Answer

The same rules that apply to men, apply on an equal footing as regards women when it comes to Brahmacharya. This means that indulgence in any form of sexual thought, word and deed carried out intentionally is technically a break; for Prâna (vital energy) is lost at each and every incidence of desire, lust and passion and one's vital fluid is no different from Prâna. Further to many such instances of lust and desire, a man loses his vital fluid through a wet dream and a woman loses much energy in the form of heavy menstrual periods. The aim should be conservation and transmutation of sexual energy and not suppression or repression.

While Brahmacharya is commonly interpreted as abandonment of all forms of sexual enjoyment at the mental and physical levels, it is equally important that one should strive to raise above base emotions such as anger, attachment, greed, arrogance and jealousy for the full effects of Brahmacharya to blossom and shine through. All such indulgences lead to a break as the birth of base emotions leads to loss of Prâna. But this cannot be achieved through suppressing such emotions. The correct method is to work at reaching a stage where one does not react with base emotions as regards worldly situations or circumstances but stays calm and composed, keeping in mind the reality that such emotions are of no benefit in solving an issue but only agitate and disturb the mind, leading to loss of energy and composure. One should prevent the birth of such emotions right from the start through the application of Buddhi shakthi (power of intellect) and Vichara shakthi (power of inquiry), for it is of little use suppressing them after they have been let to grow. Coupled with this, one should work at raising above strong tendencies such as the desire to eat excessively, sleep excessively and talk excessively. All these lead to wastage of the Prânic force within. The energy conserved through Brahmacharya should be focused on God-thought, God-contemplation and God-meditation. When one leads such a disciplined and virtuous life of purity for a long period of time, 'true Brahmacharya' will get set in motion.

What is this 'true Brahmacharya'? The word Brahmacharya is a compound Sanskrit word which can be split as "Brahmani Charyathey ithi" - Meaning -"One whose actions have become the actions of the Almighty through complete devotion and surrender to the Supreme". This means that the person has reached a stage where his individual ego, desires and wants have been fully negated and that he is a neutral entity who has surrendered himself to the will & wishes of the Almighty Lord. He has accepted and realized himself to be a tool or medium in the hands of the Almighty and performs as directed by the Almighty in both the materialistic and spiritual domains. This state is somewhat similar to a painting brush which paints the canvas under the will of the painter, in the hands of the painter and fully under the control of the painter, without any set idea of its own. The brush by itself has no plans, aims or tendencies to produce this kind or that kind of a painting. If the painter decides to paint the canvas blue, then so be it, the brush co-operates in painting it blue. If the painter decides on the color green, that is fine, the brush paints it green. In other words, just as the painting brush co-operates and applies the ideas of the painter on to the canvas, the Brahmachari who has reached this state, carries out each and every action based on God's will and as offered by destiny with a sense of devotion and surrender to the Almighty.

His only wish is to always be engaged in the contemplation and experience of the Almighty. He has no other worldly or materialistic wish. As regards the materialistic world and duties, he honestly and sincerely performs his duties in whatever field or line of work offered to him by destiny, accepting it as the will of God. To him, it is God thought and contemplation that matters and not his job, career or other activities aimed at providing sense stimulation to his body and mind. This does not mean he neglects his occupation or career, for that would then amount to going against the wishes of God, since it is ultimately the Almighty who has directed him to that particular line of work. He performs in his occupation honestly and sincerely, but without the attachments, desires and wants which most people do with regards to the fruits of their actions. He views these things as incidental in his life to support and sustain this body with food, clothing and shelter and not as the central purpose of life or as life itself. Such a person is said to be established in 'true Brahmacharya'. The component of sexual continence in Brahmacharya then becomes a by-product or an after-effect of such a lifestyle. Brahmacharya then becomes effortless and natural. Anyone who practices Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with honesty and sincerity and with God-meditation will eventually reach this stage in course of time. This fills one's life with peace, tranquility, serenity and happiness. It is the stage where one has finally realized that the aim of life is to attain self-realization and hence works in tandem with the Almighty to reclaim his lost kingdom of bliss and knowledge.

Question
Pranaam Dhananjay,
Please accept my obeisance for all the good work you are doing in educating all of us aspiring Brahmacharis.
I went through quite a few of your past posts and have come to realization (thanks to you) that it IS possible to control the sexual urge. I have been trying on this path but fall out after sometimes a month or so of control by giving in to the sexual urge.
My question: Is 35 too late to late to start on this path to be able to experience all the benefits of Brahmacharya? Are there some limitations in the benefits that we need to be aware and set realistic expectations? The foremost I am wanting to know is that is the progress slower if I start now? Thank you in advance.

Answer
It is never too late to commence on the path of Brahmacharya, considering that one is moving towards one's default state of the 'Âtman' (pure soul) through this practice. That pure, divine state of knowledge, eternal existence and matchless bliss is in fact one's original, real state of nativity and not the commonly seen state rife with base emotions, sorrow and pain. So anyone who is striving for a life governed by Brahmacharya is slowly gravitating towards this original, default state of bliss, reaching which, one becomes content in the self by the self without the least need of anything external to maintain his state of well being. That state, reaching which, one see's everything within one's own self as the 'Âtman' (pure soul) and is fully absorbed in the infinite knowledge, bliss and existence that shine forth.

So immaterial of whether a person is at his budding youth or in the evening years of his life, it makes much sense to lead a life governed by the tenets of Brahmacharya and make headway in the path leading to one's true and original state. Just as it is very natural and very normal for one to feel the need and the urge to get back to one's own home after journeying across the entire world, the Jivâtma (embodied soul) feels a similar need to revert, return and reclaim its lost state of infinity and bliss. It was lead astray and away from this divine, natural state through its wrongful assumption that sense pleasures were the pathway to happiness. This made it wander across the land of senses, thinking them to be the heavens of pleasure; while they turned out to be nothing more than deserts of pain and suffering. It has suffered much at the hands of these senses and their unending appetites, so much, that it finds itself surrounded by the vicious daggers of the senses, stabbing and hurting it beyond redemption. It is marooned from well being and its true state of bliss. It has had enough and wants to free itself from these shackles, but does not know how. Then, at this stage, the all merciful Lord, out of sheer compassion and a well wishing attitude, gently picks it up and rests it on the raft of 'Brahmacharya' so that it may attain to attain to Yoga (the final union of self-realization). So by no means is it ever late to start on a lifestyle of Brahmacharya, for who can deny the Jivâtma (embodied soul) of its eternal birthright to reclaim its original and default state of bliss, beyond slavery to the senses?

The 'full effects' of Brahmacharya are said to be very much within the reach of a person who starts this unbroken and sincere practice within the age of 32-34. This is the age, beyond which the ability of the physical medium called the body starts to gradually decrease in terms of producing energy of the finest kind. This is represented by the lowering of the quality of semen and sperm produced. Till this age, the energy graph representing the production of the best 'Prâna' (vital energy) and hence the best semen is more or less constant and at its peak. The graph line representing the ability of the body to produce this finest energy starts descending after this age.

By the term 'full effects', we mean that he or she has a very high chance of attaining to Yoga (final union or beatitude) in this very birth, if the practice of honest & unbroken Brahmacharya with God meditation and contemplation is begun within this stipulated age of 34. It means that through such a mode of life, he can work out all his past karmas and secure release now, in this very existence.

Why is this so? It is so because a mammoth and Herculean amount of 'Prâna' (vital energy) is required to take man to the stage of 'Nirbîja Samâdhi' (the state of super-consciousness beyond duality) and make him experience union with the Supreme. At the physical and mental levels, a very high influx of energy of the most refined and pure kind is necessary for this effect. Besides, one cannot attain to final beatitude or Yoga unless all karmas in the 'Kârana Sharira' (causal body) have been worked out or burnt, and one needs much 'Prâna' or vital energy to indulge in and bear the effects of such cleansing within the scope of a single birth. One needs much energy and effort to reach the state where the desires of the mind lessen and finally taper away, on realizing that everything is within oneself, the 'Âtman' (pure soul). Sustained efforts and perseverance are required to reach this state of dispassion as regards anything external or 'Asath' (That which is not the 'Âtman'). And so, the Yogi perseveres to conserve and transmute the most supreme of all fluids within his body, the only fluid which is capable of producing another life, the fluid which is no different from his very own self in terms of its representation at the physical plane, the fluid called 'Rethas' or 'Veerya' (semen). Conservation and transmutation of this fluid help him sublimate it into 'Ojas' which is the transformed state of physical semen into astral energy or a kind of electricity. This 'Ojas' is seen in the form of luster, personal electricity and superior mental abilities in a Yogi. Hence it follows that the earlier one starts with this practice, the better are the results.

This does not mean that those who start the practice of Brahmacharya beyond the age of 34 will not attain the final state of beatitude. The age of 34 is a general pointer as regards the upper limit for receiving the complete effects. It is like saying a man should retire from active service around the age of 57, as beyond this age, most people may no longer be fully efficient and capable of handling the responsibilities of a demanding job. This does not mean that all those above 57 are inept and incapable of these responsibilities. There are many people beyond this age who are extremely active, alert and efficient as regards their performance at work. It is only a general rule or a yardstick meant to apply to the masses in the form of a common factor. There have been many instances of people who have taken to a life of Yoga well beyond the age of 34 and have yet attained a very high state. It is the intensity, honesty and sustained determination that one exhibits at realizing oneself through devotion to the Almighty that really matters.

Young Brahmacharis who start such practice right from their teens derive even better results as reservoir of 'Prâna' (vital energy) is virtually inexhaustible at the onset of puberty in the teens and early twenties. The body, having been subject to a natural state of Brahmacharya for 12-14 years from birth is full of strength and power. It is for this reason that boys and girls who are in their teens should by all means follow a life of Brahmacharya and enjoy the immense benefits. By the practice of unbroken Brahmacharya, such people become shining stars in whatever field of work they choose, have an excellent and stable marriage, enjoy vibrant health, a cheerful mind and finally become very eligible to tread the path of self-realization through limiting the purpose of the sexual act to progeny with one's spouse and never beyond. This is the absolute truth and is beyond doubt.

So be unfazed by things such as one's age and the falls/setbacks due to breaks in the initial stages of Brahmacharya, but be rest assured that the highest of states are well within one's reach, further to honest and sincere practice. What is important is that one should analyze one's mistakes that lead to the fall and never repeat them again. With such an attitude and effort, Brahmacharya becomes longer and longer and finally life-long. It becomes effortless and natural by one's sustained efforts and through the grace of God, who always helps those who strive to their maximum. Let us give our best and leave the rest to God, the most impartial, kind and well wishing friend we have ever had.

Question

Greetings,
I found a few of your answers to queries posed here as very helpful in understanding the concept of brahmacharya.
My question is does sexual libido play a part in speedening up the process of Kundalini awakening?
To be more clear does it make an asexual attain self-realisation faster than a man with high sexual libido who would naturally have a hard time focusing his thoughts in the right direction.If so what are the pro's and con's of having low or high sexual drive in trudging along the path of Self-Realisation.
Thank you in anticipation.

Answer

As long as one's Prâna (vital energy) is not fully harnessed and focused towards raising the Kundalini to the Sahasrâra chakra at the crown of the head, one cannot go into Nirbija Samâdhi (super-consciousness of the final order). This is the basis behind the need for continuous and unbroken Brahmacharya lasting a minimum of 12 years, for even the smallest drain of seminal fluid reduces Prâna (vital energy) within the system and a body deficit in Prâna cannot achieve the highest levels of meditative states.

The need one feels for any form of sexual expression is a Vikâra (distortion from one's pure nature) stemming from Agnyâna (ignorance around the soul). It is the presence of this Vikâra that has degraded the Âtman (pure soul) into the Jivâtma (embodied-degenerated soul) and has encased the soul into the three bodies - physical, astral and causal. So the presence of the smallest amount of sexual urge or libido will act as an impediment and obstacle in reaching high spiritual states. This thing called as the libido is false and an illusion arising from the ego which is itself false and unreal. What people called as a high libido or sex drive is a distortion of Prâna (vital energy) in the realm of Mâya (illusion). It is only the Âtman (pure soul) who is real and he is no different from the Almighty, being an extension. Hence no Kundalini awakening will be complete or progress beyond a limit as long as one's ego and its siblings such as the libido are not fully annihilated.

Immaterial of whether a person is sexual or asexual, it is one's ability to dissolve one's ego and realize oneself not to be the doer that matters. This is the reason, the Yogi constantly reminds himself of the fact that God is the doer and not he himself, through complete surrender and devotion. The concept of individuality and ego are the strongest impediments to spiritual success. Both these things are false, being illusions. The reality is that there is one single entity called the Almighty, and everything else is a product of his creation in this dream-drama called life. Hence all forms of creation are themselves false, just as the moving images on a cinema screen in the theater are not real people but only forms of light thrown by the projector.

An asexual person may not have a high sex drive or may not be sexually inclined and yet have a high-strung ego. This will make it equally tough to achieve spiritual progress, though he is less troubled by the absence of the libido. So the most important qualification or eligibility as regards achieving high states of spirituality is to work towards overcoming all forms of ignorance and finally realize oneself as nothing but the Âtman (pure soul). Whether one is sexual or asexual has little bearing, for unless all forms of unreality surrounding the soul are negated, the one and only one reality called the Almighty cannot be perceived.

Question

Hello again,
Considering the biological factors of procreation a man is made to sow his seed for the purpose of continuing his genes.
Where as a woman is a vessel or a carrier of his seed since time immemorial.Hence many women are no longer interested in sex once they have children.Their desire dwindles.
But men are programmed to spread it far and wide and hence their desire is much higher.
So the state of brahmacharya was only for a man thing because of his seminal fluid having the seed of life.
But in the present age that seems to be a cause of concern as women are also being promoted or initiated into a Sate of Brahmacharini?So it seems to be a supposedly new trend. How on earth can that be justified?
How can a woman attain and maintain the same state of kundalini awakening in contrast to a man without the body producing the seed of life?

Answer

1. Brahmacharya has always been advocated as the natural and default state of lifestyle for both man and woman from times immemorial. Women derive equal benefits from the practice of Brahmacharya on par with men and can reach the highest states of Kundalini awakening. If a man and his wife limit the purpose of the sexual act only to progeny of a child or two with each other and remain strict Brahmacharis for the rest of the time, doesn't it follow that both man and wife are in a natural state of Brahmacharya and on an equal footing? Such a man is a Brahmachari and his wife a Brahmacharini. This is the correct mode of life that helps man reach the purpose of the human existence - Self-realization.

2. The tendency of a man to spread his sperm far and wide is a carry over of male tendencies from past animal births. In animals, the male cohabits with various females to produce maximum number of offspring. This is required, as the chances of survival of offspring is very bleak in animals. Out of a litter of 10-12 lion cubs, less than 2 or three will reach adulthood. Some will die of disease, some are eaten by rival males and some are born with some deformity or the other and incapable of reaching adulthood. This is not so in the case of man. Human babies are not eaten by their neighbors! The survival rate of the average human child into adulthood is more than 85%.

A man wishing spiritual progress is required to marry one woman, have one or two offspring from this very woman and then divert his vital energies towards the attainment of self-realization. A man who behaves like an animal and reverts to spreading his sperm far and wide among many women beyond the holy precincts of matrimony is not a man but worse than a beast. He is not yet fit to tread the path of Brahmacharya and self-realization. He will have to spend many human births working out his animal Vâsanâs (tendencies), suffer the consequences and finally reach a birth where he becomes fit for the practice of Brahmacharya after undoing his beastly tendencies.

3. The state of Brahmacharya applies equally to both man and woman. What is man? What is woman? There is no man and there is no woman. Everyone is only the Âtman (pure soul) in terms of reality and the Âtman has no gender. There is nothing called a male Âtman or a female Âtman. The Âtman is beyond these petty limitations and is infinite, formless, shapeless, colorless and universal. So all the tenets of Brahmacharya that apply to men apply equally to women. In man, the vital seed is in the fluid called veerya (semen). In women, their vital seed or the egg is in a fluid called Raja-veerya. Women suffer an equal drain of energy through recreational sexuality and on the opposite, attain to equally high spiritual states further to true Brahmacharya. A man cannot create life merely with his sperm or seed. An equal contribution occurs from the Raja-veerya or the vital fluid of woman. So this concept of man and woman is only the means for ensuring creation and propagation of the specie and nothing more. A soul with the body of a man in this birth may be born as a woman in the next birth. Be it a man or woman, Brahmacharya applies on an equal note to both and acts as the means for liberation. See past answers: 'Celibacy and women Dt: 11th January 2011.

4. The seed of life in a man through his semen or in a woman through her egg is only the carrier of Prâna (vital energy) and nothing more. The seed or egg by themselves in the physical form are of no value. It is the tremendous surcharge of Prâna (vital energy) into the seed and the egg, that make them capable of acting as a medium for the transference of a soul into the womb and then develop it into an embryo and finally the child. Kundalini awakening occurs and finally reaches the highest state when the net sum of all Prâna within the body is directed up to the Sahasrâra chakra in the brain. It reaches this seventh chakra by passing through the Sushumna Nâdi within the spine. This has nothing to do with the gender of a person. Immaterial of whether it is a man or a woman, both have all seven chakras, the Sushumna Nâdi within the spine and vital energy in the form of Prâna. It is not the vital seed of man or the egg of woman that is responsible for Kundalini awakening but the Prâna with which these are surcharged and which rises up the spine through their conservation and transmutation following a life of Brahmacharya that matters. So both man and woman can attain to the highest states of Kundalini awakening and are equally eligible to attain the final state of self-realization, for both in reality are neither man nor woman but only the Âtman.

The first thing that a person wishing spiritual progress must do is develop the attitude of seeing all living beings with an equal perspective as souls and not as bodies. One has to raise above the petty limitations of gender and false perspectives of ignorance such as "I am a man and you are ony a woman". What is a man? It is a soul with the body of a man. What is a woman? It is again a soul with the body of a woman. Neither is superior or inferior to the other in terms of equality. The difference is to the body and not to the soul within. Upon death, both bodies will decompose and vanish. So they were both unreal. There was never man and never woman, both were an illusion. The Âtman alone is real. Everything else is false. Unless this train of thought of seeing and respecting all living creatures from a little worm to man or woman as the great Âtman is not developed, spiritual progress will not proceed even by a hairs breadth. Such a person is not yet ready for the path of Brahmacharya or spirituality. So let's raise above the limitation of the physical body surrounding the soul and work towards seeing all living beings as the manifestations of the Almighty Lord.

Question
QUESTION: I'm very grateful that I have found this site and that you are doing such thorough and selfless work (karma yoga)... Thank you.
I have been trying to practice Brahmacharya since about 6 years ago. Sometimes, I go for a year, or 9 months, or 6 months without discharging any of my semen. But still, my mind isn't free of lust and so I don't feel I have really been authentic in my practice.
I have had some deep health karma this lifetime to deal with. I have a nervous disorder called 'Tourette Syndrome'(it is a neurological disorder that causes involuntary physical and vocal tics). I also have spondylotheiss in my cervical spine. Basically, my spine is degenerated and compressed and so 2 of the discs are bulged, and also my joint (C-2) is deformed and chipped, and so this causes me muscle tightness and discomfort almost constantly.
This neck discomfort provokes my neck tic, which then makes my neck more tight and uncomfortable. So the 2 aliments(tourette's and my cervical problem) perpetuate each other (I can get stuck in this destructive loop indefinitely).
I just want to make it clear that there are no doctors or medicine that can do anything for these 2 problems. They are considered incurable. I am 36 years old and have been dealing with this my whole life and have been to countless doctors and specialists-- (allopathic and natural and ayurveda). Of course I can take pharmaceutical drugs and dull my mind so I don't feel anything, but that's not an option for me.
I will say that a healthy yogic lifestyle (vegetarian diet, exercise, no caffeine or drugs or alcohol or tobacco, reduction in stress, being in nature, and trying to preserve the vital force) has helped me more than anything else. But I am still below average in physical wellness and want very much to become more centered and relaxed and free of physical discomfort and mental torture (tourette syndrome). Also, yogic asanas and pranayama and other bandhas and mudras help sometimes, but other times activate my nervous disorder and/or cause pressure in my cervical spine, so I have to use intuition when I am doing them.
My questions are:
1. can the practice of "real Brahmacharya" (in thought, word and deed) rebalance my nervous system (help me free of tics) and also somehow restore comfort in my cervical spine?
2.How could it help my spine if it is degenerated?
3. How long do you think before I can begin to notice its 'effects'-- 6 months or a year... or?

I thank you so much for your time and response..
Namaste,
Yash

ANSWER: 1. The practice of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed and with God-meditation and contemplation will help you come to terms with these two problems and gradually taper them down. Since the past karma behind the cause of these problems was strong, much pain and suffering had to be undergone. Brahmacharya in the real and true sense will work wonders as regards both the spine and brain. Maladies of the spine and the brain are generally an indication of negative karma accrued from some harm done to a fellow being as regards his/her life energy or mind/brain.

I will request you to try and slowly perform and master 'Shirsasana' (head stand pose) a few times early in the morning before Sunrise and in the evening before Sunset. But this effort should be very gradual and not be tried in a hurry. At the slightest signs of pain or discomfort, go slow and do not hasten the effort. Eventually, with constant effort and God-meditation you will be able to master this Âsana and derive immense benefits. Upon succeeding in the performance of the Âsana, gradually increase the duration in units of 5 seconds day by day. Go slow at the slightest signs of discomfort. Eventually, you will be able to maintain the pose for a longer period of time. Include this Âsana in your Yogic practice consisting of Yama-Niyama, Thribandha, Prânayâma and meditation. Make it a point to rise at least by 5.00 A.M, immediately have a bath and sit for the practice of Thribandha, Prânayâma and God-meditation. The same should be repeated before Sunset in the evening.

2. Rethas (semen) is largely made of cerebro-spinal fluid. In other words, much of the same material that goes into making the brain and the spine go into semen. Hence it follows that those who loose much semen debilitate their spine, bones and finally the brain and suffer from all sorts of related maladies. On the other hand, a life of Brahmacharya with adequate physical exercise, leads to a very supple, lithe and healthy spine and superior cerebral health and mental faculties. Brahmacharya is the best panacea while trying to cure each and every malady in the body, for Brahmacharya gradually cleanses most of the karma stored in the Kârana Sharira (causal body) accrued from one's deeds in past births. It is this past karma that is the cause behind present suffering. So the chances of coming to terms with the condition become very bright through Brahmacharya.

3. Within a year to a year and half of such practice, coupled with a life of sincere and unbroken Brahmacharya, notable improvement will be seen. But this Brahmacharya should be of the true kind and accompanied by much God-meditation and contemplation. Certain minor illnesses and bouts of ill-health may manifest in the course of this practice when embedded karma surfaces and vacates itself. The aspirant should be unflinching to such developments and stick to his efforts with complete God-devotion and God-surrender.

May the Almighty bless you with health, strength and well being.

QUESTION: Thank you for your very knowledgeable reply, as well as some instructions for me to follow.
You mentioned that I should do the headstand. I used to incorporate the headstand and shoulderstand into my yoga routine, but it really made my neck and lower back (I have a deformed lumbar also) a lot worse. The truth is that most yoga postures aren't auspicious for me, even though I love to do them and feel my life energy get stimulated by them. Even simple asanas like 'cobra' and 'yoga mudra' cause me to feel uncomfortable. And when I sit up too long (to meditate or do pranayama), my spine also starts to hurt, and then I tic (rapidly start twisting my neck around). I have been experimenting and modifying my yoga program around for 6 years and unfortunately, the only things that I can 'sometimes' do while feeling semi-comfortable and relaxed is lie in shavasana and sometimes I can also do pranayama in shavasana. Hopefully that will change in time. Trust me, between these nervous tics that I have and my spinal discomfort, it becomes next to impossible for me to be centered and 'still' for even a few moments.
1. do you think that after observing brahmacharya that this will restore my health to the point where I can start practicing a more complete yoga program? Or will the fact that I can't practice a lot of the helpful yoga techniques now, actually hinder my ability to get well (like a CATCH-22)?

Thanks for your time.

Answer
Sometimes, the magnitude of past karma is so strong that destiny prevents the aspirant from even involving himself in the mode of activity required to cleanse himself of this karma. One is not punished for one's sins but is punished by one's sins. But for the one who is devoted to God with love and surrender, who is prepared to atone, realize and rectify his mistakes, who is leading a strict life of Yoga through adherence to the Yama-Niyamas, past karma will eventually pass and his life lights up through the grace of God.

After waking up before 5.00 A.M and immediately having a bath, meditate much on the Almighty, requesting him to ward away past karma and give you knowledge of the Âtman. Request him to help you succeed in performing these postures and the other Yogic techniques. The mind should be made one pointed and focused like a needle on the Almighty during meditation with no other thought. After meditating for around 15 minutes, give your heart and soul into trying the practice of Prânayâma, Padmâsana and Shirsâsana. This is the reverse of the normal practice where Âsana and Prânayâma precede meditation. Here Âsana and Prânayâma will succeed meditation since there is a bodily hindrance to their successful performance. You will first meditate very intensely and then try for Prânayâma and then Âsana. This reverse process is to be carried out as long as the body does not become hale and healthy.

The nervous tics causing involuntary movements are effected by the movement of Prânic currents in a random and haphazard manner. Hence it will be very necessary to perform Prânayama on a sustained and regular basis to get Prâna (vital energy) under your control, after the aforesaid meditation . Once this is achieved, the ability to successfully perform physical postures will dawn by itself. To begin with, first meditate as described, perform Prânayama after Thribandha in the pose or Âsana most comfortable to you. This may be difficult and taxing, but one should have the attitude - " O Lord, Make me perform these Yogic practices successfully. I will lead a strict life of Yoga, being true to the tenets of Ahimsa (non-violence), sathya (truth), Âstheya (non-stealing or acquiring), Brahmacharya (continence), Aparigrha (non-possessiveness). Kindly redeem me of all my past karma and give me the strength to successfully carry out the practice of a life of Yoga. May I get established in health and well being."

In the beginning, you may not be able to maintain the pose for more than a minute. But effort has been applied. You are trying your level best to overcome the debility. You are giving your very heart and soul into achieving the pose. It is this unflinching effort that matters. You have meditated on the Lord, asking him to give you the strength to succeed and so shall you succeed in course of time, if your devotion and surrender are true and genuine. Our's is only to try our level best. It is HE alone who gives the result and makes us succeed. Give up on your ego. Think - " There is nothing called as the individual 'ME'. Everything is Brahman (Almighty). I'm only a tool in his hands, like the painting brush in the hands of an artist. Let him elevate me into knowledge and redeem me of the suffering".

This practice should be regularly and consistently carried out before Sunrise and just before Sunset. The initial period may be painful and taxing, but there is no need to fear or worry, even the least injury will not occur; for you have meditated on HIM and have commenced the practice in COMMUNION with HIM, thinking "HE is performing the practice, not me". Always remember -"HE is with me, HE alone is working through me. There is nothing called me. This thing called me has dissolved. It is all HIM and HIM alone".

Completely forget of your inability to perform these practices in the past. Wake up in the morning with the thought " HE will work through me and everything will be accomplished". At times when the mind slips out of this thought of HIM performing the practice, the mind is to be immediately pulled back and re-merged into HIM. Lose consciousness of your presence and be conscious only of HIS presence. Keep the mind blank on every other thought except HIM. This is the technique. You carry out all these efforts with the thought " HE alone is working and performing these actions, not me. This body will work as per his directions and get well. I'm not involved, for the thing called ME has dissolved and no longer exists".

This technique is employed with complete surrender and devotion to the Almighty and it will bear fruit. This is the truth and is beyond doubt

Question
QUESTION: Good evening Dhananjay,

From your previous answers I have learned that Karma is cancelled out through the austerities and disconnection from senses. My issue is that ever since I have began Brahmacharya my personal relationships have taken a turn for the worse.

Friends have become enemies. People are harshly critical of me. I am ignored more often and it seems like the world is simply treating me differently now. Is this because I am going through a spiritual detoxification process and my karmic impurities are surfacing? I am trying to focus on God contemplation but it is difficult when I can hear everyone else being critical or simply ignoring me now.

Thank you for any answer you can apply..

ANSWER: Karma once accrued cannot be cancelled. It has to be worked out. Karma is not cancelled by Brahmacharya but is worked out faster and more effectively, thereby delivering the Jivâtma (embodied soul) out of the entanglement of slavery to the senses faster. Brahmacharya with God-devotion and contemplation gives man the strength, energy and ability to face this cleansing process head-on and with lesser trouble. He will be in a position to take this karmic cleansing and its after effects with greater poise, awareness and stability.

The karmic cleansing which occurs through Brahmacharya should have no bearing on one's relationship with friends if they are 'TRUE FRIENDS'.

Who is a true friend? He is one who accepts the other for what he or she is. He is one who respects the other inspite of his defects or shortcomings as a human being. He is one who has a well wishing and well meaning attitude towards the other, immaterial of whether there is gain or pain from such an attitude. Such a person can alone be called a true friend. The true friend is not bothered about weather you are good looking, smart, popular, moneyed, have a fast car or hundred other external factors. He accepts you for what you are and this acceptance does not change with the external or internal factors that change in your life. He is a person who connects to you as an individual at a humane and personal level and not at the superficial level. One could consider himself lucky if he were to come by even a single such true friend in one's entire lifetime. The rest are all a pass!

1. Brahmacharya is a personal decision and lifestyle-choice one makes as regards himself. It is a mode of life that is not to be advertised or spoken of with people out in the public, for the simple reason that the majority of people cannot understand its true purpose and are not yet ready to come to terms with such a concept, independent of a life of senses. To the majority, enjoyment of sense pleasures is the aim of life and the purpose behind life. One should not try to profess or influence others directly as regards Brahmacharya as it is not everyone's cup of tea. Only those Jivâtmas (embodied souls) who are evolved and fit for a life of Brahmacharya will find it appealing and will be allowed by God to hear of it and pursue it successfully. It is not by any means a general tablet for the masses. Hence a successful Brahmachari always carries out his practice in secret and makes no sound about his practice at the outset.

2. This inner practice and resolution will not however affect one's friendship with others if the friendship is of a true and genuine kind from both sides. If the practice of Brahmacharya is making your friends distance themselves from you, it is anybody's guess as to how true they are in accepting you for what you are or what you want to be. Isn't it better that such 'false friends' in the 'guise' of true friends get rid of themselves? This will always happen as one progresses in Brahmacharya. All those things that are false and comprise of the Asath (untruth) both from within and outside slowly vacate and move away. One even loses his ego and desires as these themselves are false and unreal and the Âtman (self) alone remains, leading to intrinsic bliss. This is what leads to self-realization. Let people who claim friendship prove it by accepting us for what we are or what we want to be, rather than what they want us to be!

QUESTION: I just wanted to post a follow up and say thanks. It is indeed a lonely path to self realization however I see how solitude provides the only true path to the Atman and supreme bliss.

I will be studying the Yoga Sutras of Patanjali more in the coming days.

नमस्ते

ANSWER: Since distancing oneself from everything Asath (unreal) is very necessary to know that which is the Sath (real) namely the Âtman, the true Brahmachari will eventually have to withdraw from the world of objects, senses, people and external perception, for all these are unreal. Indulgence in any of these causes the 'Chitta Vritthis' (modifications of the mind) to rise, thereby drawing man away from his true nature of the Âtman. The means of Yoga is 'Chitta Vritthi Nirodhaha' or cessation of the modifications of the mind, as laid down by the great Sage Pathanjali. Hence the yogi needs to limit his interactions with people to the basic minimum and out of necessity, not more.

QUESTION: Yes this all correlates with everything I'm reading and realizing on the path which I like to phrase as "Returning to Zero" which is sort of my own way of viewing the process.

One last question before I continue my introspection, would you say or agree that Self Realization comes much faster for the Brahmacharin with the speeding up of past Karma reaching the shores of the aspirant?

From what you described it seems to make sense from the 12 years perspective of Brahmacharya that as one becomes stronger and more capable of absorbing the waves of discordant Karma, this in turn removes the necessity for returning to future incarnations to achieve liberation.

Am I on the right track with that perspective?

Answer

The state of self-realization becomes closer to the Yogi further to his efforts for the Union. In terms of relativity, one might thus say it happens faster in case of the Yogi. It is an already inherent state that is invisible or masked due to the presence of Avidya (ignorance) around the Shuddhâtma (pure soul) making it the Jivâtma (individual embodied soul).

It is like a sparkling diamond covered by a few layers of mud and grime. The diamond does not change in the least manner in terms of its intrinsic nature just because it is covered by mud. With mud or without mud, its actual, inner nature is still one of splendor. Its real weight is the same. Its real shape is the same. Its molecular composition is the same. But the layers of mud make it appear different. And now if we were to install a mind into this muddied diamond and give it a sense of perception, it would say "I am ball of mud, not a diamond". But within the layers of mud, deep inside, it was, is and always will be a diamond . It is only that the diamond which has forgotten its original state does not know it. Those who see it with the mud covering do not know it.

If efforts were applied to remove these layers of grime and mud and cleanse the diamond, it would again shine in all splendor. That is all is required. One need not do anything else. Because the very nature of the diamond in the first place is brightness, shine and luster . The diamond in the muddied state is an Agnyâni (ignorant man) and the diamond in the cleaned and true state is the gnyâni (Self-realized man).

So in terms of the time taken to attain self-realization, it would take as much time as is required to cleanse the ignorance surrounding the Âtman. Since this varies from person to person, the quantum of time would also vary and would depend on:

1. The amount of ignorance due for removal
2. The efficiency of methods employed
3. The consistence and persistence of the cleansing act

The twelve year rule is more of a general pointer and a bare minimum, if all conditions were ideally perfect and right. It might take more or less depending on the variations from ideality as in the case of people who have already put in much time during previous births. So in their case, what they do now is a continuation of previous efforts and not the fresh start. Such a person may show signs of inherent knowledge and pre-disposition towards self-realization right from his birth or younger years. An example is the great Saint Bhagawan Ramana Maharishi who attained to realization within a twinkling of a moment in his early years of youth itself. The rigors and discipline of Yoga had already been completed in previous births. The whole purpose behind a life of Yoga with Brahmacharya is to help man work efficiently and purposefully towards this evolutionary cleansing of the layers of ignorance surrounding the Jivâtma and lead it into the state of the pure Âtman. What could take a few hundred births in the natural course of evolution through trial, error by the common man is achieved by the Yogi in one single birth, if the Almighty Lord wills. This speedy disposal of karma thus reduces the necessity for numerous future incarnations.

Finally and most importantly, all these factors are super-controlled by the Almighty, for the whole drama called life is his divine dream. It is his will and wish alone that puts man into the path of Yoga and makes him succeed in Brahmacharya.

Question
Your Highness,

Your very awsome and wonderful teacher in spiritual matters, God must bless you, I have a doubt that If brahmacharya have any connection with Karma, Example In Cinema field there is Actor and Actress are acting together (Now a days Cinema field is an open trend for showing sexual seductional act with nude dress), another example is that the Doctor have to look the opposite gender in connection with their duty, But I heard that some of the Actress and Doctors are Yoga Masters, My doubt is that if they get any Progress in Brahmacharya?

Please attach your Photo with the site, Thanking You

Answer
One's very existence in this world is a result of karma. There is nothing beyond karma as regards to this finite world. It is because of the presence of karma that we are all born. Those who are beyond karma, having exhausted all their karma (self-realized souls) do not come back to this world. They merge into the Supreme. This is the aim of Yoga and Brahmacharya; to work out past karma without making new troublesome karma and never return to this world of pain and suffering.

If an actor/actress limit their involvement in a scene to professionalism and do not actually get involved at the individual, personal levels, with each other during and after enacting the scene, then they are doing their Dharma (one's duty based on the profession shown by God). Anything beyond this limit will lead to karma.

The same applies to the doctor. If the doctor examines the body of a patient with the professional attitude of curing the patient, it is Dharma or duty. Examining the patient with any other intention leads to karma of the negative kind.

One who is striving for self-realization through the practice of the necessary methods and disciplines is a Yogi and these methods and disciplines may be called as Yoga. Nothing more.

The performance of mere physical postures or Âsanas cannot be called as Yoga as Âsana is only one component of Yoga and not Yoga itself. If actors and actresses only perform such Âsanas (physical postures) and nothing more (not the other components of Yoga) then they may be called 'Âsana performers' and not 'Yoga masters'. The term Yoga has been wrongly assumed to be Âsana and nothing more in public perception. This is incorrect.

Unless all the eight Angâs (components) of Yoga are practiced thoroughly, the activity is not Yoga and one cannot derive progress on a complete scale.

As to whether actors/actresses derive benefit from Âsana in spite of their professions, the degree of benefit would depend on their ability to stay unaffected, unfettered and personally non-involved with each other or with others further to their actions on screen.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

I have recently taken up rugby having played a decade ago in my mid teens. I am also a meditator and strive for enlightenment. I am interested in your view on how an aggressive sport such as rugby affects progress in brahmacharya? A part of me enjoys the game and being muscular and athletic my team wants me to continue with them but I worry it will make me more gross, hindering sublimation and contact with the Divine for how can one play such a game without dualistic identification?

Looking forward to your response,

Namaste, Ronan

Answer
While it is always a good idea to keep in touch with a sport or some form of exercise on a regular basis, the achievement of advanced states of meditation, so necessary to reach the state of enlightenment requires the following:

1. A decrease in physical awareness and consciousness pertaining to ones body, achieved through transfer of consciousness from the physical to the mental, causal levels and finally the Âtmic levels.
2. A reduction and finally the annihilation of one's ego and Consciousness of the lower self. (the opposite of this occurs further to partaking in aggressive sports/muscle building and other gross forms of physical culture)

As one progresses in the path of spirituality and thereby begins to achieve deeper and more tranquil states of meditation, there is a natural urge to stay longer in these states and detach oneself from anything physical which then appears crude and gross. Prâna within the body focuses more on the spine and brain and less on the muscles. There is a natural tendency to be calm and non-aggressive. One naturally becomes serene, peaceful and more content with oneself; for one starts getting closer to the true self - Âtman both during and after meditation. It becomes difficult to become angry, dominant or aggressive even in the most trying of situations. And if one does forcibly turn to aggression, there is a deep sense of unhappiness and discomfort as an aftermath. Rugby, being a forceful and aggressive game, a true meditator might not find it very relishing and enjoyable. Especially from the aggressive and forceful nature of the game.

Keeping all these facts in mind, it would be a good idea to strike a via media between the two. One could probably keep in touch with the sport once or twice a week for the benefits to the body at the physical level. It would be a good idea to limit the sport as a means of physical culture and rejuvenation and not pursue it at a competition/professional level. As you may well know, the energy within a person in the normal state is limited. It cannot be harnessed to the zenith at both the physical and spiritual levels simultaneously. One has to choose any one over the other. While physical activity is no doubt good, it is not the end. It cannot be made into the aim of life and nor can it supply benefits beyond the body and lower mind levels. Physical exercise/sport is however necessary to keep this physical medium called the body fit and free from disease, so one can make use of the body to achieve unhindered meditation. So setting aside an hour or two for the sport once or twice a week and focusing on meditation the rest of the time would probably amount to getting the best of both worlds.

Question
Dear Sir

I would like to know can japa(using mala) also help me to keep up my Brahmacharya? Swami Sivananda in his "Twenty Spiritual Instructions" says, "Repeat any Mantra as pure Om or Om Namo Narayanaya, Om Namah Sivaya, Om Namo Bhagavate Vasudevaya, Om Saravanabhavaya Namah, Sita Ram, Sri Ram, Hari Om, or Gayatri, according to your taste or inclination, from 108 to 21,600 times daily."
Is it not necessary for a person to first get diksha(initiation) from a suitable guru before getting a mantra for japa? Is it possible that a mantra not obtained by a guru might not be potent enough to help my Brahmacharya?

Thanks in advance.

Answer
There is no 'diksha' (benediction) higher than sincere, honest and longing devotion to the Almighty. Everything falls in place and proceeds in the right direction further to 'Bhakthi' (pure devotion to the Almighty). What is Bhakthi? It is complete surrender to the Almighty through the means of trust and devotion. One should have the attitude " This thing called 'ME' (ego) is false and does not exist. Everything is filled with 'Brahman' (Almighty) and everything is HE alone, being conceived by HIM alone. My only job is to make myself fully receptive to the path shown by him and attain to the highest. I will follow a life governed by the eight tenets of Yoga to the best of my efforts and strive with devotion and love for the Lord"

Such an attitude will help one develop the ability to carve out the right path for himself in spiritual life. Since every person in reality is only the Âtman (pure soul no different from God), the greatest knowledge is obtainable right from within oneself. There is actually no need to look externally, for the Âtman himself is knowledge manifest. But to obtain this knowledge for correct progress, one should develop pure 'Bhakthi' or devotion to the Almighty. There is no need to visit a temple, hold japa malas, perform religious rites, apply holy marks on the forehead or indulge in other external signs of religion. These are only external signs and have little connection with one's inner state.

 To the one engaged in constant mental contemplation of the Lord with devotion and surrender, the human body is itself the temple, the mind itself an endless Japa mala, every object of creation is the divine mark of the Lord ***

One's ego (lower self) will disappear by itself in the presence of Bhakthi (pure devotion). How can one think of himself or consider himself the doer of an action when the mind is filled with devotion to the Almighty and when one is shedding tears of devotion thinking of the Almighty? The ego will take to its heals as long as one is in contemplation of the Almighty with devotion and surrender. What is most important is a strong yearning for the Almighty. A strong desire and craving to constantly think, contemplate and meditate on HIM. To constantly remind oneself of the greatness and infinite nature of that Supreme being and that everything has sprung from HIM alone and will go back into HIM alone, following which HE alone remains as the eternal and final truth.

A life filled with such a train of thought will help one develop customized techniques to ward away Avidyâ (ignorance) wound round the soul. The greatest Guru is within oneself, in the Âtman. Out job is to surrender to the Lord and get in touch with him through the Âtman. This yearning for knowing him is the best 'Diksha' or benediction.

A japa mala (rosary of beads) is only an external device used to keep count of the number of repetitions of a mantra. In one constantly thinking and contemplating of the Lord, in one who strives to see God in all living beings from an insect to fellow beings without differentiation, where is the need to keep count? Why limit contemplation through a few hundreds or thousands of repetitions? Isn't it natural that when that Lord is infinite, our devotion and contemplation on him should also move towards infinity? This can be achieved by constantly seeing HIM in everything, every object and every act. By offering everything we do as actions carried out to please HIM. Then all our actions will always be right; for how can a man devoted to the Lord perform a wrong action and yet give it as an offering to the Lord? One will not get the mind to perform wrong actions. One will not get the mind to look lustfully. Even if one is overtaken by past habit and the mind & eyes start moving with a lustful intent, the thought of offering everything we do as a token of gratitude to the Almighty will prevent one from proceeding with such wrong thought and action. One will want to revert to the contemplative state at the earliest and so will displace such negative thoughts.

Mentally repeat the name of the Almighty, based on your inclination towards the God-form of your choice. It is even better if one can contemplate on the formless nature of God occupying all space and time and even beyond. The repetition must not simply be mechanical but should help one remind oneself of the purity, divinity and infinity of the concept called God. And then, one should think of himself to be no different from this concept of purity, divinity and infinity. One should constantly be in God thought to the best extent possible even in the course of one's day to day actions and duties. This is what leads to real spiritual progress. This is the meaning behind the Vedas saying "Sarvam Khalvidam Brahman" (Everything is verily the Brahman). And since everything is HIM, we dissolve our ego, the barrier between him and us and feel him continuously. We, as the ego are nothing, We as the Âtman are everything . The aim is to inundate the body and mind with the positive and divine vibrations that come from such a thought and thereby dispel Avidyâ (ignorance).

Question

QUESTION: Hello Dhananjay,

1.In the answer with the title of break-brahmacharya you said "one should prevent the birth of negative emotions right from the start through the application of Buddhi shakti (power of intellect) and Vichara shakti (power of inquiry),for it is of little use suppressing them after they have been let to grow".could you clarify more it and could we really prevent them in this way while we know they rise from subconscious & unconscious mind further to bad Samskaras?

2.Suppose we have not sublimated enough semen through physical ,intellectual & spiritual activity or have not followed food regime in some cases (or any other reason) and we encounter huge inner tension & not able to displace lustful & negative thoughts anymore & also not able to harness this gross energy .isn't it better to allow JUST SO LITTLE of lustful thought get presented in the mind in order to decrease the tension & stop it after that?does this unharnessed & not refined energy hurt the body or brain?

3.Do brain & nerve cells get hurt doe to high-low of energy level because of doing yoga practices along with brahmacharya for a while & then break the brahmacharya esp by masturbation? if yes could this hurt get undone or not?
Thank you for your answers.your answers have had an important role in keeping on my celibacy (near brahmacharya).
Ali,

ANSWER: 1. Both positive and negative thoughts/actions are the result of one's past Samskâras (impressions) stored within. Effort towards or against these impressions in the present, amplify or minimize their effects to a certain degree. The result of any action is not within one's reach, for one is not the doer in reality but only an instrument of the Almighty. These actions are being worked out through the individual, by the Almighty to evolve the Jivâtma (individual soul) towards betterment. Thus does the Almighty make the individual soul realize its ignorance and help it attain to knowledge. Through each and every happening occurring in one's life, the individual soul is slowly being made to unwind itself of the ignorance surrounding it and is getting one small step closer to its true state of knowledge and bliss. The aim of Yoga and Brahmacharya is to make this progress faster and more direct, nothing more. Hence the result of all actions lie with the Almighty and never with the doer.

What then is the importance of one's individual effort if the Almighty is both the doer of the action and the giver of result? What is our role? Our role is to work in tandem and in concurrence with the workings of the Almighty and strive towards correct performance of one's Dharma as a human being. Our role is to strive to follow the path of virtue, Godliness, purity and truth through the path shown to us by the Almighty without caring for the results of actions. Such an attitude and effort will instill a sense of deep happiness, peace of mind and satisfaction from within.

It is like a painting brush being handled by an ace painter. What would happen if the brush were to exert its own individual will and decide to paint the canvas green, while the artist decided to paint it blue? The result would be that the brush would not succeed, for it is not the painter but only the medium or instrument. The will and wish of the artist alone matters. The brush would only end up incurring much stress, strain and discomfort if it were to develop an individual desire and try moving in its own accord. It would achieve nothing but pain and disappointment. On the other hand, if the brush were to adopt a neutral and flexible attitude thinking - "I am not the painter. I am only the medium through which he paints. Let me make myself free from all desire. I will fully work as per the painter's wishes and color the canvas with whatever color he chooses. This is my role and nothing more". The brush would now be free from all stress or strain and be at peace with itself by acceding to the wishes of the painter. It is not bothered about what the artist decides to paint. It has realized that its role is to work with and not against the wishes of the artist.

Man is like the painting brush and the Almighty is the painting artist. As long as man fails to realize this and instead thinks he is the painter (doer of actions), he suffers. The minute he surrenders to the will of the Almighty and treads the path of Dharma and virtue, he is no longer concerned with the results. His only thought is to comply with the wishes of the Almighty, for he knows that the Almighty is working through him to make him evolve and better himself. He has to suffer for the remnant past negative actions that have been already performed in his earlier thought mode but is absolved of any karma from then on. For, how can karma occur when all actions are the actions of God but not of one's ego? This is why one is advised to shun and nip negative emotions as soon as they start to arise. Let one not get depressed or worried that a lustful thought or emotion has risen. But, let one immediately work at nipping the thought at the bud by reminding oneself that such thoughts or emotions are the result of ones ignorance which one is striving to annihilate. Let the mind be diverted towards constructive thoughts or activities and away from the negative thought train by making use of Buddhi shakti (power of intellect) and Vichara shakti (power of inquiry). With constant effort and practice, this slowly becomes more and more successful and a good level of mind control gets established. One has now done his duty or Dharma by working with the Almighty in trying to get rid of ignorance. His efforts have been with and not against the wishes of the Almighty. The brush has co-operated with the wishes of the painter and not against. This is as much as one is supposed to do. One's role is this much and not more. Let us not worry about the result. That will be decided by the Almighty. The brush has given itself to the will of the painter. The quality of the painting is not its concern. That will be taken care of by the artist (Almighty). Constant thought and action on these lines will eventually work out and nullify past Samskâras in course of time.

2. The minute one resorts to letting lustful thoughts or actions blossom willingly even to the smallest extent, one starts working against the wishes of the Almighty. It is no longer the work of the Almighty but the work of the lower self or 'Ahamkarâ' (ego). One now starts to incur karma. The brush is no longer in a state of complete surrender to the painter but has started to behave as per the wishes of its inner ego driven by Avidyâ (ignorance). Suffering and pain again start due to induction of karma. It has gone back to the same old wrong path, asserting its foolish desire to paint the canvas all by itself, based on its whims and fancies. This is impossible and will only lead to pain and suffering. One's duty is to try one's level best never to give in and never to give up. So let us do our duty till our last breath. The rest will be decided by God. The results are not our concern. If one has been unable to indulge in adequate physical, mental and spiritual activity on some day or for a few days due to an unavoidable circumstance, then let him at least maintain his state of God devotion and surrender with the attitude - " I was not able to follow the regular measures and efforts that I normally perform. But I will stay devoted to the Almighty and try my level best to keep my mind clean and pure. I will pray to HIM to give me the strength and ability to stay true to Brahmacharya. There will not be the slightest slackening of efforts from my side." Such devotion and commitment is what matters. Let us never be at fault. If we willingly let a lustful thought grow, it is then our fault. Let this not happen. Let our efforts be to the maximum. The negative thought will slowly dissolve and vanish. It cannot hurt the body or mind as long as there is honest effort to dissolve it and a desire to stay connected to the Almighty .

3. Not the slightest amount of harm is inflicted to the body, mind or brain through Yoga and Brahmacharya. On the other hand, these slowly get separated from the toxins and impurities lodged within and shine in health and luster. The breaks during the initial periods of Brahmacharya through masturbation are the result of strong past Vâsanâs (tendencies) surfacing. They violently shoot up at the most unexpected of times and try to re-assert their position, for they have resided in the individual for long and have become his second nature. If the aspirant is however determined and unmindful of these tendencies through the practice of Yoga with a life of Brahmacharya through God surrender, these past impressions gradually weaken and diminish in the course of being worked out faster through Brahmacharya. One becomes stronger and more adept at handling them deftly when they show their heads and eventually destroys them through the grace of God. What is most important is to put our heart and soul into the practice and never willingly give up or give in to lustful thoughts. This is as much as we need to do. The rest will be taken care by HIM!

QUESTION: Thank you so much for your nice answers,but actually you didn't answer the third question frankly.that was my personal experience before starting the brahmacharya ten month ago.unfortunately my source of studies (books of BSY) didn't explain clearly brahmacharya with details and this ignorance weakens my memory & leave me more sensitive & obsessed (or at least i think like this along with irregular & even stop the consumption of my medicine Fluoxetine for a while).could i hope to regain my earlier state in course of time ?can damaged brain & nerve cells be mended ? forgive me if the question is not in your expertise.

Answer
One fact that needs to be clearly remembered by anyone practicing Brahmacharya is that correct practice of such a mode of life cannot be the cause behind symptoms such as those mentioned by you. The cause behind such altered mental states is something else. The practice of Brahmacharya might have worked at stirring the actual cause, en route to displacing it, resulting in the symptoms mentioned. The high degree of energy released through Brahmacharya is something that develops over a matter of years and decades through unbroken Brahmacharya and not over a few months. This energy then works at displacing the major toxins and impurities lodged within. The purification which occurs during the initial stages is of a more superficial nature.

One can be rest assured that continued practice in the correct manner will eventually displace the actual causes and deliver the individual back into the normal state. How long this will take is a question that cannot be answered on a general footing as each person and his past karma vary in nature and intensity.

Question
Hi there! First off I just want to say what a help your insight has been in regards to understanding Brahmacharya! I have been "getting established" in brahmacharya for about a year now but am not quite there yet. I hope and yearn to learn from my failures and feel that maybe experience is the best teacher. Basically my question is how does Brahmacharya (or lack thereof) affect one's nervous system? Within my "trial and error" period of getting established in Brahmacharya it seems that when I fail I pay a heaver price nowadays than back when I wasn't striving for celibacy at all. Is it that I'm just now becoming more aware of the damage and downfall leading a life of wanton lust creates or is there something else involved? Also, something quite concerning to me is recently every now and then my toes in one or both feet get numb for awhile but then it goes away. Could this possibly be caused by transitioning back and forth between being celibate and failing to do so? Your insight and knowledge in regards to this aspect of Brahmacharya is greatly appreciated!

Answer
The best Guru (teacher) is within one's own self in the Âtman. Upon leading a life governed by virtue, purity, Brahmacharya and the tenets of Yoga, the correct means and methods to be adopted for progress will dawn by themselves from one's inner self namely the Âtman (pure soul). Each and every person is fully capable of reaching the greatest heights of enlightenment, for all are a part of the Universal Almighty and nothing else in reality. Hence one should lead a life governed by the tenets of Yoga and tap into the inner advice always available from the Âtman through deep meditation.

The effects of a life of true and Unbroken Brahmacharya are summed up by Lord Krishna as follows:-

"Ayus, tejo, balam, veeryam, pragnya, shreescha, yashas tathaa. Punyam cha sath priyamatvam cha, vardhathey Brahmacharyayaa.."

"By the practice of Brahmacharya, a man is assured of longevity, luster, strength, bravery, valor, right thinking, wealth, undying fame, immense merit (at the karmic level) and devotion to truth/Supreme. All these notable traits come and cling to the true Brahmachari in course of time".

On the contrary, all the aforesaid benefits gradually desert one who leads a life high on wastage of the vital power. There are innumerable examples of notable public figures before our own eyes who have lost on all of their achievements and talents further to a life of adultery and promiscuity. Today, people remember them more for their scandals that lead to disrepute and less for their notable achievements in their respective fields.

Brahmacharya has a very profound and deep impact on the entire body and particularly on the nervous system. Semen, which is largely made of cerebro-spinal fluid is very similar to the material that goes into making the spine and the brain. The spine is the representation of advanced human consciousness and the brain is the central processor which controls, regulates and governs all functions of the body. The practice of unbroken Brahmacharya with conservation and transmutation of semen in the correct way leads to improved memory, focus, concentration, intelligence and a strong power of will and determination. A true Brahmachari hardly ever gets fatigued even further to hours of mental focus and thinking, while the layman will find himself unable to concentrate on a topic for more than a few minutes or an hour. Ojas which is formed further to sublimation of semen gives man the power to be efficient and capable in the field he perseveres with seamless ease and smoothness.

The immense amount of Prâna (vital energy) that is conserved through Brahmacharya helps the aspirant become radiant, confident and very sure of himself. All these are the effects of revitalization of the brain. One feels an unexplained sense of freedom and liberty through the practice. The true Brahmachari, after becoming an 'Urdhvaretha' gets filled with bliss and self-contentment. It is hard for anyone not to notice the radiance and virtue shining from such a spotless aspirant. The world starts to treat him differently and with reverence and respect in spite of not knowing anything about his Brahmacharya or life of austerity. This is due to the power of Ojas derived through transmutation. Further to the practice of 12 years of honest and unbroken Brahmacharya without the loss of a single drop of vital fluid, 'Medha naadi' or the astral channel for superior mental faculty is created. Through this, one becomes capable of extraordinary mental feats. The Brahmachari becomes an 'Ekachandhagrahi' (one who can memorize and repeat anything that he has heard or read but once) The scriptures say - " Urdhvaretho bhavedyasya, sa devo na tu maanushaha" -- " One who has become a complete Urdhvaretha is no longer a human being but a living God". Such is the greatness and power of Brahmacharya. Words fail to describe its true merits.

As one proceeds in Brahmacharya, the rate of improvement, revitalization and refurbishment of the physical and mental system within goes on increasing. Karmic cleansing through the working out of past karmas also starts to accelerate. Various changes start to appear externally and internally. Some people fall ill or experience skin eruptions when the embedded toxins of past karma surface and vacate. Some others become moody or introvert and less sociable. There are many other effects that appear at the initial stages of Brahmacharya when the body and mind are getting used to the new lifestyle and the new-found increase in Prâna. But all these irregularities or changes are temporary and part of a passing phase. One need not worry the least. This initial stage will gradually pass and lead to the next stage where things become more stable and steady. Breaks if any, that occur during this stage will make the aspirant repent and bemoan for the seminal loss. One feels immense remorse and a sense of losing a part of his very own self if there is a break after many months of Brahmacharya. Hence the Brahmachari should be very careful in ensuring the lack of any factors or triggers that may disrupt his practice. Prâna which is gradually increasing within his system and is working at throwing out toxins suddenly gets drained and expended further to a break. This will cause disorientation and depression. It is to be avoided at all costs. The deeper one is proceeding into Brahmacharya, the greater becomes his responsibility in maintaining this state of treasure. Without adequate physical, mental and spiritual activity comprising of Prânayâma and God-meditation, without a life of strict mental regulation, a person cannot succeed in unbroken practice. This will explain your statement regarding paying a heavier price of late, further to a fall.

Once Brahmacharya has been established further to three or more months of unbroken practice without the wastage of a single drop of semen, the aspirant should take all measures to ensure that there is no break. He should completely and fully give up on his former sensual mode of life. His mind and energies must be directed on constructive activity, Prânayâma and God-meditation. This is not a trivial or casual matter. He is dealing with conserving, harnessing and sublimating the most potent form of energy; the energy of creation. This energy is growing day by day within him like a little child. The energy is continuously working at shunting out and vacating all impurities, toxins and negative energies lodged within his body and mind due to past karma. A mammoth and very important process of reversal from the normal course of debilitation and ageing has been set forth. The aspirant should never revert to his former methods of foolish sexual gratification or release. The very thoughts of sexuality and ego are to be displaced and are not to be indulged in. All energy conserved is to be properly transmuted and sublimed into Ojas, which is then made use in constructive activity and during advanced and deep meditative states to get the knowledge of enlightenment. Reverting to one's former sexual tendencies through a voluntary break may lead to unforeseen problems at the physical and mental levels. This should always be avoided. One should nurture and protect the Brahmic state with vigilant effort and devotion. It cannot be conclusively said if the numbness is due to the breaks you describe or due to some other reason; for the aftermaths of such breaks manifest themselves differently in different people. The best procedure is to stay true to Brahmacharya in totality and with unbroken continuity.

QUESTION: Dear Sir

Can you please tell me how should I proceed on the spiritual path? I feel a longing for realization and sometimes also experience vairagya. I am practicing Brahmacharya for the past 3 months.

There are so many versions of yoga given by so many Mahatma's that I am very confused about which path to follow and which not to follow.Sometimes I think of joining Iskcon or Ramakrishna Mission or sometimes I think of following Swami Sivananda's 20 instructions.I do all this to find a guru to guide me.
But since I am a college student in Delhi with duties to fulfill towards my parents, I have not been able to find proper guidance from anywhere.

Your answers show that you are a very intelligent person with many spiritual qualities.Your guidance can also be requested through the internet.I would be privileged if you can tell me how to get on with my quest for realization.Please give a detailed answer for which I am longing for so much time.Kindly do not leave any point un-discussed.

P.S : Your previous answers suggest that you believe in Nirguna Brahman. But I am a devotee of Lord Krishna and worship him as the Param-Pita. So please do tell me something on how to strengthen my Bhakti(it is said that Bhakti yoga is the best for this age).

Thank you very much.

ANSWER: The decision on which path to follow becomes evident to oneself further to the practice of true and unbroken Brahmacharya beyond a year. The inner voice of the Âtman will guide the aspirant in the right path. But for receiving guidance from the Almighty in this manner, there must be honest and sincere perseverance, devotion and surrender to the utmost degree. One should be strictly wedded to the practice of true Brahmacharya through thick and thin, disease and health, pain and pleasure and all obstacles.

It is very beneficial to oneself if there is regular practice of 'Ashtanga Raja-Yoga' as put forward by Maharshi Pathanjali. The practice of this Yoga with Yama-Niyama, Asana, Pranayama, Prathyahara and meditation will ensure that Vairagya (dispassion towards the world) will dawn by itself and become firm. This system is one of the most scientific and direct methods of attaining to Yoga, acknowledged by all self-realized masters and saints. All great souls without exception agree on the universal and effective nature of 'Ashtanga Raja-Yoga' propounded by the great Sage Pathanjali. The very same Yoga has been advised by Lord Krishna to Arjuna in the Bhagavad-Gita. It is one of the most comprehensive and all covering approach to attaining self-realization. Strictly following the essence of this approach to Yoga will help one start getting established in Brahmacharya and vairagya beyond doubt within a year.

There is no mode of action or lifestyle higher than one's Dharma. The Dharma of a student is to study well and fulfill his obligations to himself and his parents by being a good student and by devoting the rest of his time and energy to the practice of those deeds that will lead him towards the objective of this human birth namely self-realization. The Dharma of a householder is to provide for his family, be affectionate and loving towards his family and devote the rest of his time and energy for achieving the objective of this human birth namely self-realization. The Dharma of a Sannyasi (renounced monk) is to work for the betterment of the society and again devote the rest of his time and energy to the purpose of the human birth namely self-realization. So we see that the central purpose of the human birth in all cases of human beings is self-realization and nothing more. This is why God has given the soul with a human birth after millions of births in animal form.

This thing called Dharma is incidental and not central. Based on our past karma and the will of the Almighty, each soul will be awarded a Dharma unique to itself. The nature of one's Dharma has no bearing towards reaching or not reaching self-realization. But being true to the given Dharma has a very strong bearing on reaching self-realization. A student has to fulfill his academic requirements and a householder has to provide and protect his family.

These are their respective Dharma's as regards this illusory world. Self-realization becomes attainable when this Dharma is carried out dutifully and the rest of one's energy and time is devoted to God through Yoga. By the term Yoga, we mean that activity which leads to the union of the individual soul with the Almighty. Thus a householder who is striving for Yoga, limits the purpose of the sexual act to begetting a child or two and then completely gives up on the act and diverts his Prâna (vital energy) to attaining self-realization through unbroken Brahmacharya. He has limited the act rightfully to procreation and not recreation. He looks upon his wife as the 'Divine Mother' from then on and both lead a life of Brahmacharya with God-devotion and surrender. This is his Dharma and this will lead him to enlightenment beyond doubt. In the same way, a Brahmachari who is a student views all women as his sisters or mothers and focuses on his Dharma of being a good student and being a good Yogi. He too is assured of concrete progress.

It is said in the Vedas -" Tad Ekam Sath, Vipraha Bahudha Vadanthi" - "HE is only one, HE alone is real, the sages call him by various names." This is a very beautiful and complete statement. That Supreme creator is one and only one, call him by what name you may. All offerings of Bhakthi to the Supreme go to that one Supreme alone, immaterial of whether the worship is through Rama, Krishna, Vishnu, Shiva, Christ or Allah. It is the sincere longing, devotion, love and surrender through worship to the Almighty that matters. Honest and sincere prayer to HIM never goes answered, immaterial of whether the worshipper calls himself a Hindu, Christian or a Muslim. These religions and names concern man, not God. To HIM, all are Âtmans, a part of his infinite and formless self. In his true, original and default state, he occupies the entire universe and the multitude of galaxies, all these being within his own self. The scriptures describe this beautifully with the statement -" There is not such a place, here in this world or beyond, even as big as the point of a needle which HE does not occupy. This is the meaning of 'Nirguna Brahman'. It refers to that supreme Almighty who is formless, shapeless, attributeless and infinite, occupying all space, time and beyond. The cause of all causes while he himself has no cause! He incarnates in different forms such as Lord Krishna, Lord Rama etc...and then he becomes the 'Saguna Brahman' or the Almighty with a definite form, shape and feature. It does not matter which form or formless is worshipped by the devotee yogi. The devotion/intensity of worship and love for HIM are that which matter.

By following a strict life of Brahmacharya governed by the tenets of Yoga, Bhakthi (devotion) will dawn by itself in course of time. Even to develop Bhakthi, one needs HIS grace and blessings. This feeling of devotion is not given to all and sundry. It is reserved for those who consistently adhere to a virtuous and pious mode of life, wishing good to everyone. There is no better method of availing of his grace than by the practice of true Ahimsa (non-violence), Sathya (truth) and Brahmacharya carried out with an intention of realizing HIM, aided by God-meditation and devotion. For this, the Yogi indulges in and shuns various activities, all with the pupose of attaining to Yoga. When one's efforts and intentions are true, deep and strong, there appears a helping hand from the Almighty which guides the aspirant in the right path without doubt. This is the absolute truth.

QUESTION: A doubt which I have is:

Do we don't need a guru to practice Ashtanga Raja-Yoga? Can you please suggest some Raja-Yoga techniques for which we do not require guidance of a teacher?
Secondly, do you agree to the statement that Bhakti Yoga is recommended in the present Kali Yuga; where peaople do not live long enough for attaining perfection through other modes of yoga?

Thank you very much.

Answer
Who is a Guru? He is the medium who dispels one's ignorance and shows the right path. All ignorance around the soul is ultimately dispelled by the Almighty alone. So a Guru in the human form is nothing but the Almighty working through the person who is a Guru. This is why it is said:

|| "Guru Brahma, Guru Vishnu, Guru Devo, Maheshwaraha. Guru Saakshaath Parabrahma, Tasmai Shri Gurave namaha" ||

|| "Guru is the manifestation of Brahma, Vishnu, Maheshwara. Guru is the actual Almighty - Brahman, I bow to that Guru, the personification of perfection ||

So a person whom one considers a Guru is really nothing but a medium of transference of guidance from the Almighty. The Guru is the tool through whom the Almighty works. If one's efforts and actions at attaining to Yoga are genuine, sincere and honest, if one perseveres with determination and genuine will, the aspirant will find the right Guru at the right time by the grace of the Almighty. It is not necessary that the Guru be alive in flesh and blood. Practicing Yoga with honest and sincere devotion to any great self-realized saint such as Shri. Ramakrishna Paramahansa, Bhagawan Ramana Maharishi, Shri. Yukteshwar, Shri. Lahari Mahashaya, Lord Jesus etc...by considering them one's Guru will yield excellent results. These great Mahatmas are not in their physical form but exist as energies in the cosmos, having merged into the Brahman. One's sincere effort and practice through devotion to any one of them as the Guru will make them guide the aspirant astrally. Only sincere and honest efforts will induce them to guide an aspirant. A lackadaisical and casual approach that is not serious will be of no use. One can mentally consider any one of such masters to be one's Guru, install a photograph of such a realized saint, pay obeisance to them before the practice of Yoga and request sincerely for their guidance and blessings. If the intention and efforts at self-realization are genuine, they will help the aspirant.

Only a self-realized soul can be a Guru. Not anyone else. All the above mentioned Mahatma's were self-realized souls. A true guru knows the problem of the student even before he comes to the Guru. The true Guru never charges money or accpets anything material for the service he renders to the deserving pupil. He is looking for quality and not quantity. He is content even if one single student of this calibre comes to him in his entire lifetime. If a man conducts expensive workshops on spirituality, uses the lure of Yoga as a means of making money, name or fame, one can be rest assured he is not a real Guru or a real Yogi. The true Yogi Guru does not charge money for his service at all. Money and Brahma-Vidya (knowledge of the Supreme) do not go together. Where one resides, the other vacates. The current breed of so called 'Yoga gurus' who have built palatial ashrams, who merely wear saffron or white colored robes, who 'sell' yoga or yogic products as a business and who maintain a vast business empire by marketing yoga are not Guru's or Yogis. They are shrewd businessmen disguised as Yogis. They are of no use to the honest apirant thirsting for self-realization.

Only a self-realized soul will be capable of being a Guru to an aspirant in the correct path, unique to each person in the attainment of self-realization. Much effort, sincerity and honesty in practice are required to find such a Guru. If one's efforts are that very genuine, the Almighty will send such a Guru to the pupil at the right time. Or, the Almighty himself guides the aspirant through 'flashes' or thoughts of intuition that appear during meditation, dreams or sometimes even in the wakeful state. The best approach is sincere effort, devotion and honest practice. This will yeild the desired results in course of time, either through a Guru or directly by the Almighty.

Bhakthi (devotion to the Supreme) is of paramount importance to an aspirant aiming for self realization, immaterial of whether it is Kali Yuga or some other Yuga. Hence it forms one of the important Niyamas of Pathanjali's Ashtanga Yoga. People in Kali Yuga have less time, energy and perseverance to practice the discipline of learning complex scriptures or treatises. Hence Bhakthi has been stated as a preferable approach. This does not mean that a person can break the Yama-Niyamas and merely claim to follow Bhakthi. No result wil accrue in such a case. If a person is not rooted to Ahimsa, Sathya, Astheya, Brahmacharya and Aparigraha, if a person lies, steals, covets others property, is bound to the lower emotions, is lustful and merely claims to have Bhakthi, he will not proceed even by a hair's breadth as regards self-realization.

True Bhakthi means complete devotion, love and surrender to God. A man who has true Bhakthi will resign to the will of the Almighty completely. He accepts whatever happens in his course of life as destined by the Almighty. His devotion and state of trust to the Almighty are unflinching and unwavering, even in times of great danger or pain. He has given his entire life to the dictates of the Almighty by negating his ego. The true Bhaktha unconsciously follows the tenets of Yoga without his own knowledge. He never harms others, tells lies or exhibits other base qualities, for indulgence in any of these is being untrue to the Almighty. So it amounts to the same as following the tenets of Yoga consciously. Either path is equally tough and equally testing. The highest truths come to one after great tests. There is only one Yoga finally. All Yoga's, be it Bhakthi Yoga, Kundalini Yoga or Ashtanga Yoga are one and the same in their final effect. All of them require man to attain the highest degrees of purity and virtue. Without these, a man is no Yogi. So immaterial of what name one calls the path he is following, it is ultimately one Yoga which demands God devotion, surrender, love and honest effort at being true to the tenets of Yoga on a universal basis.

Refer to books written on Raja Yoga by Swami Sivananda or any of the other noted saints. This will give a clear method on how to proceed. Question what are the changes in body that take place once we take the path of celibacy...do we start looking more attractive to opposite sex..Will eyes radiate energy and we look more confident and positive..What is the purpose of god in keeping us in this tuff test of celibacy ?

Answer

The entire body, mind and psyche start to improve and better themselves, leading to their overall rejuvenation through Brahmacharya. This is noticed externally in the form of radiant health represented by luster, strength and a positively charged aura. The person becomes more confident and capable of handling himself and others responsibly.

The purpose behind the layers of ignorance that have wound themselves around the soul due to past karma is to make man realize and unravel his omnipresence, omnipotence and infinite nature which are already within himself and finally reach the state of perfection through self-realization. All this is the 'Leela' or play of the Almighty in this dream called life.

Question

Good evening Dhananjay. My question for this session is:

"What realms await for those who purposely choose Adharma in the afterlife?"

Some would say that being reborn into this painful existence could be considered a hellish realm, but are there worse realms after dying for one who chooses a life of inflicting pain on others for example?

Or, are they simply reborn and come face to face with their negative karma until it is overcome? Some also say that those souls can also devolve back to the animal kingdom.

Thank You,
नमस्ते

Answer

All circumstances mentioned by you are said to be possible as regards afterlife concerning the individual soul, based on the karma accrued. Swami Sivananda has dealt with this topic extensively in his book 'What becomes of the soul after death'.

Question

Hello,
I have made it now for 1 month with almost unbroken Brahmacharya (except for a few times, for only a second or so when sexual thoughts caused my energy to go down and activate my genital region). This is the 1st time I have observed such strict 'mental' Brahmacharya. Before I would only practice not discharging my semen physically (which I have done for over 1 year before), but I would still have sex on my mind almost constantly. My questions are:

1. I find that now almost exactly at the 30 day mark that my energy is becoming more concentrated and building up in the genital region. It is very easy for me to become erect (especially in the morning). Why is that? Will this dissipate as I gain more abstinence?

2. Those few times when sexual thoughts succeded in making my energy go down in the last month, and aroused my genitals, what is the consequence of that? Do you think it caused me harm somehow?

3. I hear some people say that one must have "perfect" Brahmacharya for 10 years with not even 1 slip, not even 1 sexual thought, in order to become "Self realized".. But intuitively, I can't really go along with that. It seems a bit extreme; almost like some of the Roman catholics who say you will burn in hell for eternity if you don't accept Jesus as your lord and savior... I'd like your opinion in that matter...

Thanks so much for your selfless service

Answer
Very happy to hear of your progress and success in unbroken Brahmacharya. Continuing with such a tempo will help release and vacate past karma very effectively by the grace of God. Keep up with the practice, determination and zeal. Coming to the answers:

1. Morning erections are generally physiological and not connected to sexual thoughts. Erections occur in cycles all through sound sleep and are a part of REM (Rapid Eye Movemement) sleep. They are a sign of good health and vigor. This is perfectly healthy and normal and not the cause of worry.

Increased Prana within the system further to Brahmacharya is the cause behind the tendency to get easy erections. As one progresses in Brahmacharya and gets established in thorough transmutation through long hours of meditation, Prana gets the tendency to move up to the brain and not in the opposite direction towards the genitals. Till then, the tendency for downward flow manifests in the form of such erections. As long as sexual thoughts/deeds are refrained from, such erections subside and do not cause trouble

2. Sexual thoughts, when they do arise should be immediately displaced by diverting the mind to some other domain. Indulgence will lead to an increase in their intensity and semen will start getting ready for discharge. The consequences of whether such thoughts cause harm depends on their intensity and duration and needs to be judged by the very person who experienced them. The basic thumb rule is that as long as desires or urges are not allowed to flower into passion and lust, harm is not caused. It is willful indulgence that leads to a downfall.

3. The body of a woman is a flesh bag containing refuse and prone to the debilitating effects of ageing. Even the most beautiful woman will age with time and acquire a body that becomes wrinkled, old, dry and bereft of luster. A body that starts to decay and emanate disagreeable smell as time progresses. The apparent beauty in the woman which shined at one point of time was created by none other than the Almighty to ensure that this woman succeeded in attracting a mate and forming a family. Nothing more. This was the purpose of that illusory beauty which the body was adorned with. As soon as she formed a family and bore a child, this apparent beauty reduced in intensity. This is the reason a young woman who has borne a child lacks the power of attraction which a woman who has not yet conceived possesses. Further to bearing two children, the beauty will reduce even more drastically.

Why is this? This is because the purpose behind this illusive beauty has been served. It has been met. The woman was adorned with beauty by the Almighty to attract a mate and produce offspring. As soon as this is achieved, nature has done its job. There is no further purpose or meaning in keeping this beauty alive. So the Almighty withdraws it. It was all 'Maya' or an illusion designed by nature. A woman, further to bearing a child or two starts withering like a flower that has been plucked. She slowly starts losing the charm, luster and magic which she once possessed before becoming a mother. Her body, which earlier appeared alluring and attractive takes a tired and lackluster stance. Isn't this enough proof that there really was never any beauty in the real sense? That it was all an illusion like the work of a magician in a magic show? For some time, this illusion is in place, in all splendor. Even then, it was only an illusion and not real. It appeared real, nothing else. It was intended to attract a mate and ensure progeny for continuation of the race. Nothing more at all. This is all there is to the 'APPARENT' beauty of a woman. Even at her prime, a woman is nothing more than a well disguised bag of flesh, bones, blood, excreta, pus, phlegm and urine. This is always the truth. This reality is kept well hidden and well disguised by nature before child birth and becomes well seen later. If a man does not realize this truth and instead constantly runs after woman as a source of pleasure, it is his fault and foolishness, not that of the woman.

The wise man always reminds himself of this fact and keeps away from recreation through a woman in thought or in deed. He knows that he will get burnt like a firefly if he proceeds towards this 'flame of apparent beauty' with an intention of entertainment. The married Brahmachari limits his physical contact with his wife to progeny and never more. After begetting a child or two, he stops such contact and reverts to his state of unbroken Brahmacharya and quest for self-realization. This is the correct mode of life for anyone who wants to call himself man and not an animal. For anyone blessed with sense, sensibility and wisdom. For everyone wishing a healthy, happy and meaningful life.

Hence an aspirant is required to persevere to the best of his ability towards Brahmacharya, by displacing negative thoughts and replacing them with this reality that the female body is not something worth desiring. One need not worry regarding the innate urge or tendency towards sexuality. This is a result of past Vasanas (tendencies) stored in the Kârana Sharira (causal body). These tendencies are the result of millions of past births in the animal form, rife on sexuality. They stir up and show their heads every now and then and sometimes try to flower when there is a suitable opportunity for their unfolding. These past impressions and tendencies gradually reduce in intensity as they work out and burn away through Yoga and Brahmacharya in the course of time. Let one not worry regarding them. It is not the arising of such thoughts that is considered as a break in Brahmacharya, it is willful indulgence and encouragement to such thoughts when they arise that qualifies as a break. As long as one does not willingly or voluntarily indulge or encourage such tendencies, there is no break. As long as one diverts the mind and moves away from such thoughts, there is no break. A good Brahmachari immediately displaces them and diverts the mind. He does not willingly proceed. Then there is no break, for he has striven against their growth.

These thoughts concerning sexuality gradually reduce if the practice of Brahmacharya is honest and sincere. Their source, namely past Vasanas (tendencies) stored in the causal body slowly starts expending and diluting through Yoga and Brahmacharya. This is something that develops naturally and in the course of time when Brahmacharya is carried out willingly and with conscious effort to the best possible extent through the grace of God. Further to self-realization, the seeds of all such thoughts are permanently burnt and killed. Till then, one has to persevere with utmost caution and vigilance. With such an attitude and perspective, it becomes possible to maintain a high degree of Brahmacharya and derive lofty benefits further to twelve years of practice.

Question

QUESTION: hi Dhananjay, I have read your answers and I am very happy there are some who "show the way" on celibacy.

I have tried for many months to achieve this feat but after 5-7 days, I just give in. I live in Australia and I have a very random schedule. Is there anything I can do to help myself?

ANSWER: Gradually increase this period to 10 days, then to 12 days and so on in small increments. This will help reach longer periods of success.

Pray to God with devotion and surrender for success in Brahmacharya. Success in Brahmacharya cannot be attained without his will, grace and blessings. Our's is only to try, there's nothing more within our reach. Failure or success are dependent on his will alone.

Kindly go through all the past answers to get a better idea on how to proceed.

QUESTION: Is it really necessary to surrender to theism? Because I have lived as an athiest for a long time.

Thanks in advance for the motivation and the guidance..

Answer
Considering Brahmacharya is the journey back to one's default state of divinity, there can be no Brahmacharya without God devotion. Without the foundation of theism, there cannot be the success in this mode of life.

Question
Dear Sir,
I have read that:

The transformation of food into tissues starts when you eat food and it gets transformed into the nutrient fluid, known as rasa dhatu. From rasa to rakta (blood), to mamsa (muscle), to meda (fat), to asthi (bone), to bone majja (bone marrow) and into the reproductive tissue, shukra dhatu. But the finest product of this chain of transformations or digestive processes is ojas, created from the shukra dhatu.

Only so long as the shukra dhatu remains in the dhatu transformational chain, and is not used to create semen or ovum, does it have the ability to become ojas.

So, my questions are
1. Are there any methods described by Ancient Saints, as to how Convert Semen into Ojas.
2. At the same time, how to take care that enough amount of Semen is also produced along with Ojas (as any young adult has to marry and sustain a family too at a later age.)

Answer
1. Semen naturally gets transformed into Ojas further to a life of purity and virtue based on abstention from a life high on senses. This process is made efficient and complete through the tenets of Yoga and God-meditation on a regular basis. Methods such as Asana and Pranayama play a very crucial role in attaining to the state of transmutation. Kindly go through all the past answers for detailed descriptions regarding the same.

2. Semen is nothing but the product of condensation of subtle Prana (vital energy) into gross liquid matter. This occurs naturally and immediately when the mind contemplates on sexuality. No extra effort or measure is required to revert Prana into semen. Much effort is required to convert semen into Prana and not the reverse. So the need for semen to procreate in case of a Brahmachari who enters matrimony is something that is taken care of effortlessly and within the twinkling of an eye. The most advanced Brahmachari who has become an Urdhvareta (non-semen producing Yogi) after many years or decades of Brahmacharya can instantly produce semen for procreation through mere will towards accomplishment of the sexual act with his wife for begetting offspring. Unlike normal men who need to try many days or months to ensure conception in the wife, the Brahmachari is fully capable of ensuring conception with one single act of reproduction carried out at the right time (wife's fertile period) provided God wills for the couple to have a child. Such is the virility, strength, potency and power of his veerya (semen).

ॐ तत् सत्

Question
QUESTION: Namskar Guruji, i knew that one must control and save semen. This make us very very powerful in years. but one thing that i came to know is "when semen goes out of limit in your body, it automatically comes out." Is it true? If it is...then how to save this??? Dhanyawad.

ANSWER: Firstly, I will request all not to address me as Guru, considering I'm nothing more than an aspirant in the path of Brahmacharya.

The production of semen in a true Brahmachari who transmutes his vital fluid through adequate physical exercise, mental work, Pranayama and God-meditation is regulated and 'just enough' to meet the demands of his body, mind and psyche. Such a Brahmachari consumes moderate and limited food and never more. So the question of 'excess' semen does not arise. The body produces just enough to sustain itself for robust health. The rest is transmuted into Ojas. Presence of excess semen that spills out is an indication that transmutation is not being carried out properly. It generally takes a year of unbroken Brahmacharya to reach this state where semen is continuously converted into Ojas without the question of excess.

---------- FOLLOW-UP ----------

QUESTION: ...if someone calls you sir, then you don't have any problem. Right, then why problem if i use Sanskrut/Hindi for that word? I don't want to use sir. Anyways, you mean that COnverting of semen in Ojas is not automatic process? Then what to do for that. so that my semen can be converted into Ojas?

Answer
In the path of Yoga, the Sanskruth term 'Guru' befits one who has reached the state of self-realization and has thus attained to perfection and mastery. There is no English term which is an equivalent for the word Guru. Words such as master, teacher, mentor etc.. do not cover even a small percentage of meaning that the word Guru conveys. The range and depth of the word Guru is vast and immense. In the path of Yoga and Brahmavidya (knowledge of self-realization) the term Guru should not be used lightly or casually towards everyone or anyone just because they offer some information or guidance. A perfected soul who has attained to God-realization is alone fit to be a Guru and no one else. Others can only share with fellow aspirants what little they know on a well wishing basis but cannot become Gurus.

Hence I do not deserve to get addressed as Guru.

Conversion of semen into Ojas is an automatic process further to one's efforts at transmutation and not without. With the onset of puberty, the channel for the downward flow of Prana is opened up. After the first ejaculation of semen upon attaining to puberty, the body whose downward channel was closed is thrown open forever. Thereupon is always a tendency for Prana and hence semen to flow down and out. The trigger for downward flow is sexual thought. This acts as a switch that releases semen downward. Since there are strong sexual Vasanas (tendencies) in the causal body carried over from previous births, sexual thoughts flower and blossom every now and then. One has to lead a strict and disciplined life of Yoga and abhor from the senses along with regular God-thought and God-meditation coupled with mental and physical activity to reverse this downward flow in the upward direction, following which it becomes Ojas. After considerable time of such a lifestyle beyond a year and half to two years of Unbroken Brahmacharya, the tendency for downward flow reduces greatly along with a drastic reduction in the production of physical semen. A larger percentage of Prana then directly starts getting converted into Ojas without getting fully converted into physical semen. In other words, the production of physical semen formed through digestion for the purpose of reproduction reduces in volume. Only the percentage required to sustain the physical body gets generated in the testes.

Till self-realization, this effort at transmutation needs to be constant, regular and continuous, though the effort one has to put to achieve complete transmutation will gradually reduce with spiritual advancement towards the state of an Urdhvareta (non-semen producing Yogi). The effort at the initial year to a year and half of unbroken Brahmacharya needs to be much intense as compared to the later stages. Even in an Urdhvareta, a small volume of semen is produced to nourish and sustain the physical body. But this volume is very negligible in comparison with the excessive volume of semen that is being produced and expended downward by the non-brahmachari.

The best way to convert semen into Ojas is through regular physical, mental and spiritual activity comprising of God-meditation and through strict avoidance of letting sexual thoughts flower into larger proportions. The practice of Pranayama carried out before sunrise and at sunset is very beneficial. Food should be light and not heavy. Meat and highly spicy, salted and seasoned foods are a strict avoid. Such a regular and disciplined mode of unbroken Brahmacharya, if carried out beyond a year or year and half without a single voluntary loss will help one reach the state where transmutation and sublimation becomes more natural and with very less tendency for the downward flow. Production of physical semen greatly reduces and Prana is instead directly converted into Ojas. But the tendency for downward flow reactivates if one is not vigilant and cautious in preventing the growth of sexual thoughts into lust and passion. Hence one's efforts and daily 'Sadhana' should be regularly done without fail and the mind kept pure and clean.

Question
QUESTION: Sir

I like to continue Brahmacharya life, Now I am single, but I am in afraid of Married life, After married life if partner wants to sexual life what I can do? can I change their interest to brahmacharya life? parents pushing me to have a married life what can I do sir?

ANSWER: Unless a man wishes to become a Sannyasi (renunciate monk) and serve the needs of the society, it is part of one's duty to enter matrimony and produce offspring, thereby contributing to continuation of the human race as desired by God. Hence it is perfectly normal, valid and rational to get married and evolve through the institution called marriage.

A married householder contributes to the society equally and justly just as a Sannyasi if he leads a life based on spirituality, virtue, discipline and Brahmacharya even after marriage. By accepting the vows of marriage, he agrees to stay by and be of moral and emotional support to his partner through the highs and lows of life. He expresses his love for humanity by being loyal and supportive to his wife who is after all another 'soul' - An extension of the Almighty. He accords social and familial security to a woman - two important factors, which every woman needs for happiness and emotional well being. Most importantly, he provides companionship to his wife at the individual level and gives himself companionship so both can work towards realizing the meaning of life through efforts at self-realization. So marriage is a holy institution of sanctity which helps man to evolve spiritually if handled properly.

Further to marriage, the man and wife should try immediately for begetting an offspring; for the arrival of an offspring is a key factor in ensuring that the equation and relationship between man and wife does not get limited to sexuality but moves towards spirituality. When the man has led a life of virtue and Brahmacharya, he would be well versed with the reasons behind the need for Brahmacharya as regards both men and women. He should educate his wife regarding the need for the same and inculcate in her a spiritual tendency aimed at God-devotion and surrender. Further, he should strongly work towards reverting to his state of Brahmacharya after his wife conceives by taking her into confidence as regards this mode of life. If this is not possible all of a sudden, he should gradually work at acomplishing the same in a sustained manner with perseverance. If the intentions and efforts at Brahmacharya and self-realization are strong and genuine, if devotion to God and the accomplishment of the highest is the top priority, the man gets blessed with a wife who is also spiritually minded with love and devotion for God. Even if the woman does not have a strong tendency for spirituality, she will eventually convert her attitude to one supportive of spirituality. Such a wife supports the man in his life of Brahmacharya. She aids the man in his quest for spiritual growth and will not be an impediment.

But for this, the man should by himself have a strong desire and longing to achieve spotless Brahmacharya. He should strive at limiting sexual contact for progeny and nothing more. His mind should be mostly centered on God and not the senses. Then this becomes possible. Then such a marriage based on Brahmacharya can be maintained without much effort. The wife will also eventually see sense and meaning behind the benefits of Brahmacharya and the demerits that come further to a life of sexuality for recreation. The man should make the wife understand right from the start that the purpose of sexuality is procreation and not recreation. Women are very adaptable and adjusting as long as the man is clear about what is needed and sure of himself and his objective. It is only when the man becomes a slave to passion that women follow suit.

A Brahmachari should invest the majority of his energy towards God-realization and a small percentage of energy towards being kind to himself, his wife and the world around him. This will automatically make the wife understand that the man's priority is based on the higher things of life and its purpose and not on base passions and desires. This will eventually make the wife look up to the man with appreciation and admiration, leading to support. She will prove to be a faithful and loyal wife.

Further to the birth of a child or two, the man and wife should work at achieving spotless Brahmacharya and completely give up on physical contact based on sexuality. Any form of contact carried out with sexual intentions must be stopped in totality. Their energies should be focused on attaining to the highest through a life high on purity, virtue and devotion to God. This will lead to a very strong and loving relationship based on true love, understanding and trust between each other as 'souls' and not as bodies. Such a marriage based on Brahmacharya is rock solid and true to the finest extent. It is true wedlock where each person strives to see the other as a divine soul - the manifestation of God and not as the body. This is the truth and is based on my own personal experience, further to the life of Brahmacharya which myself and my wife practice. Such a marriage is blessed by the Gods from above and is unbreakable. The couple are truly soul mates. There is no limiting expectation or selfish desire towards each other in terms of the body or the mind. It becomes a pure and divine marriage based on attaining to the purpose of the human existence - Self-realization through absolute surrender and devotion to the Almighty.

Contrary to general perception, such a marriage based on Brahmacharya will last strong and firm as long as the man and woman live. It is marriages based on sexuality that have a high chance of breakup or divorce; for desire can never be sated and each person always wants more and gets disillusioned if the other is not matching up to expectations. This is the reason why there is a high divorce rate accross the globe. Most marriages today thrive on lust, passion, financial expectations and sexuality and this always leads to fouling up the relationship; for the true marriage has nothing to do with financial status and the divine act of reproduction is being misused for recreation and entertainment. Such a relationship does not last beyond a certain limit and even if it does leads to very unhappy conditions in the marriage. Anger and animosity between husband and wife vanish when both become Brahmacharis. True love is beyond the body, lust and desire. It does not require the use of the body or mind for fulfillment. True love is nothing but the Atman and is God himself in expression.

So by all means should you enter matrimony as expected by your parents. In the natural course of things, birth of a child should be high priority after marriage and this should not be delayed or postponed. One may be tested with tough times by God himself to check if our resolve and intentions are honest and sincere. But if our efforts at attaining to Brahmacharya are strong and genuine, God paves the way for everything to move smoothly and auspiciously. Providing an understanding and supportive partner is something which is taken care of by the Almighty within the twinkling of an eye.

QUESTION: Sir , Please clear my one doubts also, When I ask about my interest of brahmacharya to people , they told me that "in this yuga Brahmacharya is not possible, if u want such life do not marry a girl, If u marry it is a cruelty to your partner and there is a chance of her escape with another guy",. Is it true, thank for your valuable information

The transition to a life of Brahmacharya within marriage or without marriage is always gradual and by stages. No person, single or married can shift to an unbroken state of life long Brahmacharya all of a sudden. It is first carried out for a few days, then weeks, months and years. This holds good even in case of married couples who aim for Brahmacharya further to the birth of a child. Both man and wife work at getting into this mode of life voluntarily and in a gradual manner without external force or compulsion further to knowing the benefits of such a lifestyle. If the intentions and efforts at attaining to such a life are genuine and honest, the Almighty makes conditions favorable for such activity without doubt.

One's destiny is already fixed and written by the Almighty as soon as one is born in this world. What one does later is only in conformity with this pre-programmed destiny. When such is the case, it forms a part of commonsense and righteousness that one tries for the right mode of life that leads to evolution in the real sense. Brahmacharya is the correct mode of life, immaterial of one's marital status for health, longevity, happiness and spiritual growth. It is the correct mode of life to attain the purpose of the human birth through self-realization. If a man is destined to loose his wife to another man, it will happen despite his best efforts to hold his marriage together even if there is no practice of Brahmacharya. It happens due to his past karma which makes it necessary for him to suffer the pangs of separation and not due to any other reason. On the other hand, a man who is destined to get a faithful and loyal wife will accomplish living happily with such a partner in spite of all odds and obstacles.

Keeping these facts in mind, a sensible and spiritual man who knows everything to be the play of the Almighty sticks to the path of righteousness with the attitude - " That which is bound to happen will happen, however hard I may try to stop it. Similarly, that which is not bound to happen as per my destiny will not happen, try how hard I may to achieve it. When such is the case, why resort to an inferior mode of life involving sexuality? I will surrender fully to God and bear the fruits of destiny, good or bad but will not compromise on the path of virtue, righteousness and divinity depicted by a life of Brahmacharya".

It is cowardly and pessimistic for a person to think on the lines of negativity, for everything in the world has a negative side and dimension. We drive a vehicle on busy roads everyday and in every minute of the drive, we are prone to meet with an accident and loose a hand, leg or our life. Does this mean we stop driving? Does this mean we sit at home fearing the worst? A man journeying in a train or plane is very prone to a tragedy through a derailment or a plane crash. Does this stop us from accomplishing our work through these modes of transport? Or do all people who travel by rail or fly loose their lives? NO. Only those destined to meet with such an end depart this way and none else. We do not know if we are one among the lot or excluded from such a tragedy. Yet we think not of these dangers but continue with our duty everyday, driving, flying and moving about. Why? Because it makes little sense to worry about the negative when there is the call of duty and necessity.

Brahmacharya in marriage is very similar. It is one's duty to revert to a life of Brahmacharya further to getting done with producing offspring. All scriptures cutting across religions profess man to limit sexual activity and finally get beyond it so he can reach the purpose of the human existence. It is very noble and righteous for man to shift to a life of Brahmacharya and not the opposite. So we should choose the path of righteousness. We should stand bold and dare destiny to do what it wants, for we are in the right and not in the wrong. Why then fear? It is for the wrong doer to fear, not the righteous man. A righteous man has absolutely no fear, for he is established in the truth and there is no God higher than truth. Fear is the trait of those who are untrue to themselves and others. Fear cannot exist in a Brahmachari who has stuck to righteous living. He will dare destiny to do what it wants but will not bend like a coward and cheat himself and God for the fear of failure.

If one's purpose, intentions and objectives of practicing Brahmacharya are genuine and true backed by the aim of attaining to self-realization through devotion, surrender and love for the Almighty, all things fall into place and married life goes on very smoothly without anything untoward. One may be tested with trying times and difficult phases, but complete commitment and honesty will ensure that all problems are ironed out and vanquished by the grace of God.

This is the truth and also my personal opinion. Whether this path is to be followed or rejected is a choice every person has to make for himself in his personal capacity.

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I have a question but also wanted to perhaps be an inspiration to those who harbor doubts about the power of Brahmacharya beyond the young adult years as there is this constant undercurrent in many of the questions as to the effectiveness of such a practice when their already 30 plus years old.

I am 54 years old and now for the second time in 9 years embarking on the road of Brahmacharya. The first time was for almost 3 months and this time so far again for almost three months. Between the two periods it seemed an impossible feat to sustain such control for any substantial period. What catalyzed me to the practice both times were not only the challenging events in my life, but in particular, this time, my witnessing a near tragedy of a loved one which altered immediately the way I perceive my personal existence with the realization that life can be a place of profound and utter suffering and should not be a place to indulge whims and careless pursuits. Brahmacharya is my offering to God and simultaneously his gift to me as the prime mover for my uphill battle for growth on all planes of my existence. It is obvious that He had used a thorn to lance out a bigger thorn. There will be no turning back to my old ways this time.

Just on the physical and mental plane alone I am noticing an increasingly vibrant sense of mental and physical vigor. My regular bouts of nervous bowels have vanished. Having always been involved with fitness there has been a steady disappearance of aches and pains that have plagued me for months. This coupled with some other quality of vitality has enabled my fitness routine to bear fruit and tweak my body to be as fit, lean and strong as It was many years ago, with no extra effort. I have been an SRF student for over 10 years and have been at a seeming standstill for most of that time, but I now have noticed more mental endurance during meditation enabling the ajna center to stand out more. Breathing, heart rate and blood pressure are also lower at all times than ever before but spiritually speaking, I have a growing sense that God has taken notice.

My question though is with regard to dreams. For about twenty years I have been plagued with frightening and ominous dream imagery. But now there is not the slightest uncomfortable aspect to any dreams despite the fact that I have been out of work for over a year and worry all the time about what happens to my wife and me (kids all grown) after all the money runs out. But what I don't understand is why my dreams, for example, of being stuck in mud or lost in a big city are now dreams of tracking easily, and even cheerfully, through the mud and navigating easily and confidently through the big city when outwardly nothing has yet improved. Is it a case of my reality being improved from the deep psychic layers to eventually the gross material reality? How truly amazing is the power of this vital fluid, and what a gift it is that its retention will bear immediate fruit even at 54 years of age when we have spent years and even lifetimes indulging in harmful habits. Whenever I have weak moments of temptation I just remember what is at stake.

Warm regards

Nick

Answer

Very happy to see an aspirant enjoy the beneficial results that accrue from a life of Brahmacharya. Words fail to describe the immense merit and bliss one achieves further to a life of Brahmacharya. It is something that should be experienced and felt rather than discussed. It is truly a lifestyle meant for people who want to raise above the mundane limits of human existence and reach the realms of Godliness, bliss and peace at the physical, mental and spiritual domains. But for man to succeed in this path, one requires the will and blessings of the Almighty. Mere human effort will not suffice. HIS grace is what matters. So one should develop pure love, devotion and admiration for the Supreme. When we surrender to HIM, Brahmacharya becomes effortless and easy. As long as our individual ego is kept on high mast, Brahmacharya becomes an uphill task and eventually fails.

Dreams are essentially surface manifestations of past Vasanas (tendencies) stored in the Karana Sharira (causal body) accrued through past karma in this life or previous lifetimes. These tendencies manifest themselves in dreams while asleep when the scope and reach of the intellect is limited and the scope of the sub-conscious mind vast. Dreams could also be a result of one's present desires, aversions, fears and worries etc.. Sometimes, they are a combination of both these. We, in reality are the 'Shudhatma' (pure soul) and nothing else. It is the superimposition of the mind, intellect, consciousness and ego atop this pure soul along with past karma that results in our present mental state. So one should first get clear that all fears, worries, anxieties and all other deviations from the state of absolute peace and well being are the result of our karma and not really our default state. All of them are unfounded, for the pure soul is beyond the reach of occurance or non-occurance in the material planes or beyond. It is one's body, mind, intellect, consciousness and ego which are susceptible to the duality of human existence and not the soul.

All fear and faith in the negative which man experiences while being awake or in dreams is the result of Avidya (Ignorance) that has wound itself around the pure soul through the workings of the ego. This ignorance gets stronger and denser as man moves further away from his true self and reduces in intensity when man starts getting closer to the Atman. Brahmacharya is the boat through which man starts crossing the ocean of Samsara (finite, dual world) and starts getting closer to his default state of the Atman. So a man who is making progress in Brahmacharya will gradually find himself more at peace with himself and the world around him. He becomes much more capable of coming to terms with his life and the direction it is taking, for he slowly starts to realize that man is not the doer, God is. Brahmacharya results in increase of Prana (vital energy) within the body and increased Prana first bestows health and well being and next starts working out the hidden and embedded karma deposited within from time immemorial. As this happens, the person concerned slowly and very gradually starts getting closer to his true self, the Atman (soul). The Atman is the pinnacle of knowledge, existence and bliss and is infinite and all powerful, being the source of all things. This will explain your newfound state where there is lesser worry and anxiety and a greater sense of peace and confidence. It is an indication that the slow march towards realization of the absolute truth has slowly begun. The wheels have started moving.

Dreams which depicted you as being stuck in mud or lost in a big city are symbolic expressions of your Jivatma (embodied soul) which was caught in the mud of Avidya (ignorance). Mud here denotes the ignorance, inertia and slumber which comes further to being engulfed in Maya (cosmic illusion). The individual was caught and helpless and this lead to fear. The big city where you found yourself lost again represents the seemingly infinite and myraid world that is illusory, dangerous and full of peril to the man who is caught in his senses and has become a slave. The current dreams which show you as being able to pave your way out of the mud or the world shows that an ability to free oneself of this entanglement and slavery is slowly developing at the innate level through reduction in Avidya (ignorance). This is represented at the level of consciousness in the form of ease and cheer while dealing with the task on hand.

This entire existence of the finite world is God's cosmic dream drama where man is only an actor but not the doer. This body and the world are the Lords instruments to work out his 'Leela' (divine play) and hence there is really no scope for the individual ego to assert itself. Completely getting over the concept of one's individuality (ego) and realizing everything to be nothing more than the Almighty is what self-realization is all about. The self-realized man realizes that this world and the concept of himself at the individual level does not exist. He merges into the Supreme and realizes that the drop of water has merged into the infinite ocean of consciousness. He realizes that this entire world and the apparent reality was only a dream, just as a man who has dreamt while asleep realizes that all happenings in the dream were false and unreal as soon as he wakes up.

There is not the slightest need to worry, fret or ponder on one's future as long as one is true to one's Dharma (duty). One's Dharma (duty) is the attainment of self-realization. This is why the human birth has been given to the Jivatma (embodied soul). Enough of indulgence in sense pleasures. Many millions of animal births have been spent in that pursuit. One is supposed to give his best at this duty which the Lord has bestowed by constantly being devoted to HIM and indulging in those actions which will lead to self-realization. These actions are what we call YOGA. This is the meaning of Yoga - "Those actions that lead to union of the individual soul with the universal soul or the Supreme."

The Almighty Lord imposes another temporary Dharma to each and every creature which is seen in the form of things such as one's occupation and marital status among many other things. The Dharma of a young student comprises of studying well, amassing knowledge concerning the subjects of study and performing to his best in the examination. He is also required to maintain health and help his body grow towards development. This is as much as he is supposed to do. If he carries these things out to the best of his efforts and ability, he has done his Dharma. The results of his actions need not concern him. It is one's efforts that matter, not the results. The results are showered by the Almighty or what one calls destiny based on one's present efforts, past actions and divine will. Just as an actor in a drama show performs at his best, the student is required to give his best. Whether the audience like the show or don't, whether the show is a commercial success or not is not the actors concern. His job is to give his heart and soul at acting and then watch silently as to what happens. This is all man is supposed to do. Lord Krishna has beautifully described this in the Bhagavad-Gita to Arjuna as follows:-

"Thy right is to the action alone never to its fruit. Let the fruits of action never be thy motive, nor thy affinity be to inaction"

What does this mean? It means one must try his level best to carry out the Dharma or path shown by the Almighty and then watch silently without any expectations to the fruits. One should work in his job or study as a student not with the intention of earning money or standing first for the university but with the feeling -" This is the path shown to me by the Lord. By honestly and sincerely striving in this path, I'm working out the Lord's Leela (divine play). I am offering these actions of mine as a token of devotion and gratitude to the Lord through the path he has shown. I will not worry myself over the fruits or results. That will be decided by HIM. But my efforts will always be sincere and honest." Such an attitude has the potential of giving the best outcome.

With this attitude, the student does his best at studying well and performing well in the exam and then watches silently, accepting whatever result comes forth. The Dharma of a married man is to provide for his wife and children (until they are old enough to earn by themselves) by striving to the best of his ability as regards making a living and devoting the rest of his time and energy towards God-thought and contemplation. He is to try to his level best to find some form of livlihood. Let his efforts in this direction be honest and sincere. Then, let him watch silently and accept whatever result comes forth. As long as there is an effort from his side to earn a living or try for some form of work, he has done his duty. He may or may not get a job immediately. These things are not in his domain or within his control, for in reality we are not the doers. We are only the mediums through whom the Lord works . At what point of time the man should get employment, what should be the nature of the job etc.. are controlled by the Almighty. Our purview ends at always trying sincerely and honestly to make ends meet through the avenues open before us. If we lift up our hands and say -" I will not try for anything, I will not work, the Almighty will make that which has to happen, happen", then we are making a mistake. We are no longer true to our Dharma because our efforts have vanished. We will have to suffer the consequences. This is why the Lord says -" Let thy affinity not be to inaction". So we should always try and never give in or give up, whatever be the task at hand. The results, we need not worry about. It might take a year or two years to get a job. Or, we might get a good job within a single day itself. These things are not of our concern and need not be the least cause of worry as long as our efforts have been genuine. Let us accept what he offers, for in reality, we were never the doers, we were only the mediums and so we have no right over the fruits. The Almighty always feeds and takes care of his children as long as their efforts are sincere and honest. Every creature including man is assured of some food and shelter by the Great creator. None go hungry. Our's is to strive and put in our efforts and nothing more. Based on our past actions, present efforts and his own divine will which is called destiny, the Lord decides the amount of fruit our actions deserve and sends them forth. Let us not worry regarding the fruits but constantly remind ourselves of the fact that this world and this thing called life is a drama by the divine in which we are actors. It is only an illusion, just as a drama is a stage performance and not reality. Let us constantly be devoted to HIM and think of HIM, offering all our actions to HIM alone without worrying about the results, but always applying our efforts at both self-realization and the temporary Dharma through occupation and responsibility. This is the correct mode of thinking and living. This is the greatest religion, call it by what name you may.

Question
Dhananjay, hello

I have read most of your earlier posts and I thank you for throwing so much light on the subject at hand. I had some doubts which I wanted to clear with you.

In one of your earlier posts you had said that a brahmachari should not eat salt and spices. I wanted to know the reason for this and also wanted to ask you whether inlcuding turmeric only in the diet (no salt & no other spice) is ok? I am asking because turmecic has many medicinal properties which helps the body to a great extent and it also does not have the effects which other spices have on the body with regards to maintaining brahamacharya.

In one of your earlier posts you had said that onions and garlic should not be cooked along with food but can be taken raw for medicinal purposes. I wanted to know the reason why and also wanted to know how to take onion and garlic raw and in what frequency.

What exactly is transmutation and sublimation. I have read these terms time and time again in your earlier posts. Can you please clarify to me what these terms mean and also techniques to achieve the same.

What is mulbandh, udiyan bandh and jalandhar bandh useful for? Can you suggest any good books to learn these bandhs?

Thanks for your advise in advance

Thanks, Manish

Answer
1. It is helpful in the practice of Brahmacharya if one reduces the intake of salt and spices to the bare minimum. Completely giving up salt or spices is not necessary and often proves to be impractical in day to day life where it will not be possible to cook food for ourselves separately in the midst of a busy routine. About 1.5 grams of salt/day is required for the normal functioning of the body and for aiding normal muscle contraction and expansion. Excessive salt has the tendency of unsettling the nervous system and making one prone to oscillating emotions. Highly spicy food fires up the emotions and makes one prone to irritation and agitation. Brahmacharya cannot be practiced by an irritated or agitated mind. Hence cutting down on these helps one attain to a calmer mental and emotional state. This will make Brahmacharya easier and more within one's reach. In addition to this, consumption of more salt and spice than what is necessary for the body results in drying up of veerya (semen) as salt is highly anhydrous in nature and eats into the synovial fluid. This is one of the major causes behind people developing bone and joint problems in their later years.

The average man eating a spicy and highly salted diet consumes 6-7grams of salt a day which is very much on the higher side. This overloads the kidneys while eliminating the excess salt and leads to overall reduction of vitality and health of the entire system and especially the heart in the long run. Excessive consumption of salt leads to various cardiac problems, kidney stones, rheumatic and arthritic joint issues, loss of calcium leading to osteoporosis etc.. Excessive spices also dry up veerya and make semen watery and thin.

Turmeric (Haldi) is an excellent antiseptic and antibacterial agent. It can be sparingly used in food for its medicinal properties. Turmeric added to food in small quantities has a purifying effect on food and in killing germs. It can safely be consumed by the Brahmachari in small quantities.

2. It is preferable to avoid cooking onion and garlic with food and better to eat them raw in small medicinal doses. There are two main reasons behind this rule:

* Cooking onion and garlic causes certain changes in the molecular structure of these vegetables that results in faster fermentation and putrification of the cooked matter when it comes into contact with saliva and the digestive juices within the human body. It takes an average of 24-48 hours for food to be comletely processed and assimilated within the human body. Cooked onion and garlic which are prone to faster fermentation under the action of heat cause the release of by-products of this fermentation process into the blood stream. These by-products have a strong tendency to fire up stupor, anger, lust and inertia which are all Tamasic qualities. It becomes impossible to focus and concentrate on meditation. Wet dreams become frequent in people who consume large quantities of onion and garlic on a regular basis and reduce in intensity when the process is reversed. Hence consumption of cooked onion and garlic is best avoided.

* Cooking of onion and garlic destroys the purifying properties that these vegetables have on blood in the raw form. Both onion and garlic are excellent blood purifying tubers. Both these vegetables have the ability of killing harmful bacteria in the gut, intestines and especially in the blood stream. They are very effective in de-toxifying the system when taken raw in small amounts. Garlic is an excellent natural antibiotic. Onion is a very good diuretic and good for the kidneys. If eaten raw, once a week in small doeses, one can reap health benefits that lead to raidant health. The advisable quantity is one raw onion, once a week, eaten in the raw form with food and 4-5 cloves (pods) of garlic, eaten once a week in raw form while having food. Such a quantity when eaten, proves beneficial to health and will not in any way become an impediment to Brahmacharya.

3. Conversion of physical semen into Ojas (divine astral energy) is the process meant by sublimation and transmutation. It is the conversion of one form of Prana into another. Kindly go through all the past answers to get a detailed overview of the process.

4. The Bandhas which form a percusor to Pranayama are very important and useful in ensuring that 'Amrit' (nectar) that is formed in the brain by the transmutation of semen into Ojas does not flow down to get burnt by the Jatharaagni (gastric fire) in the stomach. For complete details on Pranayama and the methods of performing the Bandhas, kindly go through the book 'The Science of Pranayama' - by Swami Sivananda. Question

Is sudden breaking of brahmacharya after a long period is danger to health? what is its reaction to body?

God bless u,

Answer
An aspirant should ensure to the best of his efforts that there is no voluntary break of Brahmacharya. This especially holds good after one has achieved periods of unbroken Brahmacharya beyond many months. Such periods of Brahmacharya are the result of the grace and blessings of the Almighty and a voluntary break amounts to failing the Lord despite his blessings. Those who have attained to more than one year of unbroken Brahmacharya without even a single voluntary discharge of semen through artificial means or sexual activity must never ever revert to their former mode of life involving recreational sexuality. They should lead a life based on the Yama-Niyama of Yoga, eat moderate amounts of sathwic food, perform adequate physical and mental activity for transmutation and regularly indulge in Pranayama and meditation.

Reverting to one's former lifestyle of recreational sexuality after such long periods of Brahmacharya may cause unforeseen problems at the physical, mental and karmic levels. The state of unbroken Brahmacharya lasting beyond many months or a year is not something which one has achieved through his effort but only through God's grace and blessings. Very few people are allowed by the Almighty to succeed in unbroken practice beyond a year. Only those hand picked souls who are destined for spiritual advancement towards liberation will find it possible to succeed. When such is the case, a voluntary break and more importantly reverting to the earlier lifestyle by abandoning Brahmacharya by such a chosen aspirant amounts to a sheer reversal of that destined by divine will. While this is rare, those who revert to their former mode of recreational sexuality put themselves in much peril through the karmic sin they accrue. It is not possible to say what may be the repercussions of such a reversal in lifestyle, for the results could be multidimensional in their dangers. But it is a state of affairs to be avoided at all costs. One who has been blessed by the Lord to succeed in long periods of Brahmacharya should immediately continue with his practice without a second thought, if at all there is an unfortunate break. But he should never, ever revert to his earlier mode of sexual life and desert Brahmacharya.

Any voluntary break in Brahmacharya will cause immense depression, disorientation and a sense of losing one's very self. The magnitude of pain depends on how long unbroken Brahmacharya was practiced. The longer the duration, the greater the repercussions. If at all there is such a break, one should atone and analyze what caused the break and never repeat the mistake. Brahmacharya should be immediately continued without repeating the acts that lead to the break. Usually, all Brahmacharis do this and carry on with their practice. Breaks are caused so the aspirant corrects some mistakes he was indulging in. The Almighty generally makes one carry on further after long periods of Brahmacharya, for the very fact that the person could succeed in say a year of unbroken Brahmacharya shows that this has not happened by accident but by the grace of the Lord.

The only exception to this rule is when a Brahmachari enters matrimony and plans to beget offspring. Then, he is allowed sexual contact with his lawful wife with the intention of progeny under the blessings of God. Further to fathering the child , he can then revert to the practice of unbroken Brahmacharya.

So one should never break Brahmacharya voluntarily. This applies more after achieving long periods of Brahmacharya. And if there is an unfortunate break, one should strive hard to immediately continue with the practice and never, ever revert to the former life of recreational sexuality. This is most important.

Question
Dhananjay, hi

Thanks for the last reply that you gave me. I had another doubt which I believe you can clear.
Is black pepper (peppercorns) good to add to your diet especially keeping in mind the Brahamacharya aspect?
I have heard that yogis survive on black pepper alone since black pepper has all the 5 elements in a measure that it keeps reclycling the chemicals already present in one's body and hence the need for any additional food is obviated.
I am asking from the perspective of a brahamachari since black pepper has a certain amount of heat but not the same heat which other spices generate. I have read that black pepper is one of the most perfect foods that nature has to offer to humans second only to lemons (can lemons be included in the diet too? from the brahamacharya perspective).
Apologies for asking so many questions, I just want to be aware because awareness is the first step towards knowing understanding self.
I have read in books that a mixture of black peppercorns and honey is very good for the body.
I believe (and i strongly believe) that black pepper will not be an impediment in the progress of brahamacharya but wanted to confirm and take a second opinion.

Thanks for all your help in advance Dhananjay,

Regards, Manish

Answer
Lemon, honey and black pepper, eaten in moderate quantities are beneficial for good health and do not interfere with Brahmacharya. Black pepper is a good substitute to chilly as chilly is Rajasic in nature and agitates the mind.

It is best not to depend on any one food source but maintain a balanced diet covering the gamut of all available fruits, vegetables, grains, pulses and lentils. As a rough pointer, a diet comprised of moderate amounts of milk, butter, curd or butter-milk, wheat or corn, fruits and veggies makes for an ideal food source. Dry fruits are very beneficial in maintaining health if taken regularly in small quantities.

Question
We live in a materialistic world,a world sunk in its foolish valuing systems, luxurious brands, brainwashing media, and hedonistic perception of life.This world is populated and controlled by pleasure seeking people,who each of them could be like a distraction or a resemblance of humans deep animalistic traits to a person practicing brahmacharya.
After several months of celibacy and trials of belief and disbelief within myself,moments of huge REALITY,.....,my problem is to keep that ultimate level of concentration on God and divinity,that high level of consciousness, and also meditation in crowded places,like class or bus or party or...., and i also feel some kind of negative energy,a radiation of ignorance around some people which truly distracts me.I really find it hard sometimes to have that spirit whilst doing a materialistic job(as a medical student) or reading or accompanying or even images of these distract me while i meditate at my niche.
Whats going on?what should be done?

Thanks

Answer
It is one's own ignorance embedded deep within one's Karana sharira (causal body), the repository of all impressions and tendencies accrued from past karma dating to millions of births in the human and animal form that results in our present state - physical, mental and spiritual. The actual soul in reality is always untouched by this ignorance surrounding it just as a piece of gold is unpolluted by the layers of muck surrounding it and turns out to possess the same luster and shine when cleansed of dirt. A life of Brahmacharya and Yoga are the means through which one endeavors to cleanse the layers of ignorance surrounding the soul, following which the Jivatma (embodied and degenerated soul) realizes itself to be a part of the Supreme Almighty through self-realization and attains to infinite knowledge, existence and bliss.

When a spiritual aspirant comes in contact with worldly minded people engrossed in the senses, the layers of ignorance present within his own system start to resonate and sync with the vibrations of ignorance emanating from such people. This tends his mind and ego to go ahead and participate in the sense based activity. But the spiritual knowledge and discipline that have been ingrained into his intellect through a righteous life fire up his Buddhi shakthi (power of intellect) and the intellect reminds the mind and ego of the filthy and unreal nature of the pleasure accrued from a life of senses. So this is akin to a tug of war. On one side, the mind and ego goad him towards the senses, fueled by their past impressions in such indulgence. On the other hand, his Buddhi shakthi (power of intellect) that has now gained knowledge of what is right and wrong through a life of spirituality reminds him constantly that all sense indulgence is impermanent, unreal and a waste of time leading to suffering. In a beginner Brahmachari, the tendencies of the mind and ego are stronger in comparison to the power of the intellect. So the mind and ego win the tug of war and the aspirant succumbs to sense temptation leading to a break. As one progresses in Brahmacharya and thus spirituality in the real sense, the power of the intellect starts getting stronger and more firm leading to stronger will power, discrimination and determination. One starts acquiring the ability to stay clear of senses to a larger extent than before, for the mind and ego have been brought under the control of the intellect and not the reverse as before. This makes it more possible to hold the mind-ego under control.

So when we feel vulnerable and susceptible to negative, sensual vibrations emanating from a crowd at a gathering, it is our mind-ego combination that is starting to give way. It has started to resonate with the sensuality. This is making it weak and vulnerable.

At the next moment, when we start to feel loathing, disgust and repulsion towards such a scenario, it is our intellect reminding us of the danger and filth in such a situation, warning us to stay clear and move out.

The aim of the Brahmachari is to wash out all these past impressions and tendencies stored in his Karana Sharira (causal body) that are making him resonate to such a worldly situation and reach that supreme state where he is unaffected. Once he succeeds in reaching this state, he is constantly in the sea of reality and untouched, unaffected by the presence or absence of sensuality. He neither loves nor hates the sensual aspect of the world further to the realization that all of it is unreal and a dream. He raises above the duality of love-hate and pain-pleasure and rests in the one reality of the Supreme.

The contradictory feelings for and against worldliness that the aspirant experiences is what constitutes the battle of life. This is the Leela (divine play) constituted by God himself to make the Jivatma (embodied soul) realize the falsity of the world and gain knowledge of the Supreme. These are the tests and examinations the embodied soul has to face, fight and finally win if it has to reach that unalloyed state of knowledge and bliss accrued from self-realization.

The only way to pass these examinations is by constant perseverance and effort in staying fixed to the reality of one's default state of Godliness through reminding oneself of the unreality surrounding worldliness. One needs to constantly stay fixed to Brahmacharya in spirit and keep the mind occupied with spiritual pursuits supported by prayer and God-meditation in the background. As one progresses in reducing the ignorance surrounding one's own soul, the impact of such worldly situations reduces in magnitude and finally disappears upon self-realization.

Question

QUESTION: namaste dhananjay sir, i read ur answers and found them very practical. can you suggest daily routine and life style including diet ,asanas ,pranayamas and others to lead a restrained and spiritual life as my wife is religious and spiritual and so am i,if not exactly but nearly celibate,we want to cultivate life style promoting our mutual benefits,thanks a lot

ANSWER: LIFESTYLE & DIET:

1. Wake up at least by 5.00 A.M at 'Brahmimuhurtha' (earlier, the better), drink 2 glasses of water and have a bath immediately.
2. Drink a cup of milk and perform a few simple Asanas followed by Thribandha, Pranayama and meditation. Pray to the Lord to bestow the knowledge of self-realization.

3. Eat breakfast at the earliest, before 8.00-8.30 A.M followed by a banana or two.
4. Eat lunch in the afternoon at least by 1.30 P.M. Ideal food is wheat rotis/chapathis eaten with steamed Dhal and pulses. Consume some buttermilk and eat a banana after food. An hour before lunch, during lunch and an hour from lunch, do not drink water. Drink water one and half hours after lunch.
5. Repeat the practice of a few simple Asanas followed by Thribandha, Pranayama and meditation in the evening at sunset around 6.00 P.M. Pray to the Lord to bestow the knowledge of self-realization. Try to eat a salad comprising of pieces of 4 different fruits and 4 different raw vegetables (such as cucumber, beet roots, beans, carrots, cabbage) before sunset with 1 dal-roti if necessary. This should be dinner. Do not eat or drink anything after sunset.
6. Inculcate the reading and absorption of scriptures such as the Bhagavad Gita, Bible, Guru Granth Sahib or Quraan based on your personal religion. All religions when practiced right lead to self-realization. There is only one God and all religions lead to him alone.
7. Go to bed at least by 9.30 P.M. Pray to the Almighty for a few minutes before retiring to bed. The last thought before falling asleep must be that of the Almighty and nothing else.

This is the lifestyle and diet that I have personally been following. It is very beneficial to the spiritual aspirant in the practice of Brahmacharya.

Avoid all meat, eggs, highly spicy/highly salty food, alcohol, tobacco and preferably coffee and tea.
Eat fresh fruits, raw veggies, wheat rotis/chapathis, milk, butter and dairy products in moderate amounts. Never load the stomach. Stop eating before the stomach gets full.

Gradually reduce the frequency of sexual activity. When this is achieved, increase the periods of Brahmacharya longer to months, many months and then life long. True spiritual progresses starts only after completely giving up recreational sex. As long as man enjoys sexual pleasure, the gates of spirituality do not open. Sex is for procreation and not recreation. Always bear this in mind.

Further to one year of unbroken Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed and a strictly spiritual life, meditation becomes longer and deeper and the bliss - 'Ananda' of the Almighty Lord starts to trickle down. This will help further advancement leading to real spiritual progress.

For details on Pranayama, asanas and the techniques please go through the book written by Swami Sivananda, available at : http://www.dlshq.org/download/pranayama.htm

QUESTION: namaste sir, many many thanks for answering to my previous question and i will do my best to follow.i m really impressed by the prompt attention given, may God bless you for helping more people.
i want your opinion as to in present day world , what should be the limit of use of computers/laptops and television,even though they are part of our life but still they have the drawbacks.
also if we are living a spiritual/near celibate life, how to enjoy the life and be away from monotonous life as not many people will be with you and you have to be more or less alone.
present day world has degraded and not much of the food and water is pure, so is there need of any natural or herbal supplements .what about green tea in moderate amount.
thank you in advance for giving your valuable time

ANSWER: Those spiritual aspirants who want to progress seriously in the path of Brahmacharya and self-realization would do well to limit use of the computer, T.V, internet, newspaper and all other forms of media interaction to the basic minimum and under the strict limit of necessity. The mind is very vulnerable to the onslaught of senses during the initial stages of Brahmacharya and spending much time aimlessly on these mediums fires up unwanted thoughts and emotions and leads one astray. Hence exposure to these should be limited and under one's discretion. One should also reduce excessive talk and completely give up loose talk, gossiping, tale carrying and partying. Much energy and Ojas is lost through talk and this results in a mind that becomes prone to irritation further to the random thoughts that arise in the mind as a result of excessive talk. A successful Brahmachari maintains silence to the best possible extent and talks a few words where necessary and to the point.

Following such a routine will save much Pranic energy from getting lost and thereby helps in increasing Ojas. The mind becomes calm, serene, peaceful and eligible to enjoy the 'Ananda' (bliss) that accrues from meditation & Brahmacharya. Facial features become relaxed, knots in the forehead and eyebrows disappear and the composure of the Brahmachari becomes one of calmness and peace with a smiling and cheerful demeanor, decorated by the ornament called silence. This peace from within works as a cycle, making one more prone to frequent meditation and God-contemplation. It becomes easier to come to terms with the fact that this world and its events are unreal and only a part of the cosmic dream, while the only reality is the Almighty and we ourselves are an integral part of the Almighty.

The path of spirituality and Brahmacharya are lonely in terms of the world but full of joy and bliss in terms of the closeness one feels for God. As one progresses, the tendency and the need for contact with anything external such as people, situations, relationships, events and worldly happenings will gradually reduce. One feels a strong need to get back into Yogic activities such as God-contemplation, meditation, reading spiritual literature and discussing matters connected to spirituality as soon as one gets done with work in one's occupation. Married couples who have a common interest in the practice of a life based on spirituality & Brahmacharya will be able to offer excellent companionship to each other through being supportive and understanding. Discussions of experiences and matters related to such a life will be well received from both sides and make life meaningful and interesting.

It is not necessary to apply much intensity in such activities all of a sudden. These things happen gradually and very naturally when the body and mind whilst being purified by a life of Brahmacharya and Yoga automatically feel like associating themselves with virtue and dissociate themselves from things external and false. Man is ultimately the Atman (pure soul) and can get no happiness or joy higher than the bliss of the true self. All pleasures derived from contact of the senses with external objects through sight, sound, smell, taste and touch are temporary and impermanent. They have a beginning and an end and cannot bring lasting happiness. It is the bliss of the Atman alone that is beyond beginning or ending and the only source that can make man completely content and peaceful for eternity; and this bliss is tasted through efforts at self-realization through Yoga and Brahmacharya.

It is not necessary to cut off one's life all of a sudden from contact with the external world. Let that which has to happen take place naturally. If there is a tendency or urge to eat a particular kind of food, watch a movie or meet some people, let it be done judiciously and with alertness reminding oneself not to get carried over by the senses. For example, if a man has a craving for a particular dish, let him limit himself to eating it once a week. As Brahmacharya and spirituality progresses, these external urges and past tendencies will give up the aspirant. Rather than one giving them up, these objects will give up the practitioner! A man who is addicted to meat will realize upon progressing in true Brahmacharya that meat will shortly give him up, if he does not give up meat . The forces of purity, Godliness and cleansing which are working within him will not give him the mind to continue with meat eating beyond a certain limit and it will completely stop eventually. Similarly, a man addicted to watching movies starts feeling a sense of worthlessness and pain in doing the same upon progressing in Brahmacharya. While he earlier spent many hours a week watching movies, his mind now feels pain and revulsion at doing the same now and instead tells him not to bombard himself with all the sense stimulation that comes from such an indiscreet habit. He will automatically reduce upon the number of movies he watches and limits it to an occasional watch and that too if the content is clean and healthy.

One can indulge in playing sports and participate in hobbies, activities that are constructive and healthy to the body, mind and psyche. Anything constructive and not against the path of maintaining one's purity and equilibrium can be indulged in. As progress in spiritually furthers, one will naturally get drawn into longer periods of meditation and God-thought. This is natural and in the course of things.

Conserved and transmuted semen is the best supplement and medicine that one can ever give the body. No external supplement or tonic can equal the life giving and revitalizing power of semen. So a Brahmachari does not require any external supplement as long as he is eating a healthy and balanced vegetarian diet. Dry fruits are very beneficial in imparting valuable nutrients to the Yogi. Small quantities of unsalted dry fruits such as dates, raisins, almonds, walnuts and cashew eaten on a daily basis impart good health and remove deficiencies.

A Yogi should gradually endeavor to become independent of dependence on any particular kind of food, beverage or activity. There should not be the least dependence or temptation for any particular kind of food or activity, for all these are the non-self (Unatma) and not the self (Atman). But this cannot be achieved all of a sudden. It should be kept in mind and worked at slowly and gradually. Consumption of any form of tea or coffee, including green tea on a regular and daily basis leads to dependence and addiction to these drinks in the long term. Hence it would be recommendable to gradually work at lessening the quantity and frequency of the drink and slowly get free of the need.

QUESTION: namaste sir and many many thanks for your elaborate answer, i m trying to grasp what you means and i m finding it better. i now have the courage to have conversation with you i the form of questions and answers.
actually what should be the time given for meditation/yoga etc. in morning and evening, what form of meditation you recommend and what are the good sources/places of meditation and yogasanas etc. in india which you recommend naming few choices, which we can follow, after going through them .any good books and publication you recommend for a spiritual aspirant like me.i m 43, a open minded spiritual person and follow the good of all religion esp Sikh and Hindu, my wife is 40 , more devoted in Sikhism.what is the role of music in our life .i understand your ideals of solitude, but till we gradually reach such stage we do find some recreation in TV programmes like discovery channel and animal planet and some news and sports programme, otherwise its difficult to motivate self, we need some motivation in our life and presently either the seniors are too busy or an ideal senior/guru is difficult to be found.
thank you sir for your valuable time.

Answer
1. Both in the morning & evening, one should practice Asana, Bandha, Pranayama and then meditate for some time on the Almighty with pure love and devotion and without asking for anything in return. The time spent on meditation depends on how long one can meditate and this duration gradually increases with spiritual advancement. The best form of meditating on the Almighty is to sit in Padmasana and contemplate on the Nirguna Brahman (formless God). As indicated in the Gurbani, the Infinite Consciousness is beyond any mundane description and is formless, shapeless and infinite in all directions.

2. Yogic practices and meditation should preferably be carried out in a well ventilated room that is comfortable to occupy. One should sit on a Yoga mat or a carpet facing the north or the east and this mat should not be used for any other purpose. The following books will prove to be of interest for those looking at understanding Yoga:

http://swami-krishnananda.org/patanjali.html
http://www.dlshq.org/download/pranayama.htm

3. Music which is devotional or that which inspires one with noble spiritual feelings and feelings of bhakthi (devotion) towards God can be listended to by those interested in music. Instrumental music which is of a spiritual nature such as that from the Veena, Flute, Ghatam, Mridangam, tabla, violin etc...is also beneficial. Musis which is jarring, sensuous, agitating or lust generating in nature should be avoided.

4. Watching a T.V programme which is not negatively stimulating to the senses does not cause problems as regards spirituality and one can spend some time watching such content when one feels like, taking care that any kind of an addictive pattern does not develop towards the program.

Question
Dear Sir,

Is it true that material failure in life is directly related to loss of semen, while success in academic pursuits is related to semen conservation ? If it is so, then why do we see that people who are much accomplished in academics, like big professors in research universities abroad, often lead a life high on sensuality, like partying, intoxication (specially drinking coffee often), and eating meat. I suppose it is true that drinking coffee (even a little bit) disturbs celibacy? Then how are these people able to conserve their semen (if they are really able to do so) while getting intoxicated frequently and eating meat? Is there something else which is responsible for the maintenance of their academic prowess?

Thanks,
Amit

Answer
A physically strong and healthy man with robust health and well being might find that he has a lesser tendency to catch cold and fever despite lack of warm clothing. He gets away without contracting these illnesses even whilst wearing inadequately warm clothing. Does this mean he will never contract cold or fever if he purposely eats contaminated food and places himself in an unhealthy environment? Or, does it mean that everyone can get away without the least health issues if they purposely wear scant and inadequate clothing under cold conditions? No.

The man under consideration might be saved from cold and flu due to innumerable factors. He might basically be blessed with a tendency against contracting these diseases due to his current efforts at maintaining physical health and robustness or efforts from his past births in this direction that have made him immune to the problem. He might co-incidentally be at that stage in his life where everything is going right & well for him further to his good karma working out and has hence not seen adversity. This does not make it sensible or correct for others to follow suit and say -" Since he exposed himself to cold weather and didn't get a cold or fever, we shall also wear scant clothing, not take precautions and challenge the cold"!

It is commonsense and sensibility to protect ourselves against unfavorable weather by wearing warm clothing and taking the necessary precautions. This is how the wise and right thinking man will behave. This way, he has done his duty in taking precautions against the weather. He might still get a cold or fever if such a thing is in store of his karma. He does not know if he will truly succeed in preventing the illness. Since it forms a part of righteousness, sensibility and correct action to take care of one's body and protect it against the elements, the wise man always performs his duty at being kind to this medium called the body.

The practice of Brahmacharya is very similar, but on a larger scale also covering the mind, psyche and one's karmic evolution. The practice of Brahmacharya will eventually lead to an improvement in all bodily functions, better health and better well being. It will lead to better functioning of the intellect, memory, concentration and all other abilities. If a man is leading a life of seminal wastage and is yet found to possess notable qualities, he will shine even better to the level of genius in his field of prowess if he were to adopt a life of Brahmacharya and transmute his semen. His abilities and talent would tweak themselves to even superior levels if backed by the power of Brahmacharya. His present state of mental or intellectual prowess could be a result of his efforts in this direction from many past births. A layman will not have the talents as he has not persevered in these fields earlier. This explains the presence of child geniuses in the fields of sports, academics and music who are born with superior talent and exhibit the same at ages as young as their 5th or 6th year. One part of their personality is at the zenith, giving them superior prowess in their field of play. This is a result of consistent efforts from past births. If such people practice Brahmacharya, their talent heightens to an even greater degree along with the unfolding of various other parts of their personality, which was not the case earlier, considering their prowess was limited to a particular field.

A person accomplished in academics such as a well known professor represents talent and knowledge of a particular subject in the study curriculum. This comes further to effort by the person in this direction. The concerned professor might have put in much effort to garner knowledge and teaching techniques to the level he has attained. It is this much and not more. Using his God given ability, he has persevered to the extent required to make himself successful. This does not make him immune to the negative effects of sexuality, excessive coffee drinking or alcoholism. If he does not take care to keep these things within limits, and instead gets to the point of addiction, he will soon find himself in a tight spot down the years where all his health, well being, intelligence and mental faculties find themselves on a shaky ground.

Mere success at the materialistic level lasting a few years is nothing. It is like a glimpse of light seen when the clouds clear and form a bright sky. Unless one strives to maintain one's health and clear thinking with a proper lifestyle independent of addictions, downfall is sure to come sooner or later. There are innumerable examples of noted public figures known for achievements in their respective fields who have lost all their health, wealth, reputation and well being thanks to their uncontrollable addictions to drugs, alcohol, womanizing and wanton sexuality. Their brief life in limelight which they had acquired further to much effort and work was all lost in a trice, thanks to addictions which overpowered and enslaved them.

Isn't it commonsense that healthy food, right living, correct thinking and right conduct are the pillars for a happy life? Will an athlete participating in the Olympics consume excessive coffee, eat all sorts of junk food, party all night long, cavort with many women and lead a life of indiscipline because the professors you described do so? No. The athlete leads a very special and disciplined life with restricted food, correct sleep and correct practice. Else, he is sure to loose the edge required for participating in such an international event. If the achievement of success in a physical sport such as athletics requires such effort and devotion, how much more devotion should be required to the attainment of the highest through self-realization which is beyond the body, mind and psyche?

A life of indiscipline, addiction and overindulgence is the formula for suffering of the worst kind even for a materialist. When there is God given health and well being during the early years of life, the damage is not very apparent. It becomes clear and well seen as time progresses. By the time a man reaches mid-life, the effects of such wrong living become very clear and apparent. They manifest in the form of incurable diseases and problems and torment him to no end.

The effects of semen conservation take time to flower and bear fruit. One cannot follow a life of unbroken Brahmacharya for one month and foolishly complain -"My memory and intelligence are the same". Let it be practiced unbroken for a couple of years, and let the effects be seen for themselves. Ojas improves not merely material life but also spiritual growth. No spirituality can even start without Brahmacharya. It is the foundation for success in all endeavors.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,
I'm a 18 year old university student, studying in the UK. I know my duty as a student should be purely to attain both kinds of knowledge and maintain 8-fold Brahmacharya until my student life is over but even after my countless efforts I still am unable to quit masturbating and (sometimes) watching porn. This has been going on for years but has gradually been decreasing . But it still makes me very depressed as I'm a bit like "Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde" I can't really call myself religious but I do puja/meditate in the morning, eat pure vegetarian food, don't drink alcohol, go to the temple, observe niyams, observe fasts, read religious texts etc. I don't even go to partying or listen to pop/club music, quit facebook etc. But when I see something that is arousing i.e a beautiful woman, may it even be a glance I have had during the day. My mind just looses it (later). It feels like my mind just completely forgets about who I am, forgets that I am religious and this is a very big sin. This leads me to do things I regret deeply afterwards. I become very depressed and resolve to quit masturbation and porn. But the next time I masturbate I get even more depressed and the cycle continues. The best strategy that worked for me was to think of all women as your sisters and mothers. This worked for a while and I was happy but soon my mind took over and chose not to remember this fact when I glanced at a woman. It just stop occurring to me. It just doesn't come to my mind anymore when I really need it. This way I've been losing hope constantly over the years and have even had a few breakdowns. This affected my studies greatly and as I did not get into the university I sought for. This shatters more of my hopes. Then my parents keep having fights and are never truly happy. This leads me to being more depressed and only way I seek a few seconds of happiness is by masturbation. My intelligence has also been depleting as expected. Which makes me more sad. I listen to sad music to feel normal and move on. Things like Dear Agony by Breaking Benjamin.
Before moving away from home for university I resolved to quit these lusty attributes once and forever after reading most of your answers in the summer. But when I got here, it was a completely different story. I wanted to focus on studying and God only and ignore all else. All the Ojas I have lost through my breaks in Brahmacharya/masturbation up until now won't come back. Also this adds to my bundle of depressing thoughts as I start losing my hope in studies and question my intelligence, would karma punish me deeply in this life? Will I achieve my academic goals? Become a better person? Will God forgive me? It is VERY difficult to observe Brahmacharya here at this university. The girls here dress half naked. And It just doesn't help. I've only been here 2 weeks and have masturbated twice. Also the extra added privacy does not help either. I thought I would change permanently but the fact that I have not has caused me deep mental distress. I can't sleep right now knowing I'm a very sinful devotee and in the morning I will probably have a cold water shower and soon forget this happened.

Right know it feels like I've learned my lesson but soon after a week, maybe even a month, my Brahmacharya will inevitably end. But I want to stop it once and forever and thus am writing to you for help. I JUST CANNOT take this anymore, I can't even remember when I all this started. I do not want fall out of the path of liberation. I want to escape this cycle of births and deaths. But I'm surrounded by kusangis here and . I don't have anyone who I can call a "friend". I know God is your only true friend but I can't even look him in the eyes for a while after doing something like this. I want to stop being a hypocrite. As although I TRY VERY HARD to get close to God but I know I'm far from close after breaking my Brahmacharya. I'm in agony please advice on the following questions and any advice in general.

What should I do to stay focused on Brahmacharya? What atonements should I perform for all my past sins for my breaks in Brahmacharya?
Thank you Dhanajay, I truly appreciate what you are doing here. It is great seva (service).

Answer
Think of what lies below the surface of a woman's skin. Foul smelling flesh coupled with blood is the nature of everything under the so called gloss of the human skin. All Brahmacharis must smell their very own blood and raw flesh when they experience a bruise or a cut. It has the most disagreeable and repulsive smell. This is what the female body is all about. Under the skin lie flesh, fat, blood, excrement, urine, pus, phlegm and stool. This body is a well disguised bag of flesh, reinforced by bone, containing filth and refuse. There is nothing really attractive or appealing to the smallest extent.

This is why men & women go to great lengths investing on deodorants, body sprays and perfumes - To hide the smell of filth that eventually surfaces some time after having a bath.

This is why aromatic compounds are added into toothpastes, soaps and detergents; to help one temporarily hide the stench of bad breath, sweat and other bodily secretions that cling to one's clothes.

Where is the beauty in the bad breath emanating from the mouth of a beautiful woman when she wakes up in the morning? Where is the beauty in the young woman after she has borne a child or two? Where is the beauty in an old lady with a shrunken frame, scant hair, dried up skin, wrinkled flesh and a body emanating disagreeable smell? The complete reality of what lies behind the skin is revealed and there for all to see in such a body devoured by age and time. Only maggots, bacterium and vermin would look forward to feast on such a decaying body. This is what the so called intelligent, couth, highly refined, cultured, civilized and sophisticated man feeds on when he initiates the sexual act with a woman for the purpose of recreation. Can there be anything more demeaning and distasteful?

Is it worth fantasizing and drooling over such a bag of refuse?
Is it worth losing the most vital of all fluids produced after drawing from all essences that the body possesses on this bag of refuse or for this bag of refuse?
Is it worth squandering away on this bag of filth, that divine and nectar like fluid which is one's very Atman (self)? He who loses his semen loses a part of his very self in the process.

It is gone and burnt for ever. This is the absolute truth. Let all Brahmacharis remember this serious and factual statement whenever they are assailed by lust at the sight or thought of a woman. This reality should be remembered by all Brahmacharis, every time they see a woman. One should constantly remind and recollect these facts when the sight of a woman is found to be troublesome.

The national poet of India, Shri. Rabindranath Tagore has written a beautiful poem to this effect concerning an episode from the life of a Buddhist monk. Given below is the story which every Brahmachari should read and remind himself of on a daily basis:-

One of Buddha's bhikkhus is passing through a village. He is very handsome, and meditation has added a dignity, a grace to his beauty. Silence has crystallized within him and its rays are emanating from his eyes and his face. An aura of light and Ojas has graced him. One very famous prostitute sees him and is enamored of him.

That prostitute comes to him and requests the bhikkhu to rest for one night in her palace. The bhikkhu replies, "There is no rule about this so I will not refuse your invitation. I will come, but the time is not yet right. When the actual reality of your body is revealed to you, that's when I will come. Right now you are mistaken. The day you awake to the reality of it, I will come."

The prostitute could not understand this. The very meaning of a prostitute is one who does not understand any other language but the language of the body. So do not think that just because a woman is somebody's wife, she is not a prostitute. If she understands only the language of the body, she is a prostitute. As long as the language of the soul is not understood, nobody can rise above prostitution. And don't think that the word prostitute applies only to women; no, it applies to men too. Only the language of the body is understood; all transactions are carried out at the body level. The whole mind is focused only on the body, the body itself is the trade -- This is all that is meant by the word prostitute.

The bhikkhu said, "I will certainly come, but only when the reality of your body is revealed to you."

The prostitute said, "Are you mad? This is the time for you to come -- while I am young and at the peak of my beauty. My body will never be in any better condition."

The bhikkhu replied, "The concern is not for the better, the concern is for the real. When your body manifests its reality, then I will come."

The prostitute said, "I am unable to understand what you say. Please make it clear to me.

The bhikkhu said, "When nobody comes to you anymore then I will come, because at that time, your body will be showing its reality. Then the body will look the same from the outside as it really is inside. Right now it does not look the same on the outside as it really is inside. So when nobody comes to you, then I will come."

Many years passed, and the prostitute became old, leprosy had spread all over her body, every limb had started wasting and rotting away, and the people threw her outside the village. These were the same people who used to hover around her door! These were the same people who used to be dying for an entry into her palace, who used to consider themselves lucky and grateful even to get a distant glimpse of her. The same people. It was a dark night with no moon. She was in agonizing pain and thirst lying on the outskirts of the village. There was nobody even to offer her a cup of water.

That night, the bhikkhu came; he laid his hand on her head and said, "I have come. Now your body is in its real condition, now nobody comes near you. Now the outside body has become the same as it is inside. Now the distance between the outside and the inside has disappeared. The illusion that the skin and flesh had is no longer there. Now the inner filth and pus are manifest outside also; now you are the same inside and outside. Now I have come. This is the day I had promised I would come when I said that when nobody else comes to you, I will come."

The bhikkhu further said, "As far as I was concerned, even at that first meeting I could see in you what has now manifested. Yes, then, you couldn't see it. I could have become your guest even on that day, there was no difficulty, but your illusion would have increased and you would think - "Now even bhikkhus have begun to be my guests." I had no difficulty; I could have come on that first day, because I could see your body as it is today. What the whole village can now see, I had seen that day."

But that prostitute, now lying on the outskirts of the village, was not looking at her body. With closed eyes, she was still remembering those days when she had a beautiful body, when she had dignity and lived with pride in the village. Even in old age, people reflect about their days of youth. When the body manifests itself in its true form, they continue to cover it up with their mind. When even the skin cannot hide their old age, they close their eyes and delight in brooding over the past without ever realizing that they are not the body and without thinking of who they really are - The 'Atman' -- End of story.

For a few years, when in her prime, to aid creation and continuation of the race, God bestows a small part of his very own beauty into the body of a woman. Else who would take the responsibility of mating with such a bag of refuse? So there be a very strong tendency among creatures to continue their species, the great Lord has bestowed a small part of his immense bliss into the sexual orgasm or climax. Else who would be prepared to face the depression, disorientation, loss of health, vigor and life energy that accrues from losing one's vital fluid? This is the 'Maya' or play of the Almighty to ensure continuation of the race. The purpose of the power of attraction of a woman and apparent pleasure of the sexual act is this much and not more. It is to attract the male, form a family and produce offspring. If these pleasures were not associated with the activity, not one single man on earth would go ahead and agree to take the responsibility of forming a family and fathering offspring. It is the power of cupid that drives man in this direction and nothing else. So creation should continue, God has made the sexual urge in all creatures mammoth and very powerful. The wise man realizes this truth and limits his sexual contact to aid the birth of a child or two with his wife and never more. The foolish man becomes a slave to this bag of filth and wastes his life away into untold agony and suffering.

Everywhere I have used the word 'woman' is in the sense of representing that which is female and a sexual distraction for man. This is not meant to show disrespect to womenkind or insult them. When women read these answers, they should substitue the word 'woman' with the word 'man' and 'man' with 'woman'. Then, the right meaning flows through. By referring to the human body as a body containing filth, it is intended that people looking at the body of a man or woman through the sexual perspective realize the fallacy of their approach and get fixed to reality. In reality, we are neither man nor woman but only the Atman (pure soul). Just as we wear different clothes at different times, the body of man or a woman is the dress worn by the soul and not the soul itself. The Atman is neither male nor female, so we are neither male nor female. The Atman is much above these petty limitations of a female or a male body. It is the Almighty himself and omnipresent. So we are much above the limitations or need for sexuality. It is the result of ignorance around the soul that makes the pure Atman into the Jivatma (embodied soul) and makes it take a male or a female body. Wash all this ignorance along with the past karma away and the pure Atman is what remains. The whole aim of Yoga and Brahmacharya is to succeed in washing away this ignorance and delivering the Atman back into his default state of purity and bliss within the Almighty.

All impediments that one faces in the quest for Brahmacharya are the result of the ignorance around the soul and the delusion that follows. Based on one's past karma, the Jivatma (embodied soul) comes to the environment and surroundings that it finds itself in. Nothing happens by accident or by fluke. Every little occurance in each and every person's life is destined by the Almighty for working out this karma and rising one up on the ladder of evolution. The Jivatma learns an important lesson and progresses one little step through each and every earthly experience. Nothing goes to waste. So one should never give in or give up on the path of Brahmacharya carried out with the intent of self-realization even further to breaks; for there is always hope and success for even the most troubled soul.

I will request you to perform Thribandha and Pranayama followed by meditation everyday before 5.00 A.M in the morning after having a bath and at Sunset in the evening without fail. Note very carefully the Pranayama schedule and method that is to be followed:-

1. After waking up and having a bath, Pray to God asking him to redeem you of all impediments in the path of Brahmacharya for the attainment of self-realization. Then, perform a few simple Asanas such as Paschimothaanasana, Padahasthaasana, Halasana and Sarvangaasana a few times (google search the method of performing these Asanas)
2. Now start the practice of the Thribandha (methods of performing thribandha and Naadi shodhana is described in Swami Sivananda's book on Pranayama which can be downloaded at:http://www.dlshq.org/download/pranayama.htm)
3. Perform Naadi Shodhana
4. Now should be practiced Pranayama. The method to be followed has been dealt in past answers in the following link: http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2011/5/Pranayama-Yoga-Brahma

Start the practice with 16 second breath retentions. Since the problem on hand is severe, perform 6 Pranayamas in the morning and 6 in the evening. After 40 days of such regular practice in the morning and evening, increase the breath retention to 24 seconds. After 40 more days, increase the retention to 32 seconds. If forty days are insufficient for achieving increasing retentions, take more time. Finally, you should be able to achieve six 64 second breath retentions in the morning and six in the evening. Do not rush and do not hurry. Pranayama should be practiced very slowly, smoothly and gently.

After completing Pranayama, one should make the mind blank and meditate on the Almighty in Padmasana with no other thought for a few minutes. Longer durations of meditation will occur by themselves as the aspirant advances. The process is to be repeated at Sunset in the evening.

If the above mentioned routine morning and evening is followed with devotion and reverance to God, the tendency and urge to masturbate will leave the apirant within 6 months from the start of practice. It could even happen earlier, if carried out honestly and by the grace of God. Further to one year of unbroken Brahmacharya with the aforesaid Pranayama that is finally taken to 64 seconds of six sets (64*6=384 seconds) in the morning and six sets (64*6=384 seconds) in the evening, there will not be the least trace towards masturbation and the aspirant will develop distaste and Vairagya (disapassion) at the very thought of ejaculating semen. It will greatly help in one's journey towards becoming an Urdhvareta. The mind becomes calm and under one's control. The aspirant develops the ability to withhold ejaculation even in a sexually oriented wet dream and can prevent the wet dream from reaching climax by the practice of 'Mula Bandha' even in sleep. The Yogic practices should then never be stopped but should be carried out on a daily basis except on a day when one is seriously ill. This will help you overcome the problem on hand without doubt and help negate the karma accrued from previous masturbation.

Question
Is brahmacharya of atleast six years can give benefits?And how much?

Answer
Brahmacharya is a mode of life that is always beneficial, immaterial of the duration. The benefits and positive results increase with longer duration and intensity when carried out rightly. Twelve years of unbroken Brahmacharya lead to benefits of a superior nature and bestow many siddhis to the practitioner along with proximity to self-realization. Can you tell me how it can be avoided? Also please advice it is ok to walk after lunch or sleep on your left elbow (to help digestion)...Which one is better?

Also not having full dinner in the night makes me very hungry in the night? Will it become normal automatically? or Whether I should satisfy my hunger that my body requires full meal 2 times?
or Is it false hunger? kindly advice.

Regards,

Answer
1. Replace tea and coffee with a natural wheat or ragi malt. This provides more nutrients that merely drinking a cup of milk in the morning and evening and will give good energy. The method of preparing this tasty and yet healthy malt is described below:

1. Put half to three fourths cup of water into a small vessel.
2. Put one and half to 2 spoons of finely ground wheat flour (atta in hindi) or ragi flour into the water and mix well until it is well homogenized.
3. Put the vessel on flame and heat whilst stirring the mixture slowly all the time for 2-3 minutes till the mixture becomes thick.
4. Now add some powdered jaggery ('gud' in hindi) into the mixture and mix well until dissolved.
5. Add half to three fourths cup of milk into the vessel in small amounts and mix the malt well. Heat for a minute more.

This produces one to one and half cups of ragi or wheat malt. It is very nutritive and filling and much better in effect than commercial additives available in the market. It can be had on waking up early in the morning and in the evening as a substitute to coffee and tea and is health giving.

2. The sleepiness in the afternoon which you describe occurs during the initial stages when the body is not used to waking up very early at 4.00 or 4.30 A.M and hence tries to make up for the lost sleep. In person who has been waking up late at 6.30 or 7.00 A.M, the body has become addicted to excessive sleep through Tamas (inertia) and craves for the same. The correct schedule for a yogi is to wake up by 4.00-4.30 A.M and sit for Yogic practice and meditation at least by 5.00 A.M. The correct time to go to sleep at night is between 9.00-9.30 P.M. Such a lifestyle will lead to excellent Brahmacharya and fine health of the body, mind and psyche. In cases where it becomes impossible to keep awake in the afternoon further to lunch, a yogi should ensure that he does not sleep beyond 15~30 mins in the afternoon. Any sleep beyond half an hour will lead to undesirable effects in terms of Brahmacharya, health and spiritual progress. If necessary, an alarm should be set for half an hour. This is very important. With progress in Brahmacharya and purification of the body, the tendency to sleep in the afternoon will slowly go away and one can meditate in the late afternoons if time permits.

3. The correct position in which to sleep after having food or while retiring to bed at night is to sleep on the left side, with the left elbow below or beside the body. This will activate the 'Surya Naadi' (Pingala naadi) and help digestion effectively.

Also, a yogi must ensure that he refrains from drinking any water an hour before lunch, during lunch and till an hour and half after eating lunch. Water should be drunk one and half hours after eating lunch and never before. If lunch is to be eaten at 1.30 P.M, one should not drink water after 12.30 P.M till 3.00 P.M. By avoiding water intake an hour before food, all digestive and gastric juices will be secreted in the required amount and will be ready to work on the eaten lunch effectively, being free from dilution with water. By not drinking water while eating lunch, these secreted juices work efficiently and strongly on the food which is being eaten without the undesirable effect of dilution from water. By not drinking water till one and half hours after eating lunch, the juices which have interacted with food in the stomach will work on the food properly through gastric action and help the food get ready for the next stage of digestion in the intestines. But water should be compulsorily drunk after one and half hours. The same formula can be applied to breakfast but with a 45 minute duration. Water should be avoided 45 minutes before eating breakfast, during breakfast and till 45 minutes after eating breakfast. But water should be drunk on completion of 45 minutes.

For both breakfast and lunch, food should be chewed slowly and completely with thorough mastication before swallowing. This will ensure saliva flows freely and aid the oral part of digestion. One should never overload the stomach and must stop eating before the stomach gets heavy and full. Around 6-8 large glasses of water/day will generallyh prove sufficient for good health and well being and keep the body hydrated. All these methods when employed, lead to excellent digestion & health, imparting strength and well being. I have personally being following this schedule and have derived much benefits from the same.

4. DINNER:
The right time to get done with dinner is before Sunset. The main course should consist of a salad of four different fruits (any four fruits of one's choice) and four different vegetables, all in the raw form, cleaned and washed properly. Carrots and beets should be skinned before consumption. Cucumber should be eaten with skin and cabbages washed very thoroughly. Beans are beneficial. All these raw veggies should be taken in adequate amounts of 4-5 cut pieces of each. Along with these, some cooked food & milk will be sufficient. One will not feel hungry through the night.

All these should be eaten upon finishing the evening Yogic practice at Sunset before it gets fully dark. No solid or liquid should be consumed after Sunset. This is one of the secrets the ancient and wise Yogis have followed for success in conservation and transmutation leading to excellent health. With the advent of Sunset in the evening followed by Moonrise, the water element gets dominant on earth and anything eaten when the water element flowers is bound to suffer from lack of proper digestion, for the heat of the Sun is absent at night. When food suffers from lack of proper digestion, the mind becomes unsteady and one cannot get sound and deep night sleep. He will be prone to dreams, restlessness and irritation in sleep. When the mind becomes imbalanced, Veerya (semen) gets unsteady and makes one prone to discharge through a wet dream. Such a man becomes unhealthy further to lack of sound sleep and cannot wake up early. Dark circles form under the eyes and the person becomes easily fatigued and stressed. So the wise Yogis eat food before Sunset and do not consume anything after the action of Moon has started to workout.

A Yogi should always avoid excessively spicy and excessively salty food during the initial years and ensure that the evening food is high on raw fruits and vegetables. The reason is that food eaten as dinner in the evening will be left unhindered for more than 12-14 hours within the body till one wakes up next morning. So this is a 12-14 hour fast for the body where it detoxifies and purifies itself. Food let to nutrition the body during this detoxification should be very light and never heavy or loading. Fruits and vegetables fit this requirement perfectly. One becomes less prone to dreams and more prone to deep sleep when fresh fruits and raw vegetables are eaten with a simple Dal-Roti and a drink of malt in the evening. This is why the food eaten in the morning is called 'Breakfast'; for the fast between say 6.30 P.M in the evening to 6.00-8.00 A.M (12-14 hours) the next the morning is broken through the food eaten at breakfast. Breaking this fast is hence break-fast.

Upon waking up at 4.00 - 4.30 A.M in the morning and drinking 1~2 glasses of water & milk, one should drink wheat or ragi malt if one is feeling hungry. Yoga and meditation should never be practiced on an empty stomach, especially if one is feeling hungry. Practicing Yoga and meditation on a hungry stomach will lead to loss of Ojas and finally ill-health. Some milk or malt, fruits or bread should be eaten if hungry, before commencing Yoga early in the morning or soon after finishing the practice.

When new to Yoga or the practice of getting done with dinner before Sunset, one might feel hungry at night while going to bed or in the middle of the night. This is to be ignored, as long as the above mentioned dinner has been attended to. This hunger is only a carryover of past habits when the body was used to a late dinner. After a few weeks of dinner at Sunset, the body gets accustomed to the new schedule and will not get hungry at night. In fact, one will not get the mind to eat dinner or any snack late at night and will feel strongly attracted to maintaining a Sunset-dinner schedule further to the immense benefits that follow.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

Nice reading your posts. I belong to Islamic religion that has also a concept of sex restraint. The commandment is ' Those who guide their chastity, except from their spouse...' (Qur'an)

Although we got different religious affiliation, I would really love to read your views about this.

You know, i was wondering if it's really the 'non-ejaculation' thing that uplifts the man's spiritual evolution or simply the sincerity of every intentions. I say this because in Islam, all other sexual activities ranging from physical to intellectual like fantasizing is hara'am (forbidden).

Only and nothing but only with just one's lawfully wedded spouse. Maturbations, homosexuality, fastasizing, even merely second glancing to women, some sort of that are, if not forbidden, are strongly discouraged.

But then, if with wedded spouse, evrything is almost permitted. With or without ejaculation, once a year or once a day, is ok. Ofcourse with Bathing in between..

I dd not encounter any verse that restricts ejaculation which make me wonder that maybe because you have only one spouse, brahmacharya will grow in the long run.

Am i thinking it right?

Answer
The tenets of all religions are aimed in general at the masses for their upliftment. The common man, be he of any religion will not be in a position to follow the highest ideals required for self-realization all of a sudden. It takes much effort and practice to get things right in one's lifestyle. So when Muhammed the prophet recommends complete loyalty and fidelity within marriage and excludes all activities involving straying from this fidelity in thought, word and deed, as forbidden, it is the first and basic step towards the establishment of Brahmacharya.

By staying loyal to one's wife and refraining from sexual thought, word and deed with others, a basic level of character and integrity is built within man. This is the first step and not the last. A married muslim couple who are leading a proper life governed by the tenets of Islam will naturally gravitate towards a life of Brahmacharya by the other tenets advocated by the prophet. Such a couple, who have much love and reverence for Allah will without their knowledge restrict their sexual contact for the purpose of progeny and not pleasure; for how can a man or woman truly devoted to the Supreme creator and constantly trying to please him be engrossed in carnal and sexual pleasures? Islam professes the devout muslim to move from the natural state to the moral state and from the moral state to the spiritual state. This cannot be achieved if a man is constantly fixed on sexuality as a form of entertainment. It is a clear indication that man is supposed to make himself spiritual through the constant thought of Allah and get over his animalistic tendencies.

Here are some quotes from the Holy Quran which point to the importance of chastity:

"Those of you who own the means and marry should keep their eyes uncraving and their chastity secure. Those who don't, may practise fasting for it curbs desire. " - (Ibn Massoud)

This statement clearly shows that a man must marry with a pure and honest motive and never for lust. The prophet has suggested fasting as a means to curb sexual passion. In the verse [4:24] of the Holy Quran, it is clearly mentioned that attempts at marriage should be fueled with pure love and not lust or passion. This makes purity of thought and intention, the basis of marriage. Lust fueled by recreational sexuality has no place.

"Follow not the footsteps of Satan" - (Al;Qur'an, 2:209)

The footsteps of Satan here represent all those thoughts & activities that lead man astray from the path of virtue and into the doom of sin. This is another indirect way of pointing to the fact that sexual activity even within marriage is to be limited for its rightful purpose and not more; for how can a man even within his marriage, stay away from the footsteps Satan represented by lust, passion and excessive desire as long as he is a slave to these? It is a known fact that sexual activity even within marriage, if carried out continually for the purpose of entertainment and pleasure fires up lust and desire in large amounts. The person remains in this state even after accomplishing the sexual act. On the other hand, those who limit sexuality for progeny and prevent the state of lust engulfing them automatically become chaste and develop a stronger tendency for God-thought and lesser tendency for lust. So for the really God-loving man or woman, sexuality becomes the last thing on their mind and leads to a natural form of Brahmacharya without their own knowledge.

"Indeed, he truly prospers who purifies himself." (Al;Qur'an, 87:15)

True purification requires a life involving abstention from indulgence in sense pleasure as the source of entertainment or relaxation. Any spiritual aspirant, be he a Hindu, Muslim or Christian will reiterate that spiritual thoughts and pure mental states are impossible in the state of lust and passion. A man lustfully gazing at a woman cannot show the traits of kindness, mercy and compassion while he is engrossed in this state of lust. He is engrossed in lust and thick in selfish tendencies at this moment. He has little concern for others and is far away from his sense of duty and discipline. He is completely under the will of passion and knows not what reasoning is. This sows the seeds of impurity within him on a deep note. If one were to frequently occupy such a state, how could he ever dream of purifying himself as professed by Muhammed the prohet? The same applies to a man who is constantly behind his wife for carnal satisfaction. How on earth can purity develop in one weighed by such tendencies? So the need for Brahmacharya even within Muslim marriage goes unsaid. Social patterns and practices bent on flaring up the sexual desire are frowned upon by Islam. A devout muslim, who has really understood the tenets of Islam in the right spirit will soon find that recreational sexuality, even within marriage comes in the way of true spiritual progress. He voluntarily gives up such a life and focuses his thoughts and deeds on the ways of pleasing Allah with the right conduct.

The great Muslim Saint from India, Kabir has said -
" Those sunk in lust have not the chance to come out of suffering. Assured to such a one is suffering, beyond doubt".

This is a beautiful statement that holds good both for the married and unmarried. Nowhere in Islam has it been advocated for man to behave in the grip of passion for the sake of recreation or entertainment. He is always asked to govern his actions with the thought of Allah and in the right direction. Sexuality is shown as the means for procreation and not recreation and this is clearly understood by the true knowers of Islam.

It is sincerity and genuineness in being devoted to the Almighty Lord, call him Allah, Krishna or Christ that forms the basis for Brahmacharya. This devotion is nothing but being true to one's own real self. A person in the grip of lust and passion cannot be true to his very own self, let alone others. Ejaculation is only a physical release and not the cause. The cause is an impure mind driven by lust. So as long as the mind is not kept pure, one cannot claim to be chaste. Mere restraint from ejaculation is of no use and ultimately fails.

Hence a true Muslim will come to the realization that even with one's wedded spouse, involving oneself in recreational sexuality beyond the precincts of requirement for progeny lead one astray and far into the bounds of Satan who is nothing but the representation of Ignorance called as 'Avidya' by the Hindu saints. While the gross, sensual and sexually enslaved man, be he a Hindu, Muslim or Christian always tries to grab each and every form of sexual pleasure, through his wife or outside, the devout spiritual man who loves and respects God, automatically reduces and finally gives up on recreational sexuality through the course of his advancement in the course of time.

Question
QUESTION: Hello
You seem to suggest in your earlier mails that only consuming wheat is conducive for celibacy or general health.
Is this true, and also is consuming rice or other grains (instead of wheat) less favourable for general health and a life of celibacy in general?

ANSWER: Wheat is a good food source that is adequate with desirable amounts of protein, complex carbohydrates, small amount of fats and other vitamins and minerals necessary for health. Within the cereal group, wheat contains more protein than rice or corn. Wheat has fibre, which is lacking in rice. The mineral content is higher in wheat.

Unpolished rice is health giving and nutritive. Rice which is very less polished has a high content of beneficial vitamins and nutrients. But rice loses some nutrients due to milling as compared to hand pounding. The rice available commercially is highly milled and polished to give a bright color and taste. This makes total dependence on commercially available rice less beneficial to the pure Vegetarian Yogi who does not take recourse to meat. In modern, urban populations subsisting purely on rice for food, health complications arising from nutritional deficiencies are higher in number, especially as one gets close to mid life.

Keeping these facts, wheat and its products have been advocated by Yogi's as the ideal Sathwic food from time immemorial. Wheat can be eaten in combination with rice by mixing broken wheat flakes with rice and making a kind of a porridge. But merely depending on rice as a staple food has its drawbacks for the pure vegetarian. A pure vegetarian needs to supplement his food with legumes, lentils, pulses, fresh fruits and vegetables along with dairy products if he wants complete nutritional benefit without any deficiency. A combination of wheat and rice is beneficial. With populations not eating rice, wheat or corn is generally preferred.

The consumption of rice is not an impediment to Brahmacharya, but mere consumption of polished rice that is commercially available in the markets will lead to food deficiency and ill-health in the long run for sure. This cannot be made into a staple food. For this reason, a Yogi who has given up non-vegetarian food would do well to include a diet based on wheat products.

If unpolished red rice is eaten, it gives similar benefits as wheat. But this form of rice is not available in the market further to its lack of taste as compared to polished rice. On a person merely subsisting on rice, large quantities of polished rice have to be eaten to fill the stomach and sustain hunger and this causes bloating and carbohydrate retention within the system that turns into fat. One becomes prone to deficiency through mere consumption of polished rice as the staple diet. With wheat, this problem is checked to a better extent. A man can subsist on 3-4 rotis/chapathis for lunch and yet not feel very hungry the rest of the day.

The consumption of any grain such as corn, ragi, wheat or rice does not come in the way of Brahmacharya. One can eat that which one is used to. The consumption of wheat has been recommended as it is more universal, nutritive and hunger sating than rice for the pure vegetarian. Hence a rice eater would benefit better by including a few rotis/chapathis into his diet and proportionally reducing on rice.

---------- FOLLOW-UP ----------

QUESTION: Thanks for the reply, which explains the topic very well.
So you say that for some one who is used to consume rice since his child hood, if we consumes redrice/hand pounded rice or unpolished rice that is also ok.
The other question is even with wheat based breads and flours now a days, commercial profit based processing has crept in, which is creating similar problems, even for wheat consumers. The impact may be less on wheat but still it is there upto some extent.

The other impact of fertilizer based and genetically engineered foods is also to be taken into consideration as a whole now a days.
Do you have any suggestion to counter this problems?

Answer

1. The method to be employed to ensure availability of good quality wheat flour (aata) is to buy de-husked wheat grains of the best quality from the market and personally get it ground into wheat flour at a flour mill. This prevents adulteration of the flour and the wheat flour turns out to be free from additives or lack of 'bran' (outermost layer of the wheat grain under the husk which is nutritive)

2. It is impossible to determine what fertilizer is used on what crop while buying grains. As a thumb rule, it should do to buy wheat grains of the best quality from a reputable grocers shop known for quality and make it into flour in a flour mill under supervision. Such wheat tastes different, is more pure and more nutritive than commercially available, ready packed flours sold in super markets that do not have bran content. This is based on my personal experience.

3. To the extent possible, one should avoid the use of all processed foods such as ketchup, sauces, vinegar, jams and genetically engineered fruits and vegetables. It is preferable to go in for organic or local, wild vegetables and fruits sold in the market grown without genetic modifications. Ketchup, sauces and jams contain chemical preservatives and additives harmful to the body and cause toxicity in the long run. The same applies to ready made breads including brown breads sold in India. These are not really whole wheat breads but regular bread dyed with caramel to produce brown color. The use of bread should be the last resort, and can be resorted to if one is very hungry and no other food is readily available at the moment.

Question

Hi Dhananjay ,

I am trying Brahmacharya since 2009.I like this mode of life very much and doesnot wish to marry.

I donot want to hurt my father also as I can understand his feelings but I had decided firmly not to marry.Please suggest me the correct path asap.

I enjoy being alone ,meditate as much as possible.In arrange marriage I cannot decide girl's nature(it's very rare to get Brahmacharya following girl now-a-days).besides,any normal girl would consider me wierd.I am very happy alone and receiving god's grace in every walk of life.Please help your disciple.

Answer

The correct attitude that we as human beings should adopt is that of complete trust & surrender to God. In reality, we are not the doers of any action, HE alone is. We are only the tools, mediums or instruments through whom the Almighty works his divine 'Leela' (play). Just as the chisel co-operates as per the wishes of the sculptor, just as the painting brush co-operates as per the wishes of the painter, just as an actor co-operates as per the wishes of the director, our's is to co-operate fully and work as per the directions shown by the Almighty.

A person should decide on the course of action regarding marriage by first honestly contemplating on whether there is the least trace of a tendency, urge or desire for marriage. If on honest contemplation and deep thought, one finds that in some innate corner of one's mind there exists some desire to enter matrimony, then the path for liberation is through marriage. Such contemplation and deep thought regarding marriage should not be influenced by factors such as some temporary disappointment, depression, sadness or uneventful incident in life. If the decision or feeling to avoid marriage is based on such external factors, then the decision to stay away from marriage will NOT be sound or correct. The mind will return to its innate urge to enter matrimony or feel attracted towards entering marriage at a later point of time. Such a decision based on external events influencing the mind will turn out to be shallow, weak and not maintainable. Such a person should ignore this temporary feeling against marriage and accede to the wishes of his parents wanting him to get married and enter matrimony.

On the other hand, there are some people who have a very powerful poise and natural tendency that does not incline them to get married. This non-inclination is not powered by anger, revulsion, depression or a sense of inferiority. The concerned person is quite calm, serene and peaceful without the least feeling or urge for marriage. He or she feels quite complete and self-reliant in being single and all by oneself. The innate psyche does not urge or push him for marital contact. He does not feel he is missing out on something or is losing something by not being married. If such a tendency and inclination is very strong at all times, good or bad, happy or sad and forms an integral part of one's very innate nature, then such a person can consider staying away from the institution of marriage. The decision not to get married might prove to be correct in the case of such a person. He or she can devout himself or herself to getting deep into a life of spirituality and avoid getting married.

Both these pointers mentioned correspond to the effort or direction one can take as regards to marriage from one's side. These guidelines are only as regards what we propose. They do not and cannot represent the will and destiny portained by our past karma and the Almighty. As mentioned earlier, only that which the Almighty has planned for us will transpire and materialize despite the best of our efforts; for in reality. HE is the doer and we are the tools. So as human beings, our duty is to accept that which he finally proposes and not worry ourselves about whether it is in the direction of our wishes or against. If a man finds that he does not have the least urge or tendency for marriage at all times, then let him try to remain unmarried with constant God-thought and contemplation. Let him see for himself if the will of the Almighty also corresponds with his decision and if the Almighty will let him stay unmarried. Let him try to be single and watch silently what the Almighty decides. If the will of the Almighty coincides with his personal wish, then so be it, let him remain single. If by some stroke of the Almighty, he finds himself in a state a few years later where he has to enter marriage for various reasons, then let him get married. We do not know what the Almighty has in store for us. Our purview ends at listening to our inner voice and staying riveted to the path of virtue. What course we finally take as regards to marriage or any other aspect of life wholly depends on the will of the Almighty, for he is the painter, not we. We are only the painting brush which co-operates with the painter fully.

Brahmacharya and Yoga are immaterial of one's marital status. It is not that all single men have succeeded well in Brahmacharya, nor is it that all married men are unable to maintain Brahmacharya. Marriage and Brahmacharya are unconnected. He who is destined to succeed in Brahmacharya will do so immaterial of his marital status. If such a person is destined for Brahmacharya even after marriage, God arranges a wife who proves to be supportive and understanding and herself spiritual. She does not become an obstacle to Brahmacharya. The woman concerned may not be following Brahmacharya or be interested in such a life at the start of marriage. But she eventually accedes and agrees to the practice in course of time. Divine will works in converting her to being supportive. On the other hand, if it is destined by past karma that a man should not succeed in Brahmacharya, he will fail in chastity even if he is single. So the wise man does not take a stance FOR or AGAINST marriage but lets God take the decision. For the wise one, marriage or non-marriage is of no consequence. He will stay riveted to his quest for self-realization if he is single and he will stay riveted to his quest for self-realization even if married. He knows that the state of marriage or non-marriage is only one of the scenes in this drama called life and has no bearing on his purpose of achieving to the highest. He neither hates marriage nor loves being single. He neither hates being single nor loves marriage. He is in a state of equanimity further to keeping in mind the fact that the purpose of life is self-realization and he will attain to this state if the Lord wills either through marriage or without marriage. Such an attitude is the best attitude for any endeavor or aim in life. All we need to do is listen to our inner urge and tendency and go ahead with the urge as long as it is in the path of righteousness and virtue and not wrong. Whether this urge bears fruit or fails is not our concern but the will of the Almighty. Let us try our best and leave the rest to HIM, not worrying about the result. This is all man can do or is supposed to do.

Answer

The advent of illnesses related to the body, mind or psyche is normal in a person during the initial course of Brahmacharya. This occurs further to embedded toxins and impurities lodged within the system from past karma being expended. Unlike the normal man who suffers from disease or illness due to compromised immunity or weak health, the illness encountered by the Brahmachari is all together of a different kind. It does not occur due to lack of immunity but occurs further to the effect of a karmic toxin surfacing deep from within whilst being vacated. The increased accumulation of Prana within the system further to conversion of semen into Ojas pushes these toxins out of the system, just as water that is filling a tank makes objects in the bottom float up to the surface.

These are 'Karmic illnesses' and not of the normal type, though they may appear similar externally. The purification of the body and mind through these illnesses is something which should be welcomed and got done with, for the Almighty is expending these karmic debts without letting them flower into larger proportions and cause serious life long illnesses.

These illnesses go away after some time when the karmic cause behind their presence gets expended. In any case, they are to be exhausted eventually and compulsorily in each and every man immaterial of whether he practices Brahmacharya or doesn't, and the sooner it is the better.

In addition to these, one may be made to learn 'life-lessons' where in, he encounters problems in both his material and spiritual life in the course of karma which gets expended from the 'Karana Sharira (causal body). All these changes, problems, illnesses and tough encounters through life situations are only the effects of working out of past karma and need not be a cause of worry. Their purpose is to unravel the layers of ignorance around the Jivatma (embodied soul) and make it learn from its mistakes so they are not repeated in future. All these effects are intended to make man come closer to his true self and awaken to the absolute reality by getting over 'Maya' (cosmic illusion). The firm and devoted Brahmachari eventually gets free of all problems and shines well in both his spiritual and even his material life if he so desires as long as the practice is maintained with honesty and devotion to the Lord and never given up.

Question
Thank you for your previous enlightened answers.

I have been following celibacy, but I feel I am loosing to it. In the sense, I am able to maintain Physical Celibacy, and mental to great extent is taken care, but somewhere inside me still wants it. Movement I get those thought I try replacing with gods image. But somehow I am not able to overcome it, the only time I overcome it is when I detest a woman for their selfishness or something else, that time my desire for them goes away. But I really know, this not the proper way to do it(its against ahimsa which a celibate should follow). Reading scriptures helps, but somehow I just feel I am loosing to women(desire to be with them) i.e I feel the biggest power they have i.e the making you attracted towards them and in turn make your mind worldly. I don't know how I overcome this, I just hate thinking negative towards women(be it be as a symbol of pleasure or symbol of some kind of selfishness) please tell the way out from this. I have been struggling with it from almost few months and it has become intense for few months.

Thanks a Lot

Answer
The sexual urge within oneself is the strongest and most potent force created by the Almighty in order to ensure the continuation of Samsara (the dualistic world). Desire and the craving for sensual enjoyment is the means by which this finite and unreal world finds itself moving. This is an urge that is ingrained into the Jivatma (embodied soul) further to millions of past births in the human and animal form rife on sexual activity. Hence it takes much time and effort to overcome this affliction to unreality and is completely possible only further to self-realization. For the aspiring Brahmachari, it is a fight that is to be waged every minute and every day, till he reaches the supreme goal. Ultimately, success comes through the grace of God but only further to complete and expanded efforts from one's side.

It is to combat these forces that threaten to take one down and away from Brahmacharya/purity, that a life of Yoga is intended at. It is not the woman who is responsible for the weakness and vulnerability that a man feels but the ignorance within one's own self. We alone are responsible for our state of body and mind. As long as there is a strong undercurrent of the urge towards sexual need from a woman, it is a pointer to us that we should maintain and persevere in performing those acts which work at unwinding these layers of ignorance around our Atman (pure soul) which has become the Jivatma (embodied and debilitated soul). These efforts must be continuous and regular without a break. Then, gradually, these layers start to dissolve over a period of many years of unbroken Brahmacharya carried out with God devotion and meditation.

Even then, one will not be fully able to overcome the tendency to cent percent. The Yogi goes into a state where he is able to control and stay clear from the effects of Maya. For complete victory and freedom from attraction itself, contact with the Supreme through self-realization is the only solution. Then, the Jivatma having realized the falsity of the senses, further to having established itself in its true state of perfection goes to the state beyond susceptibility to Maya (cosmic illusion). So one should never give up till the final state of realization is achieved. Lord Krishna instructs Arjuna of this very fact in the Bhagavad-Gita:

" The objects of senses but not their relish turn away from the abstemious man.
Even the relish turneth away, after one has realized the Supreme" -- Bhagavad Gita, Chap II/59

There is no performance of Himsa (violence) by a Brahmachari who reminds himself of the falsity in the ego of a woman such as her selfish nature, cunning, manipulative tendency, anger etc.. Neither is it wrong to constantly remind oneself of the filthy and disagreeable nature of the human body in a woman. These are facts of a gross nature that one should remind oneself of when assailed by lust. The thought of how the body of a young beautiful woman transforms itself into its real state represented by decay and rotting as it ages is another fact that is to always be remembered. If a young beautiful woman is found to be a source of distraction and weakness as regards Brahmacharya, let it be imagined as to how the same girl will look in her old age with wrinkled skin, dried flesh, decaying teeth, scant white hair and a shrunken frame emanating disagreeable smell. Place the mental image of an old and physically unattractive woman on the younger woman. Where is the least attraction in such a person? Direct the lust within the mind on such an old and decaying body. The mind withdraws in revulsion. It shuns the thought in horror. This is exactly what the young woman you are seeing through your eyes is all about. Behind the covering of skin, is repulsive blood, flesh, urine and stool of a disgusting nature. Remind the mind that the reality behind the unreal illusion of the skin will be seen eventually in the very same girl after she bears a child and more when she starts getting old. The sense of beauty is all unreal and Maya (illusion). It is the Almighty who is most beautiful and full of sweetness and real allure. This sweetness and bliss of the Almighty can be tasted while deeply meditating on him. Do not mistake his Maya to be the real thing. Keep the mind alert and always in contemplation of this fact when you see or think of a woman.

This does not mean that men should hate women. Hate and love are dualities that are again false and non-existent. One should rise above hate or love and get anchored to the reality of the Almighty. Then true love blossoms. A man within the bounds of sexuality cannot understand what true love is. To him, love is always associated with sexuality, while in reality, true love and sexuality are unconnected! When a man is asked to develop revulsion at the aspects governing a woman, it is meant that he develop awareness of the reality behind the unreal and false nature of the so called attraction to the body in the sexual perspective. It does not mean that he should hate or look down at women. It only means that for the time being, as long as he has not reached the final state, he should be indifferent to women and avoid their thought or company, for he is not able enough to realize the falsity of what he is seeing in his current state of mind but is mistaking filth for paradise. He is not in the state where he can see the Atman within a woman. He can only see the body and its false charms.

In the one sense, this body is a beautiful mechanism of life devised by God. But for the Brahmachari who is trying to establish himself in reality, it should only be a bag of refuse. Why? Because he currently has a distorted and wrong impression of what it is and what it is not. His perspective is wrong and not real. He is under the action of Maya and not in his senses. In order to acquire the real knowledge regarding what it is or what it is not, he will have to temporarily see it in this perspective. After attaining to perfection through self-realization, he will realize it was totally unreal and an illusion and is least bothered or affected. But for now, this approach is very necessary. He does not commit any Himsa through this approach. After reaching advanced states of consciousness, true Ahimsa (non-violence) will dawn by itself even without his efforts.

Lead a life of Yoga through Bandha, Pranayama and meditation on the Almighty. Wake up by 4.00 A.M and strive hard. Keep the mind away from sensual sources. The practice of Pranayama is very important if the mind is to be brought under control and made aware of true reality. With constant efforts, things become easier and Brahmacharya becomes more within ones reach. Thoughts of distractions and weakness will reduce and make one more firmly anchored to reality. Go through some of the recent past answers regarding the method of Yogic practice and apply it practically. Pray to God for the strength and ability to overcome Maya and gain the real knowledge of the Atman. Success will slowly dawn and blossom. One should be very firm and determined and never get cowed down by failure. This is real manliness and real strength.

Question
Sir

After the long period of brahmacharya the production of semen will stop by the body , in such period the brahmachari enter in to married life and wants a Child, the reproduction of semen in the body is possible?

Thanking and God bless u

Answer
Mere indulgence in long Brahmacharya does not lead to the Urdhvaretha state (non-semen producing Yogi). To reach this state and empower the body and mind with the superhuman abilities and God-realization that follows, Brahmacharya has to be very properly carried out with the aid of thorough transmutation of semen into Ojas through means such as Bandha, Pranayama and regular God-meditation on a daily basis along with strict adherence to other Yama and Niyama.

The production of semen is controlled by the mind. In the normal person whose mind constantly indulges in thoughts pertaining to sexuality, the production of physical semen is continuous. In a Yogi who has reached the advanced state of an Urdhvaretha, the production of semen stops further to lack of a sexual signal from his mind for the body to produce semen. Then, Prana is directly converted to Ojas except for a small part which still becomes semen in order to nourish and maintain the physical body. As soon as such a Yogi enters marriage and wills to accomplish the act of reproduction, the production of semen resumes immediately. This is very simple and instantaneous further to the fact that the mind acts as a switch in the release or non-release of semen. No release of semen is possible in any man, be he an Urdhvareta or not, unless the mind gets into the sexual mode. Similarly, it is impossible for any man including an Urdhvareta to prevent the formation and release of semen if the mind does go into the sexual mode. This is the basis of Brahmacharya and why maintaining a pure mind is necessary, for unless the mind is kept clean, Brahmacharya is not possible in totality.

A real life example of this fact occuring in the 'Ramayana' is that of the great sage Maharishi Vishwamitra who had lead a life of Brahmacharya and tapas (penance) for a very long time. Upon seeing the celestial damsel Menaka and developing a sense of attraction, he succumbed to cupid and married her, giving birth to a daughter.

(see:http://www.kidsgen.com/fables_and_fairytales/indian_mythology_stories/vishwamitr)

An urge in the mind to perform sexual activity for reproduction immediately results in the formation of semen which is then expended during the reproductive act. This process occurs within seconds of mental willing and is instant.

Question
QUESTION: Dear sir, namaste;this is in follow up of "married" life subject answered by you to me dated 10/16/2011 and followed up. i am thankful and trying my best to gain from it. i feel there are many factors which affect life and sometime despite knowing what to do ideally ,we are not able to follow it completly ,i mean something called fate or destiny does affect us.what are your views regarding the same and what should be done to overcome it.is there role of astrology and its basic remedies,not going into its details.what can be done that neutralizes our our past deeds(may be previous births) which affect us now (karmic account)and prevent us from doing what we want or what we should do.
Many people believe in mahurata(auspicious time and days and inauspicious time and dates), how much really we should follow or not follow.
A different question to add how we should consider menstruating females life style ie. is that phase to be isolated and what should be her lifestyle during that time and what precautions should be taken during that time(ie.household activities like cooking etc.)so that it affects less the persons related ie.husband /others.

We are worldly people doing jobs etc also so please suggest us remedies which can be done practically apart from what is ideal.

ANSWER: 1. Everything that will be carried out and experienced by this body and mind of our's is already programmed and decided by the Almighty the moment we were born. Nothing is left to chance and nothing occurs by accident or by fluke. All these life experiences are designed by the Almighty to ensure that the Jivatma (embodied soul) moves up and progresses in terms of purity and divinity, whether it wants it or doesn't. The best course of action that one should follow is to rightly indulge in one's duty towards oneself and one's family via the occupation shown by God and devote the rest of one's time and energy towards attaining self-realization. This does not mean that one should give up all worldly activities all of a sudden. It means that one should slowly and gradually divert his mind more towards God and the attainment of higher states of spiritual consciousness through a life of Yoga and meditation. Ultimately, God alone is the doer and man the tool of operation. Knowing this, one should strive one's best towards performing one's duty and leave the rest to God without worrying about the results.

One's destiny or future cannot be changed even by a hair's breadth through astrology or religious remedies. The state one finds himself in is a direct result of one's past karma. No astrologer can alter or change one's life course even by the smallest extent. One has to persevere and workout these karma's through one's efforts alone. They have been placed in the life of the individual by the Almighty himself so man suffers for his sins, realizes his mistakes and reforms into purity and perfection. If changing or bettering one's life course was possible through an astrologer, there would have been no need for man to reach out to the Almighty. All the temples, churches, mosques and Gurudwaras would have astrologers sitting inside them as the presiding Lords and not God. So the wise man wishing progress and knowledge avoids the use of astrologers or astrology, knowing fully well that the correct and efficient path to progress is in cleansing his life of ignorance and attaining to the knowledge of the Atman (pure soul).

2. The one and only way to neutralize past deeds is through a life of purity, virtue, discipline and Brahmacharya coupled with God-contemplation. Yogic methods such as Bandha, Pranayama and meditation are the means by which this process is accelerated. All karma's are the result of our past misdeeds and can be worked out by our efforts alone and not by others.

3. For the Yogi who is leading a life of absolute Brahmacharya forsaking attachment to the fruits of his actions, doing his duty as directed by God and devoting the rest of his time and energy towards God-contemplation; all times, hours, days and months are auspicious. He has realized that the very meaning of this human birth is the attainment of self-realization and has no time to waste or while away waiting for auspicious moments or periods. This very lifetime, these years of one's life themselves are highly auspicious and divine. Animals and plants do not have the faculty to know the purpose of life or its aim. All their time is spent on survival, food, sleep and procreation. But man has been given this body, superior mind and intellect to reach this high purpose. This very human birth is an indication that the Jivatma (embodied soul) has now been offered a chance to reach the Almighty and become one with him. So every minute and hour is auspicious and divine.

The concept of muhurath (auspicious time) applies to people who have forgotten this purpose of the human birth and are spending their life away in the pursuit of sensual comforts and pleasures. For them, Godliness is separate from their own selves and this causes much fear, anxiety and worry. They resort to searching for auspicious occasions to negate this weakness and inadequacy from within. This does not apply to people on the path of Yoga and Brahmacharya if their involvement in virtue and truth is genuine and true. Why waste time and energy running after astrologers and auspicious moments when one in reality is the ever free and infinite Atman (soul) who is beyond the concept of time itself? For the honest and sincere Yogi who is leading a life governed by Yama-Niyama, who is kind to all, who wishes good for all and who leads a life based on purity, virtue and discipline, striving to realize God without harming anyone the least, which time is not a good time?

People lead a life governed by lust, untruth, violence, cheating, jealousy, illegitimate relationships and selfishness. Then, after spending an entire week in activities governed by such tendencies for selfish benefits, they visit a temple, church, mosque or Gurudwara and pray to God asking him for good luck and fortune! Then, they visit astrologers and spend much money on poojas, remedies and rites for prosperity and well being. Which God or astrologer can help these bundle of contradictions? If the same effort was applied at becoming more selfless, more true, less violent and more honest and sincere with oneself and with others, benefits and prosperity would follow all by themselves when the karma obstructing prosperity would vacate and empty. There would be no need to visit a place of worship, meet an astrologer or perform 'seva' (sacrifices) to please God. This body is the greatest and most auspicious temple with the Atman (soul) within as the presiding deity; for the Atman is no different from the Parabrahman (Almighty). He who is striving to realize this truth and unite with it through absolute ahimsa (non-violence), sathya (truth), astheya (non-stealing), Brahmacharya (continence), aparigraha (non-possessiveness) is the greatest Sadhaka (aspirant) and this is the best seva (sacrifice).

So for the Yogi leading the right life with constant perseverance at not doing wrong, these limitations that apply to the non-Yogi do not apply.

3. Except for those activities that cause stress, physical strain and discomfort, all other spiritual activities and especially meditation can be practiced by the menstruating woman without exception. The process of menses is a very natural and normal phenomenon in a woman that has been designed by the Almighty himself to expel the unfertilized egg every month. There is absolutely nothing impure or unholy about this process. A woman should never be considered low, evil or be despised during this period. She should be given rest and allowed to carry on with her spiritual activities without exception. During the olden days, proper sanitation and methods of preventing bleeding were not very efficient. Hence women were advised to refrain from entering the pooja room, kitchen and other areas where there was a chance that blood flowing out without proper sanitation could fall on idols, utensils or food items kept in these places resulting in an unhygienic atmosphere. With the advent of modern and efficient methods of sanitation, women no longer face this problem of blood spilling out. Hence these rules can be relaxed.

Avoiding Yogasana, Pranayama and physical exercises that cause physical strain during these days, meditation and contemplation can be carried out by all means. We being the Atman (pure soul), contemplation and meditation on the Almighty is our eternal birthright and Dharma. None can prevent us from accomplishing the same at any minute or hour of the day or month. Since the period of menses involves physical weakness for a lady, avoiding rigorous physical activity is advisable.

QUESTION: namaste sir,thanks for the clarification, actually your views are ideal but for a person doing full day job and then trying to follow what is ideal is challanging but not impossible. actually i feel that there should be some motivational figure whom we can meet and take inspiration or visit a scared or holy place , but there are very few of those we know, can you please suggest a few places/persons whom we can meet and get inspirations , if its possible i wish to meet you sometime whenever convenient.
actually I wish to do job at place where we can visit holy/religious places or natural places where we can listen to our own self and i wish this is fullfilled as our ultimate aim is not only money saving for our future but also giving to contemplate so that we get inspirations to improve our self and follow the ideals of brahmacharya etc. and other things as we need it for our progress...thanks once again sir....

Answer
Apply honest and sincere efforts as regards to a life of Brahmacharya and Yoga to the best extent possible. Whenever following all ideals completely is not possible all of a sudden, strive to gradually and slowly reach that stage to the best extent possible in the midst of daily work related to career. Cultivate devotion, trust and surrender to the Almighty, praying to him for progress in spirituality. If one's efforts are genuine and true, God reaches out to the aspirant. This may not happen all of a sudden in a few weeks or months. God tests our perseverance, devotion and commitment. If our intentions and efforts are true, the blessings and grace of God descend and reach us in course of time without fail. One has to be patient and tenacious initially when one sometimes feels that no progress is occurring. In reality, progress will be silently occurring without our own knowledge as long as our efforts are true and real. It might not be seen externally all of a sudden but becomes evident after a year to two years of unbroken Brahmacharya coupled with God-devotion and meditation. This is based on my personal experience.

I'm personally not aware of or in touch with any person in the present times who can be inspirational to an aspirant of Brahmacharya/Yoga. It should be remembered that any contact one makes with such intentions should be with a self-realized soul who has reached the state of perfection and not otherwise. The world is filled with false and fake God-men who claim to possess much knowledge and siddhis. One should stay clear of such people who make tall claims and extract money/gifts from innocent and gullible aspirants. The true master never, ever charges money for his guidance and never makes any claims of powers or abilities. The true master is looking for genuine honesty and devotion in the disciple and nothing else. Such a master is very difficult to obtain and does not let all and sundry approach him. One has to convince God of one's devotion and sincerity for destiny to provide us with such a master. Self-realized masters and Yogis who meditate in remote forests or the snow capped peaks of the Himalayas do not show themselves to the common man that easily. It takes much Sadhana and spiritual advancement before these saints decide to appear before the aspirant and guide him. If our intentions and efforts are genuine, God eventually sends forth such a master or helps one succeed in making such contact if it is so destined. In some cases, no such master may appear or be available, but one feels the very presence of God himself guiding and leading the aspirant.

One very efficient method of procuring the grace of a self-realized saints such as Shri. Guru nanak, Shri. Kabir, Shri. Ramakrishna Paramahansa, Bhagawan Ramana Maharishi, Maharishi Pathanjali etc... is to install a photograph of the saint one wishes to get guidance from and pray to the saint everyday asking for guidance in the progress towards self-realization. All these people are self-realized Yogi's of the highest order and exist all over space and time further to having merged with the Almighty. They guide and direct the aspirant if he proves his devotion and urge for realization is true and genuine. If installing a photo is not possible, mentally meditating on them before the start of Yogic practice will be equally beneficial.

All places of pilgrimages in the Himalayas such as Badrinath, Kedarnath, Mount Kailas etc...are high on spiritual vibrations. While the actual temples at these places may not be very suitable for meditation and God-contemplation considering the rush of visitors and the resulting chaos, calm forests and river banks surrounding these places or en-route will prove to be useful for contemplation during visits.

Since I'm only an aspirant and an ordinary student of Brahmacharya/spirituality, I will not be able to help as regards that support which only a self-realized Guru can award to his disciples. My presence here is only that of a volunteer who shares what little he knows with fellow aspirants.

Question
I am slightly deviating from the high ideals you have propounded in your earlier mails, i.e., absolute brahmacharya, God realization, etc.
For some one who hasn't yet gathered up his mind towards this high ideal or who hasn't yet reached a stage where he is able to pursue absolute celibacy, due to marraige, his own desires, or some other reasons, what dicipline or lifestyle do you advocate for atleast living a healthy and normal life?
May be this applies to the young people who are just about to start a married life.

Answer
The objectives and ideals discussed in earlier answers are the correct and final mode of lifestyle which one should aim at achieving if one wants to make the full use of one's abilities in the quest for the purpose of the human birth - Self realization.

Following such a lifestyle is not achieved all of a sudden but gradually and slowly with constant efforts and perseverance in this direction. To those who still have the desire for experiencing the pleasures of 'Samsara' (finite, dualistic world) and feel a lack of tendency towards a life of complete and strict spirituality, they would do well to keep such indulgence with in limits through a restrained and controlled attitude of moderation. This is enabled by keeping in mind the fact that uncontrolled sense indulgence will eventually lead man astray.

As regards to sexual contact within marriage, the method to be employed in getting over the urge for sexual intercourse is to first gradually reduce the frequency of ejaculation and thereby reach the state of complete non-ejaculatory relations. In such a relationship, both man and wife do not climax or reach to the state of an orgasm but stop sexual activity before ejaculation. The tendency to ejaculate or climax is withheld by withholding the breath (kumbhaka) as and when the tendency to ejaculate arises during intercourse. When this technique is perfected, both the man and wife become able to indulge in intercourse without ever ejaculating. Such a relationship is termed 'non-ejaculatory relations'.

After a few months to a year of such a relationship without even a single ejaculation, the person concerned will develop a distaste for ejaculation though still attached to performance of the sexual act. He can then work at getting free of the very need for physical contact through intercourse if his efforts are adequate and if God wills.

This method is much better than a lifestyle of recreational sexuality within marriage which results in loss of the vital fluid indiscriminately and in an uncontrolled manner. Only a small portion of the semen retained this way is converted into Ojas. Some portion will limit itself to betterment of the physical body within certain limits through partial resorption. However, it cannot give benefits beyond a certain limit both in terms of complete removal of physical and astral toxins through working out of karma or real spiritual progress which starts only further to the practice of complete Brahmacharya even within marriage. It can at best only be used as a passing stage but should not become a permanent way of life. The desire for the enjoyment of sexual pleasure will not subside if the sexual act is used for recreation even without ejaculation. As long as the desire for carnal enjoyment is at its high, the desire for spiritual progress leading to self-realization will not blossom. Both these are mutually exclusive. The degree of presence of one limits the degree of presence of the other. This is the law made by the Almighty Lord.

The real Dharma of a man or woman is resorted to only further to the observance of strict and complete Brahmacharya without any sexual thought, word or deed even with one's own spouse and further to channelization of the sexual energy into God-devotion and meditation. The spiritual progress and advancement that one achieves further to such effort is to be experienced and cannot be described in words. The purpose of sexual activity is procreation and not recreation. This is and will always remain the complete truth.

Answer

From a study of the Vedas and the Upanishads, we get to understand that before the Almighty indulged in the creation of this finite world that we see around us comprising the Earth, the Sun, the planets, the stars and other solar systems comprising of various other planets and stars stretching to billions of light years in distance, there was only an immense void (emptiness) stretching to infinity. We all know that the definition of infinity refers to something that has no boundaries, no limits and no restrictions. It is continuous and unending in all directions. So before creation, the Vedas tell us that this unending continuity of infinity, completely empty, extended in all directions. Next, the Vedas tell us that this unending continuity of infinity though fully empty of material objects, had always been completely filled by an immense, all potent, all pervading and infinitely powerful Universal force, again extending in all directions to the extent of infinity. In the Vedas, this infinite, universal force is referred to as the 'Primal Purusha' or the 'Ancient one'. It is also called as the 'Parabrahman'/ 'Nirguna Brahman' (The one without attributes) or the Almighty. It refers to the Almighty Lord, the great creator. The one who is formless, nameless, colorless and shapeless and infinite in all attributes. There is not an inch of space anywhere on the earth, the sky, the stars, the planets or even beyond which this Ancient one does not occupy. He is beyond time, space and limitation. He has always existed and will always exist. He was never born and nor does he ever die. He is the cause of all causes and effects while he himself does not have a cause. The Vedas say that words cannot do justice in describing the extent, immensity and entirety of this Ancient one. They say that the human mind cannot understand the extent of scope and reach of the Almighty. One can fully understand this creator called the Almighty only further to self-realization and complete merger within him. Those who merge this way into the Supreme cannot return back to tell us of the experience. It is like a drop of water that has merged into the ocean. Further to merger, it is no longer distinguishable and cannot ever, ever be brought back. It is impossible to get that particular drop back into our hands again.

In the Bhagavatham, it is said:
"Prathamo Brahman, Dwitheeyo Naasthi"

- HE was the first, there is no second.

This means that HE has always existed and nothing ever was born or nothing came after HIM. This is a beautiful statement that points to us that all that we see around us comprising of mountains, land, rivers, oceans, the sky, planets and everything else was created by HIM out of his will. Yet we also know that all this creation of his is again unreal and only his Leela (divine play) and non-existent in terms of reality. It is like the work of a magician - appears real but is unreal. We know very well from the laws of physics that all matter is really not matter but energy held together within a frequency of vibration that makes it appear to be matter. The denser the energy and its frequency, the harder and more solid the object. So objects are really energy and not matter. In reality, no matter exists. No object exists. It is all the work of energy manifested in this form by that one single Almighty through his 'Leela (divine play) enforced by Maya (the cosmic illusion)

In what order did he create this world? The 'Taithariya Upanishad' describes this clearly:

"Aakashaath Vaayuhu, Vayo agnihi, Agney aapaha, aapah prithivi, pritivyaad oshadayaha, oshadheebhyo annam, annath purushaha..."

- "First he created Akaasha or space. From space he created Vaayu or air. From air he created Agni or fire. From fire he created Aapaha or water. From water he created Prithivi or the Earth. From the Earth was created oshadhi or nutrients. From the nutrients came annam or food. From food came this human body."

Since we are not the body, mind, intellect, consciousness or ego but only the soul, since all objects are not really objects but only forms of energy, it remains that all forms of energy originate from HIM. So if we discount the presence of this body and its faculties, the world of unreal objects and physical creations in the reverse order as that mentioned in the Upanishad, we come back to the one and only Supreme who is the source. So the Atman or the pure soul is no different from the Almighty and as described in the Bhagavatham, he came first and there was nothing that came after him. So everything other than HIM is unreal and false. HE alone is real. This implies that the Atman or pure soul is only a relative concept as regards this body but not an absolute concept. In terms of the absolute, the Parabrahman or the Almighty alone exists and the concept of Atman dissolves. The Almighty alone is absolute and this concept of us as individuals is false and only the result of 'Maya' or the cosmic illusion where in the Almighty himself makes a 'small part' of his infinite self forget its true nature of infinity by wrapping it with layers of ignorance and this physical body with its mental faculties. The 'small part' referred to above is the Atman and further to this cosmic illusion, it becomes the 'Jivatma' (individual degenerated soul). In reality, everything is an illusion similar to the one created by the magician, but only much better in quality. The Almighty alone is real and we ourselves are a part of this Almighty and become the Almighty himself further to merger. Even before the merger, we still are an indivisible part of this Almighty. We have have not REALIZED this fact due to the ignorance surrounding our soul and hence consider ourselves separate from HIM.

Since the Almighty occupies all space and time comprising of infinity, this entire universe and beyond is us alone and nothing else. We occupy everything and pervade each and every inch of space and time to entirety. We DO NOT yet have this realization. That will come further to self-realization. The objects such as mountains or rivers or stars or planets are unreal further to the fact that they are only forms of energy and not matter in reality. So what now remains? We alone remain and it is no longer 'WE' but everything. Further to dissolution of this unreal body after self-realization, the realized soul merges into the infinity of space filled with HE himself in entirety. Then, there is no difference between him and the Almighty. Even before realization there is no difference. HE THINKS HE IS DIFFERENT due to the cosmic illusion of Maya.

Shri. Shankaracharya the great Yogi who propounded the Advaita philosophy has hence said -
"Aham Brahmaasmi" - "I myself am the Brahman or Almighty".

The Upanishads say - "Tat Tvam Asi" - "You are THAT Supreme. Nothing else"

The 'I' referred to here is not the body, mind intellect or the ego but the Atman. The Atman in the final state is the Almighty himself and occupies all space and time to an extent of infinity. Hence the Atman contains everything and everything exists and springs from the Atman alone.

To overcome the wrong thinking which has brought us down into this limited state, which has made us forget our real nature of infinity, karma has to be undone and cleansed around the Jivatma and the mind united with God in totality. It then automatically merges in the one totality called the Brahman. So the whole universe and beyond is within oneself as one has occupied each and every inch of it in totality. When one being the Atman which is the Parabrahman himself has filled everything in totality, where is the need to look for something outside? Where is 'outside'? There is no outside or inside. Outside and inside arise when there is a demarcation. when there is a boundary. How can outside or inside exist in empty space extending to infinity filled by us completely? So the vedas declare:

"Sarvam Khalvidam Brahman"
-" Everything is verily the Brahman or Almighty."

So everything is within us and we are within everything. We are 'Sat-Chit-Ananda' or the one and only truth-consciousness-bliss. The purpose of Yoga & Brahmacharya is to work at negating the illusion which is preventing us from realizing this fact and REALIZE the unity of one's infinity with the Supreme.

Question
Sir,
I have started practicing Brahmacharya for the past 1 week, and hopefully I'll Go through this month. Could you please tell me what should I expect from a year of Brahmacharya. I want to know the changes that would happen each month of the year.

Answer
Further to one year of unbroken Brahmacharya, the aspirant will find himself in the midst of removal of physical, astral and karmic toxins lodged within. The tendency for lustful activity and involvement will reduce greatly leading to more peace, serenity and tranquility. The tendency for anger, greed, jealousy and attachment will reduce as compared to earlier.

Month-wise improvements cannot be charted as these changes differ from person to person, depending on each individual state. On the whole, it becomes easier to stay riveted to this mode of life and get on the track of real spiritual progress through deeper meditation and a better awareness of who we are and the world around us. The realization of the unreal nature of this world starts to slowly bud in the Brahmachari.

Question
Sir,
If I practice celibacy for 12 years with sincerity, can I achieve anything I want in life? (My Dream Job, Dream CAR, Fame, Money etc.)

Answer
When the Yogi who has become a complete Urdhvareta by the honest and unbroken practice of Brahmacharya with complete God-devotion and surrender beyond 12 years becomes eligible and deserving to conquer the highest achievement of the human birth by self-realization itself, what is there in this world that will not be attainable by the Yogi if he so desires? Anything and everything in the material or the spiritual plane can be attained by such a spotless Brahmachari if his desire to acquire a particular object is that strong. The accomplishment of the things that you have mentioned are child's play for such a mahatma considering the power, ability and all encompassing knowledge that are at his disposal.

Lord Shiva tells Goddess Parvathi in the 'Shiva samhita' to this very effect:

"Siddhay bindo Mahadevi, Kim na sidhayathi Bhuthale..."

- "O Goddess Mahadevi, What is there on this entire earth that is unattainable by the spotless Urdhvaretha who has conquered his BINDU (seed) through complete mastery over it through Brahmacharya? By the practice of Brahmacharya, the impossible becomes possible. That is, all Siddhis (supernatural powers) reside at the divine feet of the enlightened Urdhvareta."

The mastery over his bindu (seed) awards superior faculties of all kinds to the Yogi. It is another matter that Yogi's who have attained to such a high state do not aspire for such impermanent, materialistic things which have an end and are again a form of 'Maya' (illusion). They have their eyes set on the accomplishment of the highest goal that is ever possible in the human birth namely God-realization. The bliss, joy, freedom and immense state of loftiness that come further to self-realization makes material things such as money, name, fame and power look very ordinary and uninteresting to such a Yogi. Real yogis do not generally waste their time and energy behind these impermanent material objects that pamper the ego resulting in more karma and suffering but keep their minds fixed on God and God alone, even if they happen to become rich by a stroke of destiny. However, if the Yogi does will and wish for such material comforts, they can be his beyond doubt.

Question
Dear Sir

I feel absolutely gutted. I had a relapse last night, and I am suffering terrible depression. I keep promising myself I'll give up and after a few months or at the most a year I give in- but this time I have to make a super promise. It is not worth the strain and guilt for a few moments pleasure.

I want to know if there is any way to stop erections. I feel this at night is the main cause for my relapse, then I end up staring at the erect penis- maybe this is the fatal flaw. Plus all those previous samskaras keep haunting me- please help me!

Answer

The tendency to indulge in activities that result in a break of Brahmacharya have no connection with the time of the day or with other external factors. The problem is wholly internal. It is our karmic state of body, mind and psyche that contributes to what we are and how we think. The past Vasanas (tendencies) that are stored in the causal body due to past Samskaras (impressions) are the actual cause behind these emotions to surface. These past impressions are the direct result of our past actions and this is why it is very important for a Brahmachari to stop and discontinue all forms of indulgence in sexual thought, word or deed in his present and future.

Actions which have been committed in the past are done and frozen. They are beyond our control. They are like arrows which have been shot from the bow. The arrow will reach its target once it has been shot, even of the archer repents for having shot it, after shooting it. Its path or target cannot be changed once it has left the bow. One has to bear the fruit of such actions, good or bad. There is no other way of working out such karma but by the experience of suffering. But the present and future are in our hands to some extent. Through strong will, determination, honesty, sincerity and devotion through surrender to God, we can succeed to a large extent in molding our present as regards Brahmacharya. If our efforts are genuine and consistent, God eventually translates them into success. This is why it is very important for a Brahmachari to be very strict in not letting sexual thoughts blossom into lust. It is very necessary that all forms of sexual thoughts, words, deeds and activities which may fire up lust be desisted from and the mind kept busy with work, sports or exercise and God-meditation. The mind is the key to success and the key to failure. As long as it is kept occupied with the right kind of activity, the body follows suit. If the mind is let loose and free, it starts to wander back into its old haunts. So the Brahmachari who is serious about getting from from this vicious cycle where indulgence in sexual karma creates more new impressions in the mind and further breaks should keep his mind occupied with the right kind of activity and lifestyle.

The practice of Bandha, Pranayama and meditation early in the morning before 5.00 A.M and in the evening at Sunset is the best method to keep the mind on track. One should make it mandatory to wake up by 4.00 or 4.30 A.M and sit for Yogic practice at the earliest after having a bath. The practice of Thribandha and Pranayama is the only solution to burn away and reduce desires in the Karana sharira (causal body) and make it still. The same practice should be carried out at Sunset in the evening without fail. Those who practice Thribandha, Pranayama and meditation twice a day by waking up as described above will totally get free from the weakness to fall prey to masturbation or sexual intercourse in course of time. There will not be the least trace or tendency to masturbate. This is based on my personal experience.

This will lead to rock steady Brahmacharya and help one stay clear from letting sexual thoughts grow into lust. As long as one has not attained self-realization, past impressions stored within will occasionally surface. If the aspirant is alert and quick in negating such thoughts as soon as they arise without succumbing to them, then the problem is diluted and easier to handle. If there is the slightest encouragement or support to these thoughts from one's side, they snowball into larger proportions and become unmanageable to handle. So such thoughts when they arise should be displaced by whatever means the Brahmachari feels is effective at the very start itself. If let to grow, it becomes humanly impossible to curb them down.

An erection is the effect and not the cause. The cause is the tendencies stored in the mind sometimes fueled and encouraged by one's present lack of vigilance as regards lust. So the correct method is to go about erasing these past tendencies. That is the only method which works. Through Thribandha, Pranayama and meditation on God with devotion, through waking up early and retiring to bed early, through giving up meat, alcohol, tobacco, overly spiced or seasoned foods, through staying clear of erotically stimulating sounds, visuals and company, the act of gradual erasing of such tendencies is put into motion. If determined and sustained efforts are applied over a course of time, success will follow without doubt leading to establishment in Brahmacharya.

Question
Sir,
I want to be an inventor/scientist. Can 100% dedicated practice of Brahmacharya help me increase my mental power (ability to perform calculations fast, intuition etc..)???

Answer
The practice of Brahmacharya will undoubtedly contribute to the development of a superior brain and intellect in course of time. One should be patient and carry on the practice for long without any breaks, following which mental faculties get honed and rise to superior levels. This is a process that occurs over a span of years and not in days or months.

Question
Sir,
How can celibacy increase physical strength, and to what extent?
After how many months can I see the results?

Answer
Semen further to transmutation undergoes resorption and enriches all the cells and living tissues within the human system with Prana (life energy). This leads to better health, vitality, vigor and well being. Based on the kind of exercise adopted to strengthen muscles, build stamina or develop endurance, that particular aspect starts to shine with vim and power.

The results as regards improvement at the physical level generally become noticeable after a few months of unbroken Brahmacharya. Depending on one's original physical constitution and state of health, these results vary from person to person. Overall, it can be safely assumed that Brahmacharya when carried out right with adequate physical activity, intellectual work and God-meditation results in improvement at all fronts.

Question
QUESTION: As I progress through my practice of Brahmacharya, I've noticed that I am increasingly aware of my dreams whereas before I didn't remember them hardly at all. Also I am starting to feel like I have more conscious volition of action during dreams. Unfortunately I still haven't mastered the awareness that it is only a dream and continue to find myself in sexual situations. This has not caused a break yet, but I am concerned that it eventually will. I'm also concerned that the Varanas are deeply ingrained and I want to remove them. My question is whether I will eventually be able to eradicate these thoughts and take control through conscious dream realization, or will the vasanas continue until my subconscious is completely clear of them. It seems that I am being tested in waking state also, as very attractive women have crossed my path more often, even though I'm not looking for them. Maya is ratcheting up the intensity. My only goal is liberation though.

On a side note, I would also like to share that my previous acne skin conditions have improved dramatically since my brahmacharya practice.

ANSWER: 1. A dream is the manifestation of Samskaras (impressions), Vasanas (tendencies) or thoughts that might have been indulged in while awake or the recollection of past experiences/deeds that have ingrained themselves into the sub-conscious mind. True progress in Brahmacharya will gradually lead to the state where one develops an increasing ability to break free of sexually oriented dreams and prevent such a dream from reaching the state of culmination through ejaculation. The attainment of this state takes time to attain and is dependent on factors such as the magnitude of past impressions, present efforts and the longing one has within to never, ever loose semen. On occasions where one finds himself at the point where one is about to ejaculate, say in a sexually oriented dream, one can develop the ability to perform 'Moola Bandha' even in sleep just at the point before ejaculation. This will cut the chances of nightfall and help one develop better maneuverability in steering the stream to negation.

2. Sometimes, recurring sexually oriented dreams that threaten to become wet dreams are an indication that the Brahmachari has committed some action which he shouldn't have. An example would be a Brahmachari who has given up eating meat for more than a year since he started Brahmacharya and who has not encountered frequent erotic dreams further to honest practice. For some reason or out of temptation, he breaks the rule and goes back to eating meat. In such a case he may encounter sexually oriented dreams day after day that threaten to break his practice. The Brahmachari now takes a cue, and on self-introspection intuitively realizes that his breaking the food habit could be the reason. He prays and apologizes to God for the mistake and resolves never to eat meat and stops meat eating with immediate effect. The dreams also stop immediately! In this way does the Lord correct and push back the erring Brahmachari onto the right track. With increasing progress in Brahmacharya, the ability to read and fathom dreams also increases.

3. Eradication of thoughts that manifest in one's dreams can be accomplished to a large extent by regulating our activities while being awake. While complete eradication is not possible at the early stages of Brahmacharya further to the presence of strong impressions from the past, progress in this direction is very possible if a sense of conscious effort is ingrained into the sub-conscious while awake. The tendency for sexual situations to crop up can be reduced to a very large extent by not fantasizing or imagining related thought whilst being awake. Some thoughts in the sub-conscious could however be so strong that there is no other way but to expend them through a dream. In any case, constant God-thought, God-devotion and meditation just before retiring to bed goes a long way in producing deep, dreamless sleep (Nidra) which is relaxing and rejuvenating.

4. The deeper and stronger the progress in Brahmacharya, the more testing are the times. But for the one who has absolute devotion to God, who is constantly striving to negate his ego by reminding himself that this entity called 'I' in terms of the ego does not exist but is only an illusion and who constantly tells himself of the unreal and false nature of this phenomenal world, all testing times pass and the boat of Brahmacharya sails on.

The Upanishads declare "Sarvam Khalvidam Brahman" - "Everything is verily the Brahman". There is no you, no I and no world. All these are illusory. The Almighty alone is real and occupies all space and time to an extent of infinity. We are really an integral part of the infinity called the Almighty and nothing else. This body, mind, emotions and desires are all false and an illusion. One's true self and nature are that of the Almighty himself, full of bliss, knowledge and supreme consciousness. Reminding oneself of this truth and meditating on it, the Brahmachari should stay riveted to the great and noble path of Brahmacharya which only the fortunate are allowed to succeed in.

Answer
The initial few years of honest and true Brahmacharya in the case of those souls who have reached their last birth on the earthly plane or who have only a few births left will generally involve surfacing and working out of very strong karma that has been carried over from previous existences. The point to be noted here is that this earthly existence being the last or one of the last few remaining for such Jivatmas (embodied souls), there is a kind of an urgency or a stage of ultimatum in an informal manner as regards expulsion and working out of the last chunk of remnant karma which is blocking flight into the state of enlightenment. In such cases, a multitude of problems and unfavorable situations which manifest in the form of illness, disease, bad luck, disappointments and pain in general occur in the destiny of the Brahmachari.

The principle behind this phenomenon is that the particular Jivatma (embodied soul) has reached the stage in evolution where these karmas are ripe for fruition and lesson teaching. Some very valuable lessons of truth and knowledge will be learnt by the Jiva through these experiences resulting in the attainment of a state which becomes very conducive for liberation. It must be remembered that the state of enlightenment or self-realization is possible only when there does not exist even the least tendency towards lower emotions and one has reached the extremely pure and crystal clear state of Godliness or saintly disposition. What is it which is preventing us from reaching such a state when the true 'us' or the soul is itself God? It is the ignorance wound around the soul that is preventing the saintly state. How has this ignorance come in the first place? It has come further to negative karma generated from negative tendencies within us that made us indulge in wrong actions in the past.

How does one unwind this ignorance and burn it out? It is unwound through a life involving thorough conservation and transmutation of the vital energy, God-devotion, austerity and meditation which then displaces these layers of ignorance and the associated karmas in a gradual manner. Every time a layer of karma surfaces, it manifests in the form of some undesirable state of mind, body, psyche or destiny which causes pain and suffering to the aspirant. One should welcome such occurance knowing well that there is no other way out but to get done with the suffering once and for all, for it is a result of our own misdeeds in the past. These are really lessons for the Jiva, engineered with the intention of ingraining in it a sense of righteousness.

One can be very sure that all those who get prodded by destiny towards a life of Brahmacharya and Yoga fall under this bracket to a certain degree. This especially applies to those who find in their lives that their efforts not withstanding, they are gradually nudged by destiny into a life of Brahmacharya and God-thought in spite of themselves. They realize that they have no option but to carry on with this mode of life. How much ever they try to revert to their earlier mode of life or wish to be like 'others', God seems to have a different plan for them. In reality, one should be grateful and consider oneself fortunate that one has been chosen by God for liberation and release when millions of unfortunate souls are floating in this ocean of Samsâra (finite, dualistic world), totally oblivious to their true identity and in the grip of sin and ignorance.

A man who suffers along this course emerges virtuous, pure and Godly eventually, never ever to display traits of evil or sin. Such is the power and strength with which the Lord works. Negative traits and tendencies are burnt in the fire of punishment with matchless precision and thoroughness. He eventually reaches a state where not even in his dreams will the man wish bad or evil for even his enemies. This is how saints and sages who reach to the highest are produced. It is a state that is reached after much toil, suffering and lesson learning. But it is a state well worth any amount of toil, for man reaches his default state of perfection and merges with the Almighty, to exist in eternity in an indescribable state of bliss, knowledge and existence. He becomes forever free from birth on the earthly plane (Samsara) which is an ocean of endless suffering.

The Almighty is the most just and impartial entity. Nothing ever happens by chance or accident. Each and every experience encountered by the Jiva is designed to uplift it a step higher and get it closer to its default state of Godliness. Knowing it to be such and reminding oneself that this world and its trappings are Mâya (illusion), one should stay firm in his vows of Brahmacharya and Godliness.

Question

Hello Dhananjay,
I have completed 1 year of unbroken celibacy.as log as brahmacharya concerns to avoiding lust in thought word & deed,I was successful but if we consider absolute brahmacharya that also consist of avoiding negative emotions I was not successful even for tow weeks.If I continue like this what can I get & can not get? I couldn't have performed your routine practices you recommended but I have exercised esp running & jugging, cold water bath,being in cold weather & also a few kind of pranayama & asana & trataka (gazing at a picture or flame of candle) but not regularly & in fixed time.the principal reason I couldn't perform a routine practice is the unstable emotional conditions I have.At the time of practice I have a hurried mode.in daily life I always blame myself for the least mistakes i committed & it grows easily in large extent.I have never succeeded overcoming this kind of attitude.I remind you I have obsession & dependence on Fluoxetine.Please give me your advise.

Answer

One should render one's heartfelt thanks and gratitude to the Almighty for having given success in Brahmacharya. His grace and will alone are responsible for success. We may strive and put in our efforts, but success is finally awarded by him alone.

Success in a year of unbroken Brahmacharya without willful indulgence in sexual thoughts, words and deeds and without the voluntary release of semen gives a certain amount of orientation and confidence to the practitioner as regards his strengths and weaknesses. One will be in a better position to analyze one's plus and minus points as regards domains where there is scope for further improvement. Making a thorough and logical analysis of the same, the Brahmachari should make a list of those negative emotions, words and deeds he finds himself coming back to and consciously start striving at negating such thought patterns which fire up these emotions. Efforts should be applied in curtailing and nullifying the action of the ego as and when it starts raising its head due to past habits. There is no ego in reality. It is the biggest Maya (illusion) and the chief cause for downfall in Brahmacharya. The birth of ego also robs one of clear thinking and positivism, immediately giving rise to faith in the negative. Negative emotions soon follow suit and inundate the mind and body. This is when we become prone to committing mistakes as regards ourselves and others. This is the first step towards formation of negative karma which will have to be worked out through suffering at a later stage. So both from the point of view of Brahmacharya and overall karmic cleanliness, one should seriously work towards negating unwanted emotions that threaten to rob one of innate Godliness.

Performing the physical exercises and activities that you have described are no doubt beneficial to Brahmacharya. But the aim of Brahmacharya is not merely physical but mental, psychic and finally spiritual. The final and most important aim of Brahmacharya is to lead one discover the truth about one's own self (Atman). All problems man faces are based on the ignorance of not knowing who he really is. It is this ignorance born out of desire and anger that lead man astray. This is why we practice Brahmacharya, so we can ultimately reach that Supreme state where we are free from all problems - physical, mental, psychic and karmic. So we can reclaim our lost state of infinite bliss and go beyond all forms of suffering.

To take it to the next level, gradually try to develop a sense of God devotion and admiration. Work seriously at slowly getting free from falling prey to negative emotions such as anger, attachment, greed, arrogance, jealousy etc.. by reminding oneself that all these emotions are totally uncalled for even in the most trying of situations and that they are the chief cause behind all forms of suffering. The man who has developed control and finally risen over negativity is the happiest and most fortunate man. No amount of money, luxuries or material objects can lead to the state of happiness which such a man possesses. Establishment of such positive traits will automatically lead to God devotion and God belief.

Give up on the negative mentality of blaming oneself or others. It is of no use if we become harsh or overly critical of our own selves or others. What is required further to a mistake is corrective action. To err is human and to forgive is divine. Direct energy at learning and correcting mistakes. Do not waste energy on blame games, pessimism, anger or mud slinging as regards oneself or others. Some people get caught with condemning and blaming their own selves with a pessimistic mentality. This is another form of Himsa (violence) as regards oneself. It drains energy, builds negativity and finally leads to mental, physical and emotional ill-health. Performs tasks without haste and without stress or anxiety. These are again of no use. They do not improve productivity by the least. All things happen when the time for fruition arrives on the boat of destiny. Till then, nothing happens. But this should not be our concern. As long as we are striving in the right direction with honest and sincere efforts, there is no need to worry and become irate. Our right is to the action alone and never to its fruits. Sometimes, the fruits of our actions evade us in spite of sincere efforts. Sometimes, the results are instant. Neither should bother us. All this is Maya (illusion). It is not our business to think of the results. Our business ends at sincere efforts. Then we should silently watch what happens without getting affected by whatever be the result. The highest productivity and efficiency is always attained by those who follow this approach. They work in a calm, logical, right thinking and efficient manner.

Continue with the practice of Brahmacharya by applying the above mentioned points in addition to present efforts. This will lead to a clear mind, calm disposition and a positive attitude in all fronts of life resulting in better well being at the physical, mental and karmic levels in course of time.

Question
sir

I beleive in re- birth of mind with body after death. But now a days people do not believe in re-birth of Sushma Sharira and they think that the birth is only for enjoyment, and they are doing the karma which start with enjoyment and ends with sorrow, My doubt is that what we can show for an example of Re-birth, and what are its connection with brahmacharya?

Answer
It is not the mind which experiences rebirth but the Jivatma which takes a new physical body and a new mind body (Sukshma or Linga sharira) based on the past Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies) it carries in the 'Karana Sharira' (causal body). Upon physical death, the physical body perishes, followed by the astral or mind body (Sukshma sharira) which also perishes. The Karana Sharira (causal body) then takes flight along with the Atman and descends back into earth at a suitable time with a new physical and astral body through rebirth.

The simplest proof for rebirth lies in the fact that each person is born in a different state and with a different destiny. One child is born on the streets, while another in a palace. One child is born blind, while the other is endowed with excellent health and well being. One child lives to be a hundred years while the other passes away a few years after birth. Why all this difference? What is the cause or the reason behind such disparity, variety and inconsistency between the destinies of different people?

We know that nothing happens without a reason. There must be some very strong reason which gave one person a birth of riches and another a birth of poverty. So while a new born child is absolutely innocent and incapable of shaping its destiny at that point of infancy, there must be something at a more subtler level that has caused it this particular kind of birth. Something it has brought along with itself while being born. Some set of karma, parameters and qualities that have accompanied it like how our baggage accompanies us when we travel. Where did this karma or qualities or impressions or whatever one wants to call it come from? There must have been a previous existence to the soul where it had picked up those impressions. There cannot be any other logical answer. There cannot be any other reason why some children exhibit qualities of kindness right from a very young age while some others exhibit cruelty. All these varied qualities very clearly depict the presence of a former existence in which the soul exhibited these qualities. Birth is only a new innings to the soul and not the start. Death is only a short break from this life on earth and not the end.

Lord Krishna explains this to Arjuna in Chapter II/22, of the Bhaghavad Gita:

"Vaasaamsi Jeernani Yatha Vihaaya, Navaani grunhaathi Naroparani..
.. Tathaa Shariraani Vihaaya Jeernani, Anyaani Sanyaathi Navaani Dehi".

"Just as a man casts away his old, worn out clothes and wears those that are new..
.. The Jivatman (embodied soul) casts away its worn out body and enters one that is new".

Brahmacharya is that mode of life by which one gets closer to the state of non-indulgence in any form of karma. Brahmacharya is essentially a lifestyle in which man raises above the performance or non-performance of action, through absolute devotion and surrender to the Almighty. The true Brahmachari carries out all actions as an offering to the Brahman (Almighty) without attachment for the fruits, thereby reaching the state of the Atman which is beyond action or inaction. The cause of birth is the presence of desires. A Jivatma which has realized itself as the Atman and has thus become desire-less as regards this unreal, external world has no rebirth. It merges into the Almighty, to be forever free from suffering. Brahmacharya helps man achieve this state and get free from the necessity for rebirth through the annihilation of all past karma, desires and related impressions. Hence for all those wishing to reach the shores of everlasting bliss and a one time, permanent release from this world of suffering without rebirth, Brahmacharya acts as the boat which safely ferries man across the dangerous and painful ocean of Samsâra.

The Blessed Lord tells Arjuna of the merit that the man who is absorbed in Brahman accrues in Chapter V/17 of the Bhagavad-Gita:

" Tad buddhaya, Tad atma, Tad nishta, Tat parayanaha..

.. Gachanta Punaraavruthim, Gnyana nirdhoota kalmashaha"

" With their intellect absorbed in THAT (Brahman), their self being THAT, established in THAT..
.. With THAT for their supreme goal, they go there from where there is no return, their sins destroyed by true Gnyana (knowledge)".

Such effort and mode of thinking is what follows further to honest and true Brahmacharya carried out with God devotion, devoid of attachment for the objects of senses. Who can describe the glory and blessedness of this path that leads to the Supreme? Fortunate are the ones who lead this mode of life.

Question
QUESTION: Dhananjay, hi

Hope you are keeping well? Dhananjay, I wanted to ask if there is a monthly/fortnightly period [in men] during which the sexual urge is at its peak? Like women have the menstrual cycle, is there a similar period for men? If yes, what is it and what precautions can men take during that time to overcome the urge to ensure there is no downfall. I ask because I had read in one of your earlier posts a mention about a cycle for men too.
Also, I had read in one of your posts that completely giving up onions and garlic in the first year of brahamacharya is useful and that relaxations can be made when there is good control over the vital energy i.e. semen. Can you please elaborate here as well.

Thanks and I look forward to hearing from you, Manish

ANSWER: Unlike women, there is no formal period as regards men when it comes to peaking of the sexual urge or occurance of a wet dream. Based on the purity one has achieved further to the extent of removal of past impressions and tendencies pertaining to sexuality in the Karana Sharira (causal body), the frequency of heightened sexual urge goes on gradually reducing and finally reaches the state of equilibrium bereft of urge in an Urdhvareta (one who has achieved the perpetual and automatic sublimation of semen into Ojas)

In the normal man who is new to Brahmacharya, the body, mind and psyche are inundated with dense layers of sexual impressions and resulting tendencies from past activity. When such a person tries Brahmacharya, wet dreams occur frequently. Formerly, the person was active in artificial forms of release through sexual fantasy, masturbation, imagination or even sexual intercourse. The body, mind and psyche had hence become conditioned to the need for constant production of large volumes of semen. There was a regular drain of vital fluid out of the body and the body found it necessary to replenish this lost fluid at the cost of other living tissues. This was leading to premature degeneration of the body. When such a person starts Brahmacharya, the body, mind and psyche which have been used to producing a high volume of semen are not yet conditioned or signaled towards the need for lesser volume of semen in the new lifestyle. They take some time to readjust towards the lesser need. Till then, semen production does not reduce all of a sudden. The time taken for this readjustment depends on two important factors:

1. The magnitude of the dense layers of sexual impressions stored within.
2. The efforts carried out towards honest and true Brahmacharya.

If these layers of past sexuality are very strong, the person will have a strong sexual urge and desire at the initial stages of Brahmacharya. This results in formation of much physical semen. Since he has stopped all forms of voluntary release, the semen produced as a result of these sexual urges escapes through wet dreams. The body, mind and psyche are yet to attain to the stage of sublimation. The body is still in its former mode. This regular occurance of wet dreams appears similar to the menstrual period of a woman. It might occur fortnightly, bi-monthly or once a month depending on the above factors. In reality, it is not a cycle.

When correct and efficient Brahmacharya is carried out with the right food, waking up early, physical/intellectual activity, the practice of Bandha, Pranayama and meditation with God-devotion, the dense layers of sexual impressions gradually start unwinding & dissolving. This can be seen through a corresponding reduction in the frequency of wet dreams. While there might have been a tendency for bi-monthly wet dreams, it now becomes monthly and so on. With more practice and honest efforts, wet dreams might further reduce to say once in two months. This frequency goes on reducing and one finally reaches a stage where they taper away into nothing. The time taken to reach such a stage depends on the two factors mentioned above and most importantly on the grace of God. So there is no cycle or regular period in man as in the case of women. This apparent male period reduces in frequency with increasing advancement.

If Brahmacharya is carried out correctly with great intensity, God-devotion and meditation, a good deal of control over the sublimation of semen into Ojas can be established within a year to a year and half of unbroken practice. The practice has to be unbroken for a year or more without a single voluntary break. Then, wet dreams become occasional and one reaches this stage of a basic degree of siddhi (control) over semen. There will then be no tendency for voluntary release while awake. But one will still be susceptible to occasional sexual impulses and ejaculation in a dream. Brahmacharya then becomes more effortless and natural. It becomes possible for the Yogi to achieve deeper states of meditation. A sense of Vairagya (dispassion) will gradually start to dawn as regards this illusory world of objects. One becomes more centered towards God and purity. While earlier, there was a strong undercurrent towards sexuality, there now arises a stronger undercurrent towards purity and virtue.

Till such a stage is reached, it is very useful to give up onion, garlic, chilly, strong spices etc..

When such a stage is reached, onion and garlic can be taken in small medicinal doses (one raw onion once a week while eating food and four to five pods of garlic once a week) for their blood purifying properties. Such a medicinal dosage does not affect the Brahmachari who has reached this stage. Spicy food is always best avoided. The barest minimum of salt and spices are conducive for the practice of Brahmacharya. Much spice and chilly agitate the mind and make deep meditation tougher to achieve. One who cannot meditate on the Supreme with intensity will find sexual thoughts reverting further to an irate and unstable mind. The chance for fall becomes more real. Unless deep states of meditation are regularly taken recourse to, attaining to initial stages of Samadhi (super-consciousness) becomes impossible. The dietary schedule one needs to follow becomes clear to oneself upon reaching this stage and a self-regulating tendency from within develops which does not allow eating those foods which are harmful for the spirituality of the aspirant.

QUESTION: Dhananjay, hi

Thanks very much for the answer, it greatly helps and I really appreciate your help on this matter as does God I am sure. God Bless.

I remember in one of your earlier posts you had said that the practice of bandh, pranjayam, and meditation needs to be performed twice daily, once in the morning and once in the evening [4 times in the morning and 4 in the evening]. For one who has little time in the evening because of work commitments etc what do you suggest, is there an alternative whereby it can be done in the morning etc.

Thanks once again Dhananjay, I greatly appreciate the clarity that you are bringing to so many people.

Regards, Manish

Answer
Yogic practices are to be performed at 'Sandhi Kala' (confluence of day and night and every 6 hours from there on). There are four Sandhi Kalas in a day -- when it is neither night nor day just before Sunrise, when it is neither morning nor afternoon at 12.00 P.M , when it is neither day nor night just before Sunset and when between today and tomorrow at 12.00 A.M. midnight. The reason is that during these times, the Ida and Pingala naadi's (represented by the left and right nostrils) harmonize and one can force Prana (vital energy) very easily into the central Sushumna naadi within the spine, thererby attaining to deep meditative states and finally Samadhi. Until and unless Prana (vital energy) enters the Sushumna naadi, true meditation is not achieved and one cannot attain to the breathless state required for Samadhi. One who practices in this manner, 4 times a day attains to super-human abilities and self-realization within a short span of time. Brahmacharya becomes very easy and natural. In the olden days, the Yogis and sages who had retired to the forests for the attainment of self-realization carried out such zealous practice. They subsisted on the crops they grew and devoted the rest of their time to attain to Yoga.

However, since such practice cannot be carried out by the common man who has time constraints further to working for a living, it has been suggested that man carry out the practice at least twice a day, once early in the morning and then either in the afternoon, evening or at mid-night. One can choose any of these remaining three based on one's convenience. But a minimum of two sessions of Yogic practice, twice a day are suggested for optimum growth.

Question

Dhananjay, Can you throw some light on overcoming the FEAR?

Answer

Fear or faith in negativity is a result of ignorance and another form of 'Maya' (illusion). In reality, there is absolutely no meaning behind succumbing to fear, for it is contrary to our original and default state. The Atman in effect is beyond all forms of fear or limitation. It is the ignorance surrounding the limitless Atman that makes it into the limited Jivatma which then succumbs to a host of unreal concepts such as fear, anger, lust, greed, jealousy, attachment etc.. Indulgence in all these lower traits further push the Jivatma into the realm of Maya, thereby increasing karma and negativity.

Conscious efforts to overcome these lower emotions in practical life will automatically help one achieve a calmer, serene and peaceful state which aids the displacement of fear. For a Brahmachari who is leading an absolute life of unbroken Brahmacharya with God-devotion and meditation, the seed of fear will eventually be weeded out of his psyche in course of time. It is a well known fact that those who are in the path of self-realization eventually overcome all fears and become brave and valorous to the finest degree. The very word used to denote semen in the Samskruth language - 'Veerya' has been derived from the word denoting bravery - 'Veera'. Thus, correct and absolute conservation and transmutation of semen into Ojas makes a person develop superior levels of bravery, valor, courage and confidence. The true Brahmachari becomes extremely capable and confident by default. These qualities ingrain into his nature further to the transmutation of 'veerya' or semen. The true and inner strength of the Atman surfaces into his being and becomes evident in his body language, attitude and speech.

The best way to overcome fear, anxiety and mental weakness is to remind ourselves that we are not the doers of any action but God is. This body, mind, its faculties and the world are only the instruments through which the Lord works out his Leela (divine play). In reality, none of these exist. Only the Parabrahman (Almighty) exists and we are an integral part of the same. That which has to be done by this particular body, mind and its faculties as regards this world will be carried out immaterial of whether we want it or don't. This thing called 'us' is itself an illusion based on the foundations of the false ego. In reality, this thing called 'us' in terms of the ego at the individual level does not exist. Only the Almighty exists, and man upon reaching self-realization comes out of this dream of life where he thought he was a separate individual and rests in the fact that he was, is and always will be a part of the Almighty itself and not a person.

This is our real state. We have forgotten this state and have forgotten who we really are. The state of limited existence denoted by this body, mind and the world full of suffering is not our real state. "Brahman Satyam Jagat Mithyam" - says the great self-realized Yogi Adi Shankaracharya. "The almighty alone is real, this world of objects is false". Next he says - "Jivo Brahmaiva naparah" - "The Jiva or the Jivatma represented by the individual is himself the Brahman (Almighty) in reality, nothing else is he". Isn't it very important that we set aside all other unreal occupations and concentrate on really finding out who we are and establishing ourselves there? For upon reaching that state, we are awarded with knowledge, power and bliss of the highest order unto eternity. This is the only purpose of the human existence. Everything else is incidental and not worth being taken seriously.

Follow a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya with honesty and dedication and all fear will take to its heals in course of time. Fear is 'Asath' (that which is unreal). It is a result of Maya. Yoga is the best sword with which Maya is killed and nullified. "Tasmaath Sarveshu Kaaleshu, Yogayuktho Bhavarjuna" - says Lord Krishna in the Bhagavad Gita. " O Arjuna, at all times thou be established in this Yoga." What does he mean by this? It means one should always be established in those principles that make man overcome his ignorance. It means that one should never engage in acts that take one down the path of sin and delusion. It means that one should remember that one is only the medium and not the doer, that the Almighty alone is the doer at all times and thus abide in the path shown by the divine in day to day life. Freeing oneself from lower traits and emotions with conscious efforts through God-thought and devotion is the means by which this is achieved.

This is the best means of overcoming fear and all other negative emotions. Any other method to nullify these emotions merely by the use of the ego will fail and not succeed, for the ego itself is 'Asath' and how can that which is unreal vanquish anything? To destroy 'Asath' or that which is an effect of Maya, one needs to make use of 'Sath' or that which is real. And no other thing but thought and contemplation on the Almighty constitutes 'Sath'

Question
Thank You for your insightful answers in the past.

I have a question in terms of Karma Theory. And you mentioned that Brahmacharya with total devotion to god will burn away our past karmas. So can I assume that everytime something bad happens to me(of course when its not your fault or you have not initiated it, and wanted good of others) the past karma was taken off, and there could be lesser deviation from the path of Brahmacharya.

Please elaborate on that.

Thanks,
Shriharsha

Answer
The practice of honest and sincere Brahmacharya & yoga (all those activities carried out with the intention of self-realization) with absolute devotion and love towards the Brahman (Almighty) starts unwinding and burning past karma. How does this happen? The enormous amount of Prana (vital energy) that is being conserved within and being transmuted into Ojas produces a special kind of heat within the body whose nature is akin to a kind of electricity. It is called as 'Yogaagni' (the fire of Yoga). This Yogaagni is a very special kind of fire, but it cannot be termed fire, for that would amount to limiting its scope, power and immense potency. It is something much much more than mere fire. It is much more immense and all encompassing because it works simultaneously at weeding out all kinds of impurities lodged with the Sthula sharira (physical body), Sukshma sharira (subtle body) and the Karana sharira (causal body).

All past karma is manifest within these three bodies. The actual seat of the seeds of past karma lie in the Karana sharira (causal body), these seeds then become decisive factors in determining what kind of a physical body, brain and intelligence the person will acquire. They also determine his fate or destiny which includes the complete set of life experiences he will undergo in this birth till death. They are the foundations which decide what a person is and what he is not.

The 'Yogaagni' which starts getting generated further to proper conservation and transmutation of the vital fluid works in all the three bodies, the physical, subtle and causal. Let us assume a person has indulged in cheating another of a certain sum of money at some point of time, either in the recent past or in a previous birth. The seed of karma corresponding to the act of cheating gets embedded in his Karana Sharira. It is akin to the seed of a plant which will sprout into a sapling when the conditions are right. There are thousands or more of such seeds in the causal body of every individual which contains seeds corresponding to various good and bad karmas committed by the Jivatma (individual soul) in this and past births. All these karmas have deposited themselves within, for working out at a later stage. In the common man not leading a life of spirituality, Yoga or Brahmacharya, these seeds work themselves out in their own pace, thereby ensuring that the Jiva has to be born many hundreds or thousands of times in this Samsara (finite, dualistic world of suffering). In all these hundreds or thousands of births, the Jiva indulges in more karma and deposits more seeds into itself. This extends future births by another hundred or thousand and so on. It becomes a vicious ocean of Samsara full of pain and suffering for the Jiva which has forgotten itself to be the Atman (pure soul) further to degenerating into the Jivatma with a heavy baggage of karma.

In the Vedas and Upanishads, it is said that after millions of such births in the grip of delusion and suffering, the Jivatma gets and urge from within to find a permanent solution to this never ending cycle of births and deaths in the turbulent ocean of Samsara filled from all sides by lower traits and emotions. It realizes the futility of running after the pleasures promised by the senses. It comes to the right conclusion that indulgence in this world and its temptations can never fill it with peace, happiness and well being eternally. It then starts a search for that mode of life and action by which it can win permanent and lasting freedom from this world of suffering. This is the crucial point where it gets an innate urge to tread on the path of spirituality. By the grace of the Almighty, the Jiva gets a strong tendency towards spirituality. It has now reached the stage internally, where it has had enough of the hide and seek game offered by the workings of Samsara. A strong urge to break free from this state of delusion has taken form.

A life of Yoga & Brahmacharya are the means used by the Jiva to ensure this freedom. Whether this mode of life transformation into one's default state of purity and divinity is called Yoga or something else, the principles and tenets which are required to win freedom from Samsara remain the same for the whole world. All these principles are hinged on the necessity of developing freedom from slavery to the senses, burning and working out past karma and thereby ascending the ladder of one's default state of Ananda (soul bliss). Only those who have reached this stage of flight towards self-realization or are close to it are allowed to succeed in Brahmacharya by the Almighty. Else, all would have become Brahmacharis. Others do not get the mind or the urge for such a mode of life. Of the many people who try for Brahmacharya, a very small percentage succeed in persevering towards success amid recurring failures. Most who fail give up after deciding it is impossible and beyond human ability. But the one's who are chosen by the Almighty to become eligible for boarding the flight of self-realization find that they cannot do without reverting to this mode of life in spite of failures or breaks. In spite of breaks, they find themselves being drawn back into this mode of life. They find their inner voice and destiny itself goading them to persevere in Brahmacharya.

In such people, the practice eventually becomes a lifestyle and inseparable. Really very fortunate are the Jiva-s who carry out a life of Brahmacharya. Blessed is their lot. The fire of Yoga which has sprouted, now starts aiming itself at the various karmas which have been embedded. With only a handful of births or even one last birth remaining for release from this world, the rapid and speedy disposal of past karma sets in motion. All karma has to be experienced. It cannot be simply erased. Karma, either good or bad has to be worked out by the Jivatma through happiness or suffering, for it has ingrained itself with a purpose. The fire of Brahmacharya now works at weeding out and leveraging these past seeds one after the other.

Every time a particular seed surfaces, there is the manifestation of that effect which the seed represents. When the seed of cheating that we spoke about surfaces whilst being plucked out by the fire of Yoga, the person concerned might loose an equal sum of money which he cheated another of in the recent past or in some previous birth or may loose something else. The pain which he undergoes makes him realize that it is wrong to cheat. The Jivatma has now learnt one important lesson as regards being fair and honest. Similarly, when the seed of some past bodily harm to another surfaces, the person suffers a similar or related injury, illness or disease. The suffering he undergoes again makes him swear to himself that he should never harm anyone else in future. Another important lesson has been learnt. With every surfacing of past karma which burns itself through working out via life experiences, the man becomes more pure, more virtuous and more divine, eventually becoming saintly and Godly. He finally reaches a stage where the complete stock of his past karma has been burnt and extinguished. This generally coincides with the stage of self-realization. Till there exists karma, the physical body also exists. Upon self-realization and the disposal of all karma, the body having served its purpose drops away and the Jivatma which has now become the Shudhaatma (pure soul) takes flight into the Supreme.

In case of the honest Brahmachari, this working out of karma and its results are expended fast and frequently as the time for final release is getting near. There is not much time remaining for such a person unlike the common man who is not yet ready for spirituality further to the time for final release still being very far. In normal people who are still very far from the final release, karma works out very slowly and infrequently. It appears as though nothing much is happening. In the Brahmachari, things are quite the opposite. He might have to face quite a few incidences of bad luck, suffering or pain during the initial years of Brahmacharya or even later which others appear to be spared of. But there is not the least reason to worry. Each and every such experience makes one come closer to his Atman (true self) by a few degrees. It makes Brahmacharya that much stronger. "Sukha Dukhe Samey Krithva, Labha, alabhou, Jaya, Ajayou..." says Lord Krishna to Arjuna in the Bhagavad-Gita -- " O Arjuna, take pleasure and pain, gain and loss, success and failure with an equal perspective, do not let these affect you...". These are really medicines to cure the sickness of delusion within the Jivatman. We self-introspect and correct upon the mistakes we might have committed or are about to commit when faced with hardships. One should be glad that he has been chosen by the Almighty to prepare for the greatest accomplishment of the human existence called self-realization by weeding out karma through Brahmacharya. That accomplishment, which will lead one to the real knowledge of himself. That knowledge, gaining which everything becomes known and nothing more needs to be known. Nothing more needs to be done. It is this accomplishment which is the true reason behind why we are born. Reaching it, one is freed forever from the fetters of birth and death, to occupy that lofty state of infinite knowledge, bliss and existence within the Almighty forever.

So the Brahmachari Yogi keeps his mental state unaffected by the workings of this world as regards himself or others, for he knows all this to be Maya (illusion) and not reality. Keeping his mind riveted to the supreme goal with devotion and surrender to the Almighty, he looks at the workings of destiny as though it were a dream. For the one who is devoted to reaching the highest through Brahmacharya and Yoga, who is honest in his Dharma (duty as shown by destiny or the Almighty), who is firm in the Yama-Niyama, all bad times pass, eventually delivering him into the reality of Brahman (Almighty).

Question
Namaskar Dhananjayaji

Hope you would be doing well.Sir my question is what is the procedure to practice kundalini yoga?How to sense it's initial effect of awakening.
Hope fully waiting for your reply
Thank you.

Answer
Kundalini is the symbolic representation of the awakening of the net sum of all Prana (vital energy) present within. In the normal man who is unawakened, this energy is mostly concentrated in the Muladhara Chakra or the region near the base of the spine. In one who has awakened this energy, it pierces through the higher Chakras giving rise to various improvements and development of abilities.

A life of Brahmacharya carried out with Yoga consisting of Asana, Bandha, Pranayama and God-meditation will automatically awaken Kundalini in the course of time. It need not be separately worked upon. Kundalini awakening is a by-product of Brahmacharya and God-meditation.

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

1. Can you explain how Mantras, Stotras, Upavasa (specially EKADASHI), other Vratas, Japa help in destroying the past sins? How this really happens? Also how all of them help to keep up Brahmacharya? Also please let us know if any particular Vratas, Upavasa, Japa you are following? How & When?

2. I already know in your previous posts you have asked to go through HH Swami Sivanada's books. However if you wish to share some good knowledgeable books from which you have acquired this greatest of knowledge, then requesting you to please share the same.

Answer

1. All these hyms, mantras and slokas have spiritual vibrations inbuilt within them which then flood the individual and his surroundings while chanting. The 'Nada' (divine sound) gets activated. All mantras are the result of the Tapas (penance) of the great Rishis and Yogis who came across them during Samadhi Meditation on the Supreme. They contain meanings which are devised to ward away tamas (stupor) and establish sathwic tendencies. So chanting these with devotion and surrender to the Almighty cleanses negative tendencies within and makes the person eligible for pursuing spiritual sadhana more easliy.

The purpose behind fasting on 'Ekadasi' to ensure that the mind of the normal man which is mostly engrossed in enjoying the pleasures of the senses of sight, smell, taste, sound and touch gets a break from all this sense bombardment and is offered a chance to think and contemplate on the Lord. The stomach is one of the most important tools of turning the mind away from the senses. If put on fast on the day of Ekadasi and turned towards God, the mind automatically reduces its tendency for sense craving. This much is the purpose of Ekadasi and not more. It is an exercise to make the common man offer at least one day towards thinking on God.

However, much fasting or 'Upavasa' in not for Yogis. It leads to weakness and loss of vitality if carried out continuously. Fasting should be taken recourse to for a small duration when one is ill and sick and not otherwise. Yogis who are following the Brahmacharya vrata should not fast unless ill. "Verily, Yoga is not for him who eats too much or who does not eat at all (fasts); nor for him who sleeps too much, or does not sleep at all" -- says Lord Krishna in the Bhagavad-Gita. The correct method is to take recourse to limited and moderate, sathwic food and never over-eat.

Meditation on 'OM' while sitting in Padmasana after the practice of Asana, Bandha and Pranayama is a good technique to develop concentration on the Almighty and ward away fickleness. One can silently and mentally chant OM always. This makes it possible to then meditate on the 'Nirguna Brahman'(formless Almighty) easily which is the highest form of meditation on the formless, colorless, invisible, attribute-less Almighty. In this form of meditation, one ultimately thinks of he himself to be no different from the Almighty and merges with HIM.

Those who want to do Japa (repetition of God's name) can chose 'OM', 'Om namo Narayanaya', 'Om namah Sivaya' or Ram Naam. There is only one God and that which is offered with devotion and love reaches him alone, call him by what name you may.

Brahmacharya is the highest of all 'vratas'. One who follows this correctly in thought, word and deed need not follow any other 'vrata'. This is endorsed by Lord Shiva who says:

"Na tapo-tapaha ithyaarhu Brahmacharyam tapothamam..
..Urdhvaretha bhavedyasya, sa devo na tu maanushaha"

-"Brahmacharya alone is the supreme penance. Of course, other penances (such as prayer and silence etc ...) are good in their place, but they are all inferior to Brahmacharya. That Urdhvareta saint who has done penance over the restraint of the mind as regards sexuality by diverting it to the Supreme is not a human-being but a living God."

2. Books are like maps. One cannot know a region by merely memorizing the map. To know the region, one has to personally visit and explore the place for real. Then, what is explained in the map becomes clear. One will no longer need the map after this stage. The same applies to progress in Brahmacharya. After reading spiritual literature, one should apply it in real life, meditate on it and make it a part of one's living. Then one comes to experience what has been described. Mere bookish knowledge is of no use. It is practice of the great truths by meditating on them and leading a life governed by the tenets of Yoga with Bhakthi (devotion) & surrender to God that leads to real progress.

Reading the lives, biographies and works of great saints such as Bhagavan Ramana Maharishi, Trailinga Swami of Varanasi, Shri. Ramakrishna Paramahansa, Yogi Milarepa of Tibet, Shri. Sadashiva Brahmendra of Nerur will prove very useful to those interested in observing absolute Brahmacharya. One can Google search for matter related to these saints on the internet. Guidance from all these great self-realized masters & saints is still available from the cosmos to those who are genuine and serious in their quest for Brahma-Gnyana (knowledge of the Supreme). They guide and lead honest aspirants in the right direction through intuitive suggestions during or sometimes after meditation. This is the truth which I state from my personal experience and with great reverence, respect, humility and love for these Mahatma-s. It is for us to lead a pure life and take the effort to meditate.

Question
Hello,dhananjaybhai I follow bramcharya very perfectly with yoga,pranayama and meditation.But i face one problem at night, when i sleep something spark in my vagina[NO WITH BAD DREAMS] and it is only for 6 to 7 second and it occurs in once a month specially when my menstrual period is near. When i was not follow bramcharya it happened with dirty picture but now it is without any dream so i want to ask it is normal ?? or break my bramcharya???? thank u.....

Answer
As long as a man or woman are into the honest practice of Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with adequate yogic practices including meditation, there is no cause for worry. Accumulated sexual energy which is not fully transmuted during the initial stages of Brahmacharya sometimes causes a sort of a physical pressure or a feeling of sexual force in the reproductive area in both men and women. This is not of any concern as it will gradually go away with progress in the practice and can be ignored.

P.S: Both men and women are requested to mark very personal queries 'private' by checking the private box as that would be more appropriate, considering this is a public forum.

Question
Sir,

All Gods are one and same Chaithanya,. But I saw the people blaming each other in the name of God. In Hindava Samskara there are many Gods like Shiva, Vishnu, Subrahmanya, Krishna, Ganapathi, Saraswathi etc....., I knew that only name is changing but chaithanya is one....., Sir what is pointing out for this matters? Which God posture is more suitable for brahmacharya life?

Answer
In reality, God is formless, invisible and occupies all space and time. The Upanishads rightly describe this with the analogy that there is not as much space as that occupied by the tip of a needle where God does not exist. The concept of God with form, name and attributes has been developed to help the common man come to terms with the concept of the Almighty.

For those who are interested in knowing that ultimate concept, that one Lord, that one Supreme force which is the cause of all creation and which dominates all other deities, deva-s, men and nature by being the source of their very cause, this ultimate Almighty is described by the term 'Parabrahman' (Supreme Almighty) - also called in short as 'Brahman' or 'Nirguna Brahman' (attribute-less Almighty). It has been rightly said in the Chaandogya Upanishad that the Yogi wishing self-realization should meditate on THIS formless Almighty by closing his eyes, focusing in the spot between his eyebrows (Bhrumadhya or Thrikuti) and thinking of the empty space that results (chidakasa) as representing the Almighty. He then considers himself as no different from this infinite sky (since the Atman is no different from the Brahman). Such practice of meditation on the formless Almighty who is in the nature of empty space leads to good progress in Brahmacharya and results in speedy acquirement of 'Gnyana' (knowledge of reality). Eventually, after passing the stage of Savikalpa Samadhi (limited super-consciousness), the advanced meditator will merge into this formless reality, losing awareness of his personal identity in Nirvikalpa or Nirbija Samadhi (super-consciousness) where the breath and all metabolic activities including working of the organs within stop and yet the Yogi remains alive in a state of decay-less suspension without ageing.

This state of Nirbija Samadhi or super-consciousness is attainable by all Brahmacharis who practice Yoga if the practice of unbroken Brahmacharya is carried out for many years and with Yogic practices such as Asana, Bandha, Pranayama and meditation. All the superhuman abilities which are attributed to Yogis and their ability to burn past karma is derived through the practice of Samadhi meditation. Padmasana is the recommended posture to sit in meditation. The uniqueness and specialty of Nirvikalpa Samadhi is that even the hair/beard of the Yogi stops growing as long as he is in this state. Not a cell in the body undergoes ageing as all organs from the heart and the lungs to the kidneys stop functioning. It is a special state where the Yogi is alive, beyond ageing and in a state of suspension, enjoying 'Paramananda' (highest bliss) through communion with the Almighty. There are rumored to be many saints and sages in the Himalayan mountains who are in this state even today unaffected by the passage of time. Physically, their bodies have crossed many hundreds of years in terms of time. Yet they maintain excellent health and vitality in spite of being hundreds of years old. For these great Urdhvarethas who have accomplished the perpetual sublimation and transmutation of semen, who are constantly in communion with the Almighty, time becomes a constant in their state of indescribable bliss and existence. The secret behind this state is ultimately unbroken Brahmacharya through complete transmutation of the vital force followed by Samadhi meditation with destruction of the ego.

Prayer and meditation to this formless Almighty is hence the best and correct approach for speedy progress.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

I have been trying to practise celibacy. But I only succeed for 2 weeks or at max a month. Also, when I break my celibacy, I feel a severe headache the next day. Is this normal in the course of practising celibacy?

Thank you,
Amit

Answer
Both the brain and the mind along with the entire system suffer utter exhaustion along with a nervous shattering further to an ejaculation, especially after a break in continence. The body and mind react to this change in different ways in different people. Headache is sometimes a part of the reaction.

Question
1. Need to know whether we should avoid attending get together functions / Ceremonies. During these ceremonies (don’t known whether sound) it makes my mind restless. I feel like my pranshakti is getting lost. This is happening before practicing brahmacharya also. Please note I am sure this is not happening because of taking food there. As this happens to me before taking the food also. I am single. What does this notify? How can I stop this?

2. Dhananjay, after practicing brahmacharya I feel very happy & strong from inside, the confidence shows on my face. But when I go in public, I can just feel people are jealous of me. They target me for nothing. Can you suggest how this can be avoided?

3. We have read many times in the books that Rishis were used get angry. There was no doubt that they have followed yama niyamas very very strictly. Inspite of following yama niyamas how could they get angry? Can you clear my doubt please. I just wanted to point this out because unknowingly we should not make a small mistake of getting angry.

Answer

1. During the initial years of Brahmacharya, it is advisable to avoid spending time at get-together/gatherings and congregation of people in general as the mind being vulnerable and susceptible to worldly, sensual vibrations easily gets affected, thereby losing its stability and poise. Such an affected mind then becomes prone to the attack of lust, anger and attachment very easily. This makes the practice of Brahmacharya very difficult and might even lead to a break. Hence those who are serious in the practice of Brahmacharya and intend to attain to a high state of 'Yoga siddhi' and self-realization always limit their interactions with people to the bare minimum. If avoiding the gathering altogether is not possible, one should make a brief visit and leave at the earliest. The vibrations and energy given out by worldly and sensual people do not sync with the Brahmachari and are dangerous to his practice.

Further to Brahmacharya, the level of Prana within the Brahmachari gradually increases day by day. Associating with the company of non-Brahmacharis results in loss of 'Pranashakthi' and Ojas as Prana has the tendency to flow from a region of higher concentration to lower concentration. It gets drawn and drained out of the Brahmachari further to contact with non-Brahmacharis who are low on Prana and high on sexuality.

2. Transmutation of semen into Ojas leads to Tejas (luster) in the face and body of the Brahmachari. It is Tejas which is responsible for the glow and radiance emanating from one who is transmuting his semen. Tejas makes the Brahmachari appear very attractive. Women respond with attraction and men with jealousy. Both these reactions are dangerous as they result in loss of Prana. For this reason, a Yogi during his initial years should limit his external contact to necessity and not more. Interaction with people should be restricted to the minimum.

Growing ones beard and mustache is another very effective way of preventing loss of Ojas occurring from the negative 'Drishti'(look) given by people. It is the natural mechanism provided by God to protect oneself from loss of Ojas. A man with a beard and mustache becomes very less prone and less susceptible to emotional instability, irritability and sexual stress. Hairs in the beard and mustache are designed by the Almighty to prevent Ojas from flowing out of the body. It becomes easier to break free of wet dreams and reach the status of an Urdhvarethas. Brahmacharya becomes easier as the tendency to lose semen vanishes very effectively further to the growth of a beard and mustache. For this reason, all ancient Rishis and Yogis never cut their hair, beard or mustaches. Hair which had grown long was tied in the form of a 'rishi knot' at the top of the head which corresponds to the region of the 'Brahmarandhra' (opening of the Brahman at the Sahasrara chakra).

One should develop indifference as regards what people think or don't think. Let people act as they want to, the Yogi should maintain his equipoise knowing fully well that the world is all 'Maya' (illusion) and not real. He should develop the ability of being unaffected by the opinions and behavior of people. The successful Brahmachari is quiet, calm, non-interfering, and non-reacting to his surroundings. His mind is riveted to the Brahman (Almighty) and is convinced that the world is 'Mithya' (false). With such an attitude of limited interaction should the Brahmachari develop indifference to attacks from people who are under the grip of Maya. One should stay inwardly calm and serene and not wish bad even when people ridicule, mock and rebuke. That which one does to another is doing it to oneself. A man who rebukes or abuses another is abusing his very own self, for the Atman (self) is one and the same in all creatures. It is the Brahman (Almighty) himself. So let those who indulge in negative actions be ignored, for what they do always comes back to them in the form of karma which always teaches a lesson. We need not worry the least. The laws made by the Almighty always work with precision and accuracy. Our duty is to stay tranquil and unaffected by forgiving and wishing good to even those who abuse or hate us.

3. The Rishis who succumbed to anger or lust paid a heavy price for their emotion by losing the Prana and Ojas they had gained through many years and decades of Tapas. It resulted in 'Tapobhanga' (destruction of austerity). Their anger stemmed from the growth of Ahamkara (ego) ignited by residual Avidya (ignorance). They had not yet attained to the state of Kaivalya (self-realization) at that point of time. The story of Sage Durvasa is an example to show the fallacy of ego and anger
(see: http://childrensstoriesblog.blogspot.com/2011/02/king-ambarisha-and-sage-durvasa). Another example is that of Sage Vishwamitra who was know to be egoistic and of a very hot temperament. He lost the power of many thousands of years of Tapas and had to restart from the scratch further to the episode with the celestial damsel Menaka. This was due to the presence of a strong ego.

Anger is lust and lust is anger. Each is another form of the other. The presence of one always leads to growth of the other. It is God who is the doer and not us. We are his mediums alone. How can anger or jealousy grow when one reminds himself of this fact at the time of weakness? Humility, modesty, kindness, politeness and forgiveness are the marks of the Brahmachari which also act as his protective shields. Such a man is respected and well-attended wherever he goes. It is only the foolish and unwise who resort to the dictations of their Ahamkara (ego) without paying heed to Viveka (wisdom). Knowing this, the wise Brahmachari should stay focused on his Sadhana (practice), unaffected with what happens around him through reminding himself that it is all Maya and unreal

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

Iam 34 and practicing brahmacharya for the last 1 yr 8 mths. I was trying to understand the relationship between brahmacharya and weight loss that i observed in my body (some of it is muscle loss as well).

Iam wondering if LONG TERM brahmacharya (more than 1 year etc) could result in lower Testosterone hormone, and this in turn could result in weight/muscle loss, since Testosterone is an important hormone for muscle growth (anabolism).

My reasoning is that by long term brahmacharya, the body gets a signal that one is not going to be having much sexual activity, and hence by "use it or lose it" logic, the body naturally reduces the testosterone hormone. Perhaps by the same logic (and perhaps as a consequence of lower T ?), the semen production also starts decreasing due to long term brahmacharya.

I've seen reports that say celibacy is useful to "conserve energy" and useful for bodybuilding / boxing etc, but could it be that this applies only on short term like a few weeks / months. In short term conservation, the body still is habituated to the drive, so it stores up the accumulated energy which may be useful for bodybuilding etc. But in long term conservation, if my above line of reasoning is right, the T hormone levels drop and hence one finds it more and more difficult to maintain muscle mass. Could this be the reason we find many yogis/monks thin ? Ofcourse they may not be lifting weights that much, so that could be another factor leading to muscle loss.

Overall, my point is that long term brahmacharya + Yoga sadhana MAY result in decreased T hormone levels (and also decreased appetite, decreased intake of food ?) resulting in loss of weight/muscle.

Please share your overall thoughts on this line of thinking.

Answer
Levels of the male sex hormone (testosterone) rise further to a week of abstinence and thereafter settle down into equilibrium further to continued Brahmacharya.

As per medical science, low testosterone becomes common in normal men leading a life of seminal wastage (a life of non-Brahmacharya) as they begin to age, especially after the age of 30 or so. It's symptoms are generally seen in the form of fatigue, decreased libido, difficulty with erections, weight gain in the form of fat and loss of muscle mass. On the other hand, high testosterone is known to lead to possible heart problems, skin acne, hair loss, irritability and aggression, liver damage and mood swings. Hence testosterone is a very important hormone on which the overall health, strength, vitality and well being of a man depend upon. An increase or decrease of this hormone beyond permissible limits has negative effects on physical and mental health. The regulation and production of exactly the right quantity of testosterone is required for optimum health, well being and vitality of the body.

The practice of long term, unbroken Brahmacharya with yogic practices of Bandha, Pranayama and long meditation results in producing exactly the right quantity of the hormone. This is a process which is unavailable to the common man wasting his seed. Such a perfect state of balance would have existed in the common man only in his early teens, just after the onset of puberty when the body was replete and complete with all hormones further to the 12-13 years of natural Brahmacharya from birth. This state of ideality lasts for a few years after the onset of puberty and gradually turns into imbalance as one nears one's 20's if the reproductive fluid is lost often in recreational sexual activity. In the normal man leading the life of a non-Brahmachari, the body has to constantly compensate the loss of sex hormones lost during ejaculation. It accomplishes this function at the cost of health and vitality of the other living tissues. Eventually, the ability of the body to re-compensate this loss diminishes (seen notably after the mid thirties) and this leads to low levels of testosterone and its after effects.

The apparent weight loss that you describe is perfectly normal for anyone practicing a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya and is the result of an altogether different reason. It is a sign of health and not the opposite. Further to the production of the correct and right levels of testosterone (as was during early teenage) due to prolonged Brahmacharya, three important changes among many other minor changes take place in the body:

1. The tendency for accelerated cell multiplication within the system reduces.
2. The bio-magnetism within the living cells increases (as was in teenage).
3. Increased Ojas in the Linga sharira (astral body), prolongs the life of living cells in the Sthula sharira (physical body).

These three major changes are the foundations which act as a basis for slowing down the ageing process in the Brahmachari Yogi. How is this so? To understand this, we will first have to get clear with what actually constitutes ageing.

Ageing is the result of irreversible degeneration and decay within the living cells of an organism. The body is in perfect condition, full of health and vitality during the teens. As one progresses towards the twenties (with the loss of reproductive fluid) the perfect state of health very slightly starts to wane. After the mid twenties and near the late twenties, the body starts a more noticeable leaning towards degeneration in one wasting his reproductive fluid for recreation. To compensate for this degeneration, the body of a normal man produces more living cells. This is what leads to obesity and an increase in girth during the initial stages of ageing in the normal man or woman. It is generally seen in men and women starting from the ages of 20-25 and reaching a peak near the age of 50 or so. In the next stage of ageing (seen from 50 or so onward into late old age), the body even starts to lose the ability to produce as many cells as are being debilitated. In other words, its ability to add more cells (that lead to weight gain earlier) itself reduces. Then, there is irreversible loss of muscle mass, weakness, loss of vitality and severe probability of disease and decay. The person becomes unhealthy and thin due to rapid loss of muscle mass and vital mass. This is completely irreversible and permanent.

Coming back to the three points mentioned earlier, conservation and transmutation of the vital fluid through resorption in a man or woman enriches all the living cells within with much Prana (vital energy) and drastically reduces their decay and ageing. Since the cells continue to function normally, the body of such a Brahmachari does not send signals for rapid cell multiplication as in case of the normal man. This immediately stops an increase in the girth or size of the entire body. The body of the Brahmachari becomes lean, tight and taut as in case of a person in his or her teens. Ojas in the person which is nothing but a kind of electricity holds together the living cells with much grip and tenacity (just as an electromagnet holds metal objects when charged with electricity). This is a part of bio-magnetism. Bio-magnetism is naturally at its peak in a person during ones teens unto the early twenties. It is this energy which is responsible for the youthfulness of a young person. This is why obesity and slackness in flesh or accumulation of fat does not generally occur in one's teens. The same process re-activates in the Brahmachari who is into prolonged and unbroken Brahmacharya beyond a year or so. This leads to a tightening of skin and flesh and slows down ageing very significantly. The compacting nature of the process makes it appear as though the body is becoming thinner. In reality, excessive fat gets discarded and the required amount of muscle mass is compacted (excess is shed). This can be checked through a fat-percentage test. In other words, the body more or less reverts to the size it was in further to complete growth that it achieved in the late teens or early twenties which is its correct and healthy size.

This reversal into a hormonal mode similar to that during the teens is what is responsible for slowing of ageing in the Brahmachari. With proper Yogic practices in Brahmacharya, the aspirant can reduce the ageing process to a very bare minimum. It is clearly mentioned in the Yoga-Tattva Upanishad that the body becomes 'krushaka' (taut and wiry) in case of those who practice Yoga & Brahmacharya and this acts as the foundation for health, longevity and youthful beauty. Wrinkles and sagging of skin reduces greatly. The earlier one starts the practice, the better are the results.

In the Yogi who is into continuous and unbroken Brahmacharya with long meditation, his vital life energy goes towards becoming Ojas and into the production of Soma (amrit or divine nectar in the Sahasrara chakra of the brain) which is then used for revitalization both normally and especially in the state of Samadhi. Here, the vital energy does not flow copiously into the muscles beyond required limits. As much as is required for good health and strength is inducted into the muscles and not more. It will flow copiously to the muscles in that man who is only into muscle building or exercise and NOT into spiritual Sadhana or meditation. In such a person, complete Brahmacharya cannot take place as the percentage of semen identified for conversion into spiritual energy gets lost through a wet dream. The nature of conserved semen is such that it has to be channelized into spiritual energy for complete sublimation. Else, a part of it flows out and gets lost. Hence in such people merely limiting themselves to physical exercise or sports without deep meditation, this part of semen flows out without doubt in the occasional wet dream even if Brahmacharya has been thorough. However, they do get full benefits of Brahmacharya as regards the body but little benefits in terms of spirituality.

This is the reason monks/yogis appear wiry and thin. But this tightness should not be mistaken for the loss of weight/thin body occurring due to disease or ill-health in non-Brahmacharis due to age etc.. The wiriness of the Brahmachari is a sign of lithe strength, health, vitality and bio-magnetism of the finest degree. If the Brahmachari was previously lifting weights (before Brahmacharya) and had much muscle weight, he will generally find that this excessive muscle mass (which is bad for the heart in the long run) will now reduce leading to a taut and slim body which is fresh and young. This happens further to Prana (vital energy) flowing into the brain in large amounts further to meditation and the conversion of vital energy into Ojas (which earlier became muscle girth).

On the whole, one can rest at ease when he finds the above changes occurring and know that the body is producing just the right amounts of testosterone (neither more nor less but lesser than that which was produced through muscle building). As long as proper food/sleep (at the right time) and spiritual activity is carried out, there is no cause for worry. Hence in the advanced stages of Brahmacharya, it makes sense to reduce on muscle building exercises and switch over to yogic asana-s (postures), for these complement Brahmacharya and do not contradict it. Muscle building in the gym produces much testosterone (leading to production of more sex hormones) and leads to sexual aggression and irritation. This is not the aim of the advanced Brahmachari, for meditation cannot be taken into Samadhi (super-consciousness) by such an irate mind. In fact, the true Brahmachari who is spending much time on advanced meditation will gradually develop less of an inclination for muscle building. It is a natural shift, for his vital energy is depositing in the brain (as Ojas/Tejas/Soma) and not in muscle girth beyond the required limits. However, weight lifting or muscle building can be carried out moderately by beginner Brahmacharis performing simple meditation (as they have not yet reached the stage to practice advanced meditation). Once the Yogi becomes a complete Urdhvareta, muscle building does not cause problems as Veerya is not formed physically.

Question
Sir,
In one of the answers you said brahmacharya removes past sins and do not add new karma how can a person who is married also do the same for moksha how can a married person get liberation in the single life time?

Answer
A married person wishing Moksha (liberation) through self-realization steps into the practice of Brahmacharya by gradually reducing the frequency of sexual contact with his wife which then helps the couple to completely stop all sexual contact in course of time. The purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. If this act is limited to its correct purpose (of producing an offspring or two) and the married couple slowly work at giving up all forms of sexual contact with each other after the birth of a child, they will very soon reach a state where it becomes possible to get established in a marriage based on Brahmacharya.

For such a pure relationship to develop between man and wife, one needs to develop a strong urge for self-realization with Bhakthi (devotion) and love for the Almighty. One should feel much longing and craving for realizing God. One should pray with tears of love to God, requesting him to show the path that helps one liberate oneself from this Samsara (trans-migratory existence). Then, if one's efforts, commitment and sincerity to achieve Brahmacharya are strong and genuine, the Great Lord extends his helping hand to make Brahmacharya get established, for Brahmacharya is impossible with human efforts alone.

If there is a strong inclination and effort from the side of the man to lead a pure and virtuous life that leads to self-realization through Brahmacharya and devotion to God, all things fall into place in course of time. There may be obstacles and impediments initially, but all these disappear when there is devotion and love for the Supreme. One's efforts should be consistent and unfailing. Then, the wife of such a man falls in line and will not be an impediment to his practice. She will co-operate and support him in his quest for God-realization.

Such a man and wife who limit sexual contact for progeny only and then resort to a divine and virtuous life of unbroken Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with each other and with all other people derive as much benefit as would a Sannyasi (renunciate monk) in the path of spirituality and Godliness. They become very deserving and eligible for the state of Kaivalya (self-realization) and accrue much merit. Being married as householders does not in any way reduce their deservability. This has been very clearly mentioned in the Upanishads and scriptures without exception. It is the complete truth.

Lead a life of Yoga with the practice of Asana, Bandha, Pranayama and meditation. Strive to gradually reduce the frequency of sexual contact, then turn it into a non-ejaculatory relationship (refer past posts on what this is) and finally taper it away into nothing. Pray with devotion and sincerity to God requesting him to grant the strength to control the mind and the Indriya-s (senses). Within 6 months to a year of such honest efforts, it becomes very possible for both man and wife to get established in Brahmacharya completely.

Kindly go through each and every past answer and especially those where Brahmacharya in marriage has been detailed to get a better idea on how to proceed.

Question
QUESTION: Dhananjay, hi

On one one hand there is Dharma [one's duty to take responsibility for parents/wife/child etc] and on the other there is this strong urge to find God.
How does one balance the two. The urge to find God in Mahatma Budh was so high that he left all to find God and he did. I believe, based on past births etc, his final time had come, he had reached a state where he knew that all of this did not matter when compared to realising god. How does one reconcile the above? i.e. Dharma & Longing to realise god?
Can one who is honestly involved in following his dharma and is doing sadhna too, realise god?
And does it really help to renounce all to find god, after all there are different ways to find god and renouncing is not the only way.
Also, I wanted to ask, you keep mentioning that the world is illusory [maya] and asath [unreal]. Even if one keeps this in mind I always wonder, why? why did god create this unreality? what was the purpose of god creating the world and then letting humans suffer due to ignorance etc, with the ultimate human objective being self realisation.
Apologies if I am sounding vague.
Thanks for your help, Manish

ANSWER: 1. One should follow one's Dharma (duty) by honestly striving to complete one's duties in the path shown by destiny which is nothing but the will of God and set aside the rest of one's time for God-thought and activities required for self-realization. One's destiny is governed by God's will and ones 'Prarabdha' (past karma which will be worked out in this life). As these karma-s slowly work out and more positive or negative karma is not accrued by avoiding wrong actions and surrendering good actions as a service to God with the practice of Yoga and Brahmacharya; one's worldly duties, responsibilities and commitments slowly start reducing in volume. With sustained efforts in this direction, the honest and sincere Yogi will gradually & eventually reach a stage where God reduces his worldly commitments to a bare minimum and pave way for the Yogi to concentrate more time and energy in those activities required for self-realization. This then becomes the new Dharma of the Yogi to which he has to give his heart and soul. In such a man, there will be a strong longing from within to find God through self-realization. His mind and activities come back towards those required for God-realization in spite of engaging in worldly activities done out of necessity.

One wishing self-realization should initially strive in this direction sparing what little time and energy one can towards the practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya with devotion to God. With sustained efforts spanning many years or even lives depending on past karma and the will of God, he reaches a stage where his mind is constantly filled in God thought most of the time. Correspondingly, God arranges for lessening of his worldly duties and increases his spiritual practice. This is the case with all people who have persevered in this direction. The more advanced the person becomes, the lesser become his worldly responsibilities through the grace of the Lord. In cases of saints and sages, the advancement has reached such a stage that there is no further world experience or world duty remaining for them except possibly guide others in a similar path. The Jivatma (embodied soul) is nearing its time for release. A mammoth force of great intensity then takes hold of them to concentrate on spiritual practice and attain to Yoga (final union) which they comply with, for what greater happiness and joy than to tread the path chosen and offered by God himself to reach God himself?

The wise man does not plan, hope or desire for anything except realizing God, for he has realized the world and its offerings to be harbingers of pain, being Asath (unreal). The undependable senses promised him much pleasure but cheated him with pain. He has had enough of being fooled. He now wants to break free of their grip and attain to his real state of eternal bliss which comes only on attaining to self-realization (the knowledge that He, the Atman (soul) is no different than the Paramatman (the Almighty)). He forsakes doership and performs the part of an instrument or medium, all the time associating himself with the fact that God is the doer and he is only the medium. His mind is ever fixed on God and God-realization. To him, the world and the worldly activities he has to perform due to his 'Prarabdha' (past karma) are akin to the role played by an actor in a drama. He is involved, yet not involved. This world is his stage, life is the drama and its experiences and his work there are a part of his acting. Just as a drama actor does not let his role affect his real life when he gets home and just as the drama actor does not really die because he died in the drama, the wise do not let the happenings or non-happenings of this life drama to affect their real purpose of existence. They carry out the job of acting as per the wishes of the master director (God) and again keep the mind still, focused on God and God alone.

Each and every creature has been given a particular Dharma that it has to perform. That which man proposes is fueled by his personal desire stemming from the individual ego. That which ultimately happens or what is called as fate or destiny is willed by God taking into consideration one's past karma. Only that which God wills happens, try how hard one may to do the opposite. When one's desire coincides with that of God's, it appears as though one is the doer. At other times one cannot understand why something does not happen in spite of one's efforts. The reality is that God alone is the decider and not we. This is because God is the master of this creation, this body, mind, its faculties and the world. All these are God's divine dream. He alone is the architect of everything that one can see and not see. Hence what he decides alone transpires.

Knowing it to be such, the wise yogi does not hope or not hope, desire or not desire and plan for any endeavor except attaining to his true state of self-realization. Those activities concerning the world, he carries out based on that forwarded by his destiny. If he is a doctor, he treats his patients with honesty and sincerity, for this is what destiny (God) wills and then reverts his mind to God-thought/activities. If he is a fisherman, he goes about his daily routine of catching and selling fishes and again reverts his mind back to God at the earliest. With such practice, one reaches a stage where worldly work is carried out correctly and efficiently without ever releasing one's grip on God-thought. Even whilst working in the world, the mind of such a man thinks of it as a service to God and not separate from his Dharma (for it is God, the master of destiny who has decided that the man should perform that particular occupation or job)

This world is like a movie that is displayed on the cinema screen. Do the characters in the movie, the happenings or the locations in the movie exist in terms of reality? No. They are only moving forms of light thrown on the white screen from the projector. As soon as the person manning the projector switches it off, all forms of moving images which were thrown on the screen are sucked back into the device and all the people, locations and happenings in the movie disappear. Then, the person manning the projector alone remains. This universe with innumerable stars, planets, mountains, rivers, people (in terms of dualistic individuals) etc.. are all a part of the movie called 'Samsara' (dualistic world) projected from God's mind (projector) and fully controlled by him alone. So one only has to attend to the path shown by God as a service to HIM and revert one's mind back into Adhyatma (spirituality) the rest of one's time. Then, a very fine balance occurs between the world and one's spiritual state and they eventually merge into the one and only reality.

2. The Buddha didn't decide to desert his kingdom and family as a person in his individual capacity. What he did was to follow the will of God. He only acted as per the dictations of his inner voice (that of the Atman). In cases of some souls such as the Buddha, the Jivatma needs abrupt withdrawal from Samsara (dualistic world) by breaking and abandoning all ties, all of a sudden. The will of God deems it necessary for such an action in some cases. It might be that the wife and parents of the Buddha had such a Prarabdha (past karma) that required suffering arising from separation of a loved one. It might have been that the Buddha himself had to overcome such an attachment in order to proceed to higher spiritual domains. Then, such souls harden themselves to the possible repercussions of such a move and carry on their way out of Samsara. The necessity of such a move gets revealed to them from their very inner voice which is the voice of God. Variety and array is the nature of God's Leela (divine play). In the state of human perception limited by the intellect, we cannot understand HIS ways and means and why he makes some behave in one manner and others in another. We will know it when we reach that state of oneness with HIM through self-realization.

This is clear from the fact that all those in the path of self-realization did not abandon their family or needed to do so. They only did what God proposed. There are many instances of realized souls who attained to liberation whilst being in the midst of family. Merely deserting one's family physically serves no purpose. The mind of such a man who has merely separated physically from the objects or people to whom he is attached to will crave and long for them even if he were to dwell in a cave deep in the forest. What is required is renunciation of attachment and desire. What is required is mental distance, detachment and Vairagya (dispassion) from attachment to anything except God. When this is achieved, the city itself becomes a forest and one's residence itself becomes a cave. It does not matter to the person whether he lives in the forest or the city, for his mind is on God and not on the senses. So the wise Yogi does not become attached to the city or to the forest. He is not attached to any happening or non-happening. He does not hope, aim or desire for anything except the knowledge of God. He leaves to God what should happen or not happen in his life with a neutral mind and perspective, for he is convinced that everything God does is for his Good and not for the bad. If God wills him to move into a forest, then so be it. If no, then so be it. With such an attitude of neutrality, he accepts destiny with an ever smiling demeanor as the will of God. Bound by his personal desires he is not.

3. Only the one who follows his Dharma and his Sadhana realizes God, not one who runs away in a cowardly manner from the responsibility thrust by God himself. If one's efforts at Sadhana (spiritual practice) are genuine, God himself will reduce worldly responsibility. The wise Yogi does not increase or decrease his responsibility. These, he leaves to God.

4. In case of such a Yogi, the objects renounce him. He need not take the effort to renounce them!

-- The possibility of renunciation exists as long as there is an internal craving for some object which the person then tries to get over through efforts at control or surrender. Where is the question of giving up something which one does not have? One can renounce the desire for money when he has the desire for money. How can one renounce the desire for money if he has no desire for money? Similarly the question of renouncing the world exists as long as one is attached to it. How can one renounce the world if it is no longer an innate mental part of the person? If it does not form a part of his thinking or contemplation? This is true renunciation. The real Yogi is like this, for his contemplation is on the Supreme and not on his surroundings consisting of worldly happenings. All advice for the beginner in scriptures regarding renunciation is devised to help him reach this stage. What is important is to slowly renounce attachment to anything other than God.

5. We the Atman (pure soul) are actually a part of the Almighty, as a drop of sea water is a part of the ocean. But we have forgotten out true nature and consider ourselves as individuals. We can neither manifest the powers and abilities of the Almighty nor accept ourselves as being God himself. To remove this wrong conception and establish us back into our true state has the great Lord devised this life drama of Samsara (finite world) which is like the image emanating from a projector. It is Asath (unreal), for it is only the means used by the Lord to make the Jiva (individual) finally become aware of its oneness with HIM. The self-realized man realizes himself to be the Almighty itself and no different from it. This is how he becomes able to manifest many of the powers of God.

Someone I met the other day asked me with sarcasm and mockery -"If upon self-realization we become God himself and can do all the things which God does, can we then create immense riches, luxury, wealth and pleasure for ourselves? Can we create planets, stars and galaxies?" -- This person has obviously not understood what it means, even in the theoretical sense when the self-realized sages said "Aham Brahmasmi" - "I myself am the Almighty". When you have merged into God and have become God himself through self-realization, where is the question of 'YOU' thinking of creating stars or planets?? That which 'GOD' thinks happens even then as it is happening even now, for then there is no 'YOU'. There is only 'GOD'. This 'YOU' has disappeared. This 'YOU' has become 'GOD' further to removal of ignorance around the Atman (soul). There is nothing separate, no duality. The two concepts that earlier existed namely 'YOU' & 'GOD' have now become one concept 'GOD'. So if at that point of time 'GOD' wills to create a star or a planet, then it happens. Else it doesn't. How can 'YOU' think of creating a star or planet when 'YOU' no longer exist??... But have merged into the ocean of existence called 'GOD'?

QUESTION: Dhananjay, hi

Thanks very much for the elaborate answer, I really appreciate it.
Is the real battle then to eliminate YOU and merge with GOD?

Regards, Manish

Answer
Yes, one attains to Yoga (eternal union with HIM) when this sense of individual identity (fueled by the false ego born out of past actions) collapses and one feels himself in all beings and all beings within himself. The whole aim of Yoga with Brahmacharya is to accomplish this much and not more.

The sense of separate individual identity that I'm A, you are B and he is C does not exist in the Gnyani (realized one). He sees only the essence of everything and everyone as Brahman (Almighty) itself and nothing less. He feels his presence in all beings and feels all beings present within himself as God does. Lord Krishna explains this beautifully in the Bhagavad-Gita:

"Sarvabhutastha Aatmaanam, Sarvabhuthani cha Aatmani..
..Ikshathey Yoga Yukthaatma, Sarvathra Samadarshanaha"

" Seeing himself in all beings and seeing all beings within himself..
.. He who has attained to Yoga (final union) sees the same everywhere".

Question
my question is like after observing celibacy for few months i feel great power inside me and i start loosing my concentration. even the spiritual readings and pranayamas start to loose their effect on me. i forget everything regarding my efforts which i make to keep my brahmacharya intact. i feel like there is fire in my veins and can do anything. in this state it becomes quite difficult for me to remain celibate. plz help me out. everytime i make efforts and maintain celibacy like 4-5 months and end up with the break. is excess of energy main reason behind my failure? i have made all kind of efforts like hard physical exercises, yoga, pranayamas,fast, satvic diet, even a low protein diet but all in vain.

Answer
Certain past Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies) that have not yet been weeded out of the Karana Sharira (causal body) are the reasons behind the break. Keep up the efforts unfailingly with the practices you have mentioned in a sustained manner. Do not give up. The only way to weed out these past impressions is through sustained efforts till Brahmacharya becomes natural and unbroken. Time and commitment are the swords with which you will eventually win the battle. Until HE decides that the time for success has come, success eludes. Till then, it is for us to prove our worth by never giving in and never giving up in spite of breaks.

Question
QUESTION: Hello sir,
I have been initiated in kundalini yoga i chant a mantra with guru image.I want to ask after that I want to meditate on shri krishna image should i do one thing or both what is the difference between the two.

ANSWER: Prayer to the Guru with respect, love and devotion seeking his blessings are to be sought before the start of Yogic practice. Meditation is to be carried out only on the Supreme (Almighty). The Guru is the medium through whom God guides. He is like a bridge who connects the aspirant to God. After getting done with the Kundalini Kriya-s, you should meditate on the Almighty which can be with form (Saguna Brahman - Lord Krishna in your case) or the formless Almighty (Nirguna Brahman or Parabrahman - The Lord without form, without name or attributes in the nature of empty space stretching to infinity)

QUESTION: Thanks a lot for answer.What should be the correct time we must devote for both as per you.What type of krishna image(I mean bal krisha yogeshwer four armed form or varat rup) should one medidate for liberation and for formless what image should we percieve.

Answer
1. A minute or two is to be spent taking the Guru's blessings.

2. As much time as one can is to be spent on God-meditation.

3. The form of God most appealing is to be chosen.

4. For liberation, one should meditate on the Nirguna Brahman (formless God in the nature of empty space). This is the real form of God -- without name, without image and without any shape, occupying all space and time and invisible to the naked eye. One should sit straight in Padmasana, close the eyes, concentrate on the Thrikuti (place between the eyebrows) and think of the empty space that results, extending to infinity as his representation. Then one should think that this space is filled completely by HIM who is without form, shape, color and is invisible. Finally, one should think oneself as no different from this infinity (Brahman) and merge into it. During the initial stages of meditation, the aspirant will not be able to maintain concentration as various worldly thoughts distract him. Every time this happens, he should revert the mind back to God without fail and persevere. With honest efforts, meditation becomes deep in course of time and leads to Samadhi after many years of practice backed by unbroken and true Brahmacharya.

Question
QUESTION: Dhananjay, hi

Thanks very much for your detailed answers.

Dhananjay, what are you thoughts on travelling, some people like to travel, some people have to travel with work. How does travelling affect the brahamacharya yogi? Since the yogi is used to a daily yoga routine, does travelling have any affect on his/her energy levels, what i mean is that the person is used to a place of comfort in terms of doing his/her daily routine [bandh, pranayam and meditation], does travelling spoil that peace etc etc. Is there a fear of loss of vital energy because of travelling, change of place, change of energy field etc etc?

Also, in one of your earlier posts i read about moustache and beard helping in warding off negative energy, can you please elaborate on that?

Thanks very much, you dont know how much I appreciate it, Manish

ANSWER: 1. A Yogi wishing true spiritual progress leading to the state of an Urdhvaretha and finally liberation should to the best extent possible avoid travelling, meeting people, spending time with groups of people and indulging in other external contact. All these should be limited to necessity arising out of work/occupation and never more. Much of his Prana and Ojas get lost through useless talk and useless thoughts sprouting from worldly contact. Contact with people results in draining of transmuted energy without doubt. Travelling unless necessary results in an abrupt change in mental temperament, environment, food, lifestyle and daily schedule. Much fatigue results from continuous travel. There will be very little or no energy left to focus the mind on Yogic practice. This is the lifestyle of a Bhogi (worldly man) and not that of a Yogi (one who is striving for liberation).

This train of thought is endorsed in the 'Hathayogapradipika' written by the noble, self-realized sage Svatmarama, where it is clearly mentioned that once Brahmacharya has become steady and Kundalini is awakened (both go together), the Yogi should settle down in one place and practice till he attains to Yoga (final union). In the Bhagavad-Gita, Chapter 6/Verse 10, Lord Krishna says: " Let the Yogi constantly persevere in keeping the mind steady on me, remaining in solitude, alone, with the mind and body controlled, free from hope and greed." Such a state becomes very difficult for one who travels, relocates often or is fond of company.

Some information on hair drawn from various credible sources is reproduced below for the benefit of interested readers:-

" Human hair regulates the flow of Solar energy into the system. To let Solar energy flow unhindered into our system, it is necessary to grow hair to its full length and take good care of it. Then, the amount of energy that flows down from the Sahasra chakra (thousand petaled seventh chakra in the brain) increases tremendously. Kundalini is activated by the radiant force in the Anahata chakra (solar-plexus) and moves upward in response to the Solar energy coming down. This balances the body center and maintains total equillibrium. If hair is kept unkempt, let loose, down or uncovered, it becomes electrically imbalanced and the natural process of raising Kundalini gets impeded. Actually, the word hair is so important that the word Kundalini dereives its name from 'Kundala' meaning a coil of hair, also referring to the three and half coiled serpent power. Hair is best kept uncut and at the top of the head in the form of a Rishi knot over the 'Brahmarandhra' or the solar center. This concentrates solar energy into the pineal gland and encourages the awakening and rising of Kundalini shakthi that is necessary for liberation.

Hair is an extension of the nervous system, it can be correctly seen as exteriorized nerves, a type of highly evolved ‘feeler’ or ‘antennae’ that transmits vast amounts of important information to the brainstem, the limbic system, and the neo-cortex. Not only does hair in people, including facial hair in men, provide an information highway reaching the brain, hair also emits energy, the electromagnetic energy emitted by the brain into the outer environment. This has been seen in Kirlian photography when a person is photographed with long hair and then re-photographed after hair is cut. When hair is cut, receiving and sending transmissions to and from the environment and cosmos are greatly hampered. This results in numbing-out. The intuitive ability of the person gets greatly diminished. The natural ability of the human system to receive divine vibrations and insights from the cosmos suffer further to cutting hair on the head, beard or any other part of the body. Cutting of hair is a contributing factor to unawareness of environmental distress in local ecosystems. It is also a contributing factor to insensitivity in relationships of all kinds. It contributes to sexual frustration.

According to Ayurveda the ancient Hindu medical science, allowing the beard to grow prevents a person from contracting diseases of the throat and of the gums and the respiratory system. While the structure of hair is such that it can trap bacteria, it does not provide any congenial or favourable conditions for their growth and multiplication. On the other hand, shaven skin is one of the best substrata for their survival and multiplication. Shaving, which has to be repeated at least once everyday, invariably results in cuts, some of which are microscopic - and that is all the malignant bacteria and dreaded viruses need to swarm to the interior of our bodies. Just like skin, hair helps to synthesize vitamin D from sunlight. It also helps to supply the Pituitary gland (located in the head) with phosphorous. Phosphorous is an element which is absorbed during meditation by the Pituitary gland. The hair on our body regulates body temperature and our eye lashes, nostril hairs and ear hairs help to keep out fine dust particles. The research carried out with this end in view has highlighted the fact that hair serves as a factory providing Vitamin D for the body. Vitamin D protects a person against many fatal diseases like tuberculosis and is an essential element for the well being and health of bones, teeth and the nervous system.

Hair enhances the ability of a human being to experience God. This can be explained by understanding the workings of electromagnets. An electromagnet consists of an iron rod with a coil of wire wrapped around it. The strength of an electromagnet can be increased by increasing the number of coils. Now in a human being, there are nine visible inlets/outlets (2 nostrils, 2 ear holes, 1 mouth, 2 eyes, 2 below the waistline). And the 10th inlet is located in the head and is invisible. It is called the 'Brahmarandhra' (ending of the Susuhumna naadi) in the crown. This is where we experience the reality of God in Nirbija Samadhi. This can be considered to be the iron rod. Hairs are like coils of wire which amplify spiritual energy in the 10th inlet. A greater quantity of head hair will lead to more coils in the knot and therefore a higher concentration of spiritual energy. Of course, it is possible to experience God without any head hair like Buddhists. However anything that helps us to experience God more easily should be welcomed. Hair is essentially a spiritual technology that makes it easier to connect with God and maintain Brahmacharya by helping effective transmutation. Significant research has also revealed that longer the hair, more the production of Vitamin D through the interaction of Sun's heat on hair. All this shows that keeping hair is very important for one's physical as well as mental well-being. It has also been proved on the basis of experiments that the hair tied in the form of a knot on the top of the head is capable of attracting the maximum heat energy of Sun just as a television antenna has the capacity to hold photo waves from the atmosphere. (According to Tessitas, the ancient Germans also used to tie their long hair into a knot on the top of their heads). This solar energy which is absorbed by the antennae like coils of hair then stimulates the Pineal gland within the brain and helps in the complete and natural awakening of Kundalini Shakthi by percolating into the lower chakras from the Sahasrara chakra. If we take into account the cumulative loss suffered generations after generations further to cutting of bodily hair, it seems certain that trimming of hair is certainly an impediment in the way of realizing the complete scope of the human intellect and connecting to God.

In the religious literature of the world there is much evidence which suggests that God has created humans with great interest. The Jewish and Christian churches also contain evidence to this effect that God created man in his own image and put his own particle as soul within him. On the basis of all this, it can be easily presumed that God did not add anything, including hair, to human body without a definite purpose. Thus, trimming or cutting hair amounts to not only declining the gift given by God but also disfiguring the shape given to man by the Parabrahman (Almighty). This blunder of cutting and disowning hair has not been made by man since the times of Adam, but the same is in practice only since the last century or so.

DEMERITS OF CUTTING BODILY HAIR:

If hairs are not trimmed or cut, their length & growth stops automatically after reaching a certain length. In such a situation, hardly 0.5% of the protein that we take in with our daily diet is spent on their upkeep. On the other hand, cut or trimmed hair consumes much more protein because this has to be spent on the regrowth. Hair is mostly made of protein and the growth of hair draws much protein from the human system. Had hair stopped re-growing after having been trimmed once, there would have been no extra expense of protein. However, keeping in view the multidimensional usefulness and requirement of hair on the human body, God has created within the human body an interesting mechanism to help continuous growth of hair. This mechanism continues being operational till one breaths one's last. Thus, this mechanism goes on spending more protein on the re-growth of hair after a person shaves or trims them. Nature does this so as to not deny a person the varied benefits of hair. It seems modern man is busy in shaving off hair under a sort of false/atheistic culture whereas God is ever involved in their growth. God is serious that we should have hair, for he makes it regrow every day in spite of us shaving, while man is careless and oblivious to its necessity.

After comprehensive research, scientists have reached the conclusion that hairs stop growing after having achieved the level of optimum growth. They remain alive for two to six years. They play an active role during this period and then getting weak, fall off as we comb them. This is called the death of hair. There is no use keeping dead hair. However, keeping in view the utmost importance of hair for the human being, nature is ever ready to replenish these dead hair by sprouting new ones in their place. The importance of hair can also be gauged from the fact that the operation of replacing dead hair with new ones starts immediately and forcefully so that body does not suffer because of their lack. This shows that new and healthy hair on the head and beard of a man is of paramount importance to life. That is why God has created such a wonderful mechanism as a result of which a person continues to be bestowed with healthy hair for long years of his/her life. The fact that hair grows rapidly even after regular trimming and cutting implies that God does not approve of the human action of shaving or trimming hair. The very act goes against nature and going against nature has severe repurcussions.

"Hair is the pranic antenna. It is energy, pure protein. Our hair fashions might be just a trend, but if we investigate, we may find that we have been depriving ourselves of one of the most valuable sources of energy for human vitality and spiritual growth”-- Yogi Bhajan

"Each part of the body including hair has a highly sensitive work to perform for the survival and well being of the body as a whole. The body has a reason for every part of itself." -- C. Young

God has given you one face, and you make yourselves another -- Shakespeare

END

For this reason, ancient Yogis and Rishis never cut hair but let it grow to its natural length. This helped them achieve multi-fold benefits. In all ancient cultures of the world, cutting of hair is frowned upon. The trend of cutting bodily hair took momentum only nearing the end of the 19th century. From the Yogic point of view it is well known from the scriptures that the natural growth of a beard and mustache helps cover the 'Chandra Dwara' (lunar center) of a man located in his chin. This center in the tip of his lower jaw is the spot through which people and especially women connect with the man. In the presence of a beard, this spot is fully covered and this regulates the Pranic energy one gives out while interacting with others or when others see him. Only the required amount of energy is given out in the presence of the beard.

In the absence of a beard, a man with a clean shaven jawline is unprotected and ungoverned in terms of his Prana (vital energy). His lunar center is fully exposed. This results in the loss of much Ojas, Tejas and Prana when he interacts with people, especially with women. Interaction here doesn't merely refer to talk but also sight. A man without a beard, with a clean shaven jawline becomes vulnerable and susceptible to the feminine energy given out by a woman. This then draws his masculine energy from the lunar center and he becomes defenseless in protecting himself from being dominated and subjugated by her feminine charms which are an effect of Maya (illusion). He has a high chance of being mesmerized and stupefied by her female energy. It has been observed that Yogis with a full grown beard and hair have a much lesser chance of losing their calmness, poise and steadiness on the appearance of a woman in the emotional sense. Thus it becomes a worthy tool towards the practice of Brahmacharya by acting as a shield that prevents the loss of Ojas, Tejas and Prana. A woman with sexual intentions cannot easily draw Ojas from the man with a beard.

To begin with, those who shave can stop the activity and grow a small stubble which can then gradually be let to grow as one comes to terms with the concept.

QUESTION: Dhananjay, hi

Once again, thanks very much for the detailed answer.

If one were to let hair grow unabated then it becomes difficult to carry on working in the so called 'professional environment' for example. How does one balance that? After all one has to sustain himself/herself and family by earning a livelihood.
Also if one has a serious dandruff problem and has cut hair to get rid of that problem then what does one do for that?
Once you let your hair grow, can one use an anti dandruff cream for example or any kind of oil etc?
When you say Rishi knot, do you mean the shikha? I am presuming not but just want to confirm. A lot of brahmins [rather most the brahmins in the past] used to shave off the entire head and keep the shikha? any special reason for doing that? I do know there will be logic behind it for sure but does keeping a shikha, do what keeping full grown hair and then tying a rishi knot, does?
Dhananjay, apologies for asking so many questions, I am just trying to find the right balance for people who are engaged in worldly activities like working in an office for example and are serious about god realisation at the same time.
Also, thanks for your insights on travelling, they are helpful.

Thanks once again, Manish

Answer
1. Considering 'professional constraints', the Yogi will be of benefit from maintaining a small stubble with a mustache or a well maintained-trimmed beard rather than be clean shaven. Maintaining such a moderate growth of beard and mustache is well accepted all across the world even among corporate circles and poses no problem. This regulates his Prana to a much better extent from flowing out than an uncovered, bare chin.

2. The practice of Brahmacharya with Yogic practices produces much heat within the body. As a remedy, the scriptures advocate deep application of hair oil (such as natural coconut oil, olive etc..) twice a week before going to bed at night, soaking the head overnight and washing the same the next morning. This method is necessary to drain excessive heat produced in the body further to Pranayama, meditation and transmutation of semen into Ojas. People who follow this routine will observe that the body undergoes deep relaxation and gets de-stressed. This also helps maintain hair free from dandruff and bacteria. It cools and soothes the entire nervous system and is beneficial to the eyes and the brain. It gives deep, sound sleep at night thereby helping one wake up early in total freshness.

The application of skin creams, hair creams, body sprays, perfumes, deodorants and other artificial applications should be fully given up by the Brahmachari as these induct further physical toxins and pollutants into the system, being made of chemicals. Even the so called herbal cosmetics available in the market contain many dangerous chemicals. The use of soap during bathing is itself unnecessary and not of benefit to the Yogi. Soap removes the natural oil film on the skin and makes the skin dry, rough and brittle. To correct this, people use a moisturizer which is again more of chemicals and pollutants. The Yogic method of not using soap while bathing but briskly rubbing the entire body with water corrects all these problems. Those who practice regular Pranayama de-toxify themselves right from within to a great extent. There is no need for external application of soap while bathing. A brisk rub with just water while bathing and rigorous toweling after a bath are very sufficient to cleanse the body. Not using soap in this way leads to a naturally moisturized skin which glows with health. It does not crack, dry up or become brittle even in cold weather. The skin stays firm and free from wrinkles. With constant Brahmacharya and Yogic practices, the body of the Yogi does not reek of smell unlike others who try covering this up with loud perfumes or toxic deodorants. It has been very rightly stated in the Upanishads that the body of one who is conserving and transmuting his semen emanates a mild and pleasant natural fragrance. He does not require external cosmetics. The lack of decay within the cells and immense Prana from within naturally lead to this state. Sweating reduces to the very minimum in course of time. All these effects become very noticeable on nearing two years of unbroken Brahmacharya with regular meditation. This is based on my personal experience.

If one still finds the need to moisturize skin, light application of any natural oil on the face will do the trick. The use of chemically based artificial cosmetics and products is best avoided and limited to the minimum where necessary such as soap for washing hands or the toothpaste for brushing teeth.

3. The 'shikha' is a later derivative of the Rishi knot. It is more symbolic and not of much use since it involves shaving the rest of the head. It was not used by the ancient Rishis and appeared later as a symbol of studentship. If possible, it is best not to cut hair at all but let it grow naturally and then tie it into a bun or a pony-tail while attending to external work. This might not make much difference to the advanced aspirant but it gives much benefits, especially in the initial stages of Brahmacharya. The best conservation of Ojas occurs when hair is tied into a bun and not let loose. Even a pony tail is less beneficial but better than letting hair loose. The Rishi knot is the best and most beneficial hair style which can be used while at home (as it looks out of place outside in the present day world), and while meditating, for it covers the 'Brahmarandhra' (opening of Brahman) at the top of the head and inducts immense cosmic energy. Meditation becomes deep and natural with this knot. The best example of the visible Rishi knot is that maintained by 'Sikhs' (followers of the realized saint Guru Nanak). (see:http://journeyinfaith.wordpress.com/2008/02/27/the-sikh-rishi-knot-and-its-meani) Sketches of ancient Indian Rishis also depict the Rishi knot which was held in place by 'Rudraksha' (sacred beads). All photos of Lord Shiva, the God of Yoga show him with the Rishi knot (Google search for photos of Lord Shiva). This is the way hair can be styled while at home and while meditating.

Question

Hello Sir,
I hope you're doing well.

From my experience, I think that masturbation makes the face look unhealthy. Do you agree? Is there any cure for that? Or are the effects irreversible?

Thanks,
Matt

Answer
The entire body, internal organs, brain, nervous system, skin and the bones degenerate further to indiscriminate loss of vital fluid spent on recreation. This effect of decay and loss of health is then seen in the face devoid of luster and life.

On the other hand, conservation and transmutation of semen into Ojas makes the entire human system sparkle with luster, energy, health, vitality, brightness and radiance. This is then seen through the face and eyes of the Brahmachari. Such a person is cheerful, energetic, calm, serene and full of radiance and positivism. He becomes youthful and divine both externally and internally. After a long period of unbroken Brahmacharya with constant God-meditation and devotion, he becomes an Urdhvarethas (one whose vital fluid flows upwards to the brain). Then, he constantly smiles from within, full of bliss and joy. "Atmanyeva Atmana tustaha" says the Bhagavad-Gita -- "He becomes content in the self by the self (Atman or soul) with no need of anything external to make him happy".

The only cure from the ill-effects of losing one's seed is to get over the habit through establishing oneself in Brahmacharya at the earliest.

Question
Sorry, I am reposting as I incorrectly entered my email the first time.

Things have been going beautifully after over 5 months of Brahmacharya and then an emission during a dream which has left me, after 3 days, feeling totally lacking in my earned vitality and optimism and with more than the usual load of challenges in my life. This loss was copious unlike two previous ones which had no discernable effect.
Could it be that relative low points in life are inevitable and occur as eddies which can engender a corresponding loss of the seed to presage the occasion, especially when you consider here that the loss wasn't a volitional action? I have lost even the motivation to meditate as it seems right now like useless drudgery.
Thank you for your time and service to provide needed understanding in an area of enormous ignorance.

Answer
The initial stages of Brahmacharya involve ups and downs, some of them quite severe in some people. The layers of Avidya (ignorance around the Atman leading to delusion) start getting stirred up whilst being unearthed. When layers representing past sexual karma and Samskaras (impressions) of much strength surface, there is a corresponding reaction which is also of a strong nature in the outward sense. This sometimes causes copious discharge through a wet dream.

This is sometimes the case with people in the initial stages of Brahmacharya. It appears as though everything is going well for months altogether and then there is a setback. The reason is the unearthing of a big chunk of strong sexual karma which was lying dormant and has now surfaced for evacuation. Some of these past impressions are so strong that they cannot be weeded out without a heavy emission in the dream state. The Yogi has no other choice but to persevere and commit himself with more concentration and sincerity in the practice. This is part of the path of Yoga, especially during the initial stages when karma of a very gross nature is being handled and dealt with. With honest efforts and perseverance, with God-devotion and meditation, such instances become less possible and one will eventually reach the stage of freedom from wet dreams.

As rightly understood by you, these highs and lows especially in the Brahmachari occur in the form of waves. The novice encounters exuberance and excitement further to reaching the crest of the wave where everything appears beautiful and perfect. He gets a feeling he has attained to a high level, only to be humbled when the next strong layer of past karma surfaces with such force that he loses his bearing and becomes unstable on shaky ground, reaching the trough of the wave. The right approach of course is to stay consistent and honest with undulating Yogic practice and be unfettered by success or failure with a level head.

The adept achieves this by reminding himself that he is not the doer but God is. When one has so conditioned the mind, it naturally follows that one does not beam with pride on achievement or wane with depression on failure, for we are only the mediums and not the doers. God alone is the doer. Our's is to try to the best of our effort and leave the rest to HIM. We are neither concerned with success nor with failure but only with honest effort. HE decides what is best and we comply with HIS decision.

Stay firm in regular Yogic practice that covers Asana, Bandha, Pranayama and meditation on a regular basis. It is important that efforts are not slackened at any cost. The path of Yoga is not an easy one, for it is strewn with obstacles at every turn and corner. So the undeserving and non-dedicated do not have access to the final state of beatitude, God has made the path very treacherous and tough. Only the really committed strive for progress against all odds and eventually reach the goal. Others give in to their lower tendencies and give up, unable to bear the strain and super-human effort that is required. With the right effort and devotion to God, you will tide over these tendencies and emerge victorious.

Question
Respected Dhananjay ji,

Thank you very much for showing us the right path of Yoga.

I have been trying to do pranayam for last many years, but every time I'm forced to stop it after 2-3 days. I start feeling feverish and hot all over and my mind becomes very sad, agitated and upset. It is a very unpleasant experience. I have tried all kinds of pranayams but the end result is the same.

As advised by Swami Sivanand in his book "Science of Pranayama" I tried having warm sweetened milk with ghee, but it did not help.

I have read somewhere that pranayam should not be practiced by people suffering from psychological or problems of the nervous system. I have suffered from severe depression and weak nervous system from birth.

Is there any alternative to pranayam that I can practice?

Thanks.

Answer

Apply effort on establishing prowess in Asana (Yogic physical postures) along with the strict practice of the Yama-Niyama-s. These do's and don't's of Yama-Niyama are meant to strengthen the mind, develop an awareness of reality and make the mind ready for the practice of Asana which requires much mental resolve. They are the foundations on which Asana will be established. Upon achieving adeptness in the Yama-Niyama-s, the mind and psyche become ready for the practice of Asana. The practice of Asana strengthens the body and nerves and calms the nervous system. It increases Prana (vital energy) within the system. It destroys many of the toxins which have been the cause of debility and weakness. Asana is the foundation on which Pranayama will be established. Upon achieving proficiency in Asana, the body becomes geared to take the load of Pranayama without trouble. One then becomes successful in Pranayama without doubt.

The practice of Asana must always involve slow, smooth and jerk-free movements. Breathing should be very slow with Puraka (inhalation) while rising up and Rechaka (exhalation) while moving down. Asana-s inovolve Kumbhaka (retention) of breath in their final resting point, either within the lungs (antara kumbhaka) or outside the lungs (bahya kumbhaka) depending on the final point of the Asana. All these should be correctly learnt in person from one who is proficient in the subject and then practiced. These things cannot be described or instructed through the medium of the internet. One should keep the mind calm and practice twice everyday, before Sunrise and at Sunset with regularity. The stomach should neither be loaded nor be empty. A cup of milk or malt can be consumed prior to practice. A life of Brahmacharya should be maintained without fail. There is no Yoga without Brahmacharya and no Brahmacharya without Yoga. Sathwic food free from strong spices and without much chilly should be the staple diet. Practice the following Asana-s in a gradual manner until complete mastery is attained.

1. Paschimothanasana
2. Padahasthasana
3. Halasana
4. Sarvangasana
5. Bakasana
6. Padmasana
7. Dhanurasana
8. Matsyendrasana
9. Shirshasana

Within two years of correct practice, the mind, body and nerves will get strengthened. They will become eligible for the successful practice of Pranayama. Psychological instability gets greatly diminished. One's efforts must be very consistent and sincere. The practice must be carried out with commitment and devotion to God. Pray to God for success in Yoga and Brahmacharya after the end of Asana practice. Genuine and sincere intentions with correct and sustained efforts will lead to success.

Question

QUESTION: Sir I want to ask in meditation on saguna form like lord shiva can we chant "om namah sivay" in mind.2>Can we medidate when we are free like in bus train during journey and on times other than sunrise or sunset.

ANSWER: 1. 'Japa' (mental repetition of God's name) can be carried out while free or in the midst of work/travelling at any point of time.

2. Meditation does not involve any chanting. It involves concentration, contemplation and finally merging of consciousness into the Almighty. It can be indulged in during times other than Sunset or Sunrise.

---------- FOLLOW-UP ----------

QUESTION: Thanks for answer is it necessary to get initiated in mantra ,which type of person should be a guru,can one get vedio initiation.

Answer

1. Depending on the kind of Yoga and the method employed by the Guru, initiation into a Mantra may or may not be necessary.

2. One who is self-realized (has attained to God-realization), selfless and thus capable of transmitting 'Vidya' (knowledge of the absolute reality) from the Almighty is fit to be a Guru. The true Guru is always an Urdhvarethas and a representation of the Almighty Brahman himself. He is not interested in money, name, fame, praise and other worldly attributes.

3. Such a Guru can transmit his blessings astrally (through the medium of space) if he is physically far away, or cosmically (across the cosmos) if he has departed from Earth, to the chosen disciple. Why then would he require video communication?

Question

Sir

I doing pranayama daily from the Temple infront of Vigraha, by filling the lungs with chanting Om 20 (20 in first view and 20 in after one rotation total 40 times) time like Om 1, Om 2 ....,My temple includes one main vigraha (Shiva) and five upa vigraha... I chanting 600 oms with filling lungs in 3 rotation around the Temple (200 om in 1 rotation and 600 after the completion of rotation) . After this process I feeling like as a drunkard with little bit kick, Sir my doubt is that is it good for spiritual progress or not?

Answer

1. Perform Pranayama by sitting in Padmasana or Sidhasana and in the method explained in previous posts (see:http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2011/5/Pranayama-Yoga-Brahma). A detailed explanation of the correct means to be adopted has been dealt with in that post to enable practitioners act rightly. Pranayama should be performed in the above explained manner only after performing the three Bandha-s (Mula, Uddiyana and Jalandhara). Practice of Asana if any should be prior to Bandha. This is the correct order. Pranayama should NOT be performed while walking, doing Pradakshina (circum-ambulation of the temple) or any other activity . If performed during such activities, it might result in fainting, brain damage or other serious health problems. DO NOT RESORT TO SUCH INCORRECT MEANS OF PRACTICE.

2. Before sitting for the practice of Yoga, one can pray at the temple, do Pradakshina chanting 'OMKARA', chant the Lord's name etc.. The practice of physical Yogic kriya-s such as Asana, Bandha and Pranayama should not be mixed with other activities at any cost. Complete focus and concentration must be applied on the practice and not on any other activity. Mixing these with other activities could lead to serious complications and adverse health effects.

Question

I asked earlier a question unlike medition japa involve chanting at any time in this we have to concentrate on sound of words or we have to concentrate on trikuti or we haven't to concentrate at all.Is their any posture involved.

Answer

1. One should concentrate with Bhakthi (devotion) on the God denoted by the mantra during 'Japa'.

2. It is not necessary to think on the words of the Mantra or focus on Thrikuti in Japa.

3. Padmasana or Sidhasana are preferable. While traveling or during other times, one can sit on a seat or chair and practice.

Question

If i don't waste my semen for some long time, Say for some years or months....like, after 1 year....I mean, if im not having sex or masturbation for last 1 year and then i go for it, it owuld be more harmful? Would i lost my semen's huge part?
I think my question is not so clear....because its not so clear in my mind as well... :(i wish you would get me....

And one more thing, if i dont have sex phsically but i think about it...then it is any harm to my semen?

thnks

Answer
1. If abstinence is carried out through Brahmacharya, then the benefits will be complete and total. For the benefits to be complete, Brahmacharya should be practiced in thought, word and deed with God-devotion a life of Yoga and meditation.

2. Loss of vital fluid once a year or once in a few months is less debilitating than regular and more frequent loss.

3. Lesser loss of vitality results from less frequent loss of semen (both voluntary or involuntary)

4. Abstaining from physical sex or masturbation but indulging in sexual thoughts via the mind will eventually lead to loss of semen through masturbation, sex or copious wet dreams as the mind has not been taken off sexual contemplation. The mind is the switch which controls the body and semen.

Kindly go through each and every past answer to get clear about the topic in depth.

Question
Dhananjay, hi

Hope you are keeping well? Dhananjay, I believe from reading your earlier posts that when you refer to meditation you are not actually referring to chanting. Is chanting not a part of Bhakti Yog and a type of meditation too? i.e. a way to reach god.

If someone performs bandh, pranayam and then chanting, then does he/she not follow the sequence elaborated in ashtang yog and hence not achieve the full benefits?
What I mean is that chanting is a part of Bhakti Yog and also another way to realise god [as they say bhakti mein shakti hai], then why is it not termed as meditation.
And also, what is the true form of performing meditation, is it sitting in a cross legged position, concentrating on the ajna chakra and contemplating on the meaning of life etc etc?

Also, Dhajanjay, following on from one of my ealier posts, if one lives in a very cold country, then how does one do without the use of cold cream etc because the skin tends to get really cracky and hard. Sometimes the water is very hard as a result of which the skin gets cracky and hard.

Also with regards to hair, you had said that coconut oil should be applied twice a week [for people suffering from dandruff etc], overnight and then washed the next morning.
Wash with what? I am presuming plain water and not shampoo since shampoo has chemicals in it. Will the oil come off completely with water? If one has lost all hair and is bald, then I guess that person cant really reap the benefits of keeping long hair etc. Is there any remedy for this kind of a person?
Conversely if one is living in a very hot country, what does one do for the bad odour from sweat? One is forced to use a deodorant etc.

Are these things like the deo, shampoo etc prohibited because the chemicals in them impede the spiritual growth or because they are generally and physically harmful to the body? I am sure there is reason beyond the physical.
Thanks Dhananjay and apologies for asking so many questions, as before trying to ensure there is a practical way out of every situation.
Regards, Manish

Answer
1. Chanting the name of the Lord/mantra/hyms is a good way to increase Bhakthi (devotion) and inundate oneself with divine vibrations. It can be performed before meditation.

2. Those intending to do Japa (chanting) should carry it out before Bandha, Nadhi Shodhana & Pranayama. This will help align the mind towards God whilst Yogic practice. Thus chanting can be made a preliminary method of developing vibrations of Bhakthi in the mind before Yogic practice.

3. Meditation is the term used to denote the three successive processes by which one merges one's consciousness into the universal consciousness of the Parabrahman (Almighty). The 3 processes being:

1. Dharana (concentration meditation)
2. Dhyana (contemplation meditation)
3. Samadhi (super-consciousness within the Almighty where the sense of individual identity and the awareness of oneself as separate ceases to exist and dissolves into the Almighty during the meditative process)

Chanting is not meditation, for meditation is a process that occurs at a much more deeper level and finally reaches the deepest level possible. Chanting occurs at the gross, mental level for it involves the use of the mind, while meditation finally goes beyond the mind. Unless the person transcends the mind, Samadhi is not attained. Unless awareness of oneself as the Ahamkara (ego) or the sense of separate identity is abolished, the final stage of Samadhi or merger into the Almighty is not attained. This cannot be attained by chanting alone as it occurs at a more superficial level. It can only be attained when 'Shunyata' (void of mind) is achieved in Samadhi. Hence those wishing to chant a mantra use it before the start of Yogic practice as prayer to God.

4. Correct method of performing meditation for liberation:- After completing Asana, Bandha, Nadi Shodhana and Pranayama (before Sunrise or Sunset), one first sits in the Padmasana, Sidhasana (these 2 are most preferred) or any other Asana which ensures that the lower back, spine, neck and head are in a straight line. Then one assumes the 'Gnyana mudra' (or 'Chin mudra' with the palm up) and places the hands on the side of the thigh near the knee with the palms facing the sky (see: http://sacred-earth.typepad.com/yoga/2008/07/mudras-for-pranayama.html), closes the eyes and starts to meditate.

The mind is fist focused on the 'Thrikuti' (spot between the eyebrows) denoting the 'Ajna' chakra. It is then made free from all thoughts other than that of the Nirguna Brahman (formless Almighty). HE is thought of as being invisible, formless, colorless and shapeless of the nature of empty space and pervading everywhere. Upon closing one's eyes and concentrating at the Thrikuti, the blank empty space that results (often black in beginners) is thought of as representing the Nirguna Brahman (Almighty) filling the infinite cosmos extending to infinity.

I. One first concentrates on HIM using this concept and visualization. Here the mind strays out into the world further to distractions by worldly thoughts. The meditator strives and brings it back to concentrate on the Brahman. This tug of war continues for some time and each time, the aspirant pulls the mind back to the Almighty. This constitutes 'Dharana'.

II. After a few minutes (or longer) when the force of external thoughts has reduced, the thought of the formless Almighty increases in magnitude. The incidence of worldly thought reduces but still occasionally occurs. The aspirant perseveres to completely root out all thoughts other than that of the formless Brahman. He strives to fill the mind only with contemplation of this formless Almighty who is of the nature of all knowledge and bliss. Who is all knowing, all powerful and all containing. One reminds himself that the entire Universe of empty space is within this formless Almighty, has come from HIM and dissolves into HIM. That there is nothing beyond HIM and everything is within HIM. With much practice, the mind gets established in this concept of thought of the formless Almighty in the nature of empty space and does not waver or stray out. Breathing reduces in intensity and frequency. This is called Dhyana . It might take many months or even years for a person to reach this stage depending on his evolutionary spiritual level and density of Samskaras (impressions).

III. Upon achieving mastery over the second stage of Dhyana to a degree where the mind is firmly rooted in the thought of the Brahman during contemplation and maintains this state of uninterrupted and undistracted Dhyana, the meditator now goes a step further and starts to strive at associating the concept of himself as no different from the concept of the Nirguna Brahman. He reminds himself that he, the Atman (soul) is really the Brahman (Almighty) itself and nothing else when stripped of the physical body, mind and ego. It is like a drop of sea water reminding itself that it is really a part of the mighty ocean and not different. The drop now wants to lose its individual and separate identity and merge with the ocean, whereupon it experiences being the ocean.

When this concept is kept at the back of the mind and 'Dhyaana' practiced for a sufficiently long period, the mind starts to dissociate itself from the body. There is no thought (except for the thought "I am meditating on the Supreme") but only awareness of pure I-ness devoid of all other thought. This is called Sasmita Savikalpa Samadhi where external awareness lessens and one is engrossed in pure I-ness or pure egoism. Breathing becomes even less frequent than in Dhyana. The mind itself is the 'Pratyaya' (seed of meditation.) This state is maintained through conscious effort. One mistakes this I-ness itself to be the Atman at this stage, an assumption which is incorrect, for the Atman is illuminating the 'Asmita' or I-ness and I-ness being the ego is not the Atman who is a witness. Practice of this Samadhi of I-ness for a long period of time extending to many months or years with unbroken Brahmacharya leads to 'Nirbija' or 'Nirvikalpa' Samadhi (The Samadhi totally bereft of mind and breath called 'Unmani') which on mastery culminates finally in 'Kaivalya' (liberation through self-realization).

5. In a cold country, one can try replacing skin cream with a natural oil of coconut or olive, applied atop a layer of pure milk cream (after bathing, apply the cream of milk on skin first and then oil). Soap should not be used for bathing if this procedure is to bear results as soap removes the natural oil film on skin. Also, one should not bathe in excessively hot water as this too removes the natural oil film and makes the skin dry. Bath water can be warm but not very hot.

6. A mild Shampoo can be used to wash oiled hair. This does not toxify the system as few drops are used and quickly rinsed away without leaving it on hair for long. Oiling the scalp is beneficial in releasing heat immaterial of whether one has head hair or not. One should try staying natural and let whatever hair grows to grow, be it of the beard or head. If the head is bald, then so be it, this is also the decision of the Almighty and the Yogi accepts it.

7. Unbroken Brahmacharya, a mildly spiced & pure vegetarian diet, the practice of Asana, Nadi Shodhana, Bandha, Pranayama and meditation, all these eventually purify the system to a degree where bad odor stops manifesting within the body of the Yogi. Decay and debilitation within, caused by loss of Veerya (semen) is the cause of bad odor in the sweat, mouth and skin. The Yogi gets free from all these eventually, resulting in odorless sweat of a small volume being generated. Even bath-soap becomes unnecessary. Brisk rubbing of the body with water suffices and yet the body remains fresh and fragrant when one reaches this stage.

8. All artificial cosmetics and applications are prohibited because:-

* They enter the skin, body and toxify the system and the process of purification being undertaken through Yoga and Brahmacharya gets impeded at the physical level.

* These contain stimulating essences which arouse one's passion and lead to a sensual state of mind.

* Constant application leads to dependence and makes them a part of living. This dependence makes one less self-reliant, self-sufficient and less independent of that which is Asath (unreal). One begins to associate one's sense of happiness and confidence on the application of these products which are Asath (unreal) and not on ones's own self (Atman). Also, the use of such products strengthens body consciousness by diverting the mind towards beautification of the body; while in reality, the Yogi is intent on a contrary purpose - To become independent of body consciousness and become conscious of himself as the Atman (soul). He is striving to realize that this body is Asath (false), while focusing on bodily beautification takes his mind into the realm of the unreal. This is contrary to the aim of Yoga which is aimed to make man "Content in the self, by the self".

Question
Sir

Your answers is very much helpful for me , may I know what are the results perfoming Bandas, I heard that the Moola Banda is good for keep brahmacharya? what are the results in the body after doing Bandas, Kechari mudra can perform by an ordinary man?

Answer
All Bandha-s and Mudra-s are designed to help one raise the Prana (vital energy) from the Lower chakra-s into higher domains so as to aid successful transmutation of the vital energy, leading to deep meditation aimed at self-realization. This also bestows Brahmacharya. As a byproduct, these improve health, detoxify the body and give vitality and well being to the entire system. The Thribandha-s should always be performed before the start of Pranayama.

The Mula Bandha when masterd leads to merger of the Prana (upward) and the Apana (downward) Vaayu-s (vital winds). It is performed in the state of Kumbhaka (breath retention) by taking in a deep breath, holding the breath, tightening (constricting) the anal and urinal muscles (muscles used to stop the flow of excrement and urine), and pulling up Apana with a swift jerk like pull using the above mentioned muscles along with the abdominal muscles. This state is then maintained for a few seconds and breath then slowly exhaled. It leads to youth and vitality along with an increase in the gastric fire. This then arouses 'Kundalini Shakthi' which enters the 'Sushumna' Naadi within the spine leading to conditions suitable for Samadhi (super-consciousness).

The Uddiyana Bandha is another important Bandha used to help Prana enter Sushumna. It is performed at the final point of Rechaka (breath exhalation) first by slow exhalation and then extremely swift and sudden expiration of the remaining breath by drawing back the abdominal and stomach muscles above and below the navel against the back of the body and upwards towards the thorax. This state of breath exhalation is then maintained for a few seconds and breath then slowly inhaled. It curtails ageing and bestows excellent health and strength. It is most suitable for those wishing liberation as per the 'Hatha Yoga Pradipika' written by the great & self-realized Svatmarama Yogin.

The Jalandhara Bandha when mastered helps prevent the downward flow of 'Amrit' (or Soma, the nectar in the region of the moon in the brain) by constricting the Naadis in the throat region, thereby providing immortality to the Yogi. This then prevents consumption of the nectar 'Soma' through the 'Jatharaagni' (gastric fire in the stomach) leading to a stabilized Prana. It is performed in Kumbhaka (breath retention) by taking a deep breath and suddenly and swiftly pressing the chin (below the lower jaw) against the lower neck (uppermost part of the chest) by a firm contraction of the throat. This state is maintained for a few seconds and breath then slowly exhaled. This leads to closing of the Ida (Moon) and Pingala (Sun) naadis.

The Mula Bandha, Uddiyana Bandha and Jalandhara Bandha when performed together in conjunction are called 'Thribandha' and are the best tools for attaining excellent Brahmacharya and successful Pranayama.

Those interested in Khechari Mudra should practice only after learning the correct technique from a Guru who is adept in this vidya. It should not be attempted or practiced by the beginner who has not yet purified the lower chakras adequately. One might consider learning the practice after many years of unbroken Brahmacharya and meditation, following which one acquires the knowledge if God so wishes. If the procedure of Yoga and Brahmacharya as has been outlined in past answers, with the practice of Bandha, Nadi Shodhana, Pranayama and Meditation is correctly followed, the best results including all those which come from Khechari Mudra will be eventually obtained and one need not resort to Khechari mudra.

It is important for the aspirant to know that one should adhere to one system and one path that leads to self-realization and not dribble and meddle with various different methods of Yogic practices in a casual manner. Nothing will be gained by such an attitude; Rather, one might seriously endanger oneself through such behavior as has been the case with many people. These Yogic kriya-s, Pranayama-s and other practices are very powerful and can become dangerous if randomly mixed and incorrectly practiced as per one's fancy without the guidance of one who has successfully tread the path.

Question
Sir,
Does continued practice of brahmacharya, lead to higher energy levels? I mean , will a person require less sleep, and he acn work longer without getting tired?

Answer
Yes, continued practice of Brahmacharya with a Yogic lifestyle will reduce the need for excessive sleep, excessive food and help one focus and work better. Both food and sleep finally become very moderate and of the right type. The established Brahmachari will not get the mind to overeat or oversleep.

Question
Sir,
After practising brahmacharya for several weeks (about 3), I am beginning to feel lazy and cannot concentrate on studies. I feel drowsy most of the time. What should I do?

Answer
Indulge in regular physical exercise or Asanas, intellectual work and spiritual God-meditation along with the daily routine. The immense energy that has been conserved needs to be effectively channelized through the right means by diverting it into constructive activity. Else, the accumulated energy stagnates, becomes Tamasic (inertia) and finally goes out through a wet dream. Sometimes, during the initial stages of beginning Brahmacharya, negative emotions and stupor along with laziness surface due to the force of past Vasanas (tendencies). Even in such cases, the solution is the same.

Question
QUESTION: Sir,
How can u define pure conciousness in terms of meditation.Pure consiousness,pure soul is same with all beings & all matters is it energy,wave or it is something behind energy wave.How it is beyond space and time.

ANSWER: There is only one Chith (Supreme or pure consciousness) occupying all space and time. IT has existed, exists and will always exist. It is neither matter, nor energy, nor time. It is beyond all these, for from IT come all these. From IT are born all these. All these are the effects while IT is the cause. IT itself does not have a cause since it has always existed and is NOT a compound product (that which can be split into smaller constituents - A condition necessary for any concept to come under the purview of birth and death, start and end). IT is thus the source and eternal existence which is the cause of all matter, space and time. IT is fully independent and unconnected with space, time and matter, for these have come from IT and not the other way round. IT is single, without beginning and without end. Since it is indivisible and not the product of two or more constituents, it is primal (the very cause) and has no second. IT is the first without a second, and even this statement is not fully correct, for how can that which is everything be limited to numbers such as first, second or third when there is nothing but IT everywhere?

This is what we actually are in reality. We are the 'IT' described. Everything around us from space, air, fire, water and earth are the effects of IT. We are not this body, mind, intellect, limited self-consciousness or ego. When ignorance accrued through layers of karma surround a part of this 'IT' like thick dust covers a sparkling mirror, the mirror considers itself to be a piece of matter incapable of reflecting light and forgets this property of itself. It then associates itself with the dust covering it. This is what is called 'self-consciousness' or the limited consciousness all of us experience further to thinking ourselves to be a body with a mind and intellect. Further to thinking of ourselves as separate individuals, independent and different from another person. In reality, the true 'US' further to not being the body, mind, intellect, self-consciousness or ego is the infinite, all pervading, always present 'IT' described, for there is no other indivisible non-compound in this universe, everything being a product of two or more things except this 'IT', and even these compounds that we see such as matter are a product of two or more constituents and have sprung from this infinity but are not independent entities.

The Upanishads describe this 'IT' as the Parabrahman (or Nirguna Brahman - The Almighty Lord) who was never born and never dies, who has always existed and always exists. Who is everything, and beyond whom there is nothing since he exists and occupies infinity. Everything that we see or don't see, that we can think or cannot think, which we can experience or not experience is within HIM and an offshoot of HIM, while HE himself is beyond these offshoots. When everything is occupied by one single entity, where is the question of a second? The question of a second entity becomes possible when there is some space available which is unoccupied. How can a second entity exist when all space unto infinity is fully occupied?

* "Sarvam khalvidam Brahman" - say the Upanishads in describing this pure consciousness. " Everything is verily this Brahman. HE occupies all space and time and pervades everything". Everything else are only HIS effects, while HE is independent of these effects.

* "Tat Tvam Asi" - says the Chandogya Upanishad. "Thou are THAT". You are THAT pure consciousness, that Brahman himself and nothing else. The presence of 'Agnyana' (ignorance) around your real self has given you the impression that you and THAT (Brahman) are separate. It has lead to this wrong assumption and belief that you are this body, this person and this limited individual. It is like a wave which has risen from the ocean which considers itself separate from the ocean. It now considers itself different from the ocean. How can we make the wave overcome this wrong concept and drive home the right concept that it is not different from the ocean itself? For that the wave should be made to settle down into complete tranquility, serenity, calmness and a state of complete non-moving. Then, only the immense ocean exists, perfectly still, perfectly non-moving in a state of indistinguishable union with the ocean. Then, there is no wave but only the ocean. Then, the wave experiences itself to be no different from the ocean. It accepts itself to be the ocean on this realization and will never go back to the belief that it was different. Even if it were to experience the shape of a wave once again, it will no longer believe itself to be different, for it knows that this is only a phenomenon (Maya) that is making it appear to be separate, while the reality is that the ocean itself has taken the shape of the wave, while its real nature is that of absolute silence and stillness.

We in this state of limited self-consciousness are the wave and the Parabrahman (Almighty Lord) is the ocean. How do we make ourselves realize that we are the Brahman? How do we get over this false concept we now stand in? For that, just as the wave was stilled into peace, the mind has to be first made perfectly still. There must be no external or internal factor which throws back the mind into the form of a wave. But there are strong Samskaras (impressions) and resulting Vasanas (tendencies) within us, which are the root cause behind the mind taking the shape of waves of anger, desire, passion, greed etc... including the concept of a separate self. So these impressions and tendencies must first be burnt and deactivated. There must be no remaining impression or tendency that can again throw the mind into the form of a wave. Then the mind becomes permanently calm and serene to an extent where it dissolves into the ocean of Brahman. "Yogas Chittah Vritthi Nirodhaha"- says the great sage Pathanjali Maharishi in his Yoga suthras -- "Yoga is cessation of the modifications of the mind-stuff".

The Jivatma then realizes itself to be non-existent in terms of separateness, for then, there is only the Brahman like there was only the ocean. Then, there is complete merger of the individual wave into the ocean of Brahman. Once it has reached this state, it no longer considers itself different from this ocean, though encased within this physical body with a mind. It considers itself as being present within all beings and all beings present within itself. This is the final state achieved after mastering 'Nirbija Samadhi' meditation (super-consciousness of the 7th stage leading to 'Dharma-Megha Samadhi') which then leads to 'Kaivalya' (self-realization). A Yogi in this stage has become one with the ocean of Brahman. His Atman (soul) experiences complete union with the Lord which is of the nature of knowledge-existence-bliss to a level which cannot be comprehended by the human intellect. It can only be experienced and not described say the Upanishads, for words cannot do justice as regards explanation. It is pure 'Ananda' (bliss) of completeness through union with HIM. Thus pure consciousness cannot be described. It can only be experienced in this stage.

This is the state of the 'Jivanmukta' (self-realized sage). He has lost the concept of individuality and an individual ego. This concept has collapsed and died further to the Samskaras and impressions which were supporting it having been roasted & deactivated. He is forever established in the state of oneness or non-duality with the pure consciousness or Brahman. Then, he experiences infinite bliss, knowledge and eternal existence in the nature of the Brahman without start and without end. All his sorrows end. His physical body remains for some time (as long as the Prarabdha karma - that which is to be worked out by the body in this life) remains. Once this is over, he drops his body and merges into the ocean of Brahman forever and does not come back. The purpose of his existence is over. His mind and prana are absorbed in the Brahman. This is what the Yogi tries to achieve through Yoga and Brahmacharya. Nothing more, nothing less.

The concept of time also dies when one reaches this state of pure consciousness. There is nothing called time for the Jivanmukta (self-realized sage), for he has gone beyond time. In reality, this thing called time does not exist even for the non-realized man, for it is only a relative concept. How? The answer is that when everything is occupied by Brahman and HE himself is everything in the nature of empty space and there is nothing else (for he is indivisible and not compound) where is the question of comparison leading to time? We now measure time as the time taken by Earth to make one rotation around its axis. We call this period - 'one day'. So the concept of time in this case is dependent on the Earth and its speed. Next we make use of this arrived concept and apply it to the Moon. We now arrive at a value of about 27 odd Earth days for the Moon to make an orbit of the Earth (go around the earth) as regards to the fixed stars which relatively do not move from their positions. So these concepts of time are based on the presence of celestial bodies such as the Earth, Sun, Moon etc.. The time concept is based on the presence of Earth to the earthling. If none of these planets or stars existed, there would have been no concept of time. It would have been one infinite and empty cosmos devoid of any object and fully clear. And there really IS no concept of time! How? Because these stars, planets and other heavenly bodies do not exist in terms of absolute reality. All of them are made of matter and matter is made of atoms and atoms when further split give us sub-atomic particles such as protons & electrons which when further split give us nothing but ENERGY. There is no matter left at that stage but only energy as in case of a nuclear reaction.

So all matter is really not matter but a form of energy in a state of vibration. It is energy being held together in a particular frequency by the will and power of some force greater than than that present within or without matter. This force or entity which has created all these planets, stars and celestial bodies through the play of energy, leading to the atom and then matter is what we call the the Parabrahman (Almighty). Just as he created all these at some point of time, he will destroy and withdraw all these at another point in time. Then there is only empty space again and how will you quantify time when there is no object to base it upon? How can time exist when there is infinite empty space everywhere which does not change? There is then no today or tomorrow but only infinity without blemish.

The Upanishads tell us that even now there is nothing called time, for time is a relative concept based on the presence of heavenly bodies. There is nothing called time at all because all these heavenly bodies are a part of the mental projection of the Almighty Lord. He wills and they manifest as his dream. He again wills and they disappear through destruction. This is the result of his Leela (divine play) effected through Maya (divine illusion) but not real. Only one thing if IT can be called that, is real, namely HIM. Everything else appears and disappears as per his will. HE alone exists always and nothing else hence exists. It is all an illusion worked by the master magician. This is why it is said that this world and time are Asath (unreal), for they are false. "Do not get captivated by HIS objects of creation, for they are only his dream, his play. Make efforts to REALIZE HIM, for then you will realize yourself as no different and become eternal within him" say the Upanishads.

This is why we should practice Brahmacharya and Yoga with meditation, because misusing the sexual act for recreation binds us more and more towards his objects of creation (Asath-unreal which will dissolve and vanish like objects in dream sleep) and takes us farther away from HIM (our true self), leaving us attached and craving and finally full of sorrow to that which NEVER existed. All this is Maya (illusion). Desire for a woman, wealth, name, fame are all Maya. This is why sense pleasures which come from the body and mind do not give lasting happiness, for they are a product of that (the body) which does not exist in terms of absolute reality. The Atman (soul) within this body which is no different from HIM alone gives happiness. Hence HE should be known, HE should be realized and we should reclaim our true state of infinity.

QUESTION: Thanks for this great answer it has removed all doubts.I have one more question god does creation and destruction we are in brahma's day i.e creation when their will be night then destruction will occur.Is this destruction as described in vedas will be in the whole universe or earth and those who have become one with sat-chit-ananda will be born or not?

Answer
1. Upon dissolution, the entire universe becomes empty as it was before creation. Void of everything which was manifest and completely dark without light and without time. Then, the Brahman alone remains as HE does even now, having disintegrated & swallowed everything back inside HIM by the power of his will to restart creation all over again

2. Those who have merged into the Sat-Chith-Ananda (knowledge-existence-bliss) of the Parabrahman do not come back ever. They have no further birth and death. The drop has merged into the ocean. It cannot be reclaimed or retrieved.

Question
Hello dhananjay,

I am really curious to know about what you had suggested here to eat early before 8:00-8:30 am here-(http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2011/10/maried-life.htm).

What is it's significance in sex control/brahmacharya? I mean the contribution of eating in the earliest part of the day in brahmacharya.

Thanks and more power...

Answer
The purpose behind eating breakfast as early as possible is to help one maintain and retain 'Soma' (the divine nectar or 'amrit' which is formed further to the 'Urdhvareta kriya'- by the reversal of gross semen upwards into the Ajna chakra in the brain near the cerebellum) and prevent burning up of 'Ojas' (an astral fluid formed by the further conversion of 'Soma' into a kind of electricity), stored in the astral body.

In a Brahmachari who is continuously sublimating his semen upwards, semen converts itself into 'Soma' in the Ajna Chakra near the cerebellum in the brain - called as the 'Chandrasthana' (region of the Moon). This 'Soma' is very important for health and well being and also responsible in merging the Manas (mind) and Prana (vital energy) into the Atman or Brahman during the stage of 'Nirbija Samadhi' (super-consciousness). It also nourishes the body continuously during Samadhi, thereby maintaining vitality and health in the body despite lack of food or water during Samadhi. This is how a Yogi can stay in Samadhi for days, months or even years without food, water and even breath, for all his vital organs including the heart and lungs completely stop working in the advanced stage of Nirbija Samadhi. In an ordinary man, stoppage of these vital organs leads to death. But in the Yogi who has reached the advanced state of Nirbija Samadhi, his body maintains life and freshness despite lack of food, water and breath.

This mysterious and fascinating process is effected by none other than 'Soma' (nectar) trickling down into his system in this state of super-consciousness as a substitute to food, water and even breath. Thus 'Soma' is of utmost importance and very precious to the Yogi, for it is derived after sublimating Rethas (semen). Without considerable reserves of Soma, a Yogi cannot ever enter deep Samadhi (which explains why it takes many years of unbroken Brahmacharya to reach Nirbija Samadhi even in those who have striven for the same in previous births). Only one who is reaching very close to the state of complete Urdhvarethas becomes capable of entering the Nirbija state of super-consciousness. If semen itself is precious, one can imagine how much more precious 'Soma' should be considering it is formed by further process & sublimation of semen upwards in the brain. Rethas (semen) is the gross most form of 'Bindu' (seed) while Soma (nectar) is the subtle most form of Bindu. It is Soma which is responsible for the Yogi maintaining a youthful and healthy body despite eating limited quantities of food. This is the reason why a Yogi does not require much food to stay healthy and strong unlike the ordinary man who needs a large quantity of food.

While the region of the Ajna Chakra in the brain is called as the 'Chandrasthana' (region of the moon), the Manipura Chakra in the region of the navel (stomach) is called as the 'Suryasthana' (region of the Sun). This region is opposite to the nature of the Moon, for located here is the heat generating point of the body. It is this region which is responsible for generating heat within the body to sustain life. This region also generates the 'Jatharaagni' (gastric fire) which is represented by the copious discharge of gastric juices during meal times. By the practice of Yoga and Brahmacharya, the flame of Jatharaagni becomes long and powerful leading to a strong appetite and hunger at breakfast and meal times. During these times, if proper food were not to be taken, the Jatharaagni begins to devour Soma trickling down from the region of the Moon. Since Soma is the distilled part of Rethas (semen), this burning up of Soma (finest form of Bindu or seed) by the gastric fire equals a corresponding burnout of Semen. When this happens, the body of the Yogi starts to age, debilitate and decay. It leads to ill-health and weakness.

This tallies with what is mentioned in the scriptures:

" In the case of those who practice Yoga, the Jatharaagni heightens and the Yogi should hence eat food properly. If not done, the fire starts consuming the body itself leading to devitalization" - Chap I/80-81 - The Hatha Yoga Pradipika.

For this reason, a Yogi never keeps his stomach empty but resorts to the correct quantity of food at breakfast, lunch and dinner. Breakfast taken at morning represents the end of a 12 hour fast (from the previous evening to next day morning). The body, after waking up in the morning and performing Yoga is high on Jatharaagni (gastric fire). It is seen in the form of strong hunger. The Yogi must now feed his stomach with food at the earliest, for failing to do so in the midst of hunger will lead to consumption of Soma by the Sun in the region of the navel. All his efforts at Brahmacharya will then be of no use. Eating proper breakfast at the earliest quenches the flame of the Sun and leaves Soma untouched and available for health, vitality and Samadhi. This is why eating breakfast as early as possible, especially when hunger arises is important.

Not only breakfast, the responsible Yogi should never delay his other meals. If one feels extreme hunger right on waking up at in the morning, it is a sign that some milk, fruit, malted milk beverage or other food should be fed into the stomach. Hunger is the symbol of a fired up 'Jatharaagni'. If there is no hunger on waking up, one can immediately take to Yoga practice without eating by drinking a glass or two of water. However if there are signs of strong hunger, one should drink some milk or malt or eat some food without fail. Yoga should never be practiced on an empty stomach suffering from the pangs of hunger. It will lead to old age and decay of the body. This is why the Yogic scriptures advocate eating fruit, milk, buttermilk, nuts or any other available food when assailed by hunger even at other times. Fasting is not for the Yogi. It produces weakness and eats away Soma. Fasting is advocated for a short time only on the rare occasions when there is a serious stomach upset or some other illness. One should neither overeat nor starve but maintain 'Mitahaara'(moderate diet) on a timely basis.

Question
Hi I am a 23 year old male and I have a question. I feel like life is pushing me in the direction to follow the spiritual path. In the past 2-3 years I have had a spiritual transformation. For whatever reason I started having spiritual experiences and I took an interest in spirituality and many different religions. I have bought books on yoga and I have been meditating by myself for about 2-3 months. I am going to start taking serious yoga classes soon. I have been pracicting brahmarcharya for about 6 months and I haven not ejaculated in about 5 months. I used to be obsessed with sex but I have overcome it and even though I have used willpower to get over it I felt like I was getting alot of help in overcoming. I am alot more selfless than I was and I have better control over my emotions. I feel like I am being drawn away from " this world" I don't even strongly desire romantic relationships like I used too and my desire to find " the truth" has been getting stronger. Why do you think I have developed this spiritual urge in the past 2-3 years were I have made a complete change in the way I look at the world?

Answer
When the Jivatma (embodied soul) within, due to its efforts in past incarnations reaches a stage in evolution where it is ripe and eligible to delve into the absolute reality of the Almighty and realize itself, a strong and powerful current of destiny (will of the Almighty) coaxes it to persevere and strive in the path of enlightenment. Then, all worldly desires slowly and gradually start to drop away. Like how the current in a river gradually pulls a swimmer into the center of the river, the aspirant feels the undercurrent of an innate and mysterious force gradually pulling and nudging him deeper into reality and away from the world which is falsity.

This is the first sign indicating that the person can make true and noteworthy progress in path towards self-realization within this birth or the next few births if he honestly perseveres with humility and dedication. If his efforts at this stage align in the direction of acquiring 'Gnyana' (knowledge of reality) and consistently work at attaining to Yoga (final union with the Almighty) with the means required, he can proceed impressively towards the goal, for God himself is giving a clue that the track is slowly changing from that of worldliness to spirituality.

The unseen help you describe in maintaining Brahmacharya is the invisible hand of God working in tandem. This is what is termed as his grace and blessings, for true and honest Brahmacharya is impossible by mere human efforts.

Focus on a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya with devotion and love for the Almighty. Mere performance of Asana (physical postures) is not Yoga. Asana is only one limb of Yoga. True Yoga consists of 8 limbs (Ashtanga-s). Lead a strict life of 'Ashtanga Raja Yoga' as propounded by the great realized sage 'Maharshi Pathanjali'. Buy the book 'The Science of Yoga' by Dr. I.K Taimni (Theosophical Publishing House, Wheaton, IL, USA) where the correct meanings of the Yoga-Sutra-s (Aphorisms of Pathanjali) have been expounded. Gradually study this book taking time and understanding it in-depth without hurry. It will help you progress rightly.

Question
Sir
I have some more doubt that: 1. What are the Yogic Kriyas can do from the temple (Trataka and Meditation can do from the temple?) 2.Why the experts saying that yoga must do before sun set and sun rise? 3.why feeling light hot under the end of back born during brahmacharya life? 4.Please share your spiritual experiance during brahmacharya life?

Thanking u Sir

Answer
1. Yogic practices can be performed from the temple provided the seating position is maintained (Sidhasana, Padmasana etc..) and the surroundings are calm and free from disturbance and people. One should not practice Yoga Sadhana for liberation in front of people in public view. It should be practiced in private, alone completely filling the mind with the thought of God and nothing else. However, chanting mantras or Japa can be performed in the temple.

2. For the significance of performing Yoga before Sunrise and at Sunset see the FOLLOW UP of:http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2011/11/male-period.htm in 'past answers' Dt:11/14/2011

3. Various sensations occur in the lower chakras during the initial stages of Brahmacharya due to the flow of Pranic currents further to conservation of semen. This leads to feelings of heat in the lower spine.

4. My experiences in the path towards 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) are not yet complete. I shall try to describe them if I happen to attain to that state of enlightenment by the grace of the Almighty Parabrahman and if he so wishes.

Question
Hi Dhananjay,
NAMASTE.

1. How do one should pray to GOD? Is praying to GOD in temple creating a wrong sanskaras within us saying that the god exists ONLY in the temple? How does one pray to GOD when one goes to a temple especially a temple having so many IDOLs? Truth is GOD exists everywhere & is only ONE.?

2. Are we following Raj Yoga, Dnyan Yoga or Karma Yoga?

3. Tell me in the very easiest way what beginner should exactly do after he sits in Padmasana / Sukhasana for meditation with eyes closed?

A. Some say to become thoughtless which is not possible for the beginner...
B. Some say to concentrate on breath or on trikuti ...
C. Some say close the eyes & try to get the picture of GOD..
D. Some say Chant the Mantra... (but this is NOT meditation according to you)..
E. Some say you should be continuously meditating 24 hrs daily while doing your daily routines.
F. Whether one should sincerely study & find out the truth & start meditating on that? Is meditation is something creating the correct sankaras in mind?
G. Some say it is to increase your concentration of mind?

It is really confusing. Please tell the exact path so that one will build his interest in meditation & parallelly eliminate his negative qualities & make a strong foundation in meditation. I do not understand whether one should meditate on eliminating ones negative qualities or on GOD (negative qualities/thoughts disturb during meditation/JAPA) or both. Also whether to continue meditation or increase meditation when negative qualities disturbs one? Whether one should take a break in meditation/Japa? & How much? Please guide.

4. Is JAPA is necessary to keep up brahmacharya? As per your blog it helps concentration but is it necessary if it is happening with negative thoughts?

Answer

1. One can pray to God in the temple, at home, at work or at any other place at any point of time. God is universal and all pervading. There is no place where HE does not exist. At a temple having many idols, focus on the idol or form of God which appeals the most. "Tad Ekam Sath, Vipraha Bahudha Vadanthi" -- "HE alone is real, HE is only ONE, the sages call him by various names".

2. As there is only one Lord, there is only one Yoga. The different means of approach to this one Yoga make it appear as though there are many types of Yoga. The fastest and most correct Yoga is that which consists of a combination of Karma yoga (surrendering the fruits of one's actions to God and performing actions as an offering to God), Gnyana yoga (delving into the truth behind "Who am I" or Adhyatma vichara), Bhakthi yoga (devotion to the Lord through love and surrender), and Raja yoga (as propounded by the Maharshi Pathanjali, see:http://www.davedavies.com/splanet/raja.htm)). All these ultimately lead to the one and same goal namely realization of non-duality between us and the Almighty.

A person who performs all actions rightfully, thinking of God, as an offering to God without craving for the fruits of actions. Who indulges in contemplating on the falsity of the world and the reality of the Atman (soul) through 'Adhyatma vichara' and 'Vairagya' (analysis of spiritual knowledge and non-attachment to objects), who cries with devotion, love and surrender while contemplating or thinking of the Almighty and who strictly follows the Yama-Niyama-s of Raja Yoga followed by Asana, Pranayama, Pratyahara and Meditation derives the best and complete benefits of all Yoga-s. This combination of the essences of all Yoga-s gives the best and fastest results in totality. This is based on my personal experience.

3. Sit in Padmasana or Sidhasana with the lower back, spine neck and head in a straight line.

A. Perform 'Nirguna Dhyana' as has been explained before in past answers on the formless Almighty. Revert the mind back on HIM as and when it strays and think of nothing else except the formless, shapeless, colorless and invisible Lord of the nature of empty space.

If this is not achievable...

B. Perform 'Saguna Dhyana' (meditate on the Avatar of the Lord such as Lord Krishna, Rama, Jesus Christ etc..) or on Gods such as Siva, Vishnu, Ganesha etc..

If this is not achievable...

C. Chant a mantra such as "Om Namah Shivaya" or "Om Namo Narayanaya" or just "OM" silently and mentally with the eyes closed, concentrating on the Thrikuti (spot between the eyebrows) until concentration is strong enough to perform B. or A. types of meditation.

D. Keep the mind on the thought of God, performing all actions as service and offerings to him throughout the day. One's daily routine comprising of work and everything else is to be performed this way. We are here as an effect of HIS Leela (divine play). So our duty is to think of HIM as much as possible.

E. The truth (of reality) cannot be found out by the study (of the scriptures or Upanishads) alone. So there is no question of studying, finding out the truth and then meditating. All these should be done together setting aside some time for each simultaneously. Just as the body absorbs the essence of food eaten and discards the remaining, the essence of scriptures is to be absorbed and not mere words or literal meanings as written in the dictionary.

The incidence of negative thought, fantasy, imagination or unwanted feelings occurs in every person who occupies the stage of a beginner in meditation. One should replace these thoughts with the opposite thoughts of virtue, reality and truth when they appear. For example, if a meditator finds the thought of a woman and her body troubling him while meditating, he should remind himself of the reality behind the filth and refuse within her body and imagine how her body will appear at old age with a shrunken frame, wrinkled skin, dried up flesh, rotting teeth, scant hair, bad breath and a disagreeable smell emanating from all over with stool and refuse stored within. Let him remind himself of the weakness and debility he experiences on losing his semen through ejaculation on the body of a woman. Let him remind himself of the same signs of old age and decay which he will experience himself if he indulges in the sexual act for entertainment. This will neutralize the desire and produce Vairagya (dispassion). Then let him think of the bliss, purity and everlasting joy that comes from merging with God upon reclaiming his true state of existence. Then let the meditator continue with his efforts on meditation.

If thoughts about wanting excessive money, name, fame, friends and get-together-s is troubling him, let him remind himself that all these involve much stress, strain, anxiety, fatigue and ultimately sorrow. They make the mind irate, egoistic, angry, passionate, lustful and finally depressed. Let him remind himself that all these are a waste of time ultimately, for they leave him less happy than when he started and in sorrow and pain. They make negative Samskaras (impressions) stronger and cause lack of peace. This will neutralize the desire and produce Vairagya (dispassion). Then let him think of the bliss, purity and everlasting joy that comes from merging with God upon reclaiming his true state of existence. Then let the meditator continue with his efforts on meditation.

In this way, let him remind himself of the dangers of worldliness and the lack of benefit of attachment with worldly people and objects. Then let him persevere again and meditate.

This is how meditation is eventually perfected into Dharana, Dhyana and Samadhi. It takes many months or years of sincere and honest effort. One should adapt one's lifestyle and make it supportive to this type of Yoga as described. Then the past Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies) which support negativity gradually weaken and dissolve.

When negative traits manifest in day to day life, the same technique is applied and the mind reverted to Godliness. The Yogi uses his reasoning and feeds himself with reasons why worldly attractions are a waste of time leading to sorrow. Then he reverts his mind to Godliness though kindness, pleasantness, desire-less attitude and a general sense of peace and tranquility as regards himself and the world. Over the course of time, he becomes these very qualities in person.

4. If there is a feeling or tendency to indulge in Japa, then do Japa. Else, stick to the combination of Yogic practices as has been explained earlier with devotion to God and through performing actions as an offering to him in day to day life through the Yama-Niyama-s. When negative thoughts occur in the midst of Japa, use the same technique of reasoning as has been explained to neutralize these thoughts. Then continue with Japa. Japa is useful for some and not necessary for others. The decision is left to the practitioner.

On the whole, the technique is like cleaning one's house of dirt. We clean our homes everyday and live there. The next day, there is again dirt, so we clean again and live. This is a continuous process. With the Yogi, the dirt gradually reduces over the course of time spanning several years, eventually resulting in complete cleanliness of the body, mind and psyche whereupon self-realization occurs. Patience, perseverance and commitment are the keys to open the locks binding the doors of self-realization.

Question
Sir

Is the brahamcharya life improves Atrogen hormon in men and Estragon in women?

Thanking u sir

Answer
I presume that your are referring to the male hormone 'Testosterone' (an androgen) and the female sex hormone 'Estrogen'. The practice of correct Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed eventually leads to the production of just the right percentage of both these hormones for optimum health and well being. Neither more nor less but just the right amounts are produced.

Question
my question is how to remain unaffected when one is getting the touch of a women unwillingly. for eg. suppose i am travellin in a public bus and there are no. of women standing and i also have to stand behing them. how should a person behave in this situation? plz suggest some powerful remedy for this because i often come across this situation. i am awaiting some helpful responses from you. this is the only thing which corrupt my thoughts. in my first mail i told u that after observing celibacy for months together i get fail inspite of my sincere efforts and this is the reason behind my downfall. the touch of female body makes the mind go wild and i lose my senses.

Answer
1. To the best extent possible and as a rule, always make conscious efforts to stay away and clear of such situations or locations which may lead to the contact described. The mind during the initial periods of Brahmacharya is always looking for an excuse that leads to touch, fantasy, sight or any other contact with the opposite sex. Even without one's knowledge or intention, the mind very craftily suggests or tends to place one in situations which could lead to the above. One should be very vigilant against such seemingly harmless suggestions by a mind colored by past tendencies and instead make use of 'Buddhi Shakthi' and 'Vichara Shakthi' (power of the intellect and discriminative inquiry) before heeding to suggestions by the mind. Always try choosing a place which prevents occurance of the situation you describe.

2. If despite such efforts one has no other way out but to occupy a place which brings along the possibility of unintentional contact with a female, then one should constantly remind oneself of the reality behind the filth and refuse within a woman's body and how the body will appear at old age with a shrunken frame, wrinkled skin, dried up flesh, rotting teeth, scant hair, bad breath and a disagreeable smell emanating from all over with stool and refuse stored within.

One should remind oneself of the weakness and debility experienced on losing semen through ejaculation on the body of a woman. Let there be the grave reminder of the same signs of old age and decay which will prematurely present themselves in the Brahmachari further to the sexual act for entertainment. This will neutralize the desire and produce Vairagya (dispassion). Then let him think of the bliss, purity and everlasting joy that comes from merging with God upon reclaiming his true state of existence through Yoga and Brahmacharya.

When an honest comparison is made between the two opposite kinds of effects which follow from adhering to Brahmacharya and not adhering to it, one who has a strong urge to get established in Brahmacharya will eventually be prepared to stay unaffected and unflinching in spite of unintentional touch, for his mind is not on the woman but on his practice. The mind can get affected when it is idle or when it is pondering on sexuality. It has a very less chance of getting victimized if it is kept busy on the ideal of Brahmacharya and Yoga. The reason behind the mind yielding to touch is because of its association with touch as a source of pleasure and happiness. When the fallacy of such a concept is strongly established in the mind backed by reason and logic, the concept starts to lose its ground and becomes weak. Consistent practice of the same will eventually produce dispassion at the bodily concept of a woman.

3. To instill a real sense of the decay and degeneration that the human body undergoes through age and disease, and to get firm with the idea of reality, one can visit an old-age home, mental asylum or even a mortuary and get a first hand experience of the reality behind the illusion of the body. This method is very helpful when there is a very strong sense of lust and fantasy associated with the body of the opposite sex. This exercise can be used both by men and women Brahmachari-s to drive the sense of reality into their minds. Spending a few minutes in an old-age home or mental asylum by looking up the inmates or patients who have been afflicted with severe diseases leading to loss of bone, flesh, hair and in some cases even skin will give the correct picture of what this human body is really all about. This is what exists under the so called gloss of the human skin and flesh of a person even in his or her prime. It is very repulsive and not the least attractive. The illusion caused by Maya makes it appear otherwise.

Similarly, spending a few minutes in a mortuary with dead bodies very effectively drives home the concept of the disgusting nature of flesh. This is what the body of the so called 'attractive woman' ultimately becomes. Is one now ready to waste his divine and most precious fluid on this bag of dead flesh? The presence of the Atman (soul) who is none other than the Lord gives the body life. The power and attraction in beauty is the power and beauty of the Almighty Lord himself and not that of the body. As soon as life (Atman or Lord) leaves this body, it loses all its charm and becomes inert. Isn't this very simple? It is now a dead body fit to be eaten by maggots. Is it worth spending that most precious, most divine and most priceless fluid of life on this dead piece of decaying meat? One should strive to reach the state where one enjoys the beauty of the Lord (which is in fact the beauty seen in a living person) and not mistake the body itself to be the source of beauty. THAT beauty of the Almighty never wanes and never vanishes. It is eternal and real. It is to be known. This body is only a wrapper which holds THAT beauty when HE resides within. As soon as the Atman (soul) leaves, it becomes just what it was - A dead piece of flesh which wrapped the Atman within. It now shows its real nature and property. One of decay, impermanence and very disagreeable.

One can even opt to watch an autopsy (postmortem) if it is possible. The sight of the human body revealing its reality under the scalpel of autopsy and the smell that ensues will take away the sense of lust and desire even from a very passionate mind in no time at all. These methods can be resorted to if the sense of desire is too strong and if the mind refuses to believe that this body of flesh is nothing more than filth in terms of sexuality.

Finally, always keep the thought of God in the mind and pray to him help you overcome this limitation. All these methods bear fruit under HIS grace and HIS grace alone and never by mere human effort.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

First of all I would like to thank you for your time and wisdom for sharing your experiences and insights on brahmacharya. I have read many of your previous answers and feel truly inspired that Brahmacharya is truly possible in this day and age.

I am around 30 yr old and have been attempting brahmacharya since the age of 18, and I am interested in complete liberation (Moksha). I haven't gotten very far in the brahmacharya front. Until the age of 26, the maximum I could go without self-stimulation was 30-60 days. This I would do with the help of a vow to stay away from thoughts, words and deeds of abrahmacharya. However by the end of 30 days, I would forget why I took the vow in the first place, and once the period of the vow was over, I would indulge in self-stimulation with double the force. SO I took a different approach and started doing it day by day (along with daily meditation, pranayam , etc). Last year I was able to keep brahmacharya for almost 5 months (I had one slip in the third month). However I visited India for a month and when I returned to the U.S., the sudden re-exposure to western women rekindled sexual thoughts in my mind and I indulged in porn and self-stimulation again. It has been one year now since this happened, and I have had two or three clean months this where where I had no thoughts of sex , but it was when I had taken a vow. When the vow period was over, my mind tricked me and I would re-indulge. I really really want to get rid of these thoughts and behaviour. I try do meditation and sun gazing every day, sometimes upto 2-3 hours (Slips happen more when I am not regular). Usually I don't have any thougths of sex , but when I check email or am walking if I look at a shapely women or a picture of one by chance, a thought is planted in my mind. Slowly as more and more such mistakes accumulate, I end up watching porn and self-stimulating. This happens 1-2 times a week. I really want to stop this nonsense. However I am afraid that if I take a vow (short vow for a month or two), I might screw up with double the force at the end of the vow. Also if I take a long vow (for a year or two years), I am afraid that I might fail and it could lead to depression. Also I often seem to forget after a few months why I took the vow in the first place. Only last year when I was able to keep 5 months with now vow, was I able t realize true benefit, but that was lost after my return trip to U.S. Now a new year is going to start, I am tempted to take a full year vow, followed by life-long brahmacharya. can you please offer some suggestions on the best method.

Thank you so much and my God bless you and may you attain final moksha. Jai sat chit anand

Answer

1. Since a life of Brahmacharya has been on and off and you are familiar with the practice, it is time to take concrete steps in establishing longer periods of Brahmacharya which will eventually become life long by the grace of the Lord. To accomplish this, a strict and uninterrupted life of Yoga (see past answers on the practice of Bandha, Pranayama and meditation) twice a day is to be attempted very honestly and sincerely. One session will be early in the morning before Sunrise and another around Sunset. An alarm should be set for 4.00 A.M and one should rise immediately without fail. This is the first requisite, no compromise. The events which follow on rising up have been outlined in previous answers with a Yogic perspective (read all past answers). The same is to be applied for the session before Sunset.

2. Do not bother about taking a vow or not taking a vow. Concentrate on the fact that unbroken Brahmacharya is your true, default nature. This is the nature of the Atman (soul). You have striven with vows and without vows earlier. Let those things go away with the past. Keep the fact very firmly in your mind that Brahmacharya is the only way of life and no other way of life exists. That it is as natural and inseparable to your lifestyle as eating food, drinking water and taking recourse to sleep. We do not take vows as regards eating, sleeping or doing other basic activities. Brahmacharya is to be worked at in this way by considering it default and not separate once the effort to get established has crossed a certain period as in your case. The time has come to get rid of the thief once and for all. Let us not fool ourselves with vows or non-vows thereby letting the thief loiter in our premises stealthily.

How did you succeed in 5 months of Brahmacharya if it was separate, unnatural and something distinct from you? Can we live without food, water or sleep for 5 months in the normal sense? No. This is the first proof that the concept of frequent sexuality for recreation is an acquired disease of the mind and psyche. It is not of our true nature. We cannot live without that which is an inherent part of our nature. As long as this physical body clings to the Atman (soul), the body requires food, water and sleep (except in the self-realized Yogi who has gone beyond space and time). This is because it is in the inherent nature of the body to require all these for life. This is not the case with sexual pleasure. Man can and will live very happily once he raises above the need for sexual pleasure. It's purpose is procreation and never recreation. So we shall keep this fact in our mind all the time and push out sexual desire every time it raises its ugly head.

We have inherited this disease due to constant indulgence in the sexual act for recreation dating back to innumerable previous births. If it had been limited to procreation and if there had been 'vidya' (the means to acquire the knowledge of reality) there would have been no such urge for recreation. But we were ignorant. We did not have Gnyana (knowledge) back then. By HIS grace we have now been bestowed with 'Vidya' and now shall we apply this knowledge and revert to our default state of the Atman - independent from sexuality without fail. Let this be the attitude. Let there be rock solid and unswaying belief in this attitude. It will serve a very important purpose which the aspirant will realize later on.

Read each and every past answer (especially those on the means of Yoga, Bandha and Pranayama) and get clear with the means required. Surrender all actions as an offering to the Almimighty with love and devotion. Remind yourself that this thing called the 'Ego' is itself Maya (illusion) and false. One should think -" This thing called as 'ME' the separate individual does not exist. It is all Brahman (Almighty). He alone is real and exists everywhere, everything else being his effect and not reality. This world, my body and everything except the formless Lord is Maya enacted to work out his Leela (divine play). This body, mind and psyche is not the real me. HE alone is real and I am an inseparable part of HIM." Have this attitude of non-ego and non-individuality always even while at work and do your duty to please HIM without attachment to the job itself. Meditate on HIM with this concept established in the mind as much as possible.

You will be poised for success this time when this line of thinking becomes strong and a part of your outlook.

Question
Respected Dhananjay Ji,

I'm deeply grateful to you for putting in so much effort to show us the right path of Yoga.

I started practicing and reading about Yoga some years ago. Since then I have had some questions in my mind to which I have not been able to find satisfactory answers anywhere.

These questions are only indirectly related to Brahmacharya, so I'm not sure if I should ask them here.

Here are those questions. You may answer them if you find it proper:

Q1. What exactly is Prana?

Q2. Where is it stored in the body?

Q3. How to increase its quantity in the system?

Q4. What is the relation between will power and Prana?

Q5. Are memory and Prana related?

Q6. We do physical work by contracting our muscles. It can be shown in the laboratory that muscles are contracted by sending an electric current to the muscles. This current can even be measured. Where is this electric current produced in the body?

Thank you very much.

Answer

1. 'Prana' is the subtle most form of energy or vital force present within and without the body in the universe. It is the means of all movement on the physical plane and the means behind all thought in the mental plane. In other words, Prana is the net sum of the essences of all forms of energy in the universe. In the human body, Prana is responsible for all life, power, strength, energy, movement and the existence of the very body, mind, intellect, consciousness and ego. Breath is the gross most representation of Prana. If the body is an electric wire, then Prana is electricity. If the body thought of as an engine, Prana is the essence of the fuel driving it. In other words, Prana is the actuating force or energy without which this body and mind cannot exist; without which life itself cannot exist. Minus Prana, the body will disintegrate into destruction. This is what happens when the Atman (soul) leaves the body upon death. The Atman (Brahman) is the source of Prana. When the Atman departs, the Prana or vital energy which resulted in life also departs.

2. "Where is Prana not stored in the body?" would be a better question. There is not such a place in the entire body where it does not exist (in sense of the 5 constituent Prana's - Prana, Apana, Vyana, Samana and Udana), for had it not existed at a particular location, that part would die and rot away into destruction. Similarly, there is not such a place in this entire Universe where the cosmic universal Prana is not stored. Prana occupies the entire system in a state of equilibrium and promotes life and well being.

"Pranam Brahmethivya jaanath" - says the 'Taithriya Upanishad.'
"Know that Prana (vital energy) is one of the representations of Brahman (Almighty)"

It is through Prana that the Lord has created this world, maintains this world and finally destroys it. All energy holding together the atoms that make this universe is Prana and Prana alone and nothing else. All other forms of energy arise and take birth from this Prana. It is the source of all forms of manifest and unmanifest energy.

"If one were to impart this Prana vidya (knowledge of Prana) to a dried-up stump, sure, branches would be produced on it and leaves would grow." - says the realized sage 'Satyakama' in the 'Chaandogya Upanishad' after instructing his disciple on 'Prana Vidya'. Such is the life giving power of Prana.

3. Unbroken Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed and 'Samyama' (Dharana, Dhyana, Samadhi meditations) on the Supreme results in an increase of the finest form of Prana.

Breath, food and water are the sources of supplementing Prana in the gross plane. The Yogi after reaching the 'Sasmita' state of 'Sabija Samadhi' (Sabija super-consciousness) after many years of Brahmacharya with Pranayama and meditation becomes a complete Urdhvaretha and develops 'Vayu Siddhi' or 'Prana siddhi' (mastery over Prana), whereupon he can develop the 'Ashta Siddhis' (8 supernatural powers) leading to superhuman abilities if he so strives.

4. From the Brahman (Almighty) comes the Atman (soul). From the Atman springs the individual will. From the individual will is created Manas (mind) and Prana. Willpower is the master which directs the servant called Prana.

5. Memory and Prana are both directly and indirectly related from the physical as well as the energy point of view. An increase in Prana if channelized to the brain results in an increase in memory and all other mental faculties. Loss of Prana correspondingly results in loss of related faculties.

6. The current that controls the physical movement, expansion and contraction of muscles is again Prana. It comes from the Atman (soul). Its location is in the heart.

Prana, breath, mind and semen are all interrelated. Mastery over any one leads to mastery over the other three. For this reason, the Yogi performs longer and longer duration of Pranayama and eventually attains to 'Prana siddhi' (mastery over Prana) over many years, whereupon he attains mastery over his mind, mastery over his breath and mastery over his semen to become an Urdhvarethas.

Question
Sir
What are the powers(sidhis) an abilities of an Urdvareta Yogi?

Thanking u sir

Answer
Information regarding the 'Ashta Siddhi-s' (8 superhuman powers of yoga) and many other minor siddhi-s that can accrue further to attaining the status of an 'Urdhvaretha' (one whose Bindu (seed) does not flow downwards to become semen) are very easily available through any search engine on the internet. So it may not be of much use to reiterate the same.

Hence we will go into the elaboration of that information regarding these siddhi-s which is not well known and not well seen. These are the much more important aspects as regards to these siddhi-s which often escape the eye of the yogic aspirant and which invariably become an impediment to self-realization.

Siddhi-s (supernatural powers of yoga) are essentially by-products of advanced yogic meditation through performing 'Samyama' (Dharana, Dharana & Samadhi) on the different aspects of Prakrithi (nature). Siddhi-s are like the beautiful places of tourist attraction that come en-route while travelling to a destination. The destination city is self-realization. Siddhi-s come en-route the path to self-realization like these places of interest. They present themselves before the yogi with much color and allure. Just as the wise traveler is intent on his responsibility of reaching the destination and has no more than passing interest in the places of attraction, a wise yogi does not pay much attention to siddhi-s that appear through advancement but keeps his mind fixed on the final goal of liberation.

There is much sense and relevance behind such an approach. In the state of an Urdhvaretha, the Yogi has conquered his semen but has not yet attained to self-realization. He is still mid-way in his quest. The latent Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies) that tend him towards lower traits and emotions are still alive in his Karana Sharira (causal body) in a state of restrained dormancy. They have not yet been burnt & deactivated. So the danger of resurfacing of these negative qualities is still very real. The paranormal abilities that one acquires through siddhi-s makes the neophyte get a feeling of exhilaration, invincibility and excitement. He gets a feeling of being a cut above the rest and special. This immediately leads to blossoming of the Ahamkara (ego). Once this happens, his downfall begins. Being driven by his ego which has dwarfed the Buddhi shakthi & Vichara Shakthi (power of intellect and power of enquiry), he falls pray to the 'Arishatvargas' (six negative emotions) and gets a mind to misuse these powers. His Viveka (wisdom) has been subjugated by the sense of 'I'-ness or ego. He is now under the grip of 'Maya' (illusion). He will commit various blunders which increase his karma and lead to a break in Yoga and Brahmacharya if he misuses these powers.

In reality, the powers at his disposal are not his powers at all. They are the powers of the Almighty that are shining through the Yogi. The Yogi is only a medium and not the source of these powers. He has reached a state of purity where select powers of the Almighty come within his reach. But the underlying seeds of the 'Guna-s' (traits) in his causal body are not yet burnt and deactivated. Like seeds sprout into saplings when conditions are favorable, these seeds of past karma will manifest again if he is careless and gets goaded by his ego. He will commit serious mistakes and incur much karma in such a case and will have to restart his practice all over again. Such a possibility is very real and very, very dangerous, especially when we take into consideration the effort, sacrifice and sheer hardwork that has gone into bringing him to the state of an Urdhvareta. The chances of becoming a 'Yoga-bhrasta' (one who has fallen from Yoga) are very possible at this stage. If this world is Maya (an unreal illusion), then woman is 'Maha-Maya' (a much mightier & unreal illusion). Even very sane, intelligent and level headed men loose their sense of Viveka (wisdom) and Vichara (power of inquiry) when under the influence of Kama (desire) for a woman. This Maya of a woman makes men do strange things which is beyond the purview of sensibility. Under the grip of desire for a woman, man indulges in very foolish acts which even dull-brained people would not commit; thereby putting himself and those around him in great danger, leading to great sorrow. Siddhi-s, if not used judiciously are like the Maha-Maya described. They can become very dangerous.

For this reason, the wise Yogi does not take the initiative to use these powers for unwarranted reasons. They are never to be used for selfish purposes driven by questionable and dishonorable intentions. Neither are they to be used to display, prove or proclaim one's Yogic prowess to people. Only fools behave in this manner, not real Yogi-s. Using such abilities to gain name, fame, money or power always leads to downfall. The true Yogi uses them only on rare occasions for the betterment of mankind under the commands of the Almighty. He uses them as regards himself under a similar context, when God wills him to do so and not at his personal fancy.

After attaining to the state of self-realization, he becomes a 'Purna Yogi ' (full-blown Yogi) who is one with the Brahman. Then, he cannot make any mistakes, for his mind has united with that of the Lord's. His mind is now a representation of God's mind and God's will in totality. The scriptures say that such a realized sage is none other than the Almighty himself in the human form. He is no longer an ordinary mortal limited by right or wrong. He is then always right and unerring. All the superhuman powers are then nothing to him, for he risen much above them, attaining to the powers of the Almighty. He has become the Almighty himself through complete merger. The drop no longer exists, having merged into the ocean. Till such a state is reached, one should not give more than passing intrest as regards siddhi-s but maintain the state of undistractedness as regards the Almighty.

Question
Dhananjay, hi

Wish you a very happy new year.
Dhananjay, you can chose not to answer the question below if you consider I am going too granular in my query.
I do know salt and spices should be used moderately but wanted to confirm if there is any spice which is strictly prohibited for someone on the road to brahamacharya. I list down the following spices, is there any amongst these which should not be used at all [i believe all of these can be moderately used]:
a)Cumin seeds [jeera]
b)Mustard seeds [rai], i read in swami sivanand's book that this should be avoided.
c)Garam Masala
d)Turmeric [haldi]. i know you've told me before about haldi that it can be used in moderate quantities.
e)Corriander Powder [dhaniya powder]
f)Red chilly powder [lal mirch] g)Other specific masalas e.g. chana masala, rajma masala, biryani masala etc h)Green chillies
i)ginger [adrakh]
j)i know onion and garlic should not be cooked with food and should be completely avoided for at least a year or more
Is there any vegetable/lentil which should be avoided? like okra [bhindi] etc, dont know hence asking.
Also, brahamacharya in thought, word and deed, I wanted to understand what constitutes maintaining brahamacharya in thought? I mean, just looking at the opposite sex [i am presuming] is not considered to be a break, not letting your thoughts go to an extent where it is considered dangerous in terms of retaining your vital energy [rethas] i guess is prohibited.
Thanks so much Dhananjay.
Regards, Manish

Answer
1. All of the spices mentioned above do not cause harm if eaten in small quantities with food. The trouble arises when one opts for a strongly spiced diet stimulating to the tongue and other senses. It is impractical to opt for a completely spice free or salt free diet unless one lives all by oneself, alone in a forest without contact with society. Such a concept is idealistic and unnecessary. Living in the midst of a family setup, it is incorrect to cause trouble to others by either making them eat the food we eat, or asking them to cook food separately for us. Such a behavior does not befit the Yogi.

2. After 2 years or more of unbroken Brahmacharya with deep meditation and Yogic practices, and as one starts getting closer to the status of an 'Urdhvaretha', the desire for even occasional intake of onion, garlic etc.. will wane by itself and disappear. The Yogi then gets a very clear and correct knowledge of what he should eat and what he should not from within. His inner voice guides him in the correct direction. Then, the taste of onion and garlic becomes disagreeable. Till then, it is best to avoid onion and garlic or or limit their use to very small quantities. The stupor and tamas (inertia) caused by these makes meditation very difficult. Not only these but even food sourced from outside such as from restaurants, caterers and bakeries which contain additives, tasting essences, baking soda etc.. agitate the mind making Brahmacharya tough. Simple and nutritious food cooked at home with minimum spices is always the best option.

3. Brahmacharya in thought refers to not entering the zone where the mind starts sexual contemplation. When sexual thoughts show signs of arising due to previous Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies), one diverts the mind away from these. As soon as the Brahmachari encounters this zone in the midst his day to day life or activities, he withdraws the mind. If the mind still shows a craving to continue such thought, he reminds himself of the falsity behind physical beauty/lust and the unreal nature of the same and diverts his mind elsewhere.

While the mere act of looking at the opposite sex in itself isn't wrong; the sexual intent if any, which crops up within the mind through such action becomes dangerous. It takes the mind into the zone of sexual contemplation, reaching which trouble starts. From hereon starts the danger line. A wise Yogi never crosses this line. If one has reached the stage where the act of looking at a woman does not produce the least tendency for lust or desire but one see's the woman as only the Atman (soul) covered by the impermanent physical body made of flesh, then it does not matter.

To such a person, a woman, a cow, a man, a tree or any other object of God's creation is one and the same. He see's the one underlying Supreme in all these and is unaffected by the external casing made of flesh. This is a very advanced state which comes only when one is very close to self-realization and not before. Till then, it is best to limit contact through sight or talk with the opposite sex only if necessary, to the required extent and not more. Lust and desire have the uncanny ability to arise from very innocent and unintentional contact leading to deeper involvement at a more dangerous level.

Question
QUESTION: Hi Swami,

I have found some solace and peace of mind after stumbling upon your postings on brahmacharya. In relation, I have 3 qns which I humbly request your replies:

1) I have recently finished my sabarimala yatra for the 2nd time and am still wearing my maala. Also, I have been having a very bad habit of self masturbation since age of 13. I am 28 now.Ayyappa deeksha enabled me to maintain brahmacharya for close to 55 days thus far.

However, I can deeply feel that my mind is already calculating what fantasies to indulge in and masturbate after removing my maala. Only when wearing maala I am able to sustain long periods of brahmacharya and from fear of ayyappan.However,when I remove maala, I have limited will power.

Is there no escape from this cycle where I practise brahmacharya when I have ayyappa deeksha and revert to pornography and masturbation after removing maala? What is wrong with me? I can be a saint and yet so quick to become a lustful man?

As of now, I have at the very least pledged that every Saturday, I will take vegeterian, meditate and chant saranams for Lord Ayyappa.

In my case what more can be done to reduce the intensity of the mind to seek pleasure from masturbation? Will ayyappa be angry with me?

2) If Atman is God, why are We(the God) not having the infinite powers and bliss and have to suffer in samsara? In another words, if we are to be God in the first place, why did we forgot our true nature and drowned in Samsara? If we are God to begin with, why were we not able to find fulfillment within ourselves and had to be bound by maya? Isn't that illogical?

3) In this human body, we are able to conceive Almighty, know him to be great and all powerful and know that all our desires will be fulfilled when we attain him. However, when we merge in god, how can we feel any bliss or sense of immortality when we are everything. There won't be a me as now to perceive the almighty isn't it? In another words, sugar is sweet only when I am able to taste it. What happiness can there be if I become sugar and there is no tasting. I would not be able to experience any sweetness isn't it?

My questions are not to mock at vedanta but are truly asked out of my own desire to fully grasp and understand the essense of vedanta. I hope you would not construe any of my questions as a joke or mockery. Thanks alot swami.

Saranam Ayyappa.

ANSWER: 1. Wearing a maala and worshiping Lord Ayyappa with the required discipline is a symbol of showing one's devotion and focus towards the Almighty. It is meant to bring the common man who has forgotten his state of divinity back into the realm of Godliness. By setting aside a few days for Ayyappa pooja, the devotee gets a chance to unwind from the world of materialism and focus his energies on the Supreme. The common man wearing a maala does this for a certain period and then reverts to his usual ways. The wise man takes the essence of this worship and continues this mode of life even later, for ever. He is forever in 'maala' in the real and genuine sense though he may not outwardly wear a maala or walk barefooted. This is then real pooja (worship), for this discipline has become a part of his lifestyle and is not limited to an annual occurance. He becomes the greatest and most loved devotee of Lord Ayyappa. There is none dearer to the Lord Ayyappa than such a rare devotee. He will receive the choicest of the Lord's blessings without doubt. Such a man is always devoted to the Supreme, be it through Ayyappa or any other God which appeals to him, for God is one while his names are many.

Take a pledge on the name of Lord Ayyappa to be true and sincere as regards the practice of Yoga and Brahmacharya. Take a vow on his name that henceforth you will lead a strict life of virtue and Godliness through Brahmacharya, that you will not yield to temptation. If you were able to practice Brahmacharya for two months, it can be practiced for four months, for one year and for life. Brahmacharya is one's default state of being. It is not alien or seperate from one's true self. It is the state of sexuality for recreation that is a disease and unnatural. We have forgotten this reality and have made sexuality into our default state of thought and action. The avidya (ignorance) around the Atman (soul) made you behave differently all these days. Now the Lord has shown his grace. You have started educating yourself on Godliness and Brahmacharya. This is the first step. If efforts are put in the right direction and with the right perspective, you can overcome and get free from this disease of the mind. You can work successfully at annuling the layers of ignorance around the Atman which are the cause behind the disease.

Go through each and every past answer and get clear with the means that are to be employed to achieve the same. Strive for purity with honesty and devotion to the Almighty Lord. Wake up everyday at 4.00 A.M and indulge in Yogic practice of Asana, Bandha, Nadi Shodhana, Pranayama and meditation. Within a year, there will not be the least trace for masturbation. Distaste and dispassion will develop at the very thought of ejaculating semen for recreation. You will experience real strength, real confidence and real freedom. You will be happy without a reason through getting closer to the Atman. Then, real living starts. This is the truth and beyond doubt. Life without Brahmacharya and spirituality is not life. It is slow, painful death. Practice a life of spirituality and God devotion through Yoga and Brahmacharya and know the results through first hand experience.

2. The Sun is a hundred odd times the size of the Earth. His light, heat and power are virtually immeasurable and almost infinite. Yet a small cloud a few hundred meters wide blocks his rays from reaching us on a cloudy day. The whole area becomes dark and dull and cold. Does this mean that the Sun is powerless? As soon as the cloud showers into rain or is blown far away by wind, the rays of the Sun manifest themselves in all splendor. We the (Atman) are the Sun and the Avidya (ignorance) surrounding us are the clouds. When these clouds of ignorance are melted and blown away through the heat and winds of Gnyana (knowledge), the Sun (Atman) becomes capable of projecting his rays in full power and splendor without obstruction. Till then, even the rays of the mighty Sun appear to be powerless against the onslaught of the petty clouds of ignorance. It appears as though these small clouds are greater than the mighty Sun, for they have successfully blocked his glory. The reality of course remains that the clouds are of no match to the mighty Sun. It is our human duty to dissolve these clouds and reclaim our true state of Godliness. This is the purpose of the human birth and the reason why we are born. He who strives to achieve this and wins is the greatest human being, the method used to achieve this is the greatest religion and the resulting state of purity that comes further to self-realization makes that man on par with the Almighty himself and no less. He becomes fit to occupy that lofty state through merger.

The incidence of the Jivatma considering itself to be separate from the Brahman (Almighty) and eventually forgetting its true nature leading to ignorance & sorrow is a part of the Leela (divine play) of the Almighty Lord. It is an illusion that is enacted by HIM. Just as a piece of gold remains the same internally despite being covered by mud externally, the Atman (soul) is not really affected but thinks himself to be, further to the effect of Maya (illusion). Why the Lord enacts this Leela is a question whose answer will become clear after we merge into HIM through self-realization. For now, it is beyond the purview of our limited intellect.

3. Does the man who has tasted freshly prepared, tasty food crave for stale, rotten and spoiled food? No. But to one who has never been fed with fresh food since birth, the concept of fresh food does not exist. He knows no better. To him, the only food is rotten food, for his knowledge ends there. The concept of desire, pleasure and happiness that we know of in this degenerated state of body consciousness stemming from Avidya (ignorance) is akin to the taste of such spoiled food through life long conditioning. We do not know better. We think these finite pleasures of the senses to be penultimate, while the reality is something else. We think this world to be real, while it is not so in reality. It is only when we work at unwinding these layers of ignorance around our true self (Atman) does the possibility of knowing that which is real bliss and joy occur.

It is stated in the scriptures that the final state of self-realization through merger with the Almighty leads to the experiencing of such bliss and indescribable joy that words fail to do justice. Shri. Ramakrishna Paramahansa, the self-realized sage while trying to describe this experience to the layman compared it to be a constant, eternal stream of bliss equal to the sum total of a million sexual orgasms taking place all at once and continuously unto eternity. This, the scriptures call 'Paramananda' or 'Satchitananda'. Like how the man conditioned on stale food since birth will never revert to it on tasting fresh food, the Jivatma (embodied soul) which has started to taste this nectar of bliss which starts trickling in through spiritual progress will gradually develop distaste for worldly sense pleasures & never ever look to worldly pleasures and attainments on realizing its true nature. This taste of divine Ananda (bliss) is of that order. One has to experience it in reality to know it truly. It cannot be explained or described. It is to be experienced.

One who has experienced it loses all interest in earthly pleasures of the senses which have a beginning and an end. Which eventually bring sorrow and pain. Which make man suffer in agony. It is to be known. It is to be experienced, this Ananda (bliss) of the Atman no different from that of the Almighty.

This concept of the body consciousness leading to considering ourselves as the body and not the Atman and the resulting Ahamkara (ego) which thereby blossoms leading to the concept of 'Me', 'Mine' is the thief which is robbing us and preventing us experience our inherant Ananda (bliss). We cannot conceive the Almighty as long as we are in the realm of the ignorance of 'me', 'mine'. We cannot conceive what the Almighty is as long as we consider ourselves to be the body. To conceive HIM, we have to raise above the body, mind, ego and emotional consciousness. Till then, like the man who has known only stale food, we cannot know what it is to experience HIM. In other words, we cannot understand or fathom the self-experience in terms of the Atman. When we experience HIM, we realize who we truly are and when we truly realize who we are, we experience HIM. Both are one and the same. So we should work for the same and not limit ourselves to this life of oscillating emotions that are inevitable in this degraded state of body and mind consciousness.

Where are we becoming sugar through self-realization? we are not becoming sugar but are becoming the BLISS PRESENT IN THE TASTE OF SUGAR. We have no need of the physical aspect of sugar anymore. Earlier, we encountered the bliss of sugar while tasting. We had to take the effort to savor the bliss of sugar. We had to eat a few grains of sugar and experience the bliss of sweetness. There was the need for an effort (beginning) enjoyment (middle) and end (more craving). We could not go on eating sugar to prolong this bliss, for that would not be practical. So we had to become dependent and enslave ourselves to sugar to enjoy bliss. This was the case as we were different from the bliss present in sugar. There was duality. There were two concepts: US and the BLISS OF SUGAR. To enjoy, we had to eat sugar and MERGE WITH THAT BLISS OF SUGAR through effort.

Further to self-realization, an entirely different thing has taken place. By merging ourselves with the Almighty who is in the nature of bliss itself, We ourselves have become BLISS (not sugar). Now there aren't two concepts any more. No more US and BLISS. There is only BLISS. One single entity forever. It is eternal and permanent unlike the need to repeat sense pleasures. It is continuous, unending and complete unlike body or mind experiences which start and then end, which increase and decrease, which are to be repeated every now and then and cause agitation and unrest inbetween. So this state of self-realization is something very different and unique. We have experienced nothing of the sort till now. There, we are in continuous bliss in our own self, through our own self and with our own self forever without the need of anything external. Now imagine how intense and indescribable that feeling would be to not be the body, not be the mind, not be the ego, not be the emotions but ONLY BE BLISS in completeness and entirety for ever! It cannot be described. It cannot be imagined. It should be experienced. It is SAT-CHITH-ANANDA (knowledge-existence-bliss) say the Upanishads. It is of the nature of the Parabrahman (Almighty Lord). It is our true state of being. The whole aim of Yoga and Brahmacharya is to help us reach this state of union with the Almighty.

QUESTION: Swami, I really appreciate your well written replies which enabled me to understand the concepts. In addition, I have the following related qns.

1) Even after close to 2 months of brahmacharya, I am still getting depressed and crying spells over my life due to romantic rejections and not being lucky in getting dates to find a life partner. Personally, I have been a reject from many gals all my life and this had caused me to indulge in porn more and create my own fantasy world.It has go on for 15 years already. Somehow rather, when I was extremely depressed and was on the verge of committing suicide, out of nowhere I stumbled on swami sivananda website and have been reading on spirituality. For someone like me who had been a reject from gals and had been depressed for most part of my youth because of those rejections, swami sivananda's articles gave me some hope. However, I was still indulging in porn and masturbation side by side with spirituality.

Meeting friends who already have gfs and wife is a pain. Seeing ppl my age already having created a family is a pain. I am not jealous of them but despite being materially quite successful,I am angry god did not gave me a gal to love.

For my case, I feel brahmacharya helped me to some extent but my depression and crying spells do occur whenever I think that I am not even fit enough to get a girlfriend/wife.

What can be done in my case? Is there any hope for me? Or will I end up committing suicide? Why even after ayyappa deeksha I do not feel confident,blissful and brave ? (although I can feel a small difference).

FYI, despite having ayyappa deeksha, I did not or rather was not able to wake up at 4am due to late night work. I prayed twice a day chanting the 108 saranams. I followed vegeterian diet but DID not exercise, meditate, do pranayama, bandha nor asana.

I am approaching my 30 and the depression of not getting a gal is there and has been there for 10 over years already. I do not know where my life is going though I have a good career. I seriously do not have any hope and everyday is like a pain to me.

In this state of despair, where it is even difficult to wake up at 4am, meditate or even attempt any asanas, what can be done?

Pls guide me.

Swami saranam ayyappa.

Answer
1. In this world of Maya (illusion), the wise man develops an attitude of not hoping, not hating and not craving for any object or experience through attachment but keeps his mind devoted to God. He remains neutral as a Saakshi (witness) while watching the Leela (play) of the Lord unwind, without being attached to any occurance or non-occurance. He reminds himself that this world is a dream further to being Asath (unreal). Not one person who is involved and attached to this world can be happy. That is how God has designed it. Only those who strive to realize themselves start treading the path of happiness. Only those who try for a merger with the Almighty, viewing the happenings of the world as though a dream reach the state of joy.

An unmarried man is unhappy because he lacks a wife.
A married man is unhappy because he isn't satisfied with the wife.
A man with a good wife is unhappy because he lacks wealth.
A man with a good wife and wealth is unhappy because he lacks health.
A man with a good wife, wealth, health and all comforts is unhappy due to lack of a son.
One who has all of the above still eventually becomes unhappy, dissatisfied and angry for a reason he himself does not understand...

What does this show? It shows that one cannot get everlasting happiness through objects and experiences of the world. This is because the world is Asath (unreal). That which is unreal cannot give satisfaction. It is like the mirage of an oasis in the desert. Just as the mirage of an oasis does not contain water and hence cannot quench the thirst of the thirsty desert traveler, any amount of worldly pleasure cannot make man satisfied and content. He will soon revert to his state of dejection and sorrow for a reason he himself doesn't comprehend.

"Vishwam darpana drushyamana nagarithulyam" say the scriptures -- "This world is like the image of an object reflected in the mirror"

It cannot give happiness, for it does not exist. For something to give happiness, it should exist. But this world does not exist. It is a mirage. Yet it appears as though it is real. This world is a mysterious place. Only one who fixes himself for self-realization crosses this dangerous and indefinite land of mystery. Others get caught in sorrow. Just as a hungry man cannot sate his hunger by looking at the photographs of plates of food, but he must eat real food, this world which is an image (like in a dream) cannot satisfy the hunger of the Jivatman (embodied soul). For that, the Jivatman has to rediscover itself as the Shudhaatman (pure soul) which is the Almighty. Then, it becomes immensely and eternally happy without the need of anything external. It does not even want this body, mind or ego then. It drops away all these and merges into the Brahman (Almighty). Till then, it cannot reach eternal happiness.

The actual reason for the state of sorrow and unhappiness in man is this:
" We the Atman (soul) are a part of the Almighty who is of the order of the highest knowledge-existence-bliss. This is our real nature. It is one of matchless bliss. There is no pleasure anywhere in this manifest world which can equal this bliss of our true nature. All the wealth, health, women, money, comforts and excitement that one normally tries to gather in his lifetime cannot make up for even one percent of this innate matchless bliss present in the Atman. All these things fade into nothing when compared to the innate bliss of the Brahman (Almighty). But the Jivatma (embodied soul) has forgotten his real nature. Having been enveloped by layers of Avidya (ignorance), he considers himself this body, mind and ego. Life involving these three is bereft of bliss. These three are lackluster and dry, there is no sense of happiness here...

But the true nature of the Jivatma is bliss. Though forgotten, one cannot move away from one's true nature. A prince born in a royal family with all comforts will remember those comforts and pleasures even if he were to become a pauper and roam the streets. Even of he were to spend decades as a beggar, his mind longs and wishes for the happiness he enjoyed as a prince. This is because being in luxury and riches is of his nature. No amount of food or even life in a middle class atmosphere can make the former prince, now a beggar, happy. Why? Because all these simple pleasures are of no match when compared to his royal pleasures. He has experienced the height of luxury, wealth and power. Unless he gets those back, he will never be happy.

The Jivatma (embodied soul) is like the prince. The Sat-Chith-Ananda (knowledge-existence-bliss) of superlative nature that exists deep within it inherently cannot be matched by worldly pleasures and experiences. Having forgotten these attributes through ignorance, it wanders aimlessly and foolishly towards anything that promises it some pleasure with the hope - "This might now give me that supreme bliss". But all the things in the world are Asath (unreal) and hence cheat it with pain. It still does not loose hope but wanders after more worldly things in its quest for that elusive bliss but to no avail. This is the state of the world. Finally, by the grace of God, it realizes that the elusive bliss it was searching for is within itself all the time in the Atman. From hereon starts the life of spiritual unfolding, finally leading to self-realization, whereupon the highest, eternal bliss springs forth from within.

Aatmanyeva Atmana Tustaha says Lord Krishna the Bhagavad-Gita -- "Upon finding the highest bliss within itself, it becomes content in the self by the self"

This is the only way to eternal happiness. All others fail.

Hence withdraw attachment, craving and longing for worldly happenings and instead keep your mind focused on God with devotion through Yoga and Brahmacharya. That which HE wills always happens. That which HE does not will does not happen, try how hard we may to make it happen. So the wise man does not waste his time and energy chasing worldly accomplishments but directs his mind and energies on attaining to the Supreme. When the right time comes, you will be blessed with a good wife if God so wishes. Even then should one not stagnate in the temporary happiness of marriage but keep one's mind attached to spiritual attainment, for this happiness from woman, wealth and son is also transitory and not real. These become painful the moment one gets attached to them. This is the law of nature. One cannot go against it.

Strive with all energy towards the practice of Yoga and Brahmacharya as explained earlier in past answers. The dark night is always followed by a bright sunny morning.

Answer
1. Constant loss of semen from voluntary ejaculation through masturbation leads to immense loss of Prana, health and finally vitality causing degeneration and premature decay of the body. This results in rapid weakness & ageing. One becomes prone to illness & various diseases. The mind gets addicted to the concept of sexuality leading to strengthening of past sexual Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies). Spirituality becomes dim and finally disappears.

2. The method of getting free from porn & masturbation has been dealt with in various 'past answers'. Kindly go through each and every 'past answer' on this portal to get clear with the method.

3. Answer.1 clears Question.3

4. Yes.

5. The Yogic practices to be applied have also been outlined in past answers.

6. Because it is life energy. Isn't life important?

7. Mere lack of masturbation does not make semen into Ojas. For that, one has to practice Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed with a life of Yogic practices. Ignore blue balls.

8. Pranic energy is conserved through Brahmacharya. It is located all over the body with its source in the Atman present in the heart.

9. Yes.

10. Through Brahmacharya.

Question
how much time it takes to be completely get rid of wet dreams? i have read in raman maharshi`s book that after one year spermatic fluid gets converted into molasses like candy and completely roots out the chances of wet dreams... plz comment...

Answer
Wet dreams completely stop after the Yogi masters all the 6 stages of 'Sabija Samadhi' (also called Savikalpa Samadhi) through meditation on the Supreme and starts becoming an Urdhvareta. By the time 'Nirvikalpa Samadhi' (which follows eventually after mastering Savikalpa Samadhi) is fully attained, the Yogi will have become a complete Urdhvareta and will have no more wet dreams. However, care will have to be taken to ensure that wrong thoughts, deeds are not indulged in at any point of time to maintain this state free from wet dreams.

As one gets established in Sabija Samadhi, it leads to deep, uninterrupted, dreamless and blissful Nidra (sleep) at night. The Yogi does not require too much night sleep from then on and yet he is full of energy through the day. The body is fresh and the mind awake by 3.30 A.M or so, coaxing one to get out of bed and start Yogic practice. One feels a strong urge to meditate many hours in Samadhi from this stage onward. Blessed and fortunate is the Yogi who reaches this stage. In this stage, the mind is always in the thought of God with Bhakthi (devotion). I salute & bow to the Lotus feet of the great, Almighty Parabrahman with tears of Bhakthi and gratitude for the grace he has shown me. May my mind never be intent on anything but HIM. May all other honest Brahmachari-s also be blessed by his grace.

On the whole, for wet dreams to stop, the very strong and gross sexual Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies) in the Karana Sharira (causal body) have to be vacated through arduous practice of Yoga along with the grace of God. On reaching this stage, the milder impression's which are feeble cause mild desire when they occasionally surface (which the Yogi then displaces) but do not cause wet dreams. Entry into Sabija or Savikalpa Samadhi during meditation is the first physical sign of the beginning of this stage. Shri. Bhagavan Ramana Maharishi is referring to the state of 'Soma' or 'Amrit' (divine nectar) which is formed in the brain by the transmutation of Semen through the molasses-candy example you mention. This does not refer to gross semen. Semen formation stops upon reaching this stage further to establishment in the state of 'Soma' up in the brain which does not come down to form Rethas (semen), unless one loses Brahmacharya through voluntary, wrong action.

How soon one attains to this state varies from person to person depending on various factors such as one's intensity, regularity and honesty in unbroken practice. The strength of past karma and most importantly the grace of the Almighty is very crucial. Depending on all these, one reaches this state sooner or later. But it is to come, if the practice is correct, consistent and genuine. From my personal experience, if Brahmacharya is unbroken with regular Pranayama & meditation with devotion to the Supreme, any period upwards of 2 years or so of true, unbroken practice offers a very high possibility of reaching the initial stages of Savikalpa Samadhi. Again, generalizing time may not prove to be accurate as each person, his past karma and efforts vary in nature.

Question
Hello Mr Dhananjay,

Can you mention any pranayamas(apart for maha bandha) for maintaining bramhacharya. Sir, maintaing bramhacharya for 12 years is exceedingly difficult. what is the impact of brahacharya on the astral body if there is any?. I have read form a swamiji that until the age of 7, there exists a psychic shield around a person because he/she is not involved in sexual indulgence and thoughts(beofr teenage). 1) Can you please inform me about few astral effects of bramhacharya practice?
Also, 2) what does one do in a situation when an urge is unbarable and uncontrollable, being a bramhachari?
My last question- 3)Do sexual vasanas and samskaras of past lives get burnt with this simple practice of bramhcharya?

Thank you.

Answer
1. The Bandha and Pranayama regime to be followed has been outlined in :http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2011/5/Pranayama-Yoga-Brahma

2. The 'Linga Sharira' (astral body) is an extension of the physical body in terms of energy. It exists around and outside the physical body in the form of an aura or halo of energy. It contains various Naadis (astral energy channels) which conduct energy. Brahmacharya results in increase of Ojas (divine astral power) which is a sort of electricity. The astral body is the seat of Ojas. One who has much Ojas through Brahmacharya becomes very capable and energetic. He becomes capable of performing much work without fatigue. His positive energy influences people in a powerful manner. He attracts immense cosmic energy or universal Prana. His mind becomes very potent and the faculties of his brain get pronounced.

For the negative effects of sexual relationships and effects on the astral body, read the 'past answer' at:http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2010/12/Celibacy-Questions.h

3. Divert the mind, remind it of the reality of the filth within the female body and its appearance at old age. Remind yourself of the weakness and debility further to losing semen and stop the thought or activity causing lust from accelerating. For more details on how to achieve this, kindly go through each and every past answer on this portal.

4. Past impressions become feeble and loose their might through Brahmacharya. However, they are not yet destroyed. The remnant impressions are then destroyed by the Yogi in the advanced stages of Samadhi (super-consciousness).

Question
QUESTION: Dear Sir

Please tell me difference between Banda and Pranayama, they have same results? Please tell me some about Vajroli Mudra.

Thanking u sir(Supreme is absolute truth)

ANSWER: 1. Bandha means 'lock' or 'hold'. Practice of 'Thribandha' (Mula, Uddiyana & Jaalandhara bandha) is the means by which Prana (upward wind) and Apana (downward wind) are united and made to enter 'Sushumna Naadi' to aid awakening of Kundalini for meditation leading to Samadhi (super-consciousness). Bandha is preferably carried out before the start of Pranayama in the beginner.

2. Pranayama - "Pranasya Aayamaha" -- Control of Prana or vital energy through the means of breath. Union of Prana and Apana is Yoga. There is no Yoga or Brahmacharya without Pranayama. Pranayama is the tool with which the Yogi clears his Naadi-s (subtle energy channels) and makes them conducive to transmit vital energy. Through Pranayama are thrown out the impurities of the physical body. The highest kind of Pranayama is that which eventually leads to 'Kevala Kumbhaka' (cessation of breath). Pranayama leads to control over the Prana which leads to control over the mind. One who does not have control over his Prana has no control over his mind. One who has conquered Prana has conquered the mind.

Bandha and Pranayama are complementary to each other. If Prana is electricity, Pranayama and Bandha are the switches that direct electricity to the required points in a systematic manner. Hence both are to be practiced.

3. Vajroli Kriya: When a Yogi after the long practice of Asana, Pranayama and Meditation with unbroken Brahmacharya attains siddhi over his Rethas (semen) over a period of time, Vajroli kriya occurs. This occurs just before the stage of 'Savikalpa Samadhi'. It refers to the process by which the Bindu (seed) which was previously flowing downwards and outwards (as semen through ejaculation) reverses itself and starts flowing upwards and inwards back into the 'Ajna Chakra' in the 'Chandra Sthana' (region of the moon) located in the brain. Soma which is responsible for Samadhi is the result of union of 'Shukra' (male element of Bindu) with 'Rajas' (female element of Bindu present dormant within the male body in the perineum). When these two unite inside and the resulting energy rises up the 'Sushumna' into the brain, Soma is the result. Their union is very difficult. This is also called 'Urdhvareta Kriya'. When this process occurs through great efforts from the Yogi and through the grace of God, the Yogi becomes an Urdhvareta.

After reaching this stage, the Urdhvareta Yogi starts to acquire the 'Divya Sharira' (divine body purified by 'Yogaagni' [the fire of Yoga]) which is immune to disease, debility and even death if his Prarabdha (past karma) so supports. This body is also called as 'Vajra deham' (Diamond body). It leads to beauty, grace, strength and adamentine toughness as per Sage Pathanjali. The Yogi also develops various siddhi-s. Thus Vajroli refers to the natural process of reversal of seminal energy into Bindu and then Soma, through the 'Urdhvareta Kriya' that is a pre-requisite to Samadhi.

Contrary to general perception, Vajroli is not the pulling up of semen during sexual intercourse. This is a ploy used by the ancient sages to misguide undeserving aspirants who read Yogic scriptures. So that wicked, evil and dishonorable people with questionable intentions do not succeed in Yoga, they have hidden the true meaning of Vajroli behind the cloak of sexual intercourse.

QUESTION: DEAR SIR

I cant forget your valuable help in Spiritual teachings, but I cant see you and dont know nothing about you, please put a photo with the site.

Sir, In Patanjali yoga Pranayama described in 3 manner like one is kumbaka inside the body second one is Kumbaka after rechaka and last one is kumbaka asper the current position of prana in the body, But I read from Holistic Yoga (Shanti Dharmananta Saraswathi) book that Pranayama in different types like Nadi Shudhi, Surya beda, Chandra beda, Ujjayi, Plavini, Murcha,Bhastrika, Brahmari, Kapalabadika etc etc.... , These classifications are as per the Patanjali yoga? Which one of these Pranayama is giving more results?

Thanking u sir
(That Supreme being is the absolute truth)

Answer

1. Till 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) occurs, a Yogi should remain unknown. Later, he may reveal himself if God so wishes. Direct interaction with the world in the capacity of a Yogi before this stage becomes an impediment to Sadhana (practice).

When God alone is the doer of actions and not us, how can one put one's photo and claim doership through establishing an identity?

2. Follow the Bandha, Nadi Shodhana & Pranayama regime as has been explained in past answers. There are various roads (techniques) to Pranayama. It is important that one sticks to one road and does not waver. Tying all the different methods off and on without focus will not give progress. Just as a plant becomes a tree and bears fruit after many years, one receives the fruits of Yoga only after practice for a very long period of time. Till then, one should be patient and devoted to one path and technique. The method described in past answers will lead to progress if followed correctly and consistently.

3. The Pranayama-s you have mentioned belong to 'Hatha Yoga' and not Pathanjali's 'Ashtanga Raja Yoga.

4. Kevala Kumbhaka (automatic stoppage of breath at any point without further need for breath) occurs only in the advanced stages of Yoga when one reaches 'Nirbija Samadhi' (Nirvikalpa Samadhi) and not before.

Question

Dear Dhananjay,
How are you the replies you give to the readers are simply excellent and i am a regular reader. I am on my 19th day of my Brahmachary and i am happy coz i was having voluntary and involuntary slip nearly 4-5 times after a period of 9 or l0 days and iam now in my 19th day my only inspiration are your replies and the blessings of almighty thanks a lot, I have some questions from your replies and the last nights experience. Coming to my questions. I was in relationship with a girl past 6 years we had very deep longing to get married. Last year she got married to some other as she didn't want to hurt her parents and go against their will.Since the time i was in relationsip i had dreams that we are married and having a happy family, in that dreams i was having wet dreams coz they are that deep,yesterday i had the same dream and i was in full control and the wet dream didn't happen since then i was very disturbed and thanked god not to have a wet dream as a result. so my doubts are...

1.If we were in relationship and willingly or unwillings we broke do the astral connection between the bodies still exist and do they result in dreams or anything which pose a obstacle to brahmacharya.

2.In your previous reply you were saying dont let the thought convert into lust resulting in preserved semen becomes lifeless and if we have some thoughts and it does not result in wet dream then can we assure ourselfs that we are safe as the thought was not stong.

Thanking your for your kindly response to the readers and you being the inspiration for us beginners.
Ganapathi.

Answer

1. A long and deep relationship involving frequent sexual intercourse results in a strong astral tube between the people involved. Less frequent sexual intercourse results in a less stronger astral tube. It generally takes 12 years for the astral tube of sexual intercourse to fully dissolve provided contact is not re-established.

A relationship which did not involve sex but involved other physical contact does not produce an astral tube but results in a less serious astral connection which may last a year or two. Since these tubes and connections transmit feelings and emotions, the possibility of one reacting to this effect does exist. At such times, the Brahmachari has to fight against these feelings and guard his state of purity without succumbing. Past Karma is to be borne and worked out. The initial period hence is a little difficult. There is no other way.

Practice of a life of Yoga (waking up at 4.00 A.M, sathwic diet, Bandha, Nadi Shodhana, Pranayama) with honest Brahmacharya and God-meditation helps overcome this connection more effectively. Such a Brahmachari has a better chance of coping with the matter on hand.

2. One never knows when lustful thoughts if let to grow big, translate into wet dreams or even masturbation in the beginner. Hence one should never let such thoughts grow into desire and contemplation. Any incidence of thought being let to flower into lust and passion poses the possibility of resulting in a wet dream sooner or later. Sometimes wet dreams do not occur for a certain period but suddenly occur all of a sudden.

The only way out is to work hard at maintaining purity and put in true effort with sincerity in God-meditation. Long hours of meditation convert Veerya (semen) into Ojas and dry it up. So one should meditate on the Supreme as much as possible after performing Yogic practices and even at other times, whenever possible.

ॐ तत् सत्
(That Supreme being is the absolute truth)

Question
For those who don't believe or have less belief in god, is there some meditation to reach Samadhi?? for selfrealisation..

Answer
1. Sit in Padmasana or Sidhasana with the lower back, spine, neck and head in a straight line. Assume a comfortable state of body by relaxing the muscles and keeping the hand either in the 'Gnyana Mudra' or clasped together on the lap.

2. Close the eyes and concentrate at the 'Thrikuti' (place between the eyebrows). Remind yourself that you are not the body, mind, ego or individual consciousness.

3. In this stage, various thoughts start entering the mind of the beginner. Various desires and tendencies from within start to surface. Be calm and do not let the mind feed on these thoughts. Stay indifferent to them. You are the unmovable self or the Atman who has no desire and no thoughts. These thoughts are the result of the ego. But you are not the ego. Since the world is an illusion, these thoughts are also an illusion. Discard them as you discard the scenes you have seen in a movie after watching it. We do not let these scenes affect our real life; so should one discard the thoughts which try to grow on sitting for meditation as being unreal.

4. As each thought arises, we will erase it like we erase a photograph on the screen of our mobile phone. After some time, these thoughts reduce in volume. The mind becomes calmer. You are the unmovable Atman (self) who is constant, thoughtless, desire-less and full of bliss. Thoughts were being superimposed on you due to past actions and impressions just as various moving images are superimposed on the cinema screen. The cinema screen is blank, still and free from all images in reality. It does not have any distinctive feature. The projector beams these images on the white screen. We will now switch off the projector within us (the mind) and realize ourselves to be the blank screen. Whenever some thought invades the mind occasionally, let it be erased in this way. Let there be a strong reminder that this world, the body, the mind and all other things are not real but images as in a dream. We are not any of these. We erase these images as and when they arise. Much effort in unbroken Yogic practices and the grace of God will be required to achieve this in the initial stages, but then Yoga is not for the meek and weak. It takes superhuman effort to attain to Yoga.

When this process of elimination is practiced for a long period of time in meditation further to a life of Yogic practice and honest Brahmacharya, all thoughts from the conscious and sub-conscious mind will evaporate gradually and that which remains is the pure I-ness or pure egoism, also called as 'Asmita'. Upon reaching this stage, only pure 'Buddhi' or the sense of individuality uncolored and untouched by any thought remains. It is like the bedrock on which all the other thoughts and images stood and took support. But we vacated them and now only the base remains. With no thought and no desire to perform any action or not perform any action, we have now started experiencing pure individuality unmodified by an impression. This empty space, devoid of all thought, devoid of all urge and completely serene and tranquil is pure Asmita (I-ness) unadulterated by any modification of the mind.

There is no thought, no desire, no want, no attraction or repulsion to anything or anybody. One is simply witnessing and experiencing the sense of I-ness. However, this too is not the 'Atman'. It is still the individual 'I' which is ultimately unreal. What is it which is preventing us from completely experiencing the Atman and becoming only the Atman or our true self in this state? It is the mind itself which has become a barrier. Though fully cleansed of all thoughts, the awareness and consciousness of the mind itself is acting as an obstacle. The awareness of individuality as being separate from the universal is the obstacle. It is a state of duality. As long as the mind exists in its state of witnessing the process, we cannot fully merge into the Atmic state, for there is still the thought - "I am meditating and enjoying bliss". There is still awareness of the process of meditation.

When one is established in this process to perfection, the resultant state is Samadhi (super-consciousness). This stage of Samadhi where the mind is still aware of itself being in a state of meditation (but with no other thought) is 'Savikalpa or Sabija Samadhi'. The concept of individual identity or I-ness exists in this type of Samadhi. Since the mind exists, breath also exists. One breathes very lightly and occasionally. Since the 'I' in terms of individuality exists, the world also exists. It is a state of experiencing the I-ness or Aham with a mild awareness of things external to us (but not thinking of them). It is the Samadhi maintained with effort from the meditator. At this stage, the meditator mistakes the I-ness or 'Asmita' itself to be the Atman. In reality, this is incorrect, for the Atman is the illuminator of I-ness and the source behind its existence. Hence the name 'Savikalpa' (presence of wrong perception.)

When one transcends this state and goes into a deeper state where the mind loses awareness of being in a state of meditation (as in deep sleep but with full awareness of only the Atman (self), which is not the case in sleep, for there is absolutely no awareness in sleep), it is 'Nirvikalpa or Nirbija Samadhi'. Since the 'I' in terms of individual identity does not exist here, the world does not exist. It is the state of BEING the self or pure consciousness itself and not merely witnessing I-ness as in Savikalpa Samadhi. THIS is the Atman. THIS is pure consciousness. This is the real you. YOU are THIS. You are only this and nothing else. You are now experiencing your own self in totality. There is no awareness of things external to the self here. Everything has become the self or Atman, not even the mind exists. The Yogi has now become the PURE SELF, PURE CONSCIOUSNESS STRETCHING ACROSS INFINITY. This is the Parabrahman (Almighty).

It does not matter now whether we call IT God, Atman (self) or something else. IT is IT. The final origin of everything and which exists everywhere. The Yogi who is in this state occupies the entire universe. He feels the experience of occupying the entire universe. In the normal, wakeful state, he experienced being the body. Nothing more. Now he experiences infinity. He is in his true state of infinity and matchless Ananda (bliss). It is the Samadhi maintained without effort (as in sleep, we don't put in effort to maintain it). The mind and Prana merge into the Atman and cease to exist here. This when practiced long leads to self-realization.

The experience of Nirvikalpa Samadhi cannot be described after coming down from meditation. The mind which was absent (through merger with the Atman or Brahman) in this state is reborn after the Yogi regains external consciousness on coming down from Samadhi meditation. To succeed in description, the experience of Nirvikalpa which took place beyond the mind in a state of super-consciousness has to be explained using the limited mind. It is impossible. The limited mind cannot concise this concept through words. We can only say that even the continuous & combined sum total of all the pleasures ever possible in this world using the mind or body cannot equal even one percent of that supreme Ananda (bliss).

Even this does not do justice in describing the experience correctly, for the knowledge and state of being which one experiences beyond the mind, without the mind is beyond words. It is the state of complete union with the Almighty.

Since the mind is absent in Nirbija Samadhi, breath is absent. Since breath is absent, the lungs stop. Since the lungs stop, the heart stops. Since the heart stops, all other organs stop. The man is as good as dead externally and internally, yet he is not dead. He is in a mysterious state of SUSPENSION. The body is maintained without food through the shower of Soma or Amrit (divine nectar) from the region of the moon in the brain. He can remain unmoving in this state without food, water and breath for hours, days, months or years if so destined without any decay or ageing. He cannot hear any sound, cannot feel touch, does not breathe, does not move and in other words appears as though he is dead. He has completed Yoga and the final purpose of the human birth. Nothing more exists for him from hereon. Yoga (union) has happened. He has merged with the universal consciousness or the Parabrahman (Almighty).

As long as his 'Prarabdha' (karma which is to be worked out in this lifetime) remains, he comes back into the world after meditation. When it is over, he merges with the Supreme forever in his state of Sat-Chith-Ananda (knowledge-existence-bliss) and does not return. He has no further birth on this Earthly plane. He is then gone forever. The drop has merged into the Ocean...

Question
Hello sir, i m 20 yr old and going throught major depression due to my studies/carrer.sir, i failed several times in competating exams, due to that i got depressed and to creating problem for my family, i really don't know what to do? And yess m practice celibacy from last one month. plz help ..thanks

Answer
Focus on systematically assimilating the essence of the subject, well before appearing for the exam. Just as the body absorbs the essence of food and eliminates the rest, one should absorb the essence of the subject of study. This essence is what is called Vidya (knowledge) of the subject. Then, it becomes easy to do well in the exam.

A life of Brahmacharya will help in supplying the energy and concentration required to indulge in proper study.

Question
Hello, what is the importance of fast in bramcharya?? It is necessary for bramchari to take fast once a week ??{with only pure water}

Answer
People who indulge in Brahmacharya through regular Yogic practice should not fast. They should take 'Mitaahara' (balanced, moderate, timely food). Fasting on water alone, for a short time is carried out when suffering from an illness related to the stomach/digestion. This helps vacate the toxin from the body.

Unnecessary fasting weakens the body and produces ill-health.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

First of all thank you so much for your past answer (long vow vs short vow). It was simply amazing and inspiring to think of brhamacharya as a lifestyle than to worry about long vow or short vow. It has been working great so far. I having been waking up early every morning (not at 4, but around 5-6) and have been doing pranayam, meditation and sun gazing everyday. I could not do the bandhas although they felt amazing, because they seemed to aggravate my hip pain which shows up if I do something like bandhas or lotus posture. I have been doing about 30 minutes of sungazing everyday and about 15 mins of pranayam (both morning and evening) and about 1 hour meditation two times a day (2-3 hours total).

The first 15 days was pretty amazing. I felt the bliss of the Self during meditation and felt that I wanted nothing else but constant connection with the divine Self. It was really amazing, and brhamacharya was automatic. However I had some travel commitments with a friend. I went to visit him during the weekend, and did pranayam and meditation at least once a day. However upon returning back I was a little tired, and this week I have been getting up late and sometimes missing my morning meditation and sungazing, although I make it a point to do atleast 15 minutes of pranayam. Slowly negative thoughts are creeping in. I am sure it is just a temporary phase, but I want some motivation so that I don't slip. I have been observing strict brahmacharya for the last 23 days. I have had 4-5 nocturnal emmissions so far. I have been doing the best with words and thoughts, but the last few days I have been getting some negative thoughts (when I see other couples smiling and laughing, there are some thoughts and jealousy like "They look happier than me even if they don't seem to be practising brahmacharya"). I am sure these are temporary thoughts and feelings, but just wanted your advise on how to deal with such thoughts and how to keep myself motivated to stay on the path.

I will get back to the early morning routine ASAP, so that I can firmly re-establish the connection with the divine blissful self. I do feel the bliss during practise. But somehow (especially on days after nocturnal emissions) these negative thoughts creep in. Kindly advise on how to deal with these.

thank you very much!

Answer
1. Gradually advance the morning waking (alarm) time by 15 minutes. If the current waking time is 5.30 A.M, make it 5.15. Then wake up with force and commitment without fail. After a week, set the alarm to 5.00. After another week set it to 4.45. Ultimately, one should wake up at least by 4.00 A.M and indulge in the complete set of Yogic practices. Unbroken Brahmacharya will not be possible to the one who spends 'Brahmimuhurtham' (3.00 A.M to 5.30 A.M) in bed.

2. Bandha-s will come within reach when there is gradual, constant and prolonged effort over their performance over the course of time. They are important for unbroken Brahmacharya.

3. Our right is to the action alone and never to the fruits. We should strive for honest and sincere Brahmacharya through the course of the day with great zeal and commitment knowing it is our default, natural state. "No other state exists" - such should be the belief. Belief and genuine effort should be backed by the innocence and trustworthiness of a child. The mother scares the naughty child telling him that the bogeyman will take him away if he does not eat food and the child believes her with complete trust, innocence and wide eyed rock solid belief. One's belief in Brahmacharya and God should be like this. Then the ship called mind sails past the dangerous waters of 'Samsara'(dualistic world of suffering) and Brahmacharya gets established. This should be maintained till one attains self-realization. When efforts in the waking state are honest and as past karma gradually vacates, nocturnal emissions will slowly subside in frequency and eventually disappear with advancement.

4. Cupid between man and woman is the personification of Maya (illusion). The initial stages of entrapment in 'Maya' appear tasty, sweet and pleasurable. Only later does it's true color and nature surface. It's true nature is the exact opposite; disagreeable, foul and full of pain & sorrow. This experience awaits all those who get entrapped in the net of sense pleasures laid by Maya. Once caught, it is very difficult to escape from this net. Knowing it to be such, the wise man does not let himself get trapped. He remains extremely vigilant and negates these inducements through Viveka (wisdom of reality), lest he be tempted to fall into this net of doom as a fish gets caught in the net of the fisherman.

One should remind himself of the unreality and filth within the human body. One should picture how a beautiful member of the opposite sex will appear in old-age with rotting flesh and teeth. One should spend some time in a morgue or the autopsy room if the desires are too strong. Then the guile, cunning and falsity of Maya get exposed.

A woman is all alluring and tempting before she nets the man in her net of Maya. Only later does the foolish, helpless man who fell prey to desire and lust realize the anger, cunning, coldness and ruthlessness behind those wiles, smiles and charms of the woman. The same applies in the reverse order as regards women who foolishly get caught in the net laid by lusty men. Each become a sharp blade who bleed the other to untold agony and suffering through the workings of Maya. This world of illusion and its workings are quite different from reality. Very few are those wise men who escape from these dangerous nets of the world and its apparent charms. Hence one should forever be established in Brahmacharya and reach God.

Question
Namaste Dhananjay, I hope you are in good health.

My question is not directly related to Brahmacharya.

I have started observing Brahmacharya and I do feel it helps my concentration. I genuinely study to please my Guru and I want to give the best I can to him and God. But sometimes I lose complete focus on what matters and what does not. I do not get great grades, and other people who do no observe Brahamacharya get higher marks. I do not understand this. Why is this? I know education is not all about marks but that has become the only medium to show your intelligence these days. It's sad. I study Mechanical engineering and since you have studied engineering also could you provide me some study tips? How one should study? How to develop one's memory? How to study a topic like thermodynamics? I struggle with that the most at the moment.

Answer

1. Practicing a few months or a year of Brahmacharya and expecting drastic improvements is like planting a sapling and expecting it to become a fruit bearing tree in a few months time. It takes many years of unbroken Brahmacharya with Yogic practices, God-devotion and meditation to see 'notable' differences between the Brahmachari and the non-Brahmachari. The initial period may not show perceptible differences in all. Why? Because one has lead many decades and innumerable past births of 'Abrahmacharya' (incontinence) and only a few months of Brahmacharya. So till then, one has to be patient.

2. The method of proper study is the same for all kinds of subjects, be they spiritual or material. It involves 3 steps:
A. Absorbing the essence of the theoretical aspect
B. Applying it in practice
C. Realizing it.

Unfortunately, application and realization on the practical plane are absent or very scarce in modern education. Hence students find it tough to understand the concept and perform. The only way out would be to learn the practical aspect of the subject (wherever possible) and realize the knowledge in actuality.

Question

In your earlier replies you mentioned that it is best to have dinner at sunset time.
But I heard from a couple of sources, that the scriptures say that one should not eat anything at dawn/desk time(sandhya kala), except when its a must or some emergency and instead spend that time in prayer/Japa/meditation, etc?
What are your thoughts on this advise?
Or is this not applicable to the current age and time?

Answer

Dinner is to be taken just before Sunset, immediately after getting done with spiritual or Yogic practices. Similarly, the Yogi can take some light food, fruit or milk early in the morning if hungry, before or after Yogic practice as per his hunger/convenience. These are the tenets of Yoga. This is also advocated in Ayurveda as propounded by the self-realized God-Sage Dhanavantari.

This applies to all ages and times.

Question
Dhananjay,

Thank you for taking time out to teach many of us the importance of the vital fluid. A quick question. I am on my 5th month and feel great, but had a wetdream lastnight. Do I have to start over in my timeframe of being pure, as if I masturbated/had sex?? Or can I still say to myself, "this is my 5th month" ???

Thank you for your awesome energy,
Mike

Answer
An occasional, involuntary wet dream during sleep is not considered as a break in Brahmacharya. Only voluntary loss of semen in the waking state, carried out under awareness, resets the practice back to start and qualifies to be called a break.

However, it will be very necessary to ensure that one maintains absolute efforts towards Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed while awake, if wet dreams are to reduce and finally disappear. Events in the dreaming state are a pointer of mental thoughts indulged while being awake, either recently or in the past.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

I have a question regarding health benefits of Brahmacharya. I have gastric reflux which has lead to various other ailments. I have tried Brahmacharya in the past for several months and have felt great power and inspiration and has got me to where I want to be in life.

But now it seems this is ruining me slowly month by month it does not go away. As of late over the past six months my efforts at brahmacharya have not been good. I thought I had it under control at about 3 weeks of practice it seemed to be healing but then I reverted back to losing the seed and it is becoming worse.

Can solid and consistent brahmacharya over a long period of time, say 6 months to 1 year along with healthy lifestyle repair the damage and cure this ailment?

Answer
One's present state of existence is a result of one's past karma. The best way to speedily workout past karma and revert to one's default state of bliss is through honest and committed practice of a life of Yoga & unbroken Brahmacharya aimed at self-realization with God-devotion. One should persevere in this path without doubt and without slackening efforts even if there occur breaks initially. With sincere efforts and God's grace, Brahmacharya becomes natural, unbroken and one's default way of life in course of time.

When strong past karma starts to surface whilst being worked out through Brahmacharya, the person finds the going tough and an uphill task. If at such times one gets cowed down by the impediments and succumbs to giving up on Brahmacharya, he loses the one and only opportunity to redeem himself of his karma. Hence one should never give up on this mode of life. One should learn to be calm and face the surfacing karma with a firm resolve through God-devotion and commitment to Brahmacharya. This karma has embedded itself due to one's own past misdeeds and has to be worked out without a choice. The wise man hence does not waste time in postponing the same but gets ready to work it out once and for all and be free of it. Then, all the seeds of past karma (which are the cause of all physical/mental sorrow) slowly start vacating and the 'Jiva' (embodied soul) gets redelivered to its default state of bliss free from pain and finally attains liberation.

One should think of Brahmacharya as one's default lifestyle. It should be made into one's natural state for ever. It is sexuality which is unreal and the opposite of one's default state. Making this into one's lifestyle is a disease. One should first rid oneself of this disease, then all other diseases will pass. Sexuality is an urge for procreation and nothing more. It should not be extended to recreation. If this policy is strictly applied, the greatest strength and peace dawn from within and the body and mind follow with exuberant health. Then, magnificent benefits slowly start trickling in over a period of time. But one should be patient and apply these tenets for life without a break. There is no use if one gets disheartened after following such a life for a few months and not finding drastic benefits. Just as a plant sapling takes time to become a full grown fruit bearing tree, Brahmacharya yields the greatest benefits when practiced for a long time as one's lifestyle.

To the one who has made Brahmacharya his default way of life for ever, who is devoted to the Almighty, who leads a life of purity, virtue, kindness and non-violence, who wishes good to all (including those who wish ill of him) and treats everyone with an equal eye, who checks himself from succumbing to lower traits such as lust, anger, greed, attachment, arrogance and jealousy, to such a person, all physical/mental diseases, abnormalities and sufferings eventually pass. He is assured of reverting to his default state of joy and bliss without a doubt in course of time.

Practice such honest and correct Brahmacharya with a life of Yogic practices through devotion to God. The problem on hand will gradually dissolve. Unbroken Brahmacharya with God-devotion and meditation is the surest way to be rid of all forms of sorrow in this dream called life and reach eternal liberation.

Question
QUESTION: Dear Dhananjay,

My greetings to you and my wishes and prayers to God that atleast you in this world kaliyuga would attain realization in this very birth given your strong conviction to help others in this path.

1) I had resolved to overturn my life from that of porn and masturbation to brahmacharya. For close to 2 months, I maintained brahmacharya. However, last week, I had a sudden uprisal in my mind to seek pleasure. I immediately surfed porn and masturbated multiple times until my whole body went tired. At that point of time, I did not feel any guilt despite my 2 months of brahmacharya.I felt I wanna fantsize everything - widows, teachers,teens and it came like a rush.However, in such incidents, how can I overcome such uprisals? I chanted god's nama but its of no use. Am I a jinxed soul who's karma is such that even calling out to god does not help? When even 2 month's brahmacharya cant bring me through, how can go past a year? Also, I am starting to feel the intense urge to masturbate and am afraid it would progress to real live sex(though I managed to be chaste atleast in the body without touching any woman so far).

2) I am suffering from serious lethargy and laziness that waking up at even 9am is a chore and cannot commit to wake up at 4am. I tried being vegeterian for 2 months but ended up eating alot of rice and it made me fatter.Despite satvic diet, I can still feel the lust in me. How come even 2 months of satvic diet is not helping? Then I might as well become non-veg?

3) Can I still follow brahmacharya while eating non veg? Will it have adverse effects in the mind and body?

4) The shastras says God will come to us when we call him. However, despite calling him when I am lusty, why did he not save me or gave me the intellect? If God is the doer, does it mean he made me masturbate and watch porn?

5) I am seriously concerned to take up tribandha. Do you have any video or book which you can recommend for me to follow?

I apologize if the qns are long winded. But you are my only real,selfless friend without a face next to god in this world who is guiding this sinner in this world of yoga. I cant ask all these qns to my worldy friends. And you are definitely god sent.

I hope you can advice and guide me.

Thank you.

Chinny.

ANSWER: 1. Is it not unreasonable to expect strong sexual Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies) which have embedded over the past millions of births to vacate in a few months time? It takes time, commitment and effort despite falls to progress and finally get established in Brahmacharya. Else, there would have been self-realized souls in every household by the dime and dozen. Some of these past impressions are so strong that the Jiva (embodied soul) needs to undergo the pain of breaks and falls in Brahmacharya to realize of their falsity and give them up. The Jiva at such a stage is not yet convinced of the dangers of recreational sexuality. It still believes and hopes sexuality to be a source of pleasure. It is not yet fully ready for Brahmacharya. Till such a time comes when the Jiva has fully realized the dangers of recreational sexuality and is ready for unbroken practice, and till such a time comes when the body and mind are purged of the very strong sins of past karma, unbroken Brahmacharya does not get established.

Veerya (semen) is God. For God to reside within us, we first need to purify and cleanse the place. God does not wish to reside in a foul and impure body, mind. If we wish to retain our Veerya (God), then we should first turn our body & mind into a beautiful, clean, pure and divine residence for the Lord. Then, he will make it his abode without doubt. Then, this body becomes the greatest temple. Then, Veerya (semen) stays within, without the least urge to go out, for it loves being in this beautiful and divine temple-residence. The more one advances towards purity, the longer Veerya (semen or God) stays within. It becomes 'Soma' and 'Ojas', making the Brahmachari into an Urdhvarethas. It makes him the most splendid, godly and graceful human being, "Atmanyeva Atmana tustaha " --"Content in the self by the self" he becomes, wishing good to everyone, for the souls within other beings are no different from his own self. Finally upon self-realization, he becomes God himself. Till then, strong and honest efforts are to be applied without fail even if there occur breaks. Till one reaches that level of purity, efforts are to be Herculean.

All souls are God himself, hence none are jinxed. But till they strive to realize themselves to be no different from him, God remains out of reach. The more pure one becomes, the more reachable is God. Hence we should persevere to reach him through tireless efforts despite breaks. When one's devotion and commitment to reach him become so strong that one gives up all other objects and one cries with devotion seeking his help, he will respond. It is for us to prove our worthiness and become deserving of the reward.

2. There is no time frame as regards success. It varies from person to person based on one's past karma. Failure only indicates that efforts are not up to the mark. One should persevere till one becomes established. Include wheat products (roti/chapathi) in a veg diet and lessen rice. If efforts are consistent and genuine with devotion to God, the desire to eat meat will eventually fade away.

Gradually advance the morning waking time. One runs out of the path of a speeding car while crossing a road. Why? Because one could get killed. Does one complain of lethargy and laziness at such times? No. Such should be the attitude as regards Brahmacharya. One should stay clear of lust, temptation and other negative traits just like this. Lust and temptation are more dangerous than the speeding car. A man who comes under the wheels of a high speed automobile dies immediately. But lust will kill you slowly and painfully through the whole of life. It is slow and painful death surrounded by indescribable sorrow & agony. Now decide if you want to be lazy and lethargic. One should decide and act on this question.

3. It is best to give up meat. If one still feels the desire and succumbs, then one takes the long, tedious way out - That of giving it up through the experience of suffering. You will eventually give up eating meat as you realize the dangers and after much suffering. Why not strive at it from now and bypass the headache?

4. For God to extend his helping hand, one's calls must be pure, honest and genuine with complete trust and loving devotion. There should not be the trace of the Ego. Then, he extends his hand. How can God respond when one completely forgets God, is more intent on lust and temptation and finally remembers God for namesake at the last moment? If the thought of God was predominant, there could have been no lust. Conversely, when there is no lust, we experience God. Hence once should first strive to make things viable from one's side through effort. Then God can help. How can he help us if we ourselves are not ready to accept his help? So let us first strive to our level best to become pure through right thought, right deed and right lifestyle. Then, God's help trickles in without doubt. If we ourselves are not serious but merely repeat his name mechanically, while the mind roams in the forest of sexuality, God cannot help.

Did you think God was the doer at the time of masturbating and watching porn? No. You thought YOU were the doer and YOU were the enjoyer. YOU were the one who experienced the resulting sensations and not God. Hence you experienced the break. Hence you had to bear the pain. This was the mistake. Think God is the doer and do every action remembering him, as his medium or instrument, as a service to him. Then, you will not be able to watch porn, masturbate or indulge in any wrong deed. As long as one works through the ego considering oneself to be a separate entity and the doer, one has to suffer or enjoy the resulting karma. As soon as one makes oneself neutral, desire-less and ego-less and merely performs one's life duty as directed by God, the results of actions do not affect the person. Then, God being the doer bears the karma and not us. Since God is the doer and not us, the actions of such a man (God's actions) are always right and never wrong. He can never perform even one single wrong action, as he has become a tool in the Almighty's hands (like a painting brush in the hands of the painter). This is what is meant by "God is the doer and not us". When we realize this, our actions, being those of God are always right. If we forget this even for a second, our individual ego re-surfaces and may make us commit wrong actions. Under such conditions, when we ourselves are not ready to remember him and work as his tools, how can HE take the responsibility of what karma we commit? We become all alone then and have to suffer for our misdeeds, for we assumed doership while committing the act goaded by our individual, desire filled ego.

5. For a pictorial representation of performing Mula Bandha, Uddiyana Bandha and Jalandhara Bandha, see the photos at Swami Sivananda's pranayama booklet : http://www.dlshq.org/download/pranayama.htm

When all these three are performed together, it is called Thribandha. It is an excellent tool for Brahmacharya when carried out before Pranayama, Nadi shodhana and meditation.

For descriptions on Thribandha, also see: http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2011/12/thribandha-khechari-

---------- FOLLOW-UP ----------

QUESTION: Dear Friend,

I thank you for the reply. Its indeed insightful and helpful to my predicament.

I have some short follow up queries:

I understand we have to fully surrender to god. But does this mean we have to be like stone with no feeling, no emotions and no plans at all?

How in essence is surrender to god? Can't we have likes and dislikes? Or cant we laugh or cry according to situations?

How can we know for sure what is happening is the will of god? Then where does free will and intellect comes in? Aren't we us who is doing purusharta? If it is self effort that is driving our life, how are we to know we have indeed surrendered and god is doing actions for us? It could be our own self exerted effort right?

Thanks alot.

ANSWER: 1. What is surrender to God? Surrender to God means one makes 'Manava Dharma' (attainment of self-realization) the utmost priority. This aim is the central life purpose of such a man. His mind is forever in the thought of God, trying to work as per the tenets of Dharma (duty) and please the Lord. All other activities are incidental in the life of such a man and not central. He works as per the directions & will of the Almighty with happiness, zest and complete will. He has become a tool of the Almighty. He, as an individual does not exist. He has handed over his body and mind to the Almighty completely. He remains as a witness watching what the Almighty now does with the body and mind without flexing his individual will. Every time his individual Ahamkara (ego) tries to raise its head and assert itself as a separate entity due to past habit, he reminds himself of its falsity and non-existence using his Buddhi shakti (power of intellect) and Viveka (power of inquiry) and negates it. Again, he becomes a witness to what the Lord makes him do without letting his individual ego or desires interfere. This is called 'Sharanagati' (surrender) to God. It leads to the highest bliss and happiness.

Such a man is neither intent on action, nor intent on inaction. He is a neutral witness, fully acceding to the commands of the Almighty. The Almighty might make him a lawyer, doctor, carpenter, fisherman or something else. None of these things matter to him. He will work honestly and sincerely in whatever work destiny assigns him (without being attached to both the work and the outcome of his work) as his token of service to the Almighty. All that matters to him is being in thought of the Almighty by making himself a complete instrument of the Almighty. The only desire in his mind is to attain self-realization and reclaim his lost status of being one with the Almighty itself.

Why is he like this? He is like this because he has come to know that this world is Maya (illusion) projected by the Almighty and not real. Happiness, suffering, excitement, birth, death etc... all these are the effects of Maya and not real. What then is real? The Almighty full of bliss, knowledge and eternal existence is alone real and we are no different from him, being an indivisible part of him. This much is real. Everything else is false. We are that Almighty himself in reality, full of the highest bliss, indestructible, without birth and death, eternal and all pervading. Knowing it to be such, the man who has surrendered himself to the will of the Lord is intent on reclaiming that Supreme state and depart from this limited human state susceptible to pain and suffering.

It is like a king who had forgotten his royalty and became a beggar. Now he has come to know he is not a beggar. He wants to reclaim his kingship and give up being a beggar. So all his mind and energy is focused on reclaiming his lost kingdom. The day to day incidents in his life as a beggar do not matter to him anymore. His eyes are set on the goal of reclaiming his true state - that of a king. Other beggars might ill treat him, rebuke him, insult him or trouble him. But he is not worried and he does not react. Why? Because he is saving and focusing his energies to reclaim that lofty state of a royal monarch. Upon reaching it, none can trouble him anymore. Why then waste time and energy reacting to what others have to say, do or think? He has become wise. The other beggars do not know this. They think their life of beggary is itself everything. They are quarreling among themselves for the pennies and dimes of beggary, having forgotten that they are royal monarchs in reality. People who are attached to the world and its happenings are like the beggars. A man who has surrendered to the Lord and is working for 'mukti' (self-realization) is like the beggar who has come to know of his royal lineage. He no longer worries or gets affected by what happens in his life of beggary. He is working hard and sincerely to get out of his false state of being a beggar (the world) and revert to his real state of kingship (self-realization). He no longer has the mind to get involved in the quarrels which other beggars indulge in, nor does he have the mind to run after the petty pleasures that they crave for from their frugal earnings. His mind is set on something very big. He is calm, silent and very focused. Let people call him names, disregard him or even deprive him of whatever he has. He laughs it all away, for he has come to know who he REALLY is. There is only one thing in his mind, and that is to revert to his true state of kingship. If he achieves this, all his troubles are over for ever.

Now does it matter to him whether he appears like a stone? Does it matter to him whether he exhibits emotions? Does it matter if he has plans? He has the greatest plan! The REAL plan. The plan of attaining to the state of a great king. He is extremely happy and full of joy internally, for soon he will be free from beggary forever and become a sought after king. Who wants emotions, feelings and plans now? All these concerned his earlier, unreal life of beggary and its results. He is shortly going to board a flight which will take him into the heavens of kingship - his true state. He cares a tuppence for those meaningless feelings, emotions and distractions which made him go through pain and sorrow. He has realized that all these were only a part of his imagination in the capacity of a beggar and no way connected with the reality of being a king!

When we start cultivating this tendency viewing life as unreal and God alone as real, we will know it doesn't matter whether we have likes or dislikes. We raise above likes and dislikes. We have no mind for the likes and dislikes of beggary. This is real 'Vairagya' (dispassion) and such a man is the real 'Sanyasi' (renunciate), not one who merely wears orange robes. We now only want the state of oneness with the Lord. As long as we live in this physical body, we get done with the 'Prarabdha' (past karma which will bear fruit in this life) that we have committed, for we cannot leave without settling that account. There are some due's we have to pay. So we pay them. We do not make new karma which will bind us more into this world of beggary. We remain neutral. We perform as per HIS directions, for HE knows everything, while we don't. We remain humble and in tune with his commands, for HE shows the right way to those who surrender to HIM. This is the idea.

3. When man cultivates this habit of being a 'Saakshi' (witness) to happenings of the world with devotion and surrender to God, the will of God flows through him seamlessly. He becomes the perfect tool of God's expression. He then does not have to think much on what he should do or not do. That is taken care by God. His inner voice (of the Atman) guides him accordingly. The only thing he does is to ensure that his individual ego is kept at bay and not allowed to indulge in wrong activities which take him way from his quest for self-realization. He constantly reminds himself of the falsity of the ego/mind and reality of the ever pure Atman. His efforts are in the direction of whatever it takes to help him reach self-realization and never the opposite.

Let God give him any occupation, any work or any kind of activity in the course of destiny. He does all these sincerely to please God, for destiny is also the will of God. But he is never involved in any worldly activity heart of hearts. His involvement in the world is only to the extent of an actor acting in a drama. Just as an actor does not get angry in real life because some character in the drama insulted him, the Yogi does not let the happenings or non-happenings in the drama called life to affect his true state. His heart is always with the Lord, thinking and contemplating on HIM. Based on one's 'Prarabdha' (past actions which will bear fruit in this life) and his own will, the Lord creates certain life situations and experiences which one calls destiny. The Yogi goes through these life situations in this drama called life calmly and dispassionately, like an actor, without being affected, for it is only a drama. He knows he has to settle his past karma and its due's, for that is the law of nature. So be it. He is assured of liberation into eternal bliss once these are over if his efforts at self-realization through Yoga & Brahmacharya are honest and sincere.

A Horse is tied to a pole with a length of rope. It cannot move beyond the length of the rope. It can travel within this span and not more. The pole is God, the distance from the pole to the end of the rope is one's freewill and man is the horse. Like the horse, one cannot go beyond the rope's length. The pole (God) will not let it happen. The small distance that the horse can travel within this length appears to be one's freewill. When one is under the grip of ignorance, the horse (man) is at the far end of the rope and thinks he can move anywhere (do anything). As he starts gaining knowledge of the self (Atman), the rope winds itself around the pole and he comes closer to the pole (God). The freewill is now replaced to a larger extent by God's will. Upon Kaivalya (self-realization), the rope has fully wound itself around the pole (God) and the horse has become one with the pole. Then there is no freewill. Freewill and God's will have merged into one another in entirety. Horse and pole have become one. Man has united with God.

Till this happens, the apparent, limited freewill has to be utilized to perform proper actions which do not bind one to karma. One should be very careful about how one uses this limited freewill, lest it becomes an impediment to getting free from the life of beggary as described earlier. So the wise man never lets his ego interfere in deciding the course of his actions (for it is the ego with its desires which makes man go astray) but stays neutral in adapting God's will. With practice and advancement in spirituality, one will know the will of God without trouble. It becomes easy to decide on what action is to be employed and what is to be avoided, for one is in constant communion with the universal Almighty through a pure life and meditation. The mind of such a man slowly becomes a mirror of the mind of the Almighty. In reality, there was never any freewill. It appeared as though the horse could move around the pole to some extent, but even the length of this rope and its movement was always governed by God, unknown to the horse (man) . That is why this world is the Lord's Leela (divine play). He decides everything. The wise man realizes this and aligns his will with the will of the Lord. The foolish, egoistic man thinks himself to be the doer and ends up tired with much karma, for the horse cannot move beyond the span of the rope. None can go against the Lord's will.

At times when one may be in doubt or confused as to the path of action to be adopted, one should try to do that which is right, virtuous, honorable and proper. This is why one should follow a life of Yama-Niyama in Yoga. It helps man to choose the correct path. He will not adopt wrong means to solve any problem and is thus spared of sin. The intellect is made use of to put down the individual Ahamkara (ego) and nothing more. If this much is done, everything slowly starts falling into place. The Almighty being the real doer will guide and lead the Yogi in the correct direction. Life becomes free from stress, strain, anxiety and duress, for we accept the will of God and work within that boundary and do not exert the will of our false ego which is the harbinger of pain. This is the essence of true 'Sharanagati' (surrender).

Self effort in the direction shown by destiny and governed by the tenets of Dharma is to be complete from our side but without the employment of ego & desire . Such a man partakes in worldly action merely out of necessity but is not involved from within. He does these actions as service to God and not out of personal desire or ambition. He applies efforts in the direction provided by destiny and then watches silently as a witness. Bound to the outcome of his actions he is not. The only thing of interest for him is to attain self-realization and become one with the Almighty. The world is a passing spectacle and not of any interest to him, except for being a field where he works out his 'Prarabdha'. He is not affected by the success or failure of his actions for he has given his best effort dispassionately. The rest is left to God. Based on one's past karma and HIS own will, God will decide on success or failure, not the Yogi. Since the Lord has been accepted as the doer, the man is only the medium and hence not connected to the fruits.

This attitude is beautifully described by Lord Krishna:
"Content with what comes through chance, free from the pairs of opposite emotions and envy, even-minded in success and failure, though acting he is not bound".
-- Chapter IV/22 - The Bhagavad Gita

This leads to accomplishment of the 4 'Purushaartha-s' (aims of man) within his destiny. It should be noted that only that within one's 'vidhi' (destiny - as decreed by the Lord and one's past karma) will come to one and not more. The first three of these Purushaartha-s (Dharma [as in career], artha [wealth], kama [desire]) will be realized to be impermanent after being sated to a certain extent and only the fourth 'Moksha' (liberation) will be realized as being eternal. This is the law of the Almighty. None can go against the same.

Hence our self effort must be full as regards to the performance of those actions which lead to virtue and good within the framework of destiny, but without attachment for the fruits. Such actions are called by the Lord as 'Yagnya' (sacrifice). They do not bind the Jiva with karma as they are done with mediumship and not doership. When our efforts in this direction carried out without the backing of the ego are sustaining, the Lord points out the right direction in which we have to persevere. Then, the fine line and fine difference between one's individual will and God's will become apparent as one proceeds spiritually in the right direction. Ultimately, the individual will merges into the will of the Almighty. For this reason also, one should practice Yoga & Brahmacharya, for right thinking and right knowledge of action dawn upon purification of the body and mind through Yoga & Brahmacharya. A polluted mind high on Asath (unreality) backed by Maya (illusion) is incapable of taking the right decision. The same mind becomes able to decide right upon being purified in the fire of knowledge that dawns from a life of Yoga, Brahmacharya, virtue and purity. The Yama-Niyama-s of Raja Yoga have been devised for this very purpose.

QUESTION: Dear Dhananjay,

I appreciate your great guidance. However, I wish to clarify on some items:

1)You mentioned that in reality there is no free will and god decides the movement and the length of the rope in the horse and pole example? If this world is God's leela, then isn't he doing everything? Even when I am indulging in evil activities, isn't that god working through me?

2) I have personally felt very suicidal at certain points in my brahmacharya. How can these overwhelming suicidal feelings be overcome? Is there a case where it is one's prarabdha karma to suicide in this birth? And what are the consequences of suicide? Will god give me a better life somewhere else and end my worries and depression?

3) For a yogi, you mentioned one should follow ahimsa. However what if one's loved ones are in imminent danger from a robber or something? Cant I use violence to overpower him? And if we follow ahimsa, wont we appear meek and get easily bullied over time? There are stories where even incarnations like durga have used himsa to destroy evil. Cant we mere human beings use violence to attack evil when the need arises, especially when one's honour and life is in danger.

4)Some of my vegeterian friends (who happen to be from brahmins) partake in drinking beer, saying its vegeterian and not made of meat? Also, they say that its ok to partake alcohol(wine,beer) as long it does not affect the senses and keeps you alert. Also, it happens so that wine,beer relaxes the body and is a social lubricant.And they say it is ok to drink as long it does not makes you commit immoral activites. How can a yogi counter argue such smart points which comes from brahmins who have an heritage of strict discipline?

I apologize if my qns are long winded. But I am checking your postings almost everyday as it gives me wonderful guidance to change my lifestyle to a yogi gradually.

Thank you in advance for your self-less guidance.

Answer

1. God remains silent & lets the Jivatma (embodied soul) indulge in negative activity when the Samskaras (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies) within it for such actions are so strong that it cannot be made to realize the fallacy of these wrong actions without committing them and then undergoing the punishment for the sin. The force of these past impressions and clinging to Avidya (ignorance) in such cases in so dense that there is no other way out but to learn them through suffering.

A teacher warns the student not to copy in the exam reminding him it is wrong. What will happen if the student still persists in the act believing it will help him score well? The teacher remains silent and the student is finally caught copying by an invigilator and debarred for a year. The pain of losing a year makes him realize his mistake and prevents him from repeating it again. The teacher is God, the act of copying is because of the Samskara-a (impressions) & Vasana-s (tendencies) and the student is man. We cannot say the teacher induced the student to copy by remaining silent. He had warned him earlier. The act of copying was the result of the student's ignorance and hence he had to pay for it. The teacher does not suffer in any way, nor is he responsible. When the impressions within are so strong that one is not willing to learn things the easy way through the inner voice of the Atman or external advice, God makes us learn things the hard way. This does not mean God makes us do these things. It only means that we ourselves are in such a state that there is no other way for us to rectify ourselves but through committing the act and learning through the pain of resulting suffering.

2. A person who contemplates/tries or commits suicide incurs terrible karma which will need many future births of agonizing pain and suffering to overcome. This body has been given by God to progress towards self-realization. A person who commits suicide tries to superimpose his individual will/ego on the will of God and plans to go against the wish of God by terminating his existence. He indulges in the greatest form of Himsa (violence) towards his own body which has been loaned to him by God. He will have to pay very dearly and through extreme pain in many, many future births for this act of indiscretion. He will find himself in a much worse state in the next birth with much more negative karma. Hence one should never contemplate on suicide . It is an act of escapism which will lead to great suffering and agony in the coming births. One should face life bravely and squarely taking it to be a drama and not get cowed down by the highs and lows.

3. One should develop complete trust and surrender to God and never willfully indulge in any form of Himsa (violence) in thought, word or deed. Such action will bring the best results. If a robber commits a crime, he will have to pay for it without doubt. If we stoop to his level and indulge in violence to counter his attack, then we too commit karma and will have to bear the consequences. There would then be no difference between us and the robber. The correct method is hence not to resort to physical violence but to cleverly tackle the matter using the wisdom & intellect (such as taking recourse to law) under such circumstances. If one becomes unable to stop the crime using such measures, then the best course of action is to go through the incident silently without reacting with physical violence. God being the director of this drama called life will eventually punish all those who deserve punishment either through the arm of law or through life circumstances . It is not for us to take up this job, nor impose our will.

An incident from the life of the great, self-realized sage 'Bhagavan Ramana Maharishi' should be mentioned here. In 1924, at the 'Ramanashram' in Thiruvannamalai (Tamilnadu-INDIA), robbers broke into the ashram to commit a burglary. Upon vandalizing the place, they were unable to find anything of value. Angered by the same, they started hitting and injuring Bhagavan Ramana with stones and sticks. Shri. Ramana repeatedly told them to leave as there was nothing of value but the ruffians did not heed to his advice. When they were done with venting their anger, Shri. Ramana exhibiting his greatness, nobility and forgiving nature offered them food to eat and water to drink before they left. A year later, the same band of robbers were caught committing an offence elsewhere and hanged to death by the law. This was the fate they met with further to their wrong acts and further to harming a Yogi who was established in 'Ahimsa' (non-violence).

When a man establishes himself in 'Ahimsa' and surrenders to the Almighty, a great deal of strength and power start to adorn him. Such a man does not impose his individual will/ego on any creature. He does not knowingly harm any other sentient being, for he see's his own self (Atman) within all other beings. He forgives the misdeeds of others knowing it all to be the play of 'Avidya' (ignorance) effected through Maya (illusion). Then a very powerful and mighty reaction gets set in the cosmos. Those who harm such noble sages are severely punished by the Almighty without doubt when their time comes. God being the director of this drama called life see's to it that no bad action goes unpunished. The wise man does not interfere in the same. He stays fixed to his ideals and devoted to God through complete love and surrender.

Goddess Durga is an incarnation of the Almighty. God himself is effecting HIS will through her. This is alright, for HE knows what is to be done and what is to be not. If we try to do the same in our personal capacity, then we are effecting OUR individual will (of the ego) and not HIS will. This is to be avoided as it is incorrect. Hence we should not resort to violence in thought, word or deed but fully surrender to him with trust. HE will take care of such a devotee without doubt.

4. Indulging in any vice be it alcohol, tobacco, drugs, gambling, overeating etc.. and acts such as immorality, stealing, telling lies, harming others (in mind or body), attachment, greed, arrogance and jealousy will lead to degeneration and become the cause of more 'Avidya' (ignorance). Drinking any form of alcohol is a sense enjoyment which leads to the increase of Tamas (inertia). One who is Tamasic is unfit to progress towards 'Brahma-Gnyana' (knowledge of the self). An increase of Tamas leads to an increase in desire, passion, lethargy, stupor and other negative traits. Such a man eventually becomes addicted to the sense pleasure derived from drinking and loses interest in pursuing the very purpose of the human birth namely 'Moksha' (liberation). His 'Sthula Sharira' (physical body) gets afflicted with various diseases in course of time further to alcoholism. His 'Linga sharira' (mental body) becomes attached to the sensation derived from consuming alcohol making his mind weak, lustful, lethargic and bereft of focus. His 'Karana Sharira' (causal body) becomes dense with the karma generated from such sense stimulation (for he has indulged in Himsa against the body given by the almighty) and hence becomes unfit for self-realization. He will have to spend many births to merely overcome this tendency.

Who is a 'Brahmana' (Brahmin)? One who is striving for 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) through 'Indriya-Nigraha' (control of the mind & senses), Brahmacharya (continence), Bhakti (devotion to the almighty), 'Shaucha' (internal and external cleanliness), 'Tapas' (austerity), 'Svadhyaya' (study of the scriptures) and 'Nidhidhyasana' (meditation on the Supreme by making use of such knowledge derived from study) is alone a 'Brahmana' (Brahmin) and not merely one who is born to Brahmin parents or who wears a sacred thread. Unless these activities are inculcated and applied in practice, one does not become a Brahmin. Such a man is a Brahmin by birth and not in action. He is of no use to himself or to the society.

None of these above activities can be carried out properly by the man who is a slave to the senses (alcohol is a very strong sense stimulant). A drinker causes Himsa to his own body & mind given to him by God. He deviates from the path of 'Brahmanism' by misdirecting his life energy to sating his senses while his duty is to direct it towards self-realization. Hence arguments supporting alcoholism or any other sense addictions do not hold water. They are baseless. Such arguments are the result of a mind colored by 'Maya'(illusion) and not that of an intellect and mind powered by 'Vidya' (knowledge) and 'Viveka' (wisdom). Brahminical heritage must be respected, upheld and made a model to the entire world by strict practice of the tenets supporting it and not merely by birth as Brahmins. Such a man who is a Brahmin merely by birth and not in action is no Brahmin at all but a disgrace to the great heritage of Brahmanism.

Question

Sir, Does long term celibacy can remove old pitted scars ocur due to disease?

Answer

After the Yogi acquires the 'Divya Sharira' (Divine body purified through 'Yogaagni' [fire of Yoga] upon entering Nirvikalpa Samadhi), his body gets fully purified and free from all debility and decay. On attaining to this stage, the body is blessed with perfect health free from all abnormalities. Since the possibility for the removal of all sorts of imperfections in the body dawns at this stage, the possibility of removal of scars also exists.

In the Yoga Darshana , Sage Pathanjali sums up the state of 'Divya Sharira' with the following words:

"Rupa, lavanya, bala, vajrasamhananatvaani Kaya sampath "

--" Beauty, fine complexion, strength and adamantine toughness involve the perfect (divine) body" -- Yoga Darshana, Vibhuti Pada, Verse - 47

Such a body is acquired by the Yogi on mastering the 'Pancha mahabhutas' (five elements: space, air, fire, water and earth) though Samyama, leading to 'Bhuta-siddhi' after Nirvikalpa or Nirbija samadhi. Exquisite beauty and grace radiate from such a Yogi further to the removal of karma-s which were responsible for their obstruction.

However, whether deep scars/pit marks completely disappear will vary from person to person depending on the strength of karma responsible for their occurance and the will of the Almighty. This body is the medium created by him and HE alone decides its future course.

Question

Sir, Any specefic underwear-brief for success in Brahmacharya? I presently use boxer briefs but do not find them supporting.

Answer

The best male undergarment for excellent Brahmacharya leading to great strength, power, health, well being, energy and confidence is the KAUPIN (loin cloth) also called LANGOT [in Hindi], KONAKAM, KOVANAM [in Tamil], LANGOTI [in Kannada and Telugu]. Words cannot describe the multitudinous benefits one gets from wearing the 'Kaupin'. The overall benefit for the male wearing this simple and yet extremely health promoting traditional underwear cannot be stressed enough. It is a must for all men wishing health and strength and especially the Brahmachari striving to conserve his semen and get free from sense stimulation.

Ordinary underwear (brief) fits like a bag or covering around the buttocks and the genital region. It is held in place using a rubber-elastic. The very design of the ordinary brief is incorrrect, unscientific and completely useless in serving the purpose it is meant to serve. The main purposes of the genital undergarment in the male are as follows:

1. To cup and firmly support the male gonads or testicles (within the scrotal sac) firmly in integration with the body and prevent them from shaking.
2. To hold the penis (urinary organ) in a stationary position and prevent it from shaking.

These two requirements are very important to ensure conservation of energy and for the optimum health of the genito-urinary system. It is a well known fact that not wearing any undergarment results in shaking of the penis and testes which leads to immense loss of energy and genital problems. When the penis and testes are held firmly in place and supported correctly using the 'Kaupin', the nerves leading to these organs are releived of stress which otherwise results if not wearing a supporting undergarment or by wearing the ordinary brief (which does not hold the testes and penis firm but lets them hang & sag). If the testes are not cupped firmly in place, the 'spermatic cord' (which holds the testes in the scrotum) gets loaded and eventually stretches. This leads to complications with much pain.

The ordinary brief is merely held around the waist by the use of an elastic and offers very little/inadequate support to the testes and penis. It is extremely important for the penis and the testes to be in integral motion with the lower abdomen/body and not indulge in independent movement during activities such as walking, running, exercising etc... If such movement (shaking) of the penis and testicles were let to happen, it firstly leads to loss of Prana (vital energy), secondly strains the nerves leading to these organs/glands and finally causes strain on the spermatic cord. It has been well documented that such shaking and inadequate support is one of the causes of a host of abdominal/sexual/genital problems (such as Hydrocele, Hernia etc..) in later years. Use of the 'Kaupin' completely erases such possibilities and promotes excellent health and strength. Also, the firm waist band of the 'Kaupin' supports the lower abdomen and diaphragm from excessive strain, thereby greatly reducing the chances of abdominal problems.

To the Brahmachari, the benefits extend further. When there is a sexual stimulus, the mind sends sexual signals to the reproductive glands and these respond with arousal. This arousal then results in the transmission of further signals back to the brain and the circuit gets completed, leading to repitition of the cycle leading to more arousal and finally the expulsion of semen. In the presence of the 'Kaupin' which firmly cups and hold the genitals together, the physical organs cannot respond with much arousal. Hence the circuit is not completed. This offers the Brahmachari a better chance and more time to compose himself and negate lust by displacing lustful thoughts and replacing them with other thoughts. In the absence of the 'Kaupin' and the presence of the normal western underwear, the penis immediately starts to get erect under such conditions (as the brief cannot prevent an erection) and the circuit gets completed leading to acceleration of the sex stimulus. Also, accidental touch or contact of the hands with the penis/scrotum while wearing western briefs poses a strong possibility of sexual stimulation/arousal leading to loss of semen. In case of the 'Kaupin', this possibility is ruled out as accidental touch does not cause such a reaction (the sex organs being held firmly together and without the chance for erection are less prone to stimulation through touch).

Once a Brahmachari uses the 'Kaupin', he will never go back to ordinary briefs. The 'Kaupin' is a must for the Yogi/Brahmachari. It helps get free of wet dreams faster. The confidence, strength, power and well being one experiences from this traditional undergarment is such that one feels very unhappy to wear briefs after trying the 'Kaupin' for a month or so. In men who wear the 'Kaupin', genital/hernial problems are practically unheard of. A variation of what we call 'Kaupin' in India is called as 'Fundoshi' in Japan. It is the traditional undergarment of the Japanese. The Japanese have made good use of its benefits and to this day continue to reap the merits. The 'Kaupin' has been the traditional and preferred undergarment of the ancient Indian Yogis and Rishi's who lead very healthy lives. They used to meditate wearing nothing but the 'Kaupin' as a mark of detachment. The modern brief was unheard of until a century ago even as regards the common man. Parallely, the modern genital/abdominal problems encountered by men were also unheard of a century ago when everyone in India wore the 'Kaupin' by default.

During the practice of Yogic asana-s and Bandha-s much force and pressure is exerted in the abdomen. The 'Kaupin' works well in handling this pressure without trouble. Meditation becomes easier when the genitals are firm in place using the 'Kaupin'. Wearing the 'Kaupin' helps develop Vairagya (dispassion). It becomes easier to raise the 'Kundalini Shakthi' in the Muladhara Chakra to higher planes and enter Samadhi. All great, realized masters wore no other undergarment but the 'Kaupin'.

The realized sage Shri. Shankaracharya while praising the 'Kaupin' says:
"Kaupinavanthaha Khalu Bhagyavanthaha "
-- "Fortunate is he who wears the Kaupin" (having detached himself from the world)

The 'Kaupin' is easy to make and very cost effective. All it requires is two pieces of cotton cloth stitched together in the form of a 'T' shape. The horizontal bar of the 'T' is then tied around the right of the waist (using a single loop knot with two free ends) as a waist-band and the tail of the 'T' (which originates from the back) is passed under the buttocks, genitals, made to pass through the front of the band, pulled down once again cupping the genitals firm, making it pass under the buttocks and reach the back of the waist band from where it originated. It is now tucked deep into the waist-band (at the back) and held in place using an ordinary metal 'paper-clip' (used to hold sheets of paper together) to prevent loosening at the back. Unlike western briefs, the 'Kaupin' can be tightened as much as one wants and to one's comfort, leading to the perfect fit (should be moderately tight but not too tight). Since it is held in place at three pints (front waist, groin and back of waist), the forces are perfectly distributed to cup and support the genitals. This is very correct and the best scientific design (unlike western briefs which have only one support at the waist and the rest remains loose and hanging).

The 'Kaupin' can also be made using a triangular piece of cloth (as seen in the video used by traditional Indian wrestlers or 'Pahalwans') with waist bands at the sides and a tail. The following video which I happened to come by on youtube will be useful in learning how to tie the 'Kaupin'. (Tie the waist knot on the right side of the hip and not in the center under the navel as shown in the video). Link: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=W6jL-eZtKCI&feature=related.

Care should be ensured that only pure cotton cloth is made use of to make the 'Kaupin' and not synthetics. Cotton being cooling and absorbent does good to the genital area. The 'Kaupin' should be removed while sleeping (especially at night) to ensure that the penis gets full and unconstricted flow of blood. Dimensions of the cloth to be used for making a T-shaped 'Yogic-Kaupin' for those interested are given below

Cloth cutting Dimensions:

1. TOP of the T (waist-band) : 2.5 INCHES wide and 57 INCHES LONG (for a waist of 34 INCHES)
2. TAIL of the T (which cups around the genitals twice): 10 INCHES wide and 50 INCHES long.

The rectangular tail is stitched perpendicular (at right angles) to the exact center of the waist band. The final garment will be slightly smaller than the above mentioned dimensions further to incorporating a piping (at the edges) by the tailor and shrinkage after wash. A meter and half of cotton cloth generally gives three such 'Kaupins'.

After a few days of use, one becomes so comfortable and in tune with the 'Kaupin' that one forgets he is wearing it, being hardly aware. It becomes so much a part of the body and one's lifestyle that one cannot do without it. One then realizes that the western brief feels very inadequate. These observations I make, on personal experience and further to many years of using the 'Kaupin'.

Question
Hello sir

I'm a 22 years old french young man and i would like to thank you a thousand times for the information you bring on the internet. It is so meaningful to me that i printed the book on brahmacharya and i read a little bit of it every day. You have to imagine that where i live, in France, there is no information at all about the semen energy and the consequences of lust. Altough i realised a few years ago that semen loss was very tiring and that relationships with women were very nocives for mind and body, also very degradant spiritually, things weren't as clear as they were now after reading Swami sivananda's book.
So thank you one more time.

Since my childhood i have a major interest in spirituality, i studied buddhism, power of tought, and i am involved in a very serious process of self-purification and healing since i am 19. This resulted in the healing of my eye-sight.

What i want to say is that i'm now sure that i want to live a spiritual life and reach the higher state possible for me, and consequently, i was thinking to go on a travel or to go living somewhere i could find the presence of spiritual masters, people of great spiritual achievment so i could learn from them and enjoy their enriching presence.

So there is my question, have you ever been or hear talking of such places/people?
Would you give me some advices on where to go if i wanted to realise a spiritual travel?

Sincerely
Yann

Answer
"When one is ready, the 'Guru' (master) comes".

As and when the inner process of purification advances, the Brahmachari is assured of the right degree of knowledge by the Grace of God. Our's is only to try and persevere in the right direction through honest effort and Sadhana (practice). When one is ready from within to receive the grace of a spiritual master, God sends forth such a master. Sometimes, God himself directs and guides the aspirant through intuition or while in meditation. As and when the time becomes right, things happen on their own accord.

It is not mandatory to have a Guru in flesh and blood. If one strives hard & rests one's faith on any one of the self-realized sages taking them to be a Guru, their grace and blessings eventually shine forth. Realized sages do not bless, guide and accept any random person as a disciple. One has to prove one's merit and worthiness to receive their grace. There must be honesty, love, surrender and complete devotion for attaining self-realization from within. One's attitude should be - "There is nothing more important to me in this existence other than attaining to self-realization. This body, mind, emotions...nothing matter. Reaching that Supreme state alone matters. For this, I shall be ready for any sacrifice and any amount of effort. Let what happens happen. Nothing will dampen by efforts away from this quest". Then, after many tests & trials, one gets a Guru by the grace of God or God himself guides.

Only a self-realized soul can become a Guru. Others cannot be called a Guru or become Guru-s. The Guru is the personification of God on the Earthly plane. Having attained to liberation and having dissolved his individuality & ego, he has become one with the Brahman (Almighty). A self-realized master is none other than God himself in flesh and blood, so say the scriptures:-

।। गुरुब्रह्म, गुरुविश्णुहु. गुरुदेवो महेश्वरह।

गुरुसाक्षात परब्रह्म. तस्मै श्री गुरवेनमह ।।

|| The Guru (master) himself is the Trinity (the Gods Brahma [creator], Vishnu [maintainer] and Maheshwara [destroyer])|
The Guru is the personification of the 'Parabrahman' (Almighty). I bow to that auspicious Guru with devotion and humility ||

He is a 'Sarvagnya' (all knowing), and hence knows the problem of the disciple even before it is expressed. He knows the exact path which is required for the spiritual progress of the particular disciple towards liberation. He see's the past karma-s, present state and future of the disciple as one see's a photograph. Such is the power and ability that are within his reach. Only a self-realized being has complete and unhindered access to such knowledge. He has 'Thrikaala Gnyana' (knowledge of the past, present and future of the whole world including the disciple, being in a state of merger with the Almighty). He does not have expectations of materialistic things such as name, fame, flattery or money from the disciple or from the world. He is completely self-sufficient and self-content. He is selfless and wishes nothing but good for the disciple, for he see's the same 'Atman' (self) everywhere, in all beings.

But he will expect unfailing devotion, surrender, faith and an insatiable hunger from the disciple for the attainment of self-realization. He will test a person severely for worthiness before accepting him as his disciple. If such qualities exist in one and there is cent percent honesty and dedication to the objective, the Guru comes. When one has reached this state where one wants nothing else except self-realization and is ready, the Guru comes. Only the very fortunate who have proven their genuineness get blessed with a Guru by God. Others have to strive further till they are ready to receive and attract a Guru.

Swami Sivananda is a realized sage. Since you are influenced by his writings and find them appealing, keep a photo of Swami Sivananda with you, pray to him for guidance and knowledge to reach God through spirituality. At times of difficualty or when tempted by the senses, mentally think of him asking him for help. One who is searching for a Guru can do this as regards to any self-realized sage whom one finds appealing or connecting with. If the disciple proves himself honest and deserving of guidance, realized souls send forth their help from the cosmos through knowledge and assistance. But one should have genuine intentions and an unbreakable tenacity for attaining liberation. Then, the Guru comes.

The best place to travel is into one's own pure consciousness by meditation on the Atman (self) through Samadhi (super-consciousness). This is the greatest pilgrimage and the most sought after deity, this Lord who rests within us as the Atman (self). Realizing ourselves as no different from HIM is the greatest accomplishment.

Till then, continue with spiritual practice through the concept of Yoga and Brahmacharya as has been explained in past answers. Read each and every past answer from the profile page to get clear with the path. By the grace and blessings of the Almighty Lord, all things happen at the right time. HE is watching each and every action of ours and knows all. It is for us to prove our deserving, following which HIS grace shines forth either directly or through a Guru.

Question
QUESTION: hi dhananjay,

hope you are doing fine, i have a doubt regarding first year of brahmacharya, i read some where that during the first year of brahmacharya the person should compulsorily wake up at 4am if not he will not attain self-realisation, i cant understand why the person said so and plz you can shed some light on this, can you please guide us...

Ganapathi.

ANSWER: One should always wake up so as to perform Yogic practices (Asana, Bandha, Pranayama & Meditation) at 'Brahmimuhurtham' (between 3.00 A.M -5.30 A.M). During this period, the Pineal gland within the brain produces the hormone 'Melatonin'. The Pituitary gland produces a hormone called as 'A.C.T.H' (Adreno-cortico-tropic hormone). Both these hormones are in plenty during this period.

If one were to indulge in Yogic practices and meditation in this period:

1. 'Melatonin' is taken into the blood and absorbed by the gonads (male testes/female ovaries), thereby inhibiting the development of lust, passion and sexual agitation. This makes it possible for the person to maintain a tranquil and serene state of mind throughout the day, thereby supporting easy movement into higher planes of consciousness during meditation.

2. 'A.C.T.H' is taken into the blood and in turn stimulates the adrenal glands to produce sufficient amounts of 'Adrenalin'. The right amount of Adrenalin helps man maintain energy and vigor through the day for activities such as work or meditation.

If one were to sleep during this time and wake up after 5.30 A.M, these secretions are wasted (as the body is inert in sleep) and absorption of these hormones does not occur. These hormones then descend into the sexual area (since they were not absorbed) and stimulate anger, irritation and sexual tendencies. Finally, the hormones are burnt up and the remaining thrown out through expenditure of the sexual fluid in man through voluntary or involuntary means and during menstruation in women. This is one of the reasons why people who wake up late find it impossible to retain their sexual fluid for long. Such people who miss the absorption of these two hormones by waking up late become prone to loss of the vital fluid, start ageing fast and loose their health and vitality as they near midlife. They find themselves unable to work with energy through the day. Fatigue, weakness and loss of vigor soon follow.

For this reason, ancient Yogis, Rishis and saints always woke up early to catch the 'Brahmimuhurtham' without fail. This gave them a healthy, long life and ample scope to attain great heights spiritually through the attainment of 'Samadhi' (super-consciousness). They were able to proceed towards self-realization speedily. The same principle is followed by Buddhists (It is mandatory for Buddhist monks to rise at 2.45 A.M in Buddhist-Zen monasteries in Tibet and sit for meditation by 3.00 A.M).

Those who wake up during this period and meditate, quickly develop natural Brahmacharya, reduce ageing to the minimum and become blessed with much energy of the mind and body. One stays cheerful, full of energy and free from fatigue through the course of the day. The tendency for lustful thoughts reduces greatly as the mind stays 'sathwic' and pure.
The vibrations in the atmosphere at this period of time are most suitable to awaken 'Kundalini' and direct 'Prana' (vital energy) into the 'Sushumna Naadi' within the spine to help attain 'Samadhi' (super-consciousness) to help reach Kaivalya (self-realization). Since the world is asleep in this period, the mental vibrations of desire, anger, greed, attachment, arrogance, jealousy etc.. which otherwise inundate the space around us are subdued or almost absent. The cosmos is filled with divine, pure and virtuous vibrations at this time. It becomes easy to meditate and merge into the Supreme Brahman. This is why it is called as 'Brahmimuhurtham' (Brahmi - 'Brahman' or Almighty, Muhurtham - time -- "The time when the vibrations of the Almighty Brahman are at their maximum).

Anyone who follows this routine even for a month will realize its immense benefits through experience. Then, one will feel unhappy and at a loss if one were to wake up late. One should go to bed by 9.00~9.30 P.M at night to help wake up early. Waking up at this time is not only to be applied during the first year of Brahmacharya but throughout life and forever without fail. The benefits that follow are priceless and cannot be quantified.

QUESTION: hi dhananjay,

a very hearty thanks for clearing my doubt and i have one more query i.e. if the people are working in night shift and they get some time to practice at office premises then are the effects as same to that we do at home or the vibrations in our home vary from office even though we are following the same routine, at last what is you suggestion for the people working in night shifts who have a deep longing to practice brahmacharya.

have a nice day,
Ganapathi

Answer

1. It is preferable to indulge in Yogic practice at home, everyday, in the same place set aside. However, one can practice at any place such the workplace as long as there is privacy, for it is better to indulge in practice than miss practice. These practices are not to be done in front of people but only in seclusion. The journey to self-realization is a private and very secret relationship between man and God. It should not be shared, described, performed or broadcast to the public/other people. The experiences one undergoes are not to be spoken of with people who cannot understand or are not connected with the practice, for this invariably leads to obstacles and impediments.

2. For people working night shifts, it is suggested that they indulge in Yogic practices twice a day like all others but at ANY TWO of the four 'Sandhi Kaala-s' (Before Sunrise, At 12.00 P.M mid-day, at Sunset and at mid-night 12.00 A.M) convenient to them. If they are working at night, they can opt for mid-day and Sunset practice etc... as per their convenience. If the practice of Brahmacharya and Yoga is sincere and genuine with devotion and love for God, God will undoubtedly relieve them of the stress of a night shift in course of time by arranging for a day job or reducing commitment/responsibility. This is the truth and beyond doubt. One need not have the least doubt about this. God always makes things easy for the genuine devotee in course of time so as to help him proceed towards self-realization. But the devotion and sincerity should be very real.

The initial period of Yoga and unbroken Brahmacharya (especially the first 2 years) involve many challenges. One's patience, devotion and sincerity are severely tested by God. Sometimes it may appear as though it is impossible to continue. Diseases/illnesses may crop up when past karma surfaces (when the conserved semen pushes out bad karma during evacuation). The task appears very uphill and strenuous. This is when most people give up. This is the initial screening set up by God to filter undeserving/non-serious aspirants. Those who are not genuine quit the practice at this stage. They decide Brahmacharya is not for them.

Only the chosen few who are intent on eating the fruit of Brahmacharya for self-realization continue despite all problems. They alone pass the tough screening process set up by the divine power, for God lets only the very deserving to continue. On the one hand HE sets up tests and on the other hand HE HIMSELF helps the sincere devotee pass these tests. Isn't the 'Leela' (divine play) of God complex and magnificent? Who can understand his ways and mysterious actions? We can only cry and marvel at his immense power and control.

One's attitude should be - "Let what happens happen. I shall not give up the practice of Brahmacharya even if it involves much sacrifice. I shall not get cowed down by the obstacles which come in the way even in the worst scenario. I shall make any sacrifice for attaining to self-realization. Even if I loose all the worldly things, give up on Brahmacharya and faith in God I shall not. Even if many obstacles and problems arise in this quest, this body and mind, I offer as a token of my love for HIM."

When Brahmacharya and desire for God-realization are fueled by such genuine, honest and innocent feelings, God comes at the last moment, even in the tests and trials and sets things right. One should trust God and love him with the innocence of a child. There will never be even one single voluntary break if such feelings exist. But even to think like this, HIS grace/blessings are mandatory. The Brahmachari may not see him with these naked eyes, but one can undoubtedly FEEL HIS presence at such times, saving the aspirant from danger and peril, showing him the right way out and standing by him like a father stands by the son. HIS intention was never to cause us trouble. It was only to test our authenticity and help us clear our past karma. HE gave us a test and as soon as we proved our sincerity, HE HIMSELF solved the test for us. What can we say about this Supreme being...This wonder of wonders called the 'Parabrahman'? We can only shed tears of devotion, not finding words to express the thousand feelings for HIM which arise from within.

Finally, I end with these few quotes glorifying HIS greatness, describing this indescribable Lord of Lords:

" The Lord supports this universe, which consists of a combination of the perishable and the imperishable, the manifest and the unmanifest. As long as the Jiva (self) does not know the Lord, it gets attached to worldly pleasures, and is bound; but when it knows HIM, all fetters fall away and it is released forever without doubt" -- Chap I/8 - Svetashvathara Upanishad.

" There is naught higher than or different from HIM; naught greater or more minute than HIM. Rooted in HIS own glory HE stands like a tree, one without a second and immovable. By that Being is the whole universe filled." -- Chap III/9 - Svetashvathara Upanishad.

" Without hands and feet HE goes fast and grasps; without eyes HE sees; without ears HE hears. HE knows whatever is to be known, yet there are none who know HIM. They say HE is the foremost, that great Infinite Being." -- Chap III/19 - Svetashvathara Upanishad.

Question
Sir,

What is Kriya Yoga? In " Autobiography of a Yogi" said that Mahavatar Babaji gave it to Lahiri Mahashaya, and He is the founder of Kriya Yoga ,Is ,it is the fatest way to God, Is Mahavatar Babaji is Deathless yogi?

Thanking U sir

Answer

1. Kriya Yoga is a part of 'Karma Yoga' (the Yoga of action). It consists of various Kriya-s (techniques of control of Prana) to help ascend 'Kundalini' to the seventh center - 'Sahasrara chakra' leading to Samadhi and finally self-realization. The word Kriya Yoga is a general term used to denote the use of various Pranayama techniques. The eight limb Yoga ('Ashtanga Raja Yoga') of 'Maharshi Pathanjali' that we follow is also Kriya Yoga. A particular kind of Kriya Yoga was taught by Mahavathar Babaji to Shri. Lahari Mahashaya in the mid 19th century which became famous as the 'Kriya Yoga' known today.

2. Yoga is neither fast nor slow. There is no Yoga faster or slower than the other. The speed of attaining to God depends on one's past karma, present efforts and most importantly on the grace of God. Based on one's individual temperament, past karma and mental/physical inclination, a particular path of Yoga appeals & becomes suitable to each. As there is only one God, there is only one Yoga. The approach to this one Yoga through different methods makes it appear as though there are many Yoga-s.

Broadly speaking, there are three methods. One is 'Gnyana Yoga' (Yoga of knowledge), the second is 'Karma Yoga' (Yoga of action) and the third is 'Bhakthi Yoga' (Yoga of devotion to God). The Gnyana Yogi with an intellectual approach makes use of knowledge, reasoning and analysis of 'Atma Vichara' (contemplation of "Who am I" etc...) and reaches Samadhi. The Karma Yogi employs action (through Hatha Yoga, Raja Yoga etc...) and reaches Samadhi. The 'Bhakthi Yogi' sings songs of God, cries with devotion to God, dances to please God and praises the Leela's of God and finally attains 'Bhava Samadhi'. He surrenders completely to God. One can choose any path found suitable to proceed in Yoga or form a unique path which may be a combination of the essence of the above paths. A person who has advanced in Yoga in previous births will find it easier to proceed directly to the particular Yoga of his temperament. Others who start afresh may find it necessary to start with 'Hatha Yoga' (to make the physical vehicle called body fit) and then proceed to 'Raja Yoga'.

Whatever be the path, only the 'Nishkama Yogi' (one who performs Yoga without desire for the world and its objects and only for liberation) attains 'Kaivalya' (self-realization). Those who resort to Yoga with desire for 'Bhoga' (worldly, sensual pleasures) do not attain liberation. The aim of any kind of Yoga is self-realization and nothing else. Yoga is not meant to merely offer physical health as is assumed by the west. Physical health is a by-product of Yoga and not the end. 'Asana-s' (physical postures) are the preliminary aspect of Yoga and not Yoga itself. The only purpose of 'Asana' is to make the physical medium fit to act as a foundation for practices such as Pranayama and Meditation. Europeans and Americans wrongly think 'Asana' itself to be Yoga and ignore the Yama-Niyama-s, Pranayama and meditation. This is incorrect. One who only performs Asana-s and not the other 'Anga-s' (8-limbs of Yoga) is a Gymnast. He is not a Yogi. Only he who practices all the eight limbs of Yoga with the aim of self-realization by giving up worldliness is a Yogi.

3. 'Mahavathar Babaji' is considered as an incarnation of the Almighty with a body made of 'light', immune to decay and death (one of the siddhi-s which comes further to self-realization if God so wills). The state of 'Divya Sharira' or divine body (which comes after reaching the state of a complete 'Urdhvarethas' [just before reaching Nirvikalpa Samadhi]) can lead to this body under certain conditions say the scriptures. He is the founder of Kriya Yoga. Nobody knows Babaji’s age, family, place of birth, true name, or other details. He is rumored to be many thousands of years old and yet looks like a young person. He is said to exist until the end of the world to guide souls towards self-realization. Shri. Lahari Mahashaya wrote that Mahavathar Babaji was Lord Krishna in the Mahabharata.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

Here at university there is a lot of outside noise up till 12am or so. This makes me waking up early very difficult as I do not get proper sleep. At the moment I wake up at 6.30. Although I would really like to wake up before 5.30. I have woken up very early and I do love it. This was during holidays when everyone at university went home so I was able to retire to bed early. But now everyone is here and I just can't go to bed early. 11pm is the earliest on a quite day. Although here in the UK sunrises around 7 so I do wake up before sunrise. What can be done to resolve this issue? Thank you in advance.

Answer
Do not keep the cellphone in the bed room while sleeping. A mobile phone works on microwaves and the signals that it receives and sends create a strong field of electromagnetic radiation around a radius of close to 20 feet. This interferes with the sleep cycle. It becomes impossible to achieve deep, sound and unhindered sleep. These electromagnetic waves interfere with thought waves and the result is a disturbed and restless mind. People who keep their cellphones under the pillow or even in the bedroom while sleeping become prone to dreams, unrest, fear and interrupted sleep. This hinders the achievement of 'Nidra' (deep sleep) depriving the person of deep rest and relaxation which comes from flawless sleep. Married couples who sleep with their cellphones beside them become agitated and prone to quarrel with each other further to the interference of these waves. A mobile phone should to the best possible extent be kept as far away from the place of sleep as possible (at least 20 ft). The devastating effects of cellphone use on the brain have even been scientifically proven beyond doubt. These radiation hazards are to be minimized to the best extent possible by limiting the use to necessity and never more (talking much on the cellphone also leads to brain disorders).

Immaterial of sleeping time, make it mandatory to wake up by 4.00 A.M for a month. Keep the alarm clock in an adjacent room or outside the bedroom, out of reach. This way, it becomes necessary to get out of bed to switch the alarm off and one is woken out of sleep. Keeping the alarm clock within reach tends to make one snooze and eventually drift back to sleep. This is then of no use. If waking up by 4.00 A.M is practiced forcefully beyond a month with regular Yogic practice and meditation, one will be unable to stay awake beyond 9.00 P.M at night. Even of there be much noise and chaos, one will achieve deep and sound sleep. No amount of noise or disturbance can then come in the way of deep sleep. The body having woken up early is in need of rest and gets this rest without fail ignoring external disturbances.

As and when past Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasana-s (tendencies) start vacating with unbroken Brahmacharya, Yogic practices and meditation, sleep becomes better. Once the Yogi achieves the state of 'Savikalpa Samadhi' (after a few years of unbroken Brahmacharya - corresponding with the awakening and stabilization of Kundalini in the 6th Chakra - 'Ajna') and spends many hours in meditation, very deep sleep dawns at night. Then, even the sound of fire crackers being burst cannot interfere with achieving sleep. One then enjoys 5-6 hours of very deep 'Nidra' (sleep) with absolutely no dreams or awareness and cannot stay asleep beyond 3.00 - 3.30 A.M early morning. The body and mind having being fully refreshed and rejuvenated coax the person to go out of bed for Yoga. This is based on my personal experience. Till such a state is reached, there has to be much effort. There is no other way but to go through the method of enforcing discipline as regards waking up in the 'Brahmimuhurtham'. The state of 'Kaivalya' (liberation) and 'Yoga-siddhi' (Yogic powers) is not awarded to all by the Lord. One has to work really hard for the same. Only the deserving who set aside all lethargy and work with an iron will progress. Then the grace of the Lord shines.

How can we express or describe this bliss and sheer bliss of Samadhi derived from union with the Lord? Words cannot express it. There is no pleasure or excitement belonging to this world worth mentioning which can equal even one percent of that 'Brahmananda' (bliss of uniting with the Brahman in Samadhi). I cannot find words to elaborate on this further, for I get choked with tears of devotion for the kindness of that Supreme Almighty. It should be experienced first hand. This is our real 'Svarupa' (default state). This is the real state of the Atman. We are this and not the misery and pain experienced in the world.

It is said that a tiger or lion which has once tasted human blood becomes a man-eater. Then, it does not want the flesh and blood of other animals. It only wants the blood of man. A Yogi who has tasted 'Brahmananda' (the bliss of Samadhi) becomes like such a tiger. Just as such a tiger does not want the flesh of other animals but only that of man, the Yogi who has tasted 'Samadhi' does not want sensual/sexual pleasures but only the bliss of union with the Lord. Sexual pleasure becomes like filth and very tasteless. He wants that 'bliss of bliss' or 'Ananda' called by the Upanishads through various names such as 'Satchidananda', 'Atmananda', 'Paramananda' etc... Like a man-eater which always dreams of eating humans, his mind is on the Lord all the time. He always wants to get back into the state of this union through Samadhi. 24 hours in a day become inadequate.

This union with the Lord through Samadhi is called in the scriptures as 'Urdhva-Sangama' ('Urdhva'-upwards, for it occurs in the 'Sahasrara chakra' in the region of the brain, 'Sangama' - union). Then, one does not want in the least the 'other union' (sexual union) called 'Adha-Sangama' ('Adha'-downward, 'Sangama'-union, meaning the sexual union of the genitals), for the bliss of sexual union does not equal even one percent of the bliss of Samadhi. All Brahmachari-s who practice honest and unbroken Brahmacharya with a life of Yogic practices and meditation with surrender to God can achieve this union of 'Samadhi' with the Lord. It should surely be experienced, this Sangama. It is the pathway to liberation. It is the last stage of Yoga, perfecting which one is delivered into 'Kaivalya' (self-realization).

Reaching to this union is worth all the effort, sacrifice and pain that one encounters while perfecting a life of Brahmacharya. With a strong will and determination to achieve unbroken Brahmacharya & Yoga, one has to be ruthless as regards waking up or staying with Brahmacharya and Yoga, for unbroken Brahmacharya leading to higher states is impossible if 4.00 A.M waking with Yogic practice and meditation is not adhered to. One's attitude should be -" I will give up food, water and even my life but not Brahmacharya and devotion to the Lord." Such stubbornness and love is required.

One should enforce these things with nerves of steel. That is real strength. One who has conquered desire, anger, slumber, lethargy and other limitations of the mind is the really strong man. Apply effort in the method suggested with a strong will and love for God. Within a month, by the grace of God, things will fall in place. You will then be able to wake up without fail and progress well. You will shine very well in your education & academics also. This is the truth.

Question
Dear sir

During my brahmacharya life I feel very uncontrolable joy with a viberation under the back born, If this satge needs a Guru? But this feelings are only at the time of Sadana time. Sir why We can get a good Guru in this Yuga?

Thanking U sir
vijith

Answer
During 'Sadhana' (practice), movements of Prana within the spine further to 'Pranothaana' (ascent of Prana) cause various sensations. This is natural in the course of Brahmacharya and Yoga. Kundalini awakening also causes similar experiences.

The 'Yuga' (period of cosmic cycle) has nothing to do with obtaining a Guru (master). It is neither tough to find a Guru in the Kali Yuga, nor was it easy to find a Guru in the other yuga-s. Time does not exist in reality and 'Atma Sadhana' (practice for self-realization) is independent of time. The Atman was never born, nor will it ever die. It is eternal and timeless. Hence the obtainment of a Guru connected with this Sadhana is not connected with time or to the cosmic cycle. It is honesty, commitment, sincerity of practice and the devotion one has for God that determines how soon the Guru comes. The Guru is the human form through whom God works.

Persevere correctly in the practice of Asana, Bandha, Nadi Shodhana and Pranayama as has been described in past answers twice a day without fail. Maintain Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed.

The Guru is sent by God and appears at the designated time. Till then, one has to persevere and strive in the right direction. There is always a Guru for every sincere Sadhaka (practitioner) guiding from behind even without one's knowledge. At the right time you will know who your Guru is.

Question
QUESTION: Dear Brother,

I would like to seek you advice on the following items and its impact on brahmacharya and yogic lifestyle in general:

1) I strength train with heavy weights every weekend. Will such a strenuous training affect brahmacharya and effects of god meditation?

2) I am trying to cut down my meat intake. I am like eating meat 3 time every week. Will taking non-veg adversely affect my system if coupled with yogic practises?

3) Can asthma patients perform pranayama? Pranayama deals with breathin so is it dangerous if the natural pattern of breathing is affected?

Thanks!

Praboo

ANSWER: 1. One can indulge in exercise, sports, weight training etc.. during the initial years of Brahmacharya. There is no problem. Such activities are required during the initial years for transmutation of semen. It is only from the stage of 'Samadhi' that one gives up on these. (Asana can still be practiced even after reaching the Samadhi state). The principle here is that for deep meditation and complete attainment of the status of an 'Urdhvaretha' (non-semen releasing Yogi) which leads to siddhi-s, attainment of the 'Divya Sharira' (divine body), and finally Samadhi (for self-realization), much 'Prana' (vital energy) must be directed upwards to the brain and not to the muscles.

In a person who is spending much energy towards weight training, sports, exercise etc... on a regular basis, the conserved semen is converted into muscle mass and physical strength. This will work well and to one's benefit in the case of a professional sportsman, bodybuilder, athlete etc.. (as his professional aim is to excel in his sport and win medals) but not for the Yogi aiming self-realization. There will be less Prana (vital energy) left behind for meditation leading to Samadhi. The body becomes strong while the mind remains prone to anger, lust, agitation, moods etc... Eventually, such large scale physical activity increases the 'Rajasic' nature of the mind and this leads to the production of more sex hormones within the system. Production of sex hormones in such volumes results in an increase in production of physical semen and an increase in sexual urges (while the aim of the Brahmachari is to prevent the formation of semen and retain it as 'Soma' or nectar in the brain for Samadhi). This is contrary to Brahmacharya. Hence it is preferable to reduce on weight training and exercise as one advances in Brahmacharya and instead shift to the performance of 'Asana-s' (physical postures).

Which is the exact point of time when one should give up bodybuilding, sports, exercise etc.. and depend only on Asana? The correct point of time is when one is able to reach 'Savikalpa Samadhi'. This is an advanced stage and does not apply to the beginner. It comes only after many years of unbroken Brahmacharya and God-meditation. When the Yogi reaches this stage (after perfecting the stages of Dharana & Dhyana in meditation), there is an automatic disinclination to engage in bodybuilding or external forms of exercise and give more hours to meditation leading to Samadhi. The Yogi feels an inner urge to spend many hours in meditation.

Upon reaching this stage, he does not require physical exercise to transmute and sublimate his semen. Samadhi meditation automatically converts all semen into 'Soma' and then 'Ojas'. A few simple Asanas will do from hereon. Energy is voluntarily directed for Samadhi and not towards the body. The body starts taking care of itself even without exercise further to commencement in the formation of 'Divya Sharira' (divine body) of Yoga from hereon as one starts his journey towards becoming an 'Urdhvaretha'. The old cells in the body are replaced with new cells rich with 'Prana' derived from sublimated semen. The body becomes fresh, youthful, full of energy, and remains free from fatigue throughout the day despite lack of physical exercise which was required earlier for maintaining health. The body is rejuvenated and energized to an extent not possible by physical exercise in 'Samadhi' at this stage.

Upon full formation of the 'Divya sharira' (divine body) produced by 'Yogaagni' (fire of Yoga) just before 'Nirvikalpa Samadhi', it is no longer the ordinary body as was earlier. The ordinary body is prone to disease, rapid ageing and loss of vitality. Hence it requires regular exercise to maintain health. If exercise were not given, immunity and strength rapidly deplete. This is not the case with the 'Divya Sharira' of Yoga. It draws all that is required for health and well being from Samadhi. When the Yogi is in union with 'Brahman' (Almighty or pure consciousness), he draws immense Prana from the cosmos. The body is energized and recharged this way. It is now dependent on Samadhi for well being and no longer needs cardio-vascular and strength training exercises. It can live for many hundreds of years (if so destined by God) with no trace of disease or weakness. The effects of the fully formed 'Divya Sharira' are mentioned in the Upanishads:

पन्चात्मिके योगगुणे प्रव्रुत्ते
न तस्य रोगो न जरो न मृत्युह्
प्राप्तस्य योगाग्निमयं शरीरं ||

-- Chapter II/12 - 'Svethashvathara Upanishad'

| When the elements of Earth, water, fire, air and space within the body have attained to perfection through complete purification,
When the five-fold perceptions arising due to such purification are manifest,
Unto him does not come disease, nor old age nor death (due to disease),
He who has a body purified by 'Yogaagni' (the fire of Yoga)||

However, till one reaches 'Savikalpa Samadhi' and the above process of divine body formation starts, it will be required to subject the body to adequate and regular 'Asana' or physical exercise. Till this point is reached, bodybuilding, sports, exercise etc...are necessary to transmute physical semen into 'Ojas'. If physical exercise were not to be given, there will be breaks in Brahmacharya and other health problems. The conserved semen is to be transmuted through exercise, intellectual-mind work and simple meditation in the beginner. A beginner Brahmachari cannot reach Samadhi. That occurs in the advanced stage after many years of unbroken practice. Hence the need for exercise. Even in advanced stages, performance of a few Asana-s is always beneficial for flexibility and fitness.

2. As you make true progress in Yoga and Brahmacharya, meat eating will gradually reduce and finally disappear. One who is getting established in Yoga will not get the mind to eat meat. His mind does not allow him to. When there is not the least urge from within to eat meat, one can be sure that one is making true progress in becoming a Yogi. You will eventually give up meat eating. Why not strive from now itself and derive the benefits of faster progress, better purity and lesser karma by giving up on the habit? Gradually reduce the intake to once a week, then to once in two weeks and in this way taper it away into nothing.

3. Asthma patients can perform Pranayama provided the practice is taken up in a slow and gradual manner. Refer past posts on Yoga and Pranayama for details. 'Kapalabhati' and 'Ujjayi' Pranayama-s are beneficial for asthmatics before commencing regular Pranayama. Start with lesser counts of 'Kumbhaka' (breath retention) and very gradually increase the retention time over many months. Do not hurry. With proper Pranayama, a life of Brahmacharya and Yoga, asthma can be cured in course of time.

For details on Pranayama refer Swami Sivananda's free booklet: http://www.dlshq.org/download/pranayama.htm

QUESTION: Dear Brother,

Thank you for the detailed reply. However, I do not understand some contradictive matters in the article and prev articles.

1) One, brahmacharya is lived to conserve energy, being prana to raise it up to higher chakras and attain mukti. However, you mentioned that when one is maintaining brahmacharya, they should involve in some sports and use the energy if not it will become tamasic in the body. One one hand, we need alot of prana for samadhi, on the other hand, we need to use up the energy on sports/physical training to prevent tamasic buildup. In then end prana is going to used up from maintaining brahmacharya?? Abit contradictory. Isnt god meditation transmute the semen?

2) Does eating meat constitute bad karma? If that is so, how can kannappa nayyannar who had direct vision of siva was able to even see god despite a low, tribal, meat eating hunter? Will god forgive if i stop meat eating and become vegterian?

3) I have heard the story of arunagirinathar. Some of my friend who indulge in dating, casual relationships used to cite that if murugan can bless arunagirinathar who was a compulsive visitor of prostitute, casual relationships and datings are minute in comparison. How can for someone like arunagirinathar who did not maintain brahmacharya was saved by the lord? Isn't it contradictory?

4) I want to clarify how meditation on the trikuti is performed - do we need to cross our eyes i.e. turn the eyeballs towards the nose lining first and then in this position turn the eyeballs towards the intersection between the eyebrows? I have tried this before and I have experienced eye pain.pls correct me if i am wrong.

Thanks in advance.

Praboo

Answer
1. There are two important reasons for the practice of Brahmacharya:

A. To help overcome slavery to sexuality, thereby helping one develop ‘Indriya Nigraha’ (control and restraint of the senses), which is mandatory to purify the mind for the attainment of self-realization.
B. To conserve Prana through transmutation of ‘Rethas’ (semen) and make use of this Prana for various objectives such as the removal of past Samskara-s (impressions), Vasana-s (tendencies) and purify the body, mind and psyche, making it a fit vehicle for ‘Samadhi’ and self-realization.

In the beginner Brahmachari, the ‘Sthula Sharira’ (physical body), ‘Linga Sharira’ (astral body) and ‘Karana Sharira’ (causal body) are dense with impurities carried forward from past deeds of this and former lives. Hence the ‘chakra-s’ are rife with blockages. Prana cannot flow freely in the ‘Naadi-s’ (astral energy channels). To attain Samadhi, the Naadi-s must be clear and free from blocks. The chakra-s must be fully deflowered. Only then will the Prana flow unhindered into the higher chakra-s and finally the ‘Sahasrara chakra’ in the brain. Till this purification has progressed to a large degree, it will not be possible for a beginner to enter ‘Samadhi’. Since transmutation of semen through Samadhi is not possible in the beginner, there is a need for adequate physical, mental and spiritual activity, to aid effective transmutation of semen.

2. ‘Kannappa Nayanar’ plucked out both his eyes and offered them to the Lord when he saw the 'Siva lingam' in tears. Such was his devotion. He was not a meat eater and hunter by choice but by force of circumstance. Does the common man have this much ‘Bhakthi’ (devotion)? Will he be ready to cut out his eyes and offer them to the Lord? If one has such innocent love, surrender and devotion to the Lord, it does not matter what one eats or doesn't. Though born a hunter, 'Kannappa' was a very spiritually advanced soul. Lord Siva appeared before him not because he ate meat but because of Kannappa’s unconditional love and devotion.

For all other ordinary people, giving up meat at least during the initial years is beneficial to progress in Brahmacharya if self-realization is the aim. Eating meat builds aggressive tendencies which make one more prone to anger, lust, agitation unrest etc… Deep meditation becomes almost impossible. It promotes the release of sex hormones in the system which leads to strong sexual undercurrents. Unbroken Brahmacharya becomes very difficult. Hence at least till the state of an Urdhvareta is not attained, meat is best avoided.

3. ‘Arunagirinathar’ smashed his head against the temple steps/pillars and finally threw himself from atop the temple ‘Gopuram’ (tower) when he realized the great mistake he committed through his womanizing ways. Such was his repentance and shame upon the dawning of knowledge. Lord Muruga gave him Darshan not for his womanizing ways but upon being impressed with the devotion and repentance shown further to getting free of ‘Avidya’ (ignorance). When your friend associates himself with the actions of this great man prior to sainthood, he should also be ready to follow the footsteps of this Saint in the extreme steps he took to cleanse himself of his sin. Is he ready for the same?

One should take the essence and morals of the lives of such great men and apply it in one’s own life. Today, people remember these Saints not for the mistakes they committed before the attainment of knowledge but for the sacrifice and devotion they displayed upon the dawning of knowledge. The wise man acts accordingly and eats the fruit of knowledge, while the fool discards the fruit and settles for the peels.

4. It is not necessary to practice 'Aghochari Mudra' (nose tip gazing) if one feels discomfort. This is a preliminary exercise to aid concentration and not mandatory. The method of practicing meditation is available in past answers. Kindly go through each and every past answer to get clear with the methods of Yoga, Brahmacharya and meditation.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

Could you kindly share your view about the modern medical advice that regular ejaculation for the male is essential for the health of the prostate and reproductive organs and that long term abstinence from sex and orgasm is a harmful practise. What does the yogic wisdom say about this?

namaste,
Ronan

Answer
When a man leads a life high on sexual thought, word and deed, there is much generation of sexual fluid within his system. The prostate produces the prostatic fluid. The Cowper's glands produce the Bulbo-urethral fluid; the testes constantly produce more and more quantity of sperm by drawing from all essences within the body. Ultimately, the man reaches a state where it becomes default for the body to produce large quantities of sexual fluids for ejaculation. It becomes something like second nature for the body to produce these fluids even when there is no need for the same (like the salivary glands secrete saliva very often in a person who constantly thinks and craves for food, even though he might not eat food at that particular point of time)

It is to be clearly understood that the seminal power is a mammoth power of great magnitude and intensity. It is a power which is capable of creating another life. The sexual fluid is the only fluid in the body which has the ability to create another life. No other secretion in the system can produce offspring. Hence it follows that this fluid is surcharged and replete with all life energy in man. It is formed after drawing from all the essences within the system. It is like a powerful surge of electricity. Now imagine a hydel-generator constantly generating high voltage electricity in a hydroelectric power plant. What is done with all the electricity which is produced? It is sent to a power grid which transmits this mammoth power to millions of homes, industries etc… Where the same is put to constructive use for lighting, heating or to run machinery and gadgets. This way, much benefit is accrued from the hydroelectricity which was generated.

What would happen if the generator at the hydel-plant kept on generating high voltage power and the same was not transmitted and utilized? What would happen if all this electricity was made to stagnate within the generator itself? The generator would be burnt beyond repair and would destruct itself. Such power cannot be made to stagnate. It should be made to work for a constructive purpose and given a channel of expression. Else it becomes destructive and dangerous to the very machine that produced it in the first place.

The Human body is the generator, semen is the electric current and constructive activity and God-meditation are the means by which this electricity called semen is utilized effectively. When man conserves his semen and transmutes it into a subtle form of electricity called 'Ojas' (divine astral power), it can be made to work wonders in any given field of application. It fills him with immense Prana (vital energy) which can be directed to perform any task with much ease. He hardly gets fatigued, for the energy generated is constantly being transmuted into productivity. On the other hand, if man were to not give a proper expression to this seminal power, it becomes like the electric generator not being given a channel for all the power it produced. The same force works in the reverse direction and might well destroy the body.

This is what happens in the normal man addicted to a life of sense pleasure and recreational sexuality. His mind and actions are always in the direction of sex. Most men think of sex every few minutes. So hopeless and enslaved is man to sex as a source of pleasure. The result? His body constantly draws from the life essences and secretes sexual fluids all the time. As discussed, this fluid now needs an outlet. Like the electricity produced by the generator, it cannot be made stationary or stagnated. So he starts to feel unnatural urges for recreational sex, masturbation and illicit relationships. He starts viewing each and every member of the opposite sex as a target to release this pent up energy. He commits various mistakes, unpardonable sins and incurs much karma in the process. If he does not release this energy, it will kill him. He will go mad.

This is what people refer to as the 'sexual need'. It is a very dangerous disease, this thing called as the 'sexual need'. This is why modern medicine recommends releasing the sexual fluid, for when not conserved and transmuted, it has to be expelled for a temporary relief. This expellation however leads to the fastest degeneration, decay and debility of the body, mind and psyche. Not expelling it in such a state of mind leads to other health disorders. It is like being caught between the 'devil and the deep sea'. Either way, there is destruction. God created the sexual force for progeny and nothing more than progeny. Period! But man chose to extend it to recreation. This blunder costs him very dearly. It is a blunder which works very slowly but very thoroughly in destroying him.

This is why one should not suppress or repress sexuality. It cannot be held back this way with force. One should prevent the very birth of recreational sexuality through Brahmacharya and get free of this need. It takes a few years of Yoga & unbroken Brahmacharya with God-meditation to stop the secretion of sexual juices. Till then, physical, mental and meditative activity is applied regularly to transmute semen which the body is still producing through past habit. In one whose mind has become free from sexual contemplation and fantasy, Rethas (semen) is not produced. It has become 'Soma' (nectar) in the brain. He is then called as an 'Urdhvarethas' (Urdhva-upward, Rethas-semen – One who has directed his sexual fluid upwards to the brain). A most blessed life which cannot be described in words follows from such a state. In such a man, this energy does not come down and become gross semen as in the normal man. He has all the energy required to persevere in a mode of life that grants him self-realization, the very aim of human existence.

In reality, the 'sexual need' does not exist. It is a disease which one has brought upon oneself through countless lives devoted to recreational sexuality. It is an after effect of 'Avidya' (ignorance) which has wound itself around the Atman (soul). Just as a food addict generates much saliva even when not eating, even when not necessary, the common man who has become a slave to sexuality generates sexual fluid most of the time through indulgence in sexual thought and fantasy. If man was able to prevent such thought and instead divert his mind to constructive activity and God-meditation, the incidence of generation of the sexual fluid would also reduce in volume and finally disappear. This same energy would instead flow in nourishing the body and brain. It would give him a body immune to suffering. It would bless him with a sharp intellect, excellent memory and powerful ability of analysis even well unto old age, for where is the pain of old age in the man who has conserved his 'Bindu' (seed)?

Then there is no problem. A permanent and efficient solution is reached. This is why one should practice Brahmacharya. The conserved 'Ojas' roots out all imperfections in the physical, mental and causal bodies and helps one lead a very happy and meaningful life to free oneself from karma. Man realizes the fallacy of his ego and becomes one with God. The Atman (soul) is redelivered into its state of union with the Almighty. Brahmacharya is one's default state. It is sexuality for recreation which is a disease and not our true state. It robs man of his happiness and well being. Hence this disease of slavery to sexual recreation, one should end.

All those who lead a strict life of Yoga and Brahmacharya, who are devoted to God, who desist from indulging in the lower traits and emotions, who see God in every living being and practice Ahimsa (non-violence), semen gets reabsorbed into the system leading to excellence in all domains in course of time. The need to constantly 'ejaculate and cleanse' the sexual system is for the sex enslaved man and not for the true Brahmachari. Having transmuted and sublimated his semen through physical, mental and meditative activity in the beginning years of Brahmacharya and continuously being in the state of an 'Urdhvareta' through 'Samadhi' in the later years of advancement, he has no juices rotting within him, waiting for expulsion. This, I state with humility, through personal experience, further to being fortunate in incurring the blessings of the all merciful 'Parabrahman' (Almighty Lord) as regards Yoga and Brahmacharya. May his grace shine upon all those wishing for release from the sufferings of 'Samsara' (ocean of trans-migratory existence) and may he grant us absorption unto him.

Question
Dhananjay, hi

I read in one of your posts about the electromagnetic field cell phones create and how they make uninterrupted sleep virtually impossible. Is it advisable to switch cell phones off while sleeping? Do they cause the same effect when switched off, I am presuming not but just wanted to be sure. Also, should they be kept off while performing bandh,nadi shodan, paranayam and meditation?
Re meat eating, how is it harmful to the spiritual aspirant? If taken in moderation, is it still an impediment to spiritual advancement, I am asking because I have read about self realised masters who used to eat meat, in moderation though.
Hope you are well? Thanks, Manish

Answer

1. A cell phone can be switched off while sleeping. Switching a cell phone off negates the transmission and makes it safe. If this isn't possible, it should preferably be placed at least 20 ft from the body. The 'Linga Sharira' (astral body) is susceptible to the effect of vibration and radiation of all kinds up to a distance of 20ft. While at home/office, it is best not to carry a mobile phone on the body but place it as far away from the body as possible. It makes a lot of sense to switch cell phones off when not in use or when not expecting a call and limit their use to the minimum. During Yogic practices and meditation, cell phones should be switched off or kept in silent at least 20 ft away.

2. Why avoid meat during the initial years of practice:

• Meat is highly 'Rajasic' (activating) in nature. It makes the mind prone to anger, passion, agitation, desire and a host of other lower traits and emotions. It opposes tranquility and calmness and promotes aggression and sexuality. Wet dreams and sexual fantasy become frequent and intense. These are traits which work against the beginner Yogi aspiring to achieve unbroken Brahmacharya and deep meditation. Hence the beginner would do well to give up meat. At least till one becomes an Urdhvareta, meat is best avoided.

• The human oral and digestive system is not meant to handle much meat. The human digestive system is alkaline and does not have enough acid to digest large chunks of meat. The intestines are not designed to assimilate large volumes of meat. Hence digestion becomes slow and the food rots within the system for longer than 48 hours. This produces many toxins. The body becomes impure and prone to disease. The rotting material within the system leads to violent emotions, anger and a host of other mood problems. It pollutes and fouls the mind. Meditation becomes very difficult. Shifting to vegetarian food solves these problems to a large extent. Some details are available at: http://www.celestialhealing.net/physicalveg3.htm.

3. A self-realized master was once moving in the forest with some of his disciples. He had ordered them not to touch meat. At one point of time, the master ate some meat himself. A student who saw this exclaimed –"Master asks us not to eat meat while he himself is eating it". The master kept silent. When they arrived in town, they came upon a blacksmith who was melting bars of iron in the smithy. The master took a red hot molten block of steel with his bare hands, put it into his mouth, chewed on it and swallowed it. He now asked the complaining disciple to do the same. The disciple shrunk in horror.

The master said –"When you are able to do what I did, then it does not matter to you whether you derive your energy from a plant or a piece of meat. You absorb the one underlying Prana (vital energy) present in all things. You have developed the ability to absorb the essence of a thing and reject the rest. You experience the one Brahman (Almighty) in all things, living and non-living. You have become one with that Almighty and there is nothing different than HIM. All has become HIM. Till then, till such a state ('Gunatita' – beyond the three Guna-s or traits – Sattwa, Rajas, Tamas) is achieved, you cannot supersede the limitations you find yourself with." The disciple realized his mistake and fell at the feet of the master asking for his forgiveness.

We need not know why the master, himself being a vegetarian ate meat on that particular occasion. He would have had some reason which is beyond our comprehension. He might have eaten it just to show his disciples the freedom from limitations which come upon self-realization. He might have done it to illustrate that a piece of flesh and a piece of red hot steel were both the same to him, for he saw the all pervading Brahman (Almighty) within all things. What one can be rest assured is that this eating was not fueled by desire for the taste. A realized soul is in a state of bliss and intasy which cannot even be remotely comprehended by the normal man. Earthly pleasures appear completely tasteless. Not being in the state of body, mind and psyche as that of a realized soul, the common man cannot understand the ways of God and that of those who have united with HIM. For that, we ourselves should reach and experience that state. It is very common for realized masters to stay without food, sleep and water for more than 6 months at a stretch. Can the common man do it? They have transcended all that exists on the Earthly plane and are beyond these limitations. Hence the 'Sadhak' (aspirant) should not compare himself to a self-realized soul, nor try to behave that way.

Giving up meat and staying strictly vegetarian during the initial years of practice goes a long way in becoming independent of the senses through their restraint (Indriya-Nigraha) which is mandatory for self-realization. It helps achieve unbroken Brahmacharya and the state of an 'Urdhvaretha'. This is based on my personal experience. This should be reason enough to the serious aspirant wanting nothing more than unbroken Brahmacharya for self-realization to give up meat gradually if not all of a sudden.

Question
Hello Mr. Dhananjay, my respectful regards to you. I have been researching on the subject of Brahmacharya, sexual transmutation & Urdhvareta since past few years and here are my questions in these areas:
But before I begin, let me share a few things about me:
I'm 24 as of 20 Oct 2011, unmarried.
I don't: smoke, drink, do drugs, gamble.
I am still (technically) a virgin.
I am a vegetarian.

Since you don't ask for money, I think it would be fair enough to share my knowledge with you in return. So here's a worthy secret about the organic human body. We see that metal depreciates, degrades, deteriorates the more it's utilised; same is the case with many other objects like TV, Fridge, Mobile, Laptop etc. However, in case of the organic body it is the opposite. That is the more we use it the better it gets, the less we use it starts deteriorating (or it may seem). Man initially had a tail, but as he reduced it's usage over time (i.e. as he became terrestrial [land-dwelling] from arboreal [tree-dwelling]) it's no longer with him today. But here's the secret. In my opinion the organic body too like all other objects degrades with usage, but what gives it this unique reverse quality is the presence of semen (body-sap) that pervades throughout the body. As a person ejaculates semen over-time the body starts loosing this unique quality and starts degrading like all other objects; i.e. the body start growing old, wounds take more time to heal etc. Moral: The Yogis, who advised men to prevent wasting their semen, were right.

Q1) I've read in Sivananda's celibacy literature that the divine body smells like a lotus whereas the normal human body of a person smells like a buck-goat. Does this mean the divine is the blue-coloured body like that of Lord Vishnu (because the term lotus made me think of him)? And, in my opinion, a man is not technically an Urdhvareta till he has achieved a divine body. Is this correct?

Q2) My objective is to become an Urdhvareta. Now, I've been masturbating since age 15 and later when I had visited a doctor for an increase in urination frequency, he told me to masturbate even more & I foolishly did what he told me without thinking much about it. I turned 24 last Oct 20, 2011; according to you, do I still have a scope for becoming an Urdhvareta because I've read that efforts towards Brahmacharya should begin before age 32 or 34 & does that imply 1 cannot be an Urdhvareta after 32 or 34 yrs of age?
Q3) Due to God's grace I haven't had any night-falls till date & mostly I don't have any dreams. However if I had to point out the reason that makes me masturbate is the pre-ejaculatory fluid that comes out on stimulation. Is there a (preferably permanent) cure for this? Any medicine?
Q4) I think that the Ojas creation due to sexual sublimation & the ascent of Kundalini are 2 totally different phenomenons. One keeps your body young healthy and youthful while the other burns away your (unripe) normal body from within to make it a (ripe) divine body? Can you shed some light in this matter? I am a bit confused between the 2.
Q5) I've noticed that a lot more men suffer from Heart-Related Disease, at a later stage in their lives, as compared to women. In my opinion, heart is a main part of the nervous system & frequent loss of semen is what causes these heart problems & they have to resort to 'heart-oils' like Saffola etc. Is this correct?

Thanks and May God bless you (to be an Urdhvareta if that's your wish too).

Answer
1. The 'Divya Sharira' (divine body) is perfected AFTER becoming a complete 'Urdhvareta' and not the reverse. The skin complexion becomes lighter and brighter in color further to inundation with 'Tejas' (luster). There is a replacement of the previously degenerated body cells with fresh, new cells rich in 'Prana' accrued from the transmutation of semen into 'Soma ' (nectar in the brain) (There isn't any blueness). A very mild yet unmistakably pleasant scent emanates from the body from this stage onwards.

2. One starts becoming an Urdhvareta as one perfects 'Savikalpa Samadhi' and not before. There are 6 stages in Savikalpa Samadhi, each deeper than the previous. By the time the Yogi is established in the last stage of 'Savikalpa Samadhi' – 'Sasmita-Savikalpa Samadhi' (also called 'Sabija Samadhi'/' Samprajnata Samadhi') , he is a complete Urdhvareta and very close to acquiring the 'Divya Sharira' (which gets perfected just before entering 'Nirvikalpa Samadhi').

Practice a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya along with God meditation as described in past answers. If the grace of God is in plenty and there is much effort, the same can be attained in the course of a few years of unbroken practice. The age of 32-34 is the general upper limit within which unbroken Brahmacharya should be established (and never broken) and Yogic practices stabilized for reaching 'Sadyo mukti' (self-realization within one single birth). However, depending on how much advancement has occurred in previous births, there are exceptions to this pointer.

3. Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed is the only cure. An established Brahmachari does not secrete any kind of sexual fluid. His mind is ever on God. He see's God everywhere and does all actions to please God.

4. Ojas is the very subtle electricity stored in the 'Linga Sharira' (astral body) further to conversion of gross semen into 'Bhutasukshma' (vapor like substance). 'Kundalini' represents the force by which the Chakra-s (confluence of astral energy channels) are cleansed and freed from blockades by the action of 'Prakrthi' (manifest force of nature). Ojas is the effect while Kundalini is the means.

5. The loss of vital energy in man further to ejaculation is more in intensity than an orgasm in woman. If a man and woman were to have the same frequency of sexual release, the man weakens and ages faster. This is because a man expels his vital fluid while in a woman her vital fluid (Raja-Veerya) though secreted from the sex glands is still retained within her system and not thrown out. Though her 'Bindu' (seed) does come down from the brain as in the man at the cost of 'Soma' (nectar), the final loss of vitality is less in magnitude due to absence of external release. However, women also experience the ill-effects of recreational sexuality in course of time without doubt. The loss of vital fluid for recreation hence leads to the debility and degeneration of all organs in both men and women in course of time. No change in food habit (of any brand of oil!) can then reverse this debility, for the 'Bindu' (seed of man or woman) is an effect of 'Para-Ojas' which is fixed when God creates the body at the time of birth and cannot be replenished through food.

Question
QUESTION: 1) Is it possible to maintain celibacy after 45 years of age for the rest of the life?
2) What are the merits as well as demerits of such act?
3) Since the sexual energy is getting conserved by maintaining celibacy, in what form the same (sexual)energy is going to get transformed?

ANSWER: 1. It is never late to adopt a life of Brahmacharya. Better late than never. Brahmacharya is one's default way of life. It is the true state of the Atman (soul). Everyday of practice gives its benefits. It offers the chance for a better spiritual, mental and physical state now and in the next birth. Hence by all means can the practice be taken up.

2. The merits include good health, strength and well being, a clear and calm mind that helps one function better and stay happy, spiritual development leading to lessening of past karma and overall improvement in all fields of life. Brahmacharya should be practiced in thought, word and deed with adequate physical (asana or exercise), mental work and spiritual (meditative) activity. There are no demerits.

3. Sexual energy which is conserved is directed towards other constructive activities which may include physical exercise, asana, sports, mental work (as in one's job), hobbies etc… and meditation. In other words, one will have much energy and zest to perform any activity of one's choice to satisfaction. As the aspirant advances, he will get drawn to deeper meditation that leads to much joy and peace of mind.

Kindly go through each and every past answer to get clear with the topic in detail.

Question
As a martial artist, I am hoping to test out the powers of brahmacharya, and of course to get closer to my deity Lord Shiva (sada shiva in Vaikuntha planet) Is it possible to get a body made of steel (vraja) by becoming an urdhavereta, like a real life Superman/yogi- assuming Superman was a real life person, would he still loose in a fight to say Lord Brahma or Lord Shiva?

Answer
The best possible outcome as regards the body, mind and finally the Atman (soul) come from honest and unbroken Brahmacharya. If a Brahmachari is interested in using the conserved energy for martial arts, then he can make good progress in that field. Simply following a life of correct Brahmacharya and using this energy for his fight practice will help him excel in martial arts. Conserved semen is like electricity. Electricity can be made to produce light, heat, run a gadget, a motor and for hundreds of other applications. It all depends on what one uses it for. The energy derived from Brahmacharya is very similar. It can be chanelled in any given field. A Yogi uses this for the purpose of 'Kaivalya (self-realization) as that is his aim and life objective.

Becoming an Urdhvareta gives a body with true strength and toughness. What is true strength? It is not the strength derived from lifting weights or making six-packs. It is not the power to pump a hundred Kgs of weight on the bench press at the gym. Neither is it the ability to run for miles or swim across a river. All these no doubt require strength, but a man who does these is not necessarily a 'strong man' in the real sense. A really strong man is one who can manage to stay in his 'Atmic state' (default state of the soul) full of calmness, happiness, serenity, virtue, goodness, confidence, energy and iron determination towards the achievement of his objectives. He wishes good for all (even those who wish him bad). He does not cause the least harm in body or mind to any being. He is ever truthful, does not covet what belongs to others, has a pure and straight forward attitude and is unattached to the material things of life.

The really strong man is unfazed and unaffected by the highs and lows of life and perseveres in attaining to his goal despite all odds. He so strong, content and peaceful from within that he does not need any vices (such as alcohol, tobacco, drugs, gambling, porn etc...) to make him 'happy'. He is not driven by his ego. He may or may not succeed in a given job, for that depends on the will of God, but his efforts are at cent percent. This calls for a force and strength from within which is uncommon. Such force is ‘real strength’. It comes from the 'Atman' (soul or Almighty) and not from anywhere else. Brahmacharya gives such strength. This strength can then be used for any constructive activity one aims at. Since this world is ultimately ‘Maya’ (illusion) and all its activities as also hence illusory, the Brahmachari uses it to know who is is (for self-realization).

Lord Brahma or Lord Shiva are beyond the body and mind. They work in a plane much above the Earthly plane. The 'Superman' in comics is bound by the Earthly plane. He acts and reacts to what happens here on Earth. He cannot function beyond the Earthly plane. By the time the Superman is done with flexing his muscles and getting ready for the fight, these God's would be long done with winning it without even shaking a hair. Hence he wouldn't be a match to these Deva-s!

Question
Dear Sir

I have read it many times that beauty is only skin deep. I know it to be true too. I can easily guess the image of the woman I find attractive now ; 30-40 years down the line , when she would become old and no longer beautiful. But then my mind puts forward an argument , which I find very difficult to put down ; even though I know I must not pay heed to it. It tells me that even though what you imagine the woman to be 40 years later is absolutely true , but 'right now' the woman is attractive. It tells me to forget about the future and live in the present , and to enjoy the beauty of the woman right now and not to think about when she would grow old.
I find this reason of my mind very difficult to resist. Though till now by God's grace somehow I am able to control the temptation and do not approach the lady , I still repent the fall of my Brahmacharya in thought. Please suggest me a sound argument to give to myself , the next time I see a pretty lady and my mind again comes forward with the same reasons.

Secondly , I also practice equanimity of mind , which Lord Krishna says to be one of the characteristics of his devotees. I am usually satisfactorily equanimous , but food ; especially sugary foods completely destroy my equanimity. Please suggest some ways to control myself when I look at something I find very delicious.

Your's sincerely
Kaushal

Answer
"A young woman in her teens or prime is very attractive..."
“Is the same young woman in her teens or prime, 'DEAD' attractive?"

Go to a morgue and have a look at the corpse of a young lady.

Some people feel dizzy when they see such a corpse.

Some others feel nausea & throw up.
Some others feel disoriented and mentally unwell.

Is she attractive? Isn't the sight of a DEAD body harrowing to the human emotions?

You have a question to now ask your mind as you stare at the dead woman - "O mind, the woman is the same, her body is the same and her age is the same, do you want to 'enjoy' her? Do you want to 'enjoy' her 'right now'? At the present? Not 40 years down the line but now...

The same mind will turn coward and rush you out of the morgue. This is the credibility of the so called 'intelligent mind'. How undependable and untrustworthy it is, this thing called the mind. Isn't it a cheat of the first order? Is there anything more fickle and altering than the mind? The wise man hence keeps the 'Manas' (mind) snubbed under the feet of 'Vichara' (inquiry) and 'Viveka' (wisdom). The fool lets the mind roam as it pleases.

It is said in the scriptures:

| मनह एव मनुश्यणाम बन्ध मोक्ष कारणयोहो ||

"Manaha eva manushyanaam bandha moksha kaaranayoho"
- "It is the mind which is the cause of bondage (to the world through Maya) when turned outwards, and it is the same mind which is the means to 'moksha' (liberation) when turned inwards."

Hence this mind is to beld under the control of wisdom and directed towards God if sorrow is to be avoided & liberation desired.

What is the difference in the woman before death and after death? There is only one very simple difference. The Atman (soul) has left the body. Earlier, it resided in the very same body. But it has left now. The 'woman' is now no longer a 'woman' to the 'smart and reasoning' mind. The 'woman' has become a 'corpse'.

So what then was the source of beauty and appeal earlier? It was the presence of the 'Atman' (pure soul) no doubt, for that is the only difference between earlier and now. Everything else is the same. The woman is the same, the body is the same and her age is the same.

The 'Atman' (pure soul) who is none other than the 'Brahman' (Almighty Lord), who has no death, no birth, who is beyond all decay and the source of all creation, was the source of the beauty. For a few years, when a woman is in her prime, the Atman shines a fraction of his immense beauty and power into the body of the woman (so as attract the male, cause marriage, create a family and produce offspring). As soon as this purpose is served, the Atman starts withdrawing his power. This is why even the most beautiful woman starts to lose her charm and allure further to bearing a child. A woman who has borne a child does not posses the feminity she had earlier. That magic is receeding very fast. By the time she reaches mid-life, the woman has lost all the beauty she had as a teenager. She appears lackluster and drab, like a length of sugarcane from which all juice has been extracted. This is because the Atman has withdrawn the power of 'Maya'. The purpose of 'Maya' (of aiding procreation) has been served. There is no further need for the illusion called beauty. Upon death, the body is in its true, real form. The truth of the body is evident without any facade.

It is then nothing more than a rotting bag of filth and refuse. Nobody wants to associate with it anymore. Even the very close relatives who claimed true love as regards the woman now want to dispose 'it' off speedily. They cover their noses when they reluctantly stand beside it in fear.

As long as the Atman resided in the body, and in her prime, the woman derived her beauty. As soon as the Atman left the place, there is no longer any 'woman'. There is only a corpse. It will decompose, rot and putrefy in a very short time and become extremely revolting to the senses. One cannot stay even as further as 50 feet from such a decomposing corpse. The 'woman' without the Atman becomes so unbearable. Only vermin, maggots and worms will feed on such a body. This is what the ignorant man feeds on when he 'enjoys' a woman through the sexual act for recreation and wastes his most precious' Veerya' (semen). Isn't the 'Maya' (illusion) of the Lord very powerful and very cunning? It makes fools out of the so called 'Intelligent and sophisticated men' in a fraction of a second. Even very wise men with very high IQ's do many stupid things while pursuing this bag of filth with a covering of false beauty. That is why the Upanishads call 'Maya' as 'Anirvachaneeya' – 'That which makes the non-existent appear existent'. Only the grace of God and attainment of 'Gnyana' (knowledge of the Atman through self-realization) can ward away 'Maya'. The beauty of the world and woman is nothing but 'Maya'. Let the mind always remember this.

The same applies to the pleasure derived from the five senses (eyes-sight, nose-smell, tongue-taste, ears-sound and skin-touch). These do not produce lasting happiness and are again the cause of bondage. They lead to 'Avidya'(ignorance) and enslave man into suffering. Addiction to any of these ultimately ends in pain. Hence the need for 'Indriya Nigraha' (restraint of the senses). With progress in true Brahmacharya, the senses will come into control in course of time

If one really wants to 'enjoy' beauty, then it is the beauty of the 'Atman' and not the body which is to be enjoyed, for it was the Atman which rendered the body beautiful. This formless, colorless, shapeless and all pervading Atman who occupies the entire universe, it is HIS beauty which is to be enjoyed. He who is none other than the great Almighty 'Parabrahman', who is called the 'Atman' when he resides within the limited body. HIS beauty should be enjoyed through 'Samadhi' (super-consciousness) and 'Kaivalya' (self-realization), for we are no different than HIM. THIS is our real, default state, one of 'Paramananda' (highest bliss). This is the correct reason why one should practice Yoga and Brahmacharya for self-realization and realize the limitations of the impermanent, physical beauty of the world and its objects .

For all those who are interested in 'enjoyment' of the highest order, enjoyment of the beauty of the 'Atman' fractionally/temporarily seen in a woman, self-realization is the answer. One cannot enjoy even one percent of this bliss through sexuality. It is less than a percent in recreational sex, and brings with it weakness, disease, decay, depression and much karma. It binds man to this body and cancels 'Mukti' (liberation). But through self-realization, it is permanently enjoyed to eternity in totality. The realized soul is in a continuous stream of such unending bliss, that a sexual orgasm appears tasteless and like filth. And this is a very poor example to describe 'Brahmananda' (Bliss of the Brahman) which comes while in 'Samadhi' and all the time after 'Kaivalya' (self-realization), for this bliss of the Lord is 'Achinthya' (unimaginable), 'Avarnaneeya' (indescribable) and 'Avyakta' (beyond words and beyond manifestation).

"O Lord Parabrahman, salutations to you, who is the origin of this Universe and all pervading. Who occupies this entire universe in totality extending to infinity. Let us serve your Lotus feet forever, constantly in your thought, with the resultant bliss for food".

Question
My Dear Sir,

Sir our Solar system contains many stars,Planet,Moon , Sun etc , in our scriptures said that there are 1000 of sun in the System, My doubt is that what is the next of each solar system.What is the energy for the movement of each planet??

Sir your effort for making answer to each question is very time taking process, How you can get the time for it?

thanking u Sir

Answer
• Our scriptures call the universe 'Brahmanda'. It is rightly described as an illusion of 'Maya' (for matter is energy in a state of vibration and not really solid) effected by the cosmic dream of the Almighty 'Parabrahman'. It does not exist in reality, for Brahman occupying empty space, extending to infinity is the only reality. The manifest Universe consisting of hundreds of billions of stars and their Solar systems stretches to infinity. The whole concept is the effect of the Lord's cosmic dream. Hence it is governed and run by him through his 'Ichaa shakthi' (will).

A verse in the Upanishads confirms the truth that nothing we see or don't see works on its own energy.

"The Sun does not shine there, neither the Moon, nor the stars. There, these lightnings shine not, how then this fire? Because HE shines, all things shine. By HIS light alone do all these shine".
- Chapter VI/14, Shvetâshvatara Upanishad.

Everything runs on the energy of the Brahman, through his will, being a part of his dream imagination, for everything is contained within HIM. The Sun and the planets, the hundreds of billions of stars and other billions of Solar systems, all these derive energy from HIM and not on their own. Like HIM, they stretch to infinity, being within HIM. All is HIS Leela (play).

Hence it is time that man gave up his high and mighty ego, his arrogance of thinking himself to be the Supreme knower of all and realized himself to be a non-entity as regards claiming doership.

| तस्यादेशेन विना त्रुणमपि न चलति ||
" Tasyaadeshena vina trnamapi na chalati" .

-- "Not even a blade of grass moves without HIS will" say the scriptures.

HE alone is the source of everything and the mover of all things animate and inanimate. By HIS will alone are things created, exist and finally get destroyed. WE as the ego, as individuals do not exist. This assumption of ours, this 'Aham' (ego) as being separate is the cause of all pain and ignorance. It is the cause of our karma. In reality, HE alone exists in Akasha (empty space), formless, colorless, shapeless, extending to infinity. Full of knowledge, existence and bliss, HE exists as the one Supreme monarch without a second. As long as the 'Jiva' (embodied individual) fails to accept this, it is bound by limitation and pain. This belief in the illusion of being separate is the effect of 'Avidya' (ignorance). Upon realization, it merges into the only existence and reality called HIM say the great scriptures.

• Just as everything is an effect of HIS will, every person is HIS creation and every being right unto a blade of grass is working under his commands, the fingers which are typing these words that you read are also being operated by HIM. Why then worry about finding time? THAT creator of time does the needful.

Question
Sir, thank you so much for your time, I always read you. I'm an aspirant and doing my best to commit to Bramacharya in thought, word and deed.

My questions, sir: do Siddhis really exists? have you seen somebody perform a Siddhi? do yourself have acquired some Siddhi?

The concept of Siddhis are very interesting to me, I have read a litle about them but I find some of them impossible that break the laws of nature, like that Siddhi where the person can shrink his/her size to that of a atom, those kind of Siddhi seems more like fable to me, but then there are those that seems and even can be possible, like clairvoyance.

Thank you sir, and have a good day.

Answer
To a cow grazing on grass, the concept of man flying an airplane, manufacturing a cell phone, inventing the internet and creating software programs looks 'miraculous'. It cannot understand how these things are possible. It appears out of the ordinary and superfluous to the cow. It is very hard for a cow to believe these things. The cow can understand eating grass, giving milk, defending itself with its horns and taking a nap in the shade of a tree. It cannot understand these things which man does. If someone were to tell it and make it understand the things which man does using his intellect, the cow in its limited state of consciousness and minute intellect would exclaim - "These are miracles which are magical. It is very hard to really believe these things are possible". But to us using all these facilities, there is nothing miraculous. It is perfectly scientific and very rational. The cow however is in a much more limited state of 'Chith' (consciousness) as compared to us. Its mind, intellect and reasoning do not touch the boundaries of our intellect and reasoning. It cannot talk on the cell phone or pilot an airplane however hard it tries.

The siddhi-s (super-normal powers) which come to the Yogi in the journey of getting closer to the Atman (self) are very similar. There is an expansion in the 'Chith' (consciousness) and awareness of the Yogi as he dissolves layer upon layer of 'Avidya' (ignorance) surrounding his true self or the Atman. As the cow has its limitations, the normal human consciousness also has its limitations. In case of the Yogi, these limitations slowly dissolve with the dissolution of the layers that were obstructing their manifestation.

In reality, there is only one Supreme consciousness pervading all space and time. This is what is called as God-Almighty. When a part of this Supreme consciousness disociates itself from its entirety and associates itself with the limited body and mind, we have what is called as an 'individual consciousness'. An individual ego, a person is formed. He now considers himself separate from the universal consciousness of which he really is a part of. This causes limitation, pain and delusion. The scope and reach of the part of Supreme consciousness restricted to the body and mind become very limited. The cow is in a very, very limited state of consciousness and hence cannot do much. The human being is in a much wider state of consciousness. He can do much more. A Yogi who has attained to a certain spiritual state of advancement finds himself in a much wider scope of consciousness than the normal man. He can do certain things which the common man cannot do and cannot understand. These abilities are called as Siddhi-s (super-normal powers). There is nothing miraculous here. They are perfectly scientific. Nothing in Yoga is unscientific, for Yoga is based on the truth of truths namely the Atman (pure self).

To the Yogi who has attained to some of these abilities, they are very natural. He does not find them outside his scope of operation. But then, these are abilities still within the realm of the world of bondage and illusion. They may be super-normal to the common man, but in terms of the absolute reality (of pure consciousness or the Almighty Brahman); they come nowhere close to the absolute. He can perform and use these powers only in the manifest world or in the higher planes of consciousness and not beyond. They do not help him transcend the planes of worldliness nor help merge into the final plane of pure consciousness (which is the only reality). Rather, he gets bound and attached to the scope derived from these powers and may waste his time and energy exhibiting them or indulging in them without a justified purpose (see: http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2012/1/siddhi-s-powers-yogi.). Such activity poses a very real risk of breaking his practice for attaining 'Kaivalya' (self-realization). All the years of his hard 'Sadhana' (practice) could now get negated and annulled from the karma derived from unwarranted and unjust use of such siddhi-s, for these involve the blossoming of 'Ahamkara' (ego) when used without justification. Hence the wise Yogi does not take pleasure in claiming to possess such powers, nor does he exhibit or perform super-normal actions as a mark of his accomplishments unless directed by God to do so. Those who do so prodded by the ego are not mature Yogi-s. They are novices who are yet to attain to spiritual maturity. The true Yogi conducts himself with great responsibility, for he knows the dangers of such unjustified use.

Sometimes, God himself commands the Yogi to use some of these abilities for the good of mankind. The world afterall is the stage where the Lord displays his 'Leela-s' (divine play) in the drama called life. Under such cases, under the blessings consent and will of the Almighty, the Yogi may perform some feats which appear out of the ordinary for his own betterment or that of a disciple or mankind. This being the will of God, the Yogi does not incur any personal karma. Then it is allright. There are various instances of Yogi-s who have resorted to such actions under the will of the Almighty.

Matter is nothing but energy in a state of vibration. The lesser the frequency of vibration, the more dense matter is. The higher the frequency, the less dense matter becomes. Hence matter in reality is neither solid, liquid or gas but energy in a frequency of vibration. This is why the world of objects is unreal and an illusion of energy. When the Yogi reaches a stage where he can manipulate the frequency governing the energy holding the atoms of objects together at his will, he can make matter behave as he wishes (provided he has developed the ability through the required 'Samyama' (Dharana, Dhyana, Samadhi meditations and provided the same is possible in destiny or the will of God). He does this using his willpower and enormous 'Prana' (vital energy) which comes from conserved and transmuted semen. He has a clear understanding of how these forces of nature function in holding the particles of an object together. For example, in the 'Bhuchari-siddhi' (siddhi of translocation of men or objects) he can make himself or a distant object cover great distances in no time. He can reduce or increase the size of an object and shift it. Using 'Adrishya siddhi' the Yogi can disappear out of sight of the naked eye by preventing light from being reflected off his body or rather being unaccepted by the eye of the observer through manipulating the frequency of transmitted and reflected substratum of light. Using his Pranic energy, he connects to the energy holding and working on the object and makes it work as per his will. It is fully within the laws of science, though outside the understanding of the common man.

Using 'Saraswathi siddhi' (the siddhi by which the essence of great scriptures becomes known to him) along with 'Vak siddhi' (the siddhi of superlative communication) the Yogi can cast a strong impression in the minds of people as regards imparting knowledge and virtue to them. Peole who hear the words or read material written by the Yogi proficient in this siddhi become mesmerized and willfully compelled to follow his instructions or directions. They are so impelled and charmed by the vivacity and clarity of the words that they immediately consent from within to abide by his advice. Knowledge and truth flow seamlessly and effortlessly from the mouth of such a Yogi like the clear waters of a free flowing river. There is great impact on people when he uses this siddhi. Using this siddhi, the Yogi can turn a non-beleiver of God into a believer, a worldly man into one spiritually minded (if possible in the recipient's karma). With his words, he can turn an evil and dishonorable person into one who adopts the principles and tenets of 'Dharma' (righteousness). It is not possible for people to find fault or go against the teachings of such a Yogi, for his words are a reflection of 'Saraswathi' (The goddess of knowledge) and backed by the absolute truth of Brahman (Almighty). Spiritual masters sometimes use this siddhi to reform the society or their students. They use these with good and honorable intentions, for the well being and betterment of mankind and under the will of God.

An Urdhvareta Yogi who has tirelessly transmuted his semen and attained to 'Prana siddhi' (power of control over Prana) can command such siddhi-s. Those with the most surrender and devotion to the Almighty get wide access to these siddhi-s. When the Yogi masters 'Savikalpa Samadhi' to perfection, the gates to these siddhi-s start opening up. His 'Linga Sharira' (astral body) is dense with Ojas from this stage onwards. Much Ojas is required to manipulate Prana this way. There are numerous other siddhi-s which are within the reach of a 'Samadhi Yogi' (one established in Samadhi). However, none of them help reach 'Kaivalya' (self-realization). Rather, they are distractions and impediments if used without justification and for questionable, unwarranted purposes. They prevent his ascension to liberation. Hence the wise Yogi does not focus much on these.

Further to self-realization, the Yogi has become one with God and a new vista of siddhi-s open up to him, to which he never had access before, say the scriptures. He then simply wills and things bear fruit. All his former siddhi-s are then nothing in comparison to the many powers of the Almighty that he has access to. 'Maya' (illusion) is then his servant and not the reverse. He is then never prone to misuse these powers, for he has become one with the Godhead. He is a 'Jivan-mukta' (liberated while alive), an extension of God and at the pinnacle of human accomplishment. This is a state beyond description and should be the only aim of the Yogi. Everything else pales in comparison to this objective.

sir i usually have sex 3 times a weak.so can i take that.
will it be useful to me...?
can i take it for long term before sex.

Answer
1. Drugs, supplements, sexual revitalizers/energizers cause harm in the long run by weakening the human system and lead to dysfunction of various organs and diseases. They should not be used.

2. The purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. One should reduce the frequency of recreational intercourse in marriage, stop it and finally adopt complete Brahmacharya if physical, mental and spiritual well being are desired. Semen is meant for reproduction and not meant to be wasted for entertainment. Read each and every past answer for details on the dangers of recreational sex and how to establish Brahmacharya.

3. The query posed regarding overcoming 'Premature ejaculation' has been answered as this condition becomes an impediment to procreation (producing offspring) in married couples. The purpose of this portal being 'Brahmacharya', topics related to prolonging recreational sex do not come under its purview. Hence further elaborations on the topic will not be taken up.

Question
hello dhananjay
please tell us how can we control vritis of mind?does it ever possible for a weak or ordinary person?

Answer
|योगस्चित्त व्रुत्ति निरोधह ||
| Yogaschitta vritti nirodhaha ||

- ‘Cessation of the modifications of the Vritti-s (mind stuff) is Yoga’

-- Chapter I/ Verse 2, 'Yoga Darshana'

This is how Sage Pathanjali defines Yoga. Hence it follows that employment of Yogic practices with a Yogic lifestyle based on Brahmacharya will lead to 'Yoga' or the cessation of the modifications of the mind. The results which accrue further to annulling the modifications of 'Chitta' (the mind stuff) has been explained in the next verse,

| तदा द्रस्टुहु स्वरुपे अवस्थानं ||
| Tada drastuhu svarupe avasthânam ||

- 'Then the seer is established in itself'
-- Chapter I/ Verse 3, 'Yoga Darshana'

When there is complete cessation of the 'Vritti-s' (modifications) of the mind, then the 'seer' (pure consciousness or Atman) experiences his own, true nature. He becomes anchored or established in his own self. In the state of the mind filled with 'Virtti-s', the Atman cannot experience his true nature, though the Atman is always pure consciousness. Such a state of cessation of modifications of the mind stuff occurs while in 'Samadhi' (super-consciousness) and are retained forever after 'Kaivalya' (self-realization).

How does one control these Vritti-s?

| अभ्यास वैराग्याभ्याम तन्निरोधह ||
| Abhyâsa vairâgyabhyâm tannirodhaha||

-'Their (Vritti's) cessation is brought about through 'practice' and 'dispassion'.
-- Chapter I/ Verse 12, 'Yoga Darshana'

The word 'Abhyâsa' (practice) here refers to all those activities that are indulged in to perfect a life of Yoga. These include the entire chain from Yama-Niyama-s to Samadhi. They also include aspects of lifestyle such as waking up early, correct type of food, clean habits etc...

The word 'Vairagya' refers to developing dispassion to the world and its objects .The offerings and activities of the world do not do anything more than tickle the 'Indriya-s' (sense organs). This appears pleasurable at the start but ends in pain. Hence the Yogi develops dispassion as regards these, for they are an effect of 'Maya' (illusion) and not real. Thus the control of Vritti-s is achievable when an honest and sincere life of Yoga and Brahmacharya is applied. This is why one should aim for Samadhi and self-realization. With such a lifestyle, the 'Avidya' (ignorance surrounding the Atman, which is the cause of Vritti-s) gradually dissolves, leading to a state free from Vritti-s in course of time, resulting in Kaivalya (self-realization).

If carried out correctly, the aspirant, even if he be of a weak mind eventually becomes strong minded and fit to derive the benefits of Yoga by the grace of God. Hence one should strive to be a Yogi.

Answer

A drama artist plays his role on stage and goes back home which represents reality. The man in the path of self-realization is the artist, life is the stage, life experiences are the scenes in the drama and God is the reality called home. Just as the artist does not let his onstage experiences affect his life at home, a real Sadhak (aspirant) does not let the happenings or non-happenings of this drama called life affect his mental equilibrium. He is engaged in doing all actions not for himself but for God. Hence all 365 days X 24 hours, he spends for God. This is spirituality. Spirituality does not mean one has to renounce all work and sit in a cave in the middle of nowhere. Spirituality means offering all actions as a service to God. Such a man is in the thought of God, reminding himself of the unrerality of this world, without being attached to it and yet working in it externally.

One's destiny is the will of the Almighty. HE gives each and every being some work or the other. Man's job is to attend to this work with sincerity and devotion WITHOUT attachment to the work or its results and WITH attachment to God and God alone. Where now is the question of setting aside time for God? One is in the thought of God by surrendering all actions as offerings to HIM. Such a man does not have to set aside time for God, for he is always in the thought of God, performing the duty assigned to him by God.

Saying –"I will give up my job, all my commitments, my family and sit in God-meditation from morning to evening in a forest is not spirituality. It is only a wrong understanding of spirituality. God himself does not like it nor will HE let it happen unless that itself is one's destiny. Of course, one is most welcome to sit in God-meditation through the day if time permits or when one is free, for there is no better way to make the mind free of 'Vritti-s' (modifications) than through meditation and thereby burn the past impressions through Samadhi. But this should not become a means to escape the responsibilities of life due on a person through destiny. One should always be true to one's duty. There is only one duty for man and that is the attainment of 'Kaivalya' (self-realization); but this liberation is attainable only through getting done with the other activities which destiny offers (as a result of one's past karma) along with some time set aside for Yogic practices on a daily basis and not by giving up/escaping from what one is supposed to do.

One should attend to the work given by destiny (God) with commitment and honesty but WITHOUT attachment to the fruits. This is the highest spirituality which gives real results. A time will come when God himself reduces external commitments and worldly responsibilities. He then makes the aspirant devote more time/focus on staying put in a place and indulge in seclusion for continuous Samadhi. Till then, one should get done with those responsibilities that form a part of one's destiny and use the remaining time for Yogic practices. One should be in a state of meditation all the time (though it may not be possible to formally sit in a pose), thinking of God while attending to external work. This helps one become really spiritual. Whether the work is internal or external does not matter. What matters is doing the duty that is assigned by God, for God, as a service to God and not for oneself.

Such a man is not bothered whether God makes him a lawyer, doctor, carpenter, fisherman, actor or something else. All these are akin to the role of a drama artist in the drama called life. Just as the artist works sincerely while acting and is waiting to get back home, the real spiritualist works sincerely at the work offered by destiny and is waiting to free his mind for deeper God-contemplation or meditation as and when time permits. He is content with what comes through chance and not money minded/oriented towards worldly indulgence. Whether much money comes or does not come through his work, he does not bother, for God knows best. If God wills, he may become very rich, or he may remain poor or somewhere in-between. These things do not matter, for they are a part of this unreal illusion called life drama. His intention is to spend time on the thought of God and God alone, reminding himself to be the all pervading 'Atman' and not the body or mind. Such an attitude without attachment to the world makes the practice of Brahmacharya easier and natural. If Yoga and Brahmacharya are practiced with such a perspective, life becomes very enjoyable.

Lord Krishna describes this in the Bhagavad-Gita:

• "Having abandoned attachment to the fruits of action, ever content, depending on nothing, he does not do anything, though engaged in actions." – Chapter 4/ Verse 20.

• "Without hope (for the fruits of actions), with the mind and self controlled, having abandoned all attachment for possessions, doing mere bodily actions, he incurs no sin" – Chapter 4/ Verse 21.

There have been cases where people have attained self-realization within minutes (further to their past efforts for 'Mukti' having ripened), while many others take hundreds of lifetimes. The span of 12 years is a general time frame denoting conservation of Prana through Brahmacharya. Let it take a few minutes or a few lifetimes, why worry? Our right is to the effort alone and not to the fruits. We put in our best efforts towards self-realization in the thought of God, without wasting time on worldly attachments. We leave the rest to God. We are not concerned with the fruits of our actions, though we try hard for the best progress. HE decides whether we require 12 minutes, 12 years or 12 lifetimes. That is not our concern.

Question
Sir,
Will practice of brahmacharya for about 6 months help to restore normal vision???

Answer
1. Vision will start to improve after 1 year of unbroken Brahmacharya carried out with Yogic practices & lifestyle.

2. Depending on the extent of deviation from normal vision and the cause behind it, it will take a few years of correct, unbroken practice to restore normal vision. It may take longer if the defect is severe.

One of the first signs of debility due to loss of semen is defective vision. Many people develop vision defects right from their mid twenties due to such wastage. Most people consider it normal to require reading glasses after the age of 40. In reality, this is not normal. This is one of the after effects of the loss of vital fluid for recreation in both men & women. Those who practice unbroken Brahmacharya generally do not get vision defects. They do not get long-sight even after the age of 40 (unless there is a genetic or other cause). They can generally read perfectly and see clearly without spectacles for as long as they live. They have a high chance of maintaining normal vision throughout.

Question
Hello sir
I have many topics on which i would like to have your insights.

I'm currently getting more and more involved in a playing card game, where you don't bet money but you can collect cards.
Cards have a financial value, some are worth a lot and i realise i could make a living by buying low lots of cards and selling them to a higher price to players, or trading cards with them for a better price.
You can also invest in cards you think to be good and sell them when the market rise their value.
It's like a mini-market place.
i would like to add some things about myself, not to talk too much but i want you to have a clear picture of the situation.
I'm a pretty independent person and i had several unpleasant experiences in the working field. I have a very critical look on society and i consider that working a full life time is getting robed, and participating in the destruction of the planet.This is not lazyness, i really mean it. I hate the atmosphere on some work place. Although i consider myself to be quite smart and i'm very attracted to business activities.
I think i could get enough money for my personal projects by doing this and i would enjoy doing this.I don't love money and i'm not a greedy person but i really need enough money to be able to live my own way. Since my childhood i always wanted to gain financial independance and autonomy.I don't spend my money on drugs, on vice things, and i enjoy sharing it with nice people. But for now, i'm not rich at all!

Before massively engaging in some business activities, there are some questions who are on my mind.
I'm very aware that you have to respect karmic laws, therefore i'm very concerned about how business is considered by karma forces. I mean when you buy or sell you always have to try to get the better of the situation. How is haggling considered ? Just a very simple exemple to make you understand : i go talk to John, haggle with him and buy a card 5$ which has a financial value of 7$. Then i go with jack, haggle with him and sell him the card for 8$ and another card .

Of course i don't cross the line and never ask too much for a card, i don't do indescent deal, i don't want to rob people. But i always try to get a financial advantage . You also have to consider that you put some time and efforts in trying to find good deals.

I find haggling a very interesting activity, and i don't feel like working when i do it, it is pleasant to me.I rather do this than a painful and low-paid job, where you have to fake happyness everyday.

On a more general view, how is money considered in spirituality ? In my opinion, you can't just say it is bad because you need it, on the other way, you have to earn it one way or another being the more ethical as possible.

In a far future, i plan on investing in houses and rent them to make a living. Would you consider such a way of living as a sin ?

On a completely other topic, i would like to talk about Thanas and samskara.

Thanas are from what i understand desires. Some are good and some are bad. From my experience, hiking in nature is a good thana, it provides you health, peace of mind and harmony with mother nature(i like nature very much). From my experience, desire for relationships with women is a very bad thana and leads to jealousy, tiredness, depression, materialism, sexual craving, lust....That is why i know practise brahmacharya since a year, with good results.
How can you distinguish between good and bad thanas ? Some are obvious, but some not. Before coming to the conclusion that sex was unhealthy,and relationships were very spiritually harmful,it took me quite a bunch of time and some painful experiences.

To finish, a last question concerning Samskaras : i consider them to be memories we keep from our past, and they influence us a lot. It is body memory. For exemple you can keep a bad memory of a specific town because you had a bad experience there, and the emotions you feel are illogicals, uncontrolable and you can't go into that town without being very disturbed emotionally. Therefore you have to purify yourself and gradually expose to the place so the memories can leave you.
It is my understanding but i would like to know what you can share with me about this topic, and how to purify these toxics memories of the mind.

I gratefully thank you for reading my long post and for your insights which will be of a great help to me.

Be blessed

Answer
1. As long as man indulges in any rightful form of living that does not amount to going against the Yama-Niyama-s of Yoga, the proceeds derived from such actions are legitimate. Effort applied to lawfully earn the money required to ensure the basic necessities of life (food, clothing and shelter) is legitimate and does not result in adverse results/karma. When a call is taken on the nature of activity you describe with regard to the above parameters, your inner voice will tell you if it is correct or wrong.

2. Money is neither good, nor bad. It is an instrument of exchange. It is the purpose and intention with which it is sought after than makes money give good or bad results. When money is earned to source the basic necessities or a few simple wants of life in a lawful and legitimate way, it doesn’t cause trouble. Such money is meant for the purpose of sustainence. When money is sought after for reasons beyond these, it leads to sorrow. The same applies to the sexual act. Sexual activity by itself is neither good nor bad. It is the purpose of use that gives good or bad results. If used for procreating a child, there is no harm. If used for any other purpose, it eventually causes harm. Similar are associations with the opposite sex. If the association is intended at marriage and to raise a family at the earliest, there is no harm. If the association is sought after for reasons beyond these, it is a waste of resources that ends in sorrow.

3. If the money that went into investment on these houses is legitimate, there is no sin in as regards the lawful proceeds derived from letting.

4. Any activity which directly or indirectly becomes an impediment to 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) is to be avoided. Sometimes, one's occupation or life circumstances (carried out for sustainence) may involve certain activities which are not exactly helpful to proceed on the path of realizing the self. One might not have much opportunity to get free of such an occupation or life circumstance all of a sudden. The way out then is to stay calm and persevere in those activities carried out for the purpose of self-realization to the best possible extent with devotion to God. This eventually paves way towards betterment.

5. Persist in a life of virtue, purity and Godliness. The answers will appear all by themselves.

Question
Hello Sir,

I am a regular reader of you since last 3 months. Many thanks to you for providing guidance. I feel the information you are giving is very beneficial but it's reaching to a limited set of people who by help of God grace are able to find it.

I would like to know if you have published any book on this topic or are you sharing this knowledge using some other medium. Please let me know if I can be of any help in this.

Thanks,

Answer
Everything in this world and beyond occurs by the grace of the Almighty Lord. His will and intention back each and every happening. The world is a stage where HE enacts his 'Leela' (divine play) assuming various forms and bodies. When the 'Jiva' (life entity) within this body and mind considers itself separate as an individual, 'Avidya' (ignorance) begins and leads to sorrow. As soon the 'Jiva' realizes the fallacy of its separate existence, the Leela is over. Then there is no 'individual'. He merges into the Supreme. The Lord himself resides in such a body in total. This is why a realized sage is called 'Brahma-svarupi' (Almighty-Brahman himself in flesh and blood).

One can author a book related to 'Brahma vidya' (means of attaining to the Supreme) only after 'Atma Gnyana' (knowledge of the self) gets perfected further to 'Kaivalya' (self-realization). Till then, one can share what little he knows with a well wishing attitude for the welfare of others but not more. Till then, one is not/cannot be a 'Guru' (master). He is only a 'Sadhak' (aspirant). I'm a 'Sadhak'.

My interactions are limited to this portal. This path of Brahmacharya which leads to 'Brahma Gnyana' (realization of the Supreme) is for the chosen few, though all Jiva-s (embodied souls) ultimately attain to it. When the Jiva is ready to take up this path, 'Vidya' (knowledge) comes. Like all other things, the Lord decides who should tread or not tread this path for now.

Question

Sir, I thank the almighty for sending you to rescue people like me who have been struggling to get established in brahmacharya. Before asking my question I would like to give you a small picture of my life's past 8 years.I'm 24 yrs old.

I used to wrestle at traditional akharas in my teens(14-16 yrs of age) & I was d best in terms of physical health, strenth & gurus of not only of my akhara but of other akaharas as well used to say that I have all the qualities to compete at world stage. However due to family pressure wrestling took backstage & I had to focus on studies. During the course of my science studies after 10th I got into the habit of masturbation.

I was doing this act quite frequently for 1 year until I got to know what damage I've done to myself in terms of physical health,studies & in every area where I was excelling a year before. I stopped it completely than however than this nightfall thing started to happen. Since the day I remember nihtfalls are happening to me on an avg twice a week with maximum gap of 8-10 days achieved few tyms. I nvr run from hard work & I'm well settled career wise. I continuously indulge in physical exercises & take good nutritious diet & the kind of diet I take & the amount of exercises I do I can easily outmatch any bodybuilder in my gym in just a month if I could go a month without a night fall. It has happened once two years back & I still have stretch marks on my biceps & shoulders of that period signifying the progress I made in that short period.

I'm not bragging about myself I just want to indicate that If these nightfalls stop I can literally do & achieve anything what I aspire in my life.Somehow till date I've managed to maintain my health & career at this depleted level of energy but nw I find it difficult to sustain. It's like I know I'm a ferrari car & I'm not able to accelerate more than 40km/h howsoever hard I try.I start new routines & plans with great zest & motivation but as soon as these nocturnal emmisions kick in I'm not able to sustain my motivation.

Below mentioned is my new routine I want you to please add or delete whatever you think is fit/unfit to attain brahmacharya & get rid of nightfalls.

wake up at 04:00 Hrs, take a bath do asanas for 1/2 hour(sir pls give me a list of asanas that would help best to avoid nightfalls) than do nadi shodhna(1/2 Hr) & pranayam(1/2) as detailed in previous answers

& than meditate for 1/2 on god

Throughout the day I would keep myself occupied with studies or official work.

In evening I would do physical exercises like push ups & pull ups with a increment goal of two count daily(taking a day off in a week) & go to sleep by 09:30 PM.

My diet would be for breakfast a banana,3/4 ltr milk& 60 gms soyabean shake. Lunch by 02:00 pm OF 3 chapatis, sabzi & curd.

Protien shake at 06:00 PM & than do excercise as mentioned &

Take dinner by 08:30 PM.

I won't ever watch T.V or read newspaper again as well.

I regret being too long. For me it's a finishing sprint either I would win or collapse doing it but this time I won't give up coz of nightfalls.

My goals are stop nightfalls for ever, get established in celibacy & build maximum possible physical strenth.

Awaiting your valuable guidance.

Answer
YOGIC PRACTICE:
1. On sitting for Yogic practice, one should first mentally prostrate before the Almighty Lord and the Guru (master) [if any], requesting virtue, purity and self-realization.

2. Perform the following Asana-s, both in the morning and evening in the given order:
- Padmasana
- Sidhasana
- Ardha-Paschimothanasana
- Paschimothanasana
- Halasana
- Sarvangasana
- Dhanurasana
- Padahastasana
- Chakrasana
- Shirshasana

The breathing and movements while performing Asana-s should be slow, smooth and unhurried. One should maintain a calm and peaceful state of mind without encouraging any other thoughts during Yogic practice.

3. Perform each of the three Bandha-s (Mula, Uddiyana & Jaalandhara) - 3 times.

4. Perform 'Nadi Shodhana' for five minutes.

5. Perform Pranayama, 6-sets, of as many counts as currently being performed. Gradually increase the counts as has been described in past answers.

6. Meditate on God as described in past answers.

One should not ask for anything in return from God during meditation. Meditation should be fueled by love, devotion and surrender to God. Our's is to strive to the best of our efforts in the prescribed manner. We do all these practices because that is our 'Dharma'. We are not concerned with the results of our actions. That, God decides. We accept his wish.

This regimen of Yogic practice should be applied both in the morning and evening without fail. Always take some light food after Yogic practice. Do not keep the stomach empty.

DIET:
1. Let breakfast be the largest meal of the day. It should be had as early as possible, latest by 8.30 A.M. Include complex carbohydrates such as grains.

2. Lunch should be smaller than breakfast.

3. Dinner should be the smallest meal of the day. The correct time for dinner is just before/at Sunset, after Yogic practice. If this is not possible, it should be had as early as possible and not late night. If activity at the gym can be shifted to morning hours (after Yogic practice) it will help greatly, making the evening hours free for Yoga, relaxation and early dinner.

Dinner should comprise mostly of raw fruits/cut vegetables (as explained in past answers) and some milk. This is the correct Yogic diet. By eating dinner early, the stomach gets enough time for digestion before sleep. By eating only raw fruits/vegetables and milk, the stomach is not loaded and functions easily at the end of the day, for these are easily digestible. A loaded stomach at night can cause wet dreams. At the start of such a diet, one might feel hungry despite the fruit meal. Then one can take some light food along with the fruits. As one becomes established in unbroken Brahmacharya without frequent nightfall, there will be an automatic reduction in the need for food.

The true Brahmachari is always in the thought of God. Even while attending to work, his mind is offering all actions being performed as a token of his love for God. His attitude is - "O Lord, you have given me these actions/jobs so I can lighten my past karma. By indulging in these actions, I am working out my destiny which is nothing but your will and 'Leela' (divine play). I am not worried about the nature of the action or its result, for I follow a life governed by the Yama-Niyama-s of Yoga. Whatever you give me, I accept. Whatever comes by chance, I am content. My only aim is to reach you and become one with you. In this divine drama of yours called life, I enact like an actor, playing the role given to him ."

This regimen if followed strictly and sincerely with devotion to God will help one overcome the problem of frequent wet dreams. With such honest practice followed with the other rules of Brahmacharya and through the grace of God, wet dreams will gradually taper away. They will completely disappear after a few years of unbroken Brahmacharya. When 'Samadhi meditation' gets established, one will become an Urdhvareta. Among the many causes of wet dreams, strong sexual Samskara-s (past impressions) are the main. These gradually dissolve through the above mentioned practice carried out twice a day. One should patiently indulge in practice without haste. All things happen when the time is right, by the grace of God and when the efforts applied have reached the level of cancelling past negative karma. So till then, one should not worry about the results but only indulge in efforts. When genuine efforts are carried out for a long time, the Lord gives results.

Question

I am so frustrated, I keep promising myself I will never give back in to masturbation and after a few weeks or months I give in. I had a relapse this morning, it was triggered by an accidental stimulation of genitals whilst sleeping, as my frenulum and tip of penis is highly sensetive.

I became a very bad wanker (literally) after that, and really feel depressed- and dirty. I badly want to recover, and am trying a way to get rid of all pleasurable sensations in the root of the penis- I also must try and avoid staring at my penis, as this tempts me to pull down my underwear and greatly increases the likely hood that I will masturbate!

Answer

Wearing a 'Kaupin' (traditional Indian loin cloth) will prevent accidental penile stimulation/erection. Ordinay underwear does not offer this advantage and makes the penis susceptible to stimulation. The 'Kaupin' is an asset for the Brahmachari for strength, health and continence. See: http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2012/1/underwear-brahmachary

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

After several years of struggle with Brhamacharya, I was inspired by your answers here and strated practising strict brahmacharya again since Dec of 2011. I started waking up early and did pranayamas, bandhas and meditation every day, 15 mins of pranayama/bandhas and 60 mins of meditation every morning and evening. The meditations got deeper and deeper and the bliss of pure soul started expressing. Towards the end of the first month, some strong urges started coming, but I persevered with the practise and by lord's grace brahmacharya prevailed.

Then in February, I made a trip to India. India was different. There were no sexual urges at all during the entire trip. Seems like Indian women don't tend to pull my energy towards lower chakras. So Brahmacharya was relatively easy. However Meditation was a different thing. I was meditating 6-8 hours a day during the first two weeks or so. However the only peace I felt were during the morning meditation around 4:30, all other times I was feeling a lot of turbulence during meditation. I wasn't having any thoughts in my mind, but just the meditations were not peaceful. Even when I visited holy places like Tiruvannamalai, I did not experience much peace there expect during giripradakshina around the hill at brahma muhurta. Then I went to Mumbai attend a Gnan vidhi ceremony with one of my Guru Shri Deepakbhai. After that felt a lot of peace. However the body became sick (got cold/fever during travelling), so for the next several days, I could not practise pranayama/meditation.

Then in the first week of March I returned to the U.S. Due to Jet lag there was some problem with waking up on time. But I did meditation and pranayama/bandha once a day for a few days and the meditation was very deep and peaceful unlike in India. However, there were too many sexual urges during the day. It seems like I had forgotted how to handle these urges as the urgeless trip in India made me forget all about sex. The urges continued for 3 days intermittently. It would go away and come back. I was wide awake in bed restlessly trying to deal with these urges. I did bandhas and they helped, but eventually urges returned. I was rolling in bed and lingam got too stimulated and I gave into the urge. 2.5 months of effort was completely wasted. I resolved that I would just consider it as a slip and not let it replase. However I must shamefully admit that over the last two days, I again gave into urges twise.

I just wanted to write to you do to do this alochana. I want to get back on track on Brahmacharya quickly. So kindly seek some inspirational words from you. I started waking up early again and am doing my Pranayama, bandhas and meditation. By lord's grace, the grace is still flowing during meditation and I feel a lot of peace and bliss. Want to make sure I return to full brahmacharya ASAP.

I also have a few questions:
1. Do you have any thoughts on why my meditaiton in U.S. is much deeper than in India? Isn't India supposed to be a more spiritually vibrant country? Is it because I was not living alone in India (I was visiting my parents house, and even when I visited Tiruvannamalai Ashram I was sharing room with another guy). Do you think being alone is important for peaceful meditation? Also if the meditation is turbulent, does it mean that it is useless or is it still good to meditate even if mind doesn't like it sometimes? (At times I was meditating 6-8 hours a day as I had a lot of time in India). I read in a book (The most direct means to eternal bliss) that we need to build our practise such that we are meditating at least 12hrs a day before final liberation.

2. Why do I seem to lose my ability to remain in Brahmacharya after visiting India? Even last time I had sucessfully completed 4 months of brahmacharaya. Then I went to India, no sexual thoughts or urges for one month, and when I returned to U.S., I slipped. The same thing happened to me this time. Do you think perhaps the contrast between the purity in India and the sexualized atmosphere here in the U.S. is causing the problem after return?
3. Recently after the slip, my mind is playing tricks with me. Seems like some kind of avaran has come over my mind. It tells me "What is wrong with enjoying the body. Just enjoy as long as it lasts. The meditation and peace seem to be unaffected by your indulgence, so what is wrong in it." I am sure this is nonsense and the bliss in meditation is because of past efforts of brhmacharya and the lord's grace and continual slippage is not healthy. Please give me the best antidote to counter the arguments of mind against brahmacharya. Today I feel pretty clear about brahmachrya. But want to be prepared if that thought shows up. I will also read all your past answers again, I am sure it will help rekindle motivation.

Thank you,
Jai sat chit anand

Answer
1. The body and mind get used to the living environment and adapt themselves accordingly. Hence a Yogi should to the best possible extent avoid extensive travel/relocation. Till self-realization is achieved, the body and mind are susceptible to changes in the environment. The disruptions in internal energy caused by travel can disrupt one's mental equillibrium. This affects meditation. While the vibrations in India are no doubt more spiritual in nature compared to other places, it takes constancy and continuous living in one place for these vibrations to stabilize, soak and settle into one's system.

Janasangaviraktaha – 'One who stays away from and avoids the company of people, being disinterested towards the same' -- This is the word Lord Shiva uses while describing to Goddess Parvathi the nature of the Yogin treading the path of 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) in the work Shiva Samhita . One should avoid the company of people to the best extent possible. Interaction and mixing leads to loss of Prana, lack of concentration and inundation with worldly, sensual vibrations. One should not talk about one's 'Sadhana' (practice) with people. The practice, advancement and the experiences should not be shared with others on a one on one basis. These are private and personal, solely between the aspirant and God. Making them known to others becomes an impediment to Sadhana.

एकाकी यतचित्तात्मा निराशीरपरिग्रहह ||

"Let the Yogi strive constantly to keep the mind steady, remaining in solitude (alone), aloof, with the mind and body controlled through focus on the Atman, free from hope and greed"
- Chapter 6/ Verse 10, the Bhagavad Gita.

This is how the Yogi should conduct himself says Lord Krishna to Arjuna. Interactions with the world beyond the required limit cause distraction and take the 'Sadhak' (aspirant) away from the state of tranquility that he is trying to achieve with much effort. His mind gets flooded with ‘Chitta vritti-s’ (multiple modifications of the mind stuff). Where then is Yoga? He loses his composure and reverts to his former state of worldliness which invariably results in a break.

2. It is inevitable that the beginner finds turbulence in meditation. Strong past Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasanas (tendencies) often surface during meditation and lead to this state of unrest. Let one not worry about these. Let efforts be applied honestly and sincerely without dilution as regards Brahmacharya and meditation. Meditation eventually becomes more steady and deep in course of time.

There is no hard and fast rule as regards the number of hours one has to spend in meditation. One should meditate as often as possible and whenever time permits. As one becomes purer through Brahmacharya and Yoga, meditation automatically becomes longer and deeper. When one attains to ‘Nirvikalpa Samadhi’ (non-dual super-consciousness), time stops and eternity starts. Then the Yogi will not know how long he has sat in meditation without food, water and breath at a stretch. It may be hours, days or months. Others have to then keep track of time for him. Till then, let meditation be carried out with love, affection and devotion to the Lord for as long as possible.

3. Till one attains ‘’Siddhi’ (perfection) as regards retaining semen, there is always the chance of a break. This siddhi comes upon becoming an Urdhvaretha further to perfecting ‘Savikalpa Samadhi’. It comes through the grace of God and not by other means. Till then, efforts should be Herculean. However, further to attaining to a year or year and half of unbroken Brahmacharya without a single voluntary loss, the aspirant becomes capable of retaining his semen in the waking state, though the same may not be said of ‘Swapna’ (dream state). The only way to forge ahead is through constant, sincere practice and meditation with devotion to God. Physical and intellectual activity will also be required in adequacy till one becomes an Urdhvareta so as to effectively transmute semen.

For the 'Divya Sharira' (divine body of Yoga) to develop, there is a need for 'Bhuta Siddhi' (complete purification of the five elements in the body). This purification is carried out by the conserved and transmuted Veerya and perfected in Savikalpa Samadhi. As the levels of Prana (vital energy) within the body increase with unbroken Brahmacharya, Prana leverages 'Ashuddhi' (toxins and impurities) at each Chakra (confluence of astral energy channels) and expels them. The Brahmachari experiences a related illness each time a toxin surfaces. The rate of incidence of such illness depends on the impurity at each chakra. The more the impurity, the longer the time required for purification. These illnesses are not of the kind faced by the common man as regards their cause. They arise because the toxin representing them has surfaced whilst being vacated. They persist for some time and then disappear. This purification should be welcomed, for the aspirant is being offered the chance to free himself of the toxins of past karma at the physical level. By the time the Brahmachari becomes an Urdhvareta, he will have vacated all these toxins which are the cause of disease or ill-health. Then comes to the Yogin the divine body which is immune to disease.

Wear a ‘Kaupin’ (traditional Indian loin cloth) and not the regular brief. This helps promote Brahmacharya at the physical level. The support and firm grip that the ‘Kaupin’ provides does not come with any other undergarment. Much Prana and hence Veerya is conserved by using the 'Kaupin'. The very sight of the ‘Kaupin’ is a reminder to the aspirant of his Brahmacharya. It’s single loop knot with two free ends (3 ends in total) represent the ‘Trinity (Brahma, Vishnu, Maheshwara). This is the divine significance of the knot. It will help the Brahmachari remind himself of his objective.

4. Meditation will become shallow and eventually stop further to much loss of 'Veerya' (semen). To the one who cannot meditate (merge into God), there is no 'Kaivalya' (self-realization). The mind becomes worldly and prone to much pain and suffering through loss of semen. That calmness, serenity and tranquility of the Atman which comes through conservation and transmutation of Veerya will disappear in no time. The pain and sorrow which an established Brahmachari begets further to a break, either voluntary or involuntary cannot be described in words. His very world dissolves and disintegrates further to such loss, for by loss of 'Rethas' (sexual fluid) one loses his very Atman (soul). Rethas is the representation of the Atman at the gross level. He who loses his vital fluid eventually loses his very self. He is like an unguided 'Patanga' (kite) whose strings have been cut and is fast receeding into the land of sorrow. All of one's spiritual attainments get negated by such action. Read past answers on the unreality of the filthy nature of the body and the reality of the Atman who is the source of all beauty.

Question
Hello Dhananjay

Been very helpful reading your insightful words.

My names is James, Im 25 and from Australia.

My question is i have been Celibate for about 2 years give or take for questions other the Brahmacharya. (only just found out about Brahmacharya) seems i already live allot of the principles.

I Am at the point where i do not get any sexual thoughts, or get any though provoking desires to do so consciously. The things is i do get arousal of the lingam without any though or visual stimulation needing to occur.
It just does.

What is this?, What cause this? and is this a problem?

Thanksyou for your reply James

Answer
Sexual undercurrents present in latency due to past Samakara-s (impressions) & Vasana-s (tendencies) cause arousal when they manifest. This usurping could be voluntary or involuntary. It might not even show itself fully in thought form. There are numerous such latent tendencies present within which are to be got rid through Yoga. It takes time, effort and the grace of God to get over all these and finally attain 'Kaivalya' (self-realization). Till final enlightenment occurs, it is not possible to win complete independence as regards the same.

The reason behind these latent impressions ofcourse is the limitation of 'Avidya' (ignorance) around the Atman (soul). One never knows when a latent impression surfaces, leading to desire. Hence the need for alertness, vigilance and constant effort to clear these past impressions through Yoga.

In the scriptures, there is the description of a pond of clear water covered by green, floating algae like moss. If one were to keep on throwing stones into the pond, the ripples start moving the moss to the circumference of the pond, thereby clearing the central area to reveal sparkling, crystal clear water. If the stone throwing were to be stopped, the moss again covers the pond and obstructs the clear water. The clear, sparkling water is the Atman (pure soul or God), the moss covering it is 'Avidya' (ignorance) and the stones are the efforts applied through Yoga & Brahmacharya. As long as constant efforts are maintained through a life of Yoga, the moss (ignorance) gradually moves to the border of the pond from where it can be removed once and for all through enlightenment. If the efforts were to be stopped, Avidya returns like the moss which floats back and makes the pond dirty again. Just as throwing these pebbles has to be consistent, one's efforts at Yoga and Brahmacharya are to be consistent if liberation is the aim. Till the final state of beatitude is not reached, there is always a chance of the moss coming back and causing trouble.

Question
Dear Brother,

I would like to know if following brahmacharya can help one develop confidence and improve self esteem?

For instance, I have been suffering from low self esteems despite being a graduate and having a good career. The only mistake I did was masturbation for 15 years. And I have seen it engulf my self esteem and confidence. Also, naturally i have a low self esteem due to oppressed upbringing and pent up emotions since young.

I am 29 and have lost my youth to masturbation, lack of confidence and low self esteem.

Can brahmacharya reverse this? The thought that all these years were wasted really pains me sharply. Low self esteem, low confidence is always bringing suicidal tendency. Can brahmacharya really help?

Thanks.

Answer
Confidence, physical and mental strength, cheer, positivism, powerful concentration, exemplary memory and all other notable qualities which help man perform well in life come from the Atman (soul).

Tapping the power of the Atman is possible through Brahmacharya and Brahmacharya alone. There is no other method. Lack of Brahmacharya leads to erosion of these qualities. This is the absolute truth.

The man who is into a life of Abrahmacharya (incontinence) is on the opposite shore and moving farther away from his Atman (true self) with every passing day. He constantly needs some sense stimulation or the other, or life becomes unhappy and boring. Hence he overeats, drinks alcohol, takes recourse to recreational sex, develops other vices and becomes a slave to these. If he does not have vices, he has to spend money on buying something or the other. He has to pamper himself with some external object or the other. But all external objects, sensations and thrills have limitations, for they are all false in terms of the absolute reality. They are all 'Maya' (illusion) and not real. They cannot give lasting happiness to the degenerated Jiva (embodied soul). So he has to indulge in more and more of these to keep him happy. In the process, he loses his physical, mental health and incurs much bondage through karma. His mind becomes a slave to these sensations. They neither give him happiness, nor release him from their grip. It is a very dangerous trap. It is very, very difficult to get free of this trap.

An Urdhvareta Brahmachari on the other hand is full of bliss and self-contentment. You can feel the radiance and power of such a Brahmachari. He has a calm, pleasant, joyous face and demeanor. He maintains silence or speaks very little, yet communicates effectively. He is very sure of himself and his objectives. His aura is surcharged with 'Ojas' (divine astral energy). Ojas helps one accomplish difficult tasks with much ease. The power of Ojas can help one cut through very trying situations with seamless effort. He evokes the feelings of respect and affability in people. His work with people gets done very easily further to the strong impression and charisma surrounding him. Words cannot describe the positivism and power of such a man.

A life of Brahmacharya perfected through a lifestyle of Yoga leads to inundation of such qualities on an ample footing. The established Brahmachari eventually reaches a state where he becomes content in the self by the self. He derives the greatest bliss from the Atman (his true self or God) and does not require anything external for entertainment. Such a Brahmachari is constantly smiling from inward, full of unexplainable happiness and contentment. For no reason, he is happy and full of joy. He does not require a reason or cause to be happy, for he is getting closer to the greatest source of unending 'Ananda' (bliss) – His Atman. The Atman himself is these things to the power of infinity and their personification. 'Sat-Chit-Ananda' (truth-existence-bliss) is the Atman.

This is one's real and true state. Not the other (full of misery and sorrow). We are the Atman and should hence return to our Atmic state. It is our birthright. It is the very purpose of the human birth. We should not let lower traits and emotions rob us of our birthright. We should not become slaves to these and suffer in pain. The purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. If it is extended to recreation, it will lead to sorrow. This is the truth.

Brahmacharya is the greatest 'Pooja' (worship) and 'Tapas' (austerity). There is no worship or ritual higher than Brahmacharya carried out with God devotion for self-realization, so say the scriptures. Such a Brahmachari need not go to any temple, mosque or church. He need not prostrate before any idol or photo of God. His body itself is the greatest and most holy temple. The Atman (soul or Lord) within is the greatest deity. He worships this Atman every day and minute through true Brahmacharya and the true self called Atman, who is none other than the Supreme Almighty gives him the greatest bliss.

||देहो देवालयः प्रोक्तः जीवो देव सनातनः|
त्यजेदज्ञान निर्माल्यं सोऽहं भावेन पूजायेत् ||

"This 'Deha' (body) is a divine temple with the 'Atman' (soul) within as the presiding deity. Discarding the old flowers called 'Agnyana' (ignorance), I worship the great Atman within as no different from the Almighty" - So say the Upanishads.

Self esteem and confidence then appear within the twinkling of an eye. The Brahmachari does not have to try for these. They come unasked and without doubt through honest and sincere Brahmacharya. Practice a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya with honesty and devotion to God. Go through each and every past answer to get clear with the method. Within a year of such practice, there will be impressive improvements on all fronts and the grace of God will make life very meaningful.

Question

Dhananjay,

I have carefully observed the questions and answers since my last inquiry. Somehow the answers usually reflect a question that suits a situation that I am in which is quite strange. I would like to explore the topic of Equilibrium and balance. Would you agree that this world of duality is setup in a way to re-balance the soul through the endless contrasts and polarities? One would be unable to recognize light without darkness and hot without cold. So would you say that it is necessary for the polarities to exist to return to a zero sum equation and ultimately, unity with the Atman?

Obviously the male and female are another expression of duality and it could be argued that the female is "the essence of duality in man" Therefore in order to become whole, I would imagine that it is necessary to transcend gender altogether and recognize ones self as eternal and the body as only a vessel, which has been congruent with your past answers.

My question is if you would agree that this world is like a grinding stone which through the friction of polarity polishes the soul into the middle path of unity and equilibrium ever so gradually. And if that is the case, it stands to reason that the refining process would accelerate upon each cycle of refinement. Perhaps this is the reason why Brahmacharya is so difficult in the beginning stages. Ever since I began, my world has turned upside down, but now the pieces are starting to fit and the freedom I feel is immeasurable.

Answer

This dualistic world of transmigratory existence called 'Samsâra' is an enactment by the Almighty to help the Jiva (embodied soul) evolve further so as to realize itself as an integral part of the 'Parama' (Almighty.) It is a drama meant to help the degenerated soul reclaim its lost state of divinity. After going through the pains and limitations offered by duality, the limited Jiva gives up attachment, superceeds polarity and eventually realizes its true state of infinity. This is the purpose behind 'Samsâra'.

The duality of this world is due to the effect of 'Prakriti' (creative force of nature which is the causation behind matter). Prakriti is feminine, creative energy. Her job is to make the 'Purusa' (soul) overcome illusion and revert to his default state of supremacy. What is called as 'Mâya' (illusive power of creation) is nothing but this feminine energy manifest under the dictates of the Parabrahman (Almighty) to teach a few lessons to the debilitated soul.

This tallies with the reason Sage Patanjali gives as regards the coming together of the Purusa (soul) and Prakriti which is the creative principle behind duality:

| स्वस्वामिशक्त्योः स्वरुपोपलब्धिहेतुहु संयोगः ||

| Sva-svâmi-shaktyoho svarûpa-upalabdhi-hetuhu samyogaha ||

- Chapter 2/ Verse 23, Yoga Darshana

- "The reason behind the union of the Purusa and Prakriti [which enfleshes the soul leading to 'Dehatma Buddhi' (the perception – "I am the body and limited")] is to help the soul unravel its true nature and thereby unwind the powers latent within it."

After going through innumerable births in this quagmire called life, after realizing that life's offerings in the form of desires for objects and the resulting sensations do not give happiness but only pain, the embodied Jiva standing on the foundation of the ego realizes the futility of assuming doership and surrenders to the Supreme. This then helps it get free from the limitations of union with Prakriti and revert to its default state of soverignity.

The initial stages of Yoga & Brahmacharya seem uphill because the path of the embodied soul has to be reversed. Earlier, its path was towards Prakriti (matter & manifestation) while now it is towards its true state beyond manifestation and beyond matter. This is why the Yogi has to develop detachment towards the world and its objects, for these took him away from his true state of bliss and enslaved him to the illusion called pleasure which was really pain. He now has to go against this falsity and towards the truth of his true self (Atman), which is a daunting task at the start. This is also the reason why one must give up pleasure generated from sexual thought/sexual contact with a woman, for such pleasure is the surest means to binding one in more ignorance and pain. This is why Brahmacharya when carried out honestly in thought, word and deed leads to unexplained happiness and joy. This feeling of freedom and bliss is the reverberation of the Jiva celebrating its newfound joy and serenity - its default nature earlier submerged but now getting unearthed.

It is correct to say that the world is a grinding stone which through the illusion called duality polishes the Jivatma (embodied soul) into the 'Shuddhâtma' (pure soul) towards its default state BEYOND duality. The final state that the soul is delivered into further to 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) is then beyond left, right and middle. It is then completely beyond these polarities and orientations, for what is leftover for comparison? Where then is the question of balance? It has reached the state beyond the purview of balance, for balance exists within duality and is non-existent in non-duality. The question of balance exists as long as one is under the domain of two equal and opposite forces. There is no concept of balance once duality has been surpassed. Then the soul has become infinite in every sense through amalgamation with the Supreme. It has realized its true state and become THAT. Then there is only infinity for eternity. It is then a continuous stream of 'Sat-Chit-Ananda' (knowledge-existence-bliss.)

Question

Dear Dhananjay,

Is there any hope of reversal for someone like me who have lived life like such -
1) Been masturbating since 13, I am 29 now. Masturbated heavily averaging about 5 times per day till-year.

2) But never had sex with anyone.Still a virgin.
3) Obese with high belly fat
4) Always feel weak physically
5) Always fantasizing any woman I come across
6) Too lazy to pick up physical exercises
7) Always depressed, anxious and unsure about myself.

Is there anyway to revert my life? Or is it too late at 29?

I somehow came across your site and thought of trying my luck. I am going towards suicide. I feel myself drained. I feel I am abnormal if I do not drain out my semen through masturbation. I always feel buildup of semen. The max days I can stay away from masturbation is 7 days. After that, my sexual tension increases highly. On one time, I feel confident to have conquered sex, a week later, I am getting strong tension for sex.

Sometimes, I feel if I commit suicide, god may grant me a better place.I feel life has gone down the drain. I feel hopeless and terrible. Spirituality seems to have disappeared in my life.I do not have much friends, nor am I close to my family.

Is there any resort for me, or have I came too far off spirituality that I have to destroy this body for a better life somewhere else? Suicide is wrong, but God is all forgiving. I hope God will forgive me and give a better life.

Any advise?

Answer
A life of Yoga & Brahmacharya if carried out honestly and sincerely with devotion to God will salvage the situation and bring things back to normalcy. The past is over and gone; there isn't anything which can be done to reverse it. It is the present and future which are to be streamlined so as to get free of the problem and live life meaningfully.

First and foremost, there must be immense dedication and a strong urge to break free of the situation. One should be prepared to work very hard and with conviction. With such an attitude backed with application should Yoga & Brahmacharya be carried out as a lifestyle.

There is no use contemplating suicide. A Jiva (embodied soul) which takes recourse to this mode of escape gets rebirth in a much more difficult and impossible situation. One's present state of affairs is the result of one's past karma. One who commits suicide adds much more weight to this existing load of karma. He will without doubt find himself in an extremely agonizing situation in the next birth with unbearable suffering. God forgives erring souls who repent for their mistakes; not those who commit more mistakes with full cognition and awareness. The laws of existence always have their way. No one is above these laws. Each and every person has to eventually settle his karmic account. One has to pay even for the mistakes committed unknowingly/unintentionally; what then to say about suicide committed willingly? Hence suicide is a foolish act which worsens the situation and brings no respite.

Lead a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya as has been explained in past answers. Re-orient your lifestyle in the Yogic way. "Nâsti Yogât param balam" – "There is no power higher than that of Yoga" says Lord Krishna in the Bhagavad-Gita. A life of Yoga is the most divine and purifying of all lifestyles. One who is in the path of Yoga for self-realization is higher than all others. No ritualistic/vedic worship can match the effects of a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya. Yoga is the direct path to overcome all sorts of suffering.

Gradually increase the period of Brahmacharya to ten days, then to twelve days, fifteen days and so on. Then extend it to a month, two months, many months and finally life-long. Wake up at 4.00 A.M and perform Asana, Bandha, Nâdi shodhana, Pranayama and God-meditation as described in past answers. Repeat the procedure in the evening before Sunset. Within a few months, the problem will come under control. Within a year of such honest practice, things will become easier to handle with greater physical, mental energy leading to focus. Your life will take a new direction. You will develop the zeal and zest to make Brahmacharya your default mode of lifestyle. Indulge in physical acitivity/exercise whenever possible. Take a simple vegetarian diet as explained. Pray to God for success. Read each and every past answer and get clear with the methods to be employed. Many people who were in a similar state have become successful Brahmachari-s and are today leading a happy, virtuous and spiritual life of contentment and joy by the grace of the Almighty. They are steadily progressing towards the path of self-realization. If the efforts are genuine and sincere, success eventually comes without doubt.

Question
Hello Danvijay,

You previously advised me to follow unbroken Celibacy for a period of 1 year to come out of the pathetic state of life that I was living because of my habit of excessive masturbation. As I alrready stated, my mind and body is depleted of all my energy and right now I am leading a soul less life. I am trying to practise celibacy for the past 2 months and in vain. Every now and then I give in to the vigorous turmoil my mind subjects me with the thoughts of sexuality.

I, inspite of sincere pursuit of celibacy, I fail repeatedly because of my inability to harness my mind towards spirituality. It seems the Samskaras are so powerful that it defeats all my attempts. Also, I at times feel really out of track as now being in the course of making some sincere attempts to elevate the state of my life, I am suffering even worse. It seems my life is at all time low. I am constantly in a state of despair.

I really need to know how to overcome the strong forces of mind and establish myself in celibacy. I also need to understand the present state of my mind and body and the changes or challanges I would face physically or mentally so that I could prepare my self to overcome them. I am much more determined now and has to do this at any cost. Eagerly awaiting your word on this.

Thanks.

Answer
The initial stages of attempts at Brahmacharya further to may years of excessive recreational sex/masturbation involving heavy seminal wastage are uphill and appear contrary to one’s nature. The Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasana-s (tendencies) which accrue further to such a life will have become very dense and strong. One has to remember that one is trying to undo what has been done over the past decade or more. The result of many years of such activity cannot be undone completely in a month or a few months. Much resistance and trouble will be encountered by the Brahmachari in the initial year. Under such conditions, there is no other way but to stick to the practice stubbornly and forcefully. However, if the efforts are Herculean, honest, and sincere with devotion to God, success gradually blossoms.

One should resolve – “This slavery to masturbation has caused me much sorrow. It is eating away my very existence. I will henceforth not let this devil spoil my well being. I will weed it out & finally kill it. Let what happens happen. I will not give in or give up." With such an attitude, one should follow a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya as detailed in past answers. No amount of obstruction or lethargy should be allowed to come in the way. Will power and determination should be exercised this way with prayer and devotion to God. Then, after many months of such honest efforts with an honest life of Yoga & Brahmacharya carried out with 4.00 A.M wake up, things become better and come under control.

You should apply these tenets for a complete year without worrying about the results. Do not think of failure. Do not think of the fruits. We are not concerned with the fruits; that is taken care of by HIM. Our purview ends at honest effort. If success hasn't come, it means the efforts are not up to the mark. It means that more concrete actions are to be employed. HE is very impartial and just. HE always gives as much fruits as our efforts deserve. Not more, not less. Till you attain to the state of completely getting free from masturbation and pornography, you should persevere with great effort. The troubles you are facing are the result of past karma. There is no other reason. We ourselves have to break our past karma with strong efforts. God then supports the endeavour.

You should work as though your very life is in danger. Observe how fast and quickly even an old, weak man runs out of the path of a moving train. Such should be the energy and urgency with which you persevere. Slavery to recreational sexuality/masturbation is more dangerous than a moving train. The train will kill you in a second; slavery to masturbation will kill you slowly and agonizingly for as long as you live. It will make life so foul and so full of decay that words cannot sum up the pain and horror of the torture. Remember this everytime you feel the urge for the debilitating activity.

With these thoughts in your mind, fight like a real man. A real man is he who has real mental strength. Physical strength is nothing before mental strength. Just as a cornered animal fights for its life with extreme ferocity and determination, one should fight against masturbation. Remember, you are fighting for your life. There is no question of giving up. Nobody gives up when it is a matter of life and death. They may give up on other occasions but not when it comes to life and death. A cornered animal never gives up. It will die fighting but will not give up. Such should be the attitude while fighting the devil called masturbation. If such an attitude is exercised, this devil becomes weak and eventually gives up. Even then should one always be careful, for it is a devil which is very cunning and sly. It is an opportunist which is waiting in the dark to pounce again. Incesant efforts and the grace of God are required for complete and permanent freedom.

Not a single day should you miss waking up at 4.00 A.M and not on a single day should you miss the Yogic practices of Asana, Bandha, Nâdi shodhana, Pranayama and God-meditation morning and evening as described in past answers. Have your efforts been like this? You know the answer. From today, your efforts will be like this. Not a day will you wake up later than 4.00 A.M nor miss the practice. After 365 days of such honest and sincere activity without worrying about the results but with full devotion to God, we will discuss the situation once more.

Question
Thank you very much for your previous answer. It was very clear and well explained. I have been recently troubled with issues of anger and provocation. I am doing my best to remain unoffensive and not step on the toes of others, yet it seems that I am still getting many confrontational encounters with people seemingly out of nowhere. Perhaps this is through past Karma which is the only thing that I can reason.

If this is a "coming clean" reverberation of past Karma reaching my shore from my own past actions, I am wondering if there is anything that I can do to alleviate the effects other than seeking stillness in meditation.

Part of me wants to not necessarily retaliate, but to put these individuals in their place for the rude behavior. And part of me understands that it is their own discord and blindness which guides them. Still I feel like they would continue unless someone steps up to them.

If you can help me choose the right solution, even if that means turning the other cheek, I would be glad to heed your advice.

Answer
1. Firmly anchored to the fact that this world is 'Asat' (unreal) and unsubstantial, a Yogi should develop the attitude of being unaffected to happenings and non-happenings with a feeling of certitude. He should work towards reaching the state where he accepts honor and dishonor with equal indifference. Just as it does not make sense to become irate or react to the characters who ill-treat one in a dream, it is a waste of time and resources to react purposefully to the people and circumstances of this world which is Maya (illusion.)

2. Involving oneself with seriousness in such trying situations leads to the inevitable growth of oscillating emotions which cause unrest and make the mind unsteady. This leads to loss of Prana and makes meditation impossible. This is followed by distraction and agitation which ends in delusion. A deluded mind moves far away from the state of Atmic bliss and becomes prone to committing mistakes under the influence of Maya which it will have to later repent for. Through such mistakes, one's baggage of karma which one is trying hard to shelve gets heavier.

All of one's efforts at Yoga get diluted and perchance broken as a result. Brahmacharya becomes very difficult and is prone to break further to such unrest. And to what avail has all this strife been encumbered? All for nothing but a few unseeming words/actions against one's ego which itself is false and non-existent. Who provoked and who got provoked? A deluded, ego centric mind rife with ignorance provoked and another body/mind/ego complex got provoked. Both are unreal and an illusion. We are not the body, mind, intellect, consciousness or the ego. We are the Atman which is infinite and all encompassing. We as the Atman are beyond honor, dishonor, happiness, sorrow or other limitations of duality born of ignorance. It is not possible for any person/circumstance to cause the smallest harm to the Atman, for the Atman is beyond susceptibility. Does the Sun become dark and cold because someone says so? Can the ocean get dry because someone ridicules it? The Sun and the ocean may change but the Atman cannot be touched or harmed in the least. It is primordial and infinitely powerful. There is nothing mightier than the Atman which is why it gets the name 'Almighty'. This is our real state. Till we reach this state and rest there irreversibly, we should not bother to spend our energy on anything which takes us away from this path.

Let people say what they want. They do so till their bodies, minds and mouths tire and then have to face the consequences without doubt. Action and reaction are equal and opposite.

Every person is accountable for his deeds good or bad. The laws of karma work with precision and clarity on each and every being. None are spared. It is karma which makes the world go around and people take birth. A soul which has no karma does not take a physical body. It progresses further in the higher planes, gaining further knowledge in the realm of superior bliss. Knowing it to be such, the wise man does not soil himself with unwanted karma which accrues further to retaliation as regards people and this world. It is not for us to waste our time and energy reacting to such occurings devoid of sense and sensibility. If people unnecessarily target us for no reason, they accrue negative karma for which they will have to pay the price without doubt when their time of reckoning comes. Let us be silent and fixed to our state of the Atman, calm and unruffled. If we react against them on an equal footing, then we too commit similar karma and soil ourselves foolishly. Then there is no difference between the two. This is not the correct way of conduct. The human birth is a golden opportunity to get free of encasement in flesh which is the repository of suffering. One should focus all his energies to first realize who he is. Then everything becomes clear and there comes the end to all sorrow.

If such a situation becomes offensive despite polite and sensible reasoning with the concerned people, one should move atleast 20 feet away from the spot and calmly ignore both the people and the inner reaction. The 'Linga sharira' (astral body) which gets affected when emotions oscillate can be made to calm down once it is 20 feet away from the location of disturbance. We can then reiterate to ourselves that it was the false ego and mind which were subjected to provocation and not us, the Atman. Each and every life experience is designed by the Almighty through our past karma to make the embodied Jiva forge ahead in the ladder of evolution. There is something for us to learn from every occurance, however insignificant. So we take these provocations and trying situations as a test of our spiritual mettle and stay established in our Atmic state of peace and bliss, wishing good to all and enjoying the resulting harmony which comes further to righteous conduct and righteous action.

Question
Hi dhananjay,
how are you, want to clear some doubts regarding pranayama.

1.you have suggested in the previous posts i.e. while performing pranayama the person should inhale and hold the breath for 16 seconds and exhale, if the person is not able to hold breath for 16 seconds as mentioned can he reduce the time to say 8 or 12 seconds till he is comfortable or he should practice from 16 seconds, can we practice other pranayams like kapalbhati,brahmri coz i have some ear problem and a yoga guru suggested me to do.

2.In a blog or some site i read that if the person doing yogic sadhna doesn't wake up at 4am he will not attain self realisation and your answer was two hormones which release in brahmi muhurtam help in keeping up brahmacharya and if a person is not able to get that time he should practice at sadhi kalas,so my question is if a person performs yogic sadhana in sandhi kalas and by any problem he is not able to wake up at 4am will he attain self realisation or not and is there a difference between their progress plz help us overcome this problem as some people have different work shifts which are rotational.

Thanking you,
Ganapathi.

Answer

1. If the 16 second duration is found to be difficult due to the ear condition, 8 or 12 second durations can be applied at the start and later increased when one becomes comfortable. 'Kapalabhati' and 'Bhramari' are preliminary Pranayama-s which can be practiced BEFORE performing the regular Pranayama described, if one so desires. However, do not miss the regular Pranayama.

2. If it is not possible to indulge in Yogic practice at 'Brahmimuhurtham' (3.00 A.M~5.30 A.M) due to a late night work shift, one should do so at any two of the other three 'Sandhi Kâla-s'. One's profesion which is a part of one's destiny is the result of past karma and the will of the Almighty. Hence inability for 'Brahmimuhurtham' practice due to engagement at work will not be an impediment to self-realization if Yogic practices are adhered to during the other two times as mentioned. When one's profession is the will of God, how can his will go against man attaining self-realization? There need be no worry as regards this matter. God wishes each man to come back to him. Each and every soul or Jiva is dear and special to God, whatever be one's profession. He who performs Yogic practices twice a day (during any two Sandhi Kâla-s) with honest Brahmacharya, love and devotion to God is assured of 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) when the time gets ripe. Since the lack of 'Brahmimuhurtham' practice is unavoidable further to presence at work, it will not be an impediment to 'Mukti' (liberation.) When the time is ripe, God will arrange for more suitable work hours. However, early morning practice should on no account be missed due to waking up late fueled by lethargy/laziness.

Question

Is it possible to accumulate so much energy by brahmacharya and meditation that a person can work with very little sleep? If yes, how much time is required to reach this stage, and what are the means ?

Answer

Sleep is a reaction to the stress and strain encountered by the body. Through sleep, the body makes up for the energy lost and revitalizes itself. The man who wastes much his vital fluid loses enormous Prana (vital energy.) Hence the body tries to make up this energy deficit through sleep. However, Prana lost through loss of semen cannot be made up through any amount of sleep. Veerya (semen) once lost is lost forever. It is irreversible, for the volume of 'Para-Ojas' (universal cosmic power that comes from the Atman) available to the body is limited and fixed at the time of birth. Hence the body becomes unable to make up for this loss of Prana with any amount of sleep. This is the reason why people who expend much semen always feel sleepy, weak and lethargic. They become prone to stupor and inertia. 'Tamas' (inert) quality becomes predominant. They feel the need for much sleep and are dissatisfied even after getting excessive sleep. It becomes a problem without a solution.

A man who conserves and transmutes his vital fluid becomes charged with much Prana. More than necessary energy for the working of the body is made available and in reserve. Such a man can easily partake himself in work/activity throughout the day with very little fatigue. When fatigued, his body recovers very fast so he can put in more duration of work effortlessly. There is sufficient buffer between demand & supply. Through meditation, the body relaxes and gets rejuvenated. The hormone 'Seratonin' which is released during meditative states calms the mind and brings a feeling of well being. Seratonin and its derivatives also regulate the sleep cycle [see:http://www.spiritualcompetency.com/meditat/lesson8.html] This barricades negative emotions from invading the mind of the Yogi to a considerable extent. Prevention of such emotions in turn helps conserve more energy. This is a very beneficial cycle. What is now being recognized by modern science and medicine was known to the Indian Yogis and sages many tens of thousands of years back. What modern science is just starting to realize through sophisticated devices was realized by the great Indian sages without any instrument through connecting into the universal mind of the Almighty Lord via 'Samadhi meditation'. In the years to come, modern medicine will realize and accept the benefits of Brahmacharya which the Indian sages declared ages ago.

When the Yogi reaches 'Savikalpa or Sabija Samadhi' and eventually masters it to become an Urdhvareta, vital energy retained as the 'Bindu' is complete. This confers deep and long meditation which further relaxes and rests the body. Such a Yogi can function very comfortably and remain fresh with 4-7 hours of night sleep (depending on the extent & nature of his daytime work.)

After the Yogi reaches 'Nirvikalpa or Nirbija Samadhi' (complete, non-dual super-consciousness) in which state of meditation all vital organs stop working, the body is rested and relaxed to an extent beyond what is possible through sleep. Even in sleep, the vital organs continue to work. They have no rest from birth till death. In case of the Nirvikalpa Yogi, the vital organs stop for the first time since birth and completely rest while he remains suspended in super-consciousness. The relaxation and revitalization which follow from the stopping of organs and the charging of the body with enormous universal Prana from the cosmos cannot be imagined or described. The body being in a state of suspension for as long as he is in Nirvikalpa can do without those many hours of sleep. The Yogi who has reached this state can stay without food, water, breath and sleep as long as he is in the state of super-consciousness. This is a siddhi (power) by itself.

Following a life of unbroken Brahmacharya with adequate Yogic practices eventually leads to 'Savikalpa Samadhi', mastering which one becomes an Urdhvareta which confers many siddhi-s. How long it takes, varies from person to person and depends on factors such as one's past karma, present efforts and the grace of God. Generally, it may be said that a few years of unbroken practice with God devotion and frequent meditation offer a bright possibility of reaching this state.

The means to Yoga & unbroken Brahmacharya include the practice of the Yama-Niyama-s, Asana, Bandha, Nâdi Shodhana, Pranayama and meditation. Details on these are available in past answers. Also necessary is 'Mitâhâra' (moderate diet), early morning 4.00 A.M waking up and less talk. Much Prana is lost through unnecessary talk and useless thoughts. Hence the wise Yogi maintains 'Mouna' (silence), avoids useless talk/gossip/thoughts and talks a little when necessary.

Question
Sir,
Are there very few people who realise the value of brahmacharya. Is it their destiny that they come to know about it ? Are those people who realise their wrongs and turn to brahmacharya " chosen ones" ???

Answer
The Jiva (embodied soul) perseveres in Brahmacharya when it has started getting close to that stage in evolution whereupon reversal into its default state of Atman has begun. Till this stage is reached, the embodied soul occupied in the offerings of Samsâra (dualistic world of manifestation) is involved in matter and the senses, wrongly assuming them to be sources of pleasure. When the karmic stage is ripe for the Jiva to atone for its sins, cleanse them and reclaim its original and pure stage of oneness with the Lord, the boat called Brahmacharya appears, which the Jiva then boards. It is not easy to board or sail in this boat which is destined for the land of immortality and liberation. But the Jiva having realized that there is no other way struggles and perseveres to finally succeed.

This realization of the inevitability of Brahmacharya aimed at overcoming and becoming independent of the senses is governed by destiny which is the result of one's past karma and the will of God. HE decides when each Jiva is ready for the same and makes it develop affinity towards this mode of life. Once chosen this way by HIM, the Jiva will tread this path without choice. There is no other way out but to take it to completion through self-realization. The ramblings of the ego to escape cannot work. Even if the ego does manage to deviate or break free of this path, it is pushed back into the practice after realizing the mistake with suffering. HE brought us into this Samsâra to make the Jiva realize its default state of soverignity. HE has brought us here with a purpose and that purpose will be taken to its final state through Brahmacharya and Atma Gnyana (realization of the absolute reality) that comes with self-realization. That which HE wishes occurs in this Universe and that which HE does not will not transpire, try how hard one may to do the opposite.

One should be happy and grateful that he has reached the stage where the karma-s are ripe for complete removal and one will be allowed to come out of this dream called life and establish oneself in the reality of his true self. It is a matter of celebration, having being chosen by God to come out of this limitless ocean of transmigratory existence filled with suffering. Inevitable perseverance in Brahmacharya is an indication that there are countable numbers of births remaining for the Jiva in this ocean and that the process of working for the release which is not very far away has begun. If very honest and unbroken practice of Yoga, Brahmacharya and acquirement of the knowledge of reality is obtained with zealous efforts, the job can be accomplished soon by HIS grace, for HE HIMSELF is now with the Jiva as regards supporting it and helping it accomplish this task. This birth itself will be the last if self realization is attained while alive or at the time of departure. Hence one should seize this golden opportunity and make the best out of it.

Question
Sir,
As one progresses in brahmacharya, will it be possible to understand and remember difficult subjects quickly ?? Can this state be attained in 1 year??

Answer
Brahmacharya is accompanied with the betterment of all mental faculties. Further to a year of unbroken Brahmacharya, the mind becomes calmer and possessed of much focus and concentration. Veerya which is transmuted gives sustained mental ability and determination. Memory and grasping power will improve as compared to earlier. The longer one practices Brahmacharya, the better are the results. With every year of progress, the merits become more noticeable. Further to 12 years of honest and unbroken practice with God devotion and meditation, 'Medha Nâdi' (a special astral energy channel) is formed in the brain which gives photographic memory and an excellent understanding of any subject that the aspirant wishes to know, say the scriptures and realized Yogi-s. Brahmacharya is thus the most direct path to superlative mental faculties.

Question
Dhananjay, hi

Hope you are well?

I have a few doubts you will be able to help me with:

1] At the time of death, pran leaves the body, does that mean pran and atman are the same?

2] How does one discern/distinguish between repression & making real progress in brahamacharya through conservation and transmutation of vital energy? I believe one who is engaged in brahamacharya with honest efforts towards god devotion will know but just wanted to ask.

3] In one of your earlier posts, there was a discussion about the importance of hair in the human body and that it serves a purpose, is there a bioligical purpose for males to have nipples? I am sure there is logic in everything that the Almighty has created but wanted to understand. Apologies if i am sounding vague.

Thanks Dhananjay, Manish

Answer
1. 'Prana' (vital energy) is a derivative of the Atman (soul). From the Atman comes will-power, under the will does the mind function, and the directions of the mind are translated into action using Prana. Ex. A person wants go to the next room; his will first commands the mind regarding this need. The mind then analyzes the situation and directs Prana to move the body. Prana transports the body to the next room. Thus Prana is like electricity. Just as we turn the switch on to light a bulb, the mind switches Prana on and off as per its needs to different parts of the body, so as to perform different activities. Without Prana, the human body cannot function. As long as Prana exists, the body lives. When the Atman departs, its servants namely the mind along with the Prana and the senses of perception also depart. The body then dies. People then say "His Prana has left" – meaning he has expired. So Atman is the master and Prana the servant.

2. Repression of the sexual urge refers to forcibly abstaining from sexual activity bodily, while the mind roams in the forest of sexuality. Repression also occurs when conserved sexual energy is not chanellized into productive physical, mental and spiritual activity such as God-meditation. A person who merely practices celibacy (abstention from sexual intercourse) while his mind imagines/fantasizes on sexuality causes repression. Repression is bad for health and causes agitation, irritation, anxiety, stress, anger etc.. Such a mind then builds physical toxins in the body which cause ill-health/disease. Hence the sexual urge should not be suppressed or repressed through any means. It should be harnessed into productivity through transmutation using the technique of Brahmacharya.

This is the difference between Brahmacharya and mere celibacy. The word Brahmacharya does not have an equivalent word in English, as this concept does not exist in western culture. Western civilization wrongfully equates/assumes it to be celibacy and makes statements against Brahmacharya. Brahmacharya is not celibacy. Celibacy is a minor by-product of Brahmacharya and not Brahmacharya itself. The celibacy that comes as a result of Brahmacharya is not detrimental but beneficial, while mere celibacy/abstinence without Brahmacharya is injurious. Sexual energy is a mammoth power. It cannot be suppressed or repressed by celibacy. It can either be let out through sexuality or transmuted into something higher through Brahmacharya.

Some signs which indicate repression of sexual energy include frequent wet dreams, oscillating moods, lethargy, stupor and inertia. Most aspirants who aren't properly applying the tenets of Yoga & Brahmacharya exhibit such symptoms early in practice. Later, they realize the technique of Brahmacharya and overcome these obstacles. An aspirant who is successful in transmutation will often be active, bright, cheerful and full of energy. One who is repressing or suppressing his sex drive will often be stressed, anxious, irritable and fickle in mind, though these symptoms need not necessarily mean repression alone, for other causes also lead to such symptoms. Sometimes, during the initial stages of Brahmacharya, even an honest aspirant who is successful in transmutation might rarely exhibit such symptoms when his past Vasana-s surface and create havoc. However, this will be temporary and soon weans away to be replaced with positivism.

As long as an aspirant is following the tenets and lifestyle of Yoga & Brahmacharya with devotion to God assisted by regular meditation, repression does not arise and transmutation occurs automatically.

3. Based on the nature of activity and purpose of the male or female body, some parts in the body are active in males while others function actively in the females of a specie. Body hair is pronounced in males and relatively dormant in females. The muscular structure of a male is stronger as compared to that of a female of the same specie. Similarly, nipples being a part of the mammary mechanism (for feeding a child) are active in females of both humans and animals and dormant in the male. However, there is no spiritual significance as regards this body part which can be of interest to the Brahmachari.

Question

hi dhananjay,

hope you are doing well i got some doubts while reading your posts,

1.can we meditate in any time of the day apart from 2 times yogic practice.

2.in one of your posts you said to face east or north while yogic practice and the place should be clean and only used for practice, at my home we have small temple of goddess and i can sit west only because if i face north or east i have the idols and photos facing my back so please suggest me is it ok to face west for the yogic practice.

thanks for your help to all aspirants like me, Ganapathi.

Answer

1. Yes, meditation can be and should be performed as often as possible. There is not such a time of the day or night when one cannot meditate. Every minute of this life is meant for meditation on the Supreme. Merging one's mind and self into the Supreme (Almighty) is meditation. For this, one should give up all thoughts, make the mind calm and try to merge the mind into the Almighty, thinking of nothing else. He should then think –"I no longer exist but have become one with HIM" and maintain a state of 'Shunya' (void or emptiness) for as long as possible. When one gets established in this process after many years of unbroken Brahmacharya with deep love for God, all thoughts (including –"I am meditating") cease and one loses consciousness and goes into 'Samadhi' (super-consciousness.)

Meditation does not refer only to sitting cross legged and doing so. One should perform all actions in life thinking of God and as an offering and service to the God within, namely the Atman. While doing each and every task, the attitude should be –"I do nothing. I am only the instrument. The Lord is working through this body and enacting his Leela." This attitude has been described as the best for attaining speedy self-realization in the Upanishads and the Bhagavad-Gita and aids 'Brahma-Gnyana' (realization of the Supreme), for it helps one overcome the wrong concept of doership and kills the ego.

"O most intelligent being, pass your time in meditating upon me, glorifying me in songs, talking about me to one another and thus devoting yourself entirely to me, the Supreme."
-- Chapter 2/ Verse 46 - 'Varâha Upanishad'

"This 'Samsâra' (mundane existence which is an ocean of sorrow), is nothing but a long-lived dream, an illusion of the mind or a long-lived reign of the mind. From rising from sleep till going to bed, the one Brahman (Almighty) alone should be contemplated (meditated) upon."
-- Chapter 2/ Verse 64 - 'Varâha Upanishad'

- As told by 'Varaha Swamy' (Lord Narayana) when questioned on the means to 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) by 'Sage Ribhu' to whom the Lord appeared after 12 years of honest spiritual practice.

When a person gets established in this kind of thinking as being the tool of the Almighty, he cannot perform any wrong action, for his actions are only reflections of the will of the Almighty. He as an individual (the I-sense or Ego) does not exist, is the principle. He is neutral and desireless, all the time thinking only of God, having realized that his duty is to enact as per the commands of God. What God wills, his body performs. It leads to effortless and natural Brahmacharya when applied for long with reverance to God.

2. It is preferable to face the East or North during the initial years of practice as this lessens the impediments. These things do not matter much after many years of advancement but help initially. If the same is not possible, then one can opt for the West or Southern directions.

Question
Hi

I have 43 yearsold. I was addicted to masturbation and pornography by friends at age of 12. I fight against this hell addiction since 30 years ago, because I hate the post-orgasmic sensation of weakness.

I try, try and try but am not able to maintain brahmacharya for long periods. With much effort and very rarely i can keep it for one or two weeks.

I just can not see beautiful women and then I despair of desire. I try to not think and to not see,but it not works.

I'm desperate because I want to meet purity soon and not stand this condition. I do not want to die like this. I need urgent help. Nothing worked for me at the moment. Please, help me. What should I do?

Answer
Take to a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya with serious intentions and make it a part of your lifestyle. To overcome slavery to sexuality, one should develop strong devotion to the Almighty and persevere in a life of Yoga. Then, after much effort, success slowly dawns and eventually becomes established. It will take time and patience with unswerving effort to hold on to success, for the karma and resulting Vasana-s (impressions) of over thirty years of indulgence are to be erased. With strong devotion to God and honest effort, it will become possible.

Practice a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya with devotion to the God you find appealing and believe in (say Christ.) There is only one Almighty or Supreme Lord. He takes various forms and men call him by various names. Some call him Brahman; others call him Christ while some others call him Allah. You can also pray to realized saints such as Jesus Christ for guidance if you happen to follow Christianity. It is the honesty, sincerity and commitment of one's efforts that matter. When this exists with love and devotion to the Supreme; HE answers one's prayers which are backed by effort at Yoga & Brahmacharya, call HIM by what name you may.

Go through each and every past answer from the profile page and get clear with the methods of adopting Yoga for Brahmacharya. From tomorrow morning, you will wake up early before Sunrise and adopt the measures that have been described for success in Yoga. Eventually, you will wake up at 4.00 A.M and strictly follow the procedure of Asana, Bandha, Nadi Shodhana and Pranayama followed by meditation on the Supreme. Within 6 months, the problem will come under better control. Further to following this procedure very honestly for a year, you will completely overcome slavery to pornography. Then, the joy of real living starts.

Question
Hello sir,

I am lucky to came across this site and very thankful for your answers. I am trying to follow this since one year and got some success. I think i can progress more in future years as first year was just a beginning. I am 29 years old and have few questions.

1. Whatever knowledge we achieve in this birth regarding karma and yoga, will we having the same knowledge in next birth. I mean to say, it took me 28 years in this birth to know about this truth. Can i start early in the next birth or there will be no benefits of this knowledge and i have to start from the scratch.

2. From one of your past answers, i came to know that we are born to nullify our past karma. How we got trapped into these karmas in the first place. Why did the first birth happened when there was no bad karmas initially.

3. I Quit eating non-veg and tea after reading your posts. There is no problem with leaving non-veg but after leaving tea, i started feeling stage fear etc. Please let me know if these things will go away after some time. Thanks.

Answer

1. If you started contemplation and practice on the tenets of Yoga & Brahmacharya at age 28, it means that all these years were required to work out other karma's which were blocking the surfacing of the positive karma/knowledge of Yoga which you had acquired with some effort in a previous existence. The time has now matured with a reducing inclination for worldliness and growing inclination towards realizing the absolute truth. This is how the law of karma works. Till the time the gross desires of the Jiva are very strong and till the time it hasn't realized to some extent that that these desires for the world do not lead to happiness but only towards pain, the strong inclination for Yoga & Brahmacharya for self-realization doesn't blossom. When most of the dross of karma which blocked ascent into knowledge starts dissolving, the Jiva gets an inclination and interest to pursue the path leading to self-realization.

Even the smallest degree of progress which is made by the 'Jivatma' (embodied soul) through effort in Yoga & Brahmacharya does not ever get wasted. Knowledge which has been earned in past births through efforts & practice becomes fruitful when the time gets ripe for its maturation in this birth. No merit earned through such practice ever goes waste. When the right time comes, the Jiva gets placed in such favorable circumstances where it easily adopts/recollects this knowledge that it has accrued in a former incarnation with some external guidance/impetus.

Arjuna asks this very question to Lord Krishna in the 'Mahabharata'. "O Lord, What happens to him who though possessed of faith in Yoga and striving in that direction, fails to attain to Yoga (union), due to having become a victim of the senses further to lack of self-control? He looses out enjoying both the life of sense pleasure (for he lead a life bereft of these) and also misses the final beatitude/bliss of self-realization leading to immortality within the Supreme. Having missed both, don't all his efforts go waste?"

To which the Lord answers:

पार्थ नैवेह नामुत्र विनाशस्तस्य विद्यते |
न हि कल्याण कृत्कस्चित्दुर्गतिं तात गछति ||

- Chapter 6/ Verse 40, The Bhagavad-Gita

-- "O Arjuna, neither in this world, nor in the next is there annihilation for him without doubt, who strives towards virtue and goodness".

तत्र तं बुद्धिसंयोगं लभते पूर्वदेहिकं|
यतते च ततो भूयः संसिद्धौ कुरुनन्दन ||

-Chapter 6/ Verse 43, The Bhagavad-Gita

-- "There (in his next existence), he comes to be united with the knowledge acquired in his previous birth (for those seeds exist in his causal body) and continues more than before towards attaining perfection".

Hence one need not worry as regards losing the knowledge gained in this birth through the practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya. It is stored in one's karmic account. If the Jiva fails to attain to final realization in this birth, it carries forward all the knowledge it came to realize to the next incarnation, wherefrom it continues its efforts. This is also the reason why some people progress very speedily and easily in this path, for their past actions dating back to previous births stored in the 'Kârana Sharira' (causal body) [which is carried along to the next incarnation after death] are supportive to this quest. The positive Samskara-s (impressions) of Yoga that the Jiva had earned previously then act favorably in this existence leading to rapid progress. Such a Jiva grasps and adopts the required tenets very naturally without much effort. There is no question of starting again from scratch but an assured continuation from the point of stoppage.

2. Both the Jiva (embodied soul) and the Almighty exist from before the beginning of time. They are both timeless and infinite in every sense. The Jiva however is in a deranged state right from the start, having forgotten its divine connection and state of integrality with the Supreme. In this limited state of intellect of ours (before self-realization) it is beyond our ability to understand why this is the case. We can only contend in the fact that there is a definite reason for such a dereanged state of the Jiva which then falls away to help it merge into the Supreme. As per the 'Advaita' (non-dual) doctrine, this is a part of the Lord's leela (play) where a part of him imagines itself to be separate, just as a drop raises into a bubble in a pool of water and eventually merges back into the same pool of water.

Every birth is meant to help raise the embodied soul a little higher and help it get closer to knowing who it truly is, which is what constitutes evolution. To know the phenomenon more clearly, one has to reach the shores of self-realization.

3. When man is used to a life of sense stimulation, the ability of the Jiva to look within for strength and well-being retards. It looks outwards for some or the other form of sense gratification thinking it to be a source of solace and happiness. This outward tendency eventually becomes a dependency without which man cannot function. All these are Vikarâ-s (distortions) converse to the true state of the Atman who is completely independent and requires no external stimulus for bliss and contentment. All addictions or dependencies on various sense stimulations such as cravings for drinks, beverages, food etc. belong to this category.

When man takes up a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya and limits his oral consumption only to basic, nutritious food eaten for the purpose of sustainence, his previous habits which stimulated and tickled his mind try to put up resistance. The mind then tries to remind him of this depravation by staging various reactions in the form of oscillating emotions. Withdrawal symptoms from masturbation, recreational sex, stimulating drinks such as alcohol/coffee/tea, partying and many more fall under this purview. All these are to be clearly given up and independence acquired. An established Brahmachari who is becoming content in the self by the self derives the greatest bliss by merging his mind into the Supreme Almighty in meditation and wants nothing more. It is a state of purity and independence from slavery to all external stimuli in the form of sight, smell, taste, sound and touch of anything appealing. One should not give the least attention to such dramatics of the mind but should adhere to winning independence with strict restraint. Persist in a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya as detailed in past answers and the withdrawal symptom from tea drinking will soon wear away to be replaced by confidence which comes from drinking the bliss of the Atman!

Question
Hi Brother, I have some pressing questions to ask regarding brahmacharya.

1) You have mentioned one can become a urdhvaretha yogi after 12 years. However, 12 years is a long time. Is there any benefits that could be felt before that?
Or better still, within one year of following brahmacharya in thought, word and deed and not voluntarily ejaculating, are there any tangible benefits ?

2) Can one develop benefits merely by following a simpler regime as follows:
a) Wake up at 6am.
b) Japa and studying the gita.
c) Meditate for 15mins. Conduct simple pooja to ishta devata.
d) Spend time on exercise
In this routine, there will be no yoga asanas, no bandhas,no pranayama, no nadi shodhana. This is because it is difficult to get a guru to teach all these unless one is to follow a book?

3) I have attempted to follow brahmacharya and have experienced within a week - I tend to get angry very fast, have frequent suicidal feeling, tend to look down on myself. Is this normal? By brahmacharya, is the mind getting suppressed that it is trying to assert itself by giving such suicidal, anger, low mood thoughts?

Thanks a million.

Answer
1. If an aspirant expects supernormal results in a year, he will be sadly disappointed. Nothing like that will happen. A year of unbroken Brahmacharya is nothing compared to eons of a life of 'Abrahmacharya' (incontinence.) Such expectations are the result of an impatient mind and impatience goes against Yoga. The Yogi should first learn patience. It might take a few years, a few decades or a few lives to attain self-realization. One cannot know when, nor should he worry about the duration required for results. That is not our concern. Our concern ends at our honest efforts. The results will show, based on our efforts and by the grace of God. Sometimes, no result may be noticeable even after much practice. Certain chunks of past karma being very dense are very slow to dissolve and vacate. When such heavy baggages of karma are being worked at through Brahmacharya, there may be no noticeable development for months and months at a time. It appears as though things have come to a standstill. Yet the Yogi, if he wishes for the ultimate cannot give up. He has to persevere and trod all alone, sometimes in the face of severe obstacles such as illness and disease which surface when past karma denoting these come for fruition whilst being vacated. It is not a rosy, glamorous path, this path of Brahmacharya. So that only the very deserving and meritorious get their hand on the fruit of self-realization, God has made this path very tough and very thorny. It takes superhuman effort to attain to the superhuman results of Yoga. Let there be no doubt about this fact.

Further to a year of unbroken Brahmacharya carried out with regular Yogic practice, a calmer mind, better physical, mental well-being/health and overall improvement in general occurs. The aspirant will have a lesser tendency to revert to recreational sexuality and this gives him a base to develop Brahmacharya further in the spiritual plane. Success in one year of unbroken Brahmacharya means that the aspirant can take Brahmacharya to its true objective (of self-realization) if he persevers correctly and patiently. The first year of unbroken Brahmacharya is the phase where establishment occurs in this lifestyle. It is like a foundation which can be used to construct the building called Brahmacharya which leads to enlightenment. However, all this applies if Brahmacharya is carried out in thought, word and deed, wilfully, with reverence and devotion to the concept and not out of force. Mere forceful practice as in any other field does not yield results. Practice should be carried out with the heart and soul and not mechanically as a chore to be got done with.

At the same time, it remains that a span of 12 year practice of unbroken Brahmacharya with God devotion & meditation is a general period of time that makes the attainment of 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) possible. It might even happen earlier; depending on how advanced the Jiva (embodied soul) is [taking into consideration its efforts from previous existences.] It need not take 12 years of practice to become an Urdhvareta (non-semen producing Yogi). Neither does attaining to the state of an Urdhvareta mean self-realization. A self-realized soul is always an Urdhvareta but an Urdhvareta is not necessarily self-realized. It is a state that comes enroute enlightenment and makes the development of certain siddhi-s (supernormal faculties) possible. Again, fancy for such powers leads to nothing but foolish actions leading to setbacks in practice. Hence a Yogi cannot afford to get enamored with these powers. The state of an Urdhvareta is a milestone or foundation for further progress and not the end itself. It is somewhere mid-way or a little more in the journey to enlightenment and not the final state of beatitude itself. It can occur as early as within a few years of unbroken practice with God-devotion and meditation or it may take many lives. It all depends on one's past Samskara-s (impressions), present efforts and the grace of God. Hence those attempting Brahmacharya should not work with time frames and time limits. It doesn't make sense in terms of reality.

2. The purpose of Asana, Bandha, Nadi shodhana and Pranayama is to help make the body and Prana conducive to meditation leading to Samadhi. Without streamlining and control of Prana, the mind cannot be controlled. Without mind control, the formation of semen cannot be controlled. Without controlling the formation of semen, one cannot become an Urdhvareta. Unless one becomes an Urdhvareta, wet dreams do not stop, 'Divya Sharira' (divine body) is not formed and 'Nirvikalpa Samadhi' cannot be attained. This is the importance behind Bandha, Nadi Shodhana and Pranayama. They cannot be omitted, if unbroken Brahmacharya leading to the state of complete freedom from wet-dreams is desired. Also, a basic degree of proficiency is Asana-s (postures) is necessary if Pranayama is to be successfully carried out. Hence all the Anga-s of Yoga are irreplaceable.

Without purity of Nadi-s (astral energy channels) which comes further to Pranayama techniques, meditation will not become successful, for a body with blocked Nadi-s becomes unfit for the free flow of Prana necessary for a calm and serene mind. How then will the aspirant achieve thought-free meditation? It is like trying to build a house on a shaky and weak foundation. The house will collapse without doubt, even before completion. All the Anga-s of Yoga have been formulated by self-realized masters who came to know of these through direct perception after eons of practice. They are specifically designed for proper conservation and transmutation of the vital force without suppression. They cannot be bypassed or omitted by the aspirant whose aim is to achieve lasting progress. The rare cases of people who directly jump into successful meditation leading to Samadhi without the use of the other Anga-s (limbs) of Yoga, represents a minuscule minority. This is due to the presence of strong supporting Samskara-s (impressions) from previous lives, wherein the concerned person has attained perfection in these limbs and can hence surpass them. This approach does not apply to the general aspirant. Even in such rare cases, some basic effort at these Anga-s proves beneficial, like a refresher course.

Apply the schedule of Yogic practices as has been outlined in past answers. The benefits that come from 4.00 A.M wake up followed by an immediate bath, Asana, Bandha, Nadi shodhana and Pranayama leading to meditation cannot be substituted by any other method of practice. It gives the best results. This is the established method of correct practice. The methods of performing all these are available in past answers. If they are followed correctly as per the guidance given, there will not be any trouble. They can also be learnt from a Yoga instructor who is familiar and well versed with these techniques and then applied in the sequence described in past answers. The Guru appears when the time is right. Nothing will happen if one keeps waiting for a Guru, for then, the Guru may never come. It is only strong effort backed with honesty and devotion to God, shown through practice that makes one fit to receive the grace of a Guru. When we strive sincerely, the Guru eventually appears.

3. Brahmacharya should be practiced by conserving and transmuting semen into something higher through adequate physical, mental and spiritual activity. It will not work if sexual energy is suppressed. The energy conserved must be channelized productively. It is normal for aspirants to experience a certain degree of oscillations as regards moods initially, for the mind which had been let free for so many years is now being brought under governance. It resists this change with unpredictable reactions.

An urge for suicide is not the effect of Brahmacharya but the result of some other underlying cause. This is why Asana, Bandha, Nadi Shodhana & Pranayama are important, for unless Prana is stabilized, Brahmacharya cannot be carried out for long. Without these breath control techniques that lead to control over Prana, transmutation cannot be complete and this leads to the possibility of dangerous mental conditions arising from suppression of sexuality. The urge for suicide and much anger is an indication that transmutation is not being properly carried out. Such tendencies are an effect of suppression and will go away if all the tenets of Yoga are applied properly with devotion to God, leading to transmutation. Not giving an opportunity to such senseless emotions, one should make the mind clear with rationality & reasoning and act responsibly. Go through each and every past answer slowly and attentively, absorbing the essence. First get established in the 8 Anga-s of Yoga. Brahmacharya then comes naturally.

Question

Hello --- I've been reading about Kushti wrestling and I've seen sentiments that chastity is part of the training. Is it true that conserved 'power' has significant impacts on physical strength?

Thanks

Answer

Yes, It is common for traditional Indian wrestlers to uphold Brahmacharya so as to facilitate good performance in wrestling. Since Prana (vital energy) is conserved through Brahmacharya, it has a positive impact on physical strength.

Question

Can celibacy cure auto-immune diseases(where immune system is acting wrongly on our own self instead of the intruders of the body) such as Myasthenia gravis, Crohn's, etc and also conditions such as allergy, inflammation,etc?

Answer

After the yogi becomes an Urdhvareta and acquires the 'Divya Sharira' (divine body) purified by 'Yogaagni'(the fire of Yoga), the body becomes free from all diseases without exception and gets blessed with Rupa (beauty), Lavanya (grace), Balam (strength) and Vajra (toughness.) No imperfection or debility then exists in the body of such a Yogi who has become an Urdhvareta and attained to the divine body further to establishment in 'Samprajnata Samadhi' (Savikalpa Samadhi). Hence it may be said that an auto-immune condition can be overcome through honest and unbroken Brahmacharya carried out in thought, word and deed.

Question

Good Morning Dhananjay,
how are you? i have some queries regarding meditation and some other doubts.
1.In one of your posts you mentioned about different methods of meditation i am presently doing meditation by keeping my concentration on trikuti i want to ask is it ok as you mentioned that this comes on no.3 on your list, can you please elaborate the first two methods of nirguna and saguna concentration and please guide us how to do them.
2.In my dreams i am coming across some beautiful girls and some suggestions are coming that go and meet the girl and some times i am in situations that i used to mastrubate in my early life before my practice of brahmacharya as i think that these are dangerous situations please tell me a way to get rid of this kind of dreams, i am performing 2 times yogic practice in morning and evening.

3.I have some doubt regarding asana i.e. is it vajrasana,lotus pose or any other types of yogic asanas apart from these that we should perform in the yogic practice.

thanks a lot for showing me how to progress in brahmacharya i am in untold joy after performing the yogic practice thanks for everything.
Ganapathi.

Answer
The best form of meditation is to sit in Sidhasana or Padmasana (lotus pose), sit erect, close the eyes, concentrate on the 'Trikuti', make the mind free of all thoughts and imagine the empty space (which results after closing the eyes) as the empty universe (as it was before 'Sristi' or creation) occupied by the 'Nirguna Brahman' (formless Almighty) who is colorless, shapeless, invisible to the naked eye, all powerful, all pervading and stretching to infinity. One should take the mind into 'Shunya' (zero thought) and consider oneself as no different from this empty space occupied by the formless Lord. Whenever thoughts arise, they should be displaced, reminding oneself that this world is unreal and hence the thoughts connected to this world are also false. Again, the mind should be merged back into this empty space occupied by the Almighty. This way, one merges the mind and the 'Ahamkara' (ego or lower self) into pure Buddhi or I-ness. While trying for this Samadhi, one should be aware – "I am not the body, not the mind, not the Aham or Ego. I am only the Atman who is one with the Brahman represented by this empty space and have now merged into the Lord. This is my true form, stretching to infinity. This person called ME longer exists. It is gone and I have merged into the Lord".

It will take many years to get established in this process called 'Nirguna Dhyana' (meditation on the formless Lord.) When one is established in this state where there is no thought but only emptiness of merger, it is called Savikalpa Samadhi. In this Samadhi, there is only pure 'Asmita' or pure awareness of 'I' without any desire, worry, anger or fear. One feels as though floating in an infinite ocean, clear and free of all thoughts except the thought "I have become one with the formless Lord". When one can maintain such a state of freedom from thoughts but with only the pure I – ness for a long time with effort, it is called 'Ekagrata Parinâma' (one pointed condition). On attaining to perfection of this state after thousands of hours of such meditation, the Yogi who has striven very hard with great sacrifice towards unbroken Brahmacharya becomes an 'Urdhvareta'. Such a Yogi does not get wet dreams. He gets deep and flawless Nidra (sleep) at night.

When meditation is carried out on God with form (as in an idol or photo) by imagining the form of God at the Trikuti after closing the eyes, it is called 'Saguna Dhyana' (meditation on God with form). This can be practiced by beginners if they are unable to practice 'Nirguna Dhyana'. Upon reaching the stage where they get no other thought but the thought of the form of God, they can shift to 'Nirguna Dhyana'. Saguna Dhyana is a preliminary method which eventually turns into Nirguna Dhyana upon perfection.

2. Continue with the regular Yogic practice and meditation. These dreams are the result of past Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasana-s (tendencies) that surface when leveraged by Yoga. The way to remove them is through honest Yoga and a life of purity. There is no other method. They will gradually lessen and finally go away in course of time if the practice is honest, regular and unbroken for a long time. If the tendency for a wet dream arises, a very vigilant and devoted Yogi will be able to perform ‘Mula Bandha’ even in the dream and thereby reduce the possibility of copious discharge.

3. Many different Asana-s can be practiced before commencing Bandha. These have been mentioned in past answers. Sidhasana or Padmasana (lotus pose) are chosen as a sitting pose for Bandha, Nadi Shodhana, Pranayama and meditation.

Question
Hi Dhananjay
what are differences & similarities between right hand-tantra yoga & vedanta yoga, their approaches & practices ?

Answer
1. Vedanta means ‘The end of the Veda-s’. These are the sacred ‘mantra-s’ (incantations) propounding the ultimate truths of life. Vedanta is also called ‘Upanishad’, meaning that knowledge learnt by the disciple from the Guru (master) by sitting at his feet and deriving it through blessings, for the purpose of self-realization. Vedanta consists of numerous Upanishads which cover the tenets to be followed for attaining self-realization. Of these, 108 are noted as being prominent. The Upanishads are based on the non-duality of the Atman (soul) and Parabrahman (Almighty).

2. ‘Dakshina Marga’ or the right hand tantra refers to the part of Yoga where self-realization is sought at by giving up on a life of senses to succeed in removing the ignorance around the Jivatma (embodied soul) through various external and internal techniques. ‘Tantra’ essentially means technique. This path is based on the tenets of Vedanta and hence has much in common with it. The right hand path may be considered as an offshoot of Vedanta and is a further extension of those very same principles into the Yoga of self-restraint.

Hence Vedanta may be regarded as the basis for 'Dakshina Marga'.

Question
Dhananjay, hi

Hope you are well?

On death, I believe, the body, mind and ego dissolve. Similarly, on death, pran leaves the body too, does this mean the body [sharir], mind [manas] and ego [ahamkar] are driven by the pran? Is pran the force which creates the body/mind/ego and is pran the force which destroys it? Is this the reason why they say, mastery of the pran will lead to mastery of the mind/ego etc?

I mean how are the body/mind and ego linked, do you know what I mean?

Also, the jivatma, does the jivatma contain an element of ego since it recognises itself as the jivatma whereas in fact it is a part of paramatma i.e. it is no different from brahman [as I understand]. I hope I am not sounding vague here?

Also, I have read in books [of swami sivanand as well], that a brahamchari should watch himself/herself during the time one is not well [fever, cold, flu etc] since it is a time when senses could attack it resulting in a fall. Is that true? and if yes, what is the logic behind it and how does it work?

Thanks Dhananjay, as before, thanks a lot for taking out the time,

Manish

Answer

1. Upon death, the Atman surrounded by the mind, consciousness and ego, along with the subtle senses & the five constituent Prana-s departs from the body. That Jiva (individual) without a Sthula Sharira (physical body), is then encased in the remaining two bodies - the Linga Sharira (astral body) and the Kârana Sharira (causal body). Everything around the Atman (pure soul) is held together by Prana. Thus Prana is the facilitator of the Manas (mind), Buddhi (intellect), Chitta (consciousness) and Ahamkara (ego). This is why one who gains mastery over Prana gains mastery over all these and wins them over. Prana is the force that facilitates both creation and destruction under the commands of the Atman (pure soul or the Lord). Just as electricity runs various components within a gadget, Prana controls and keeps alive the various constituents of the Jivatma (embodied soul).

The body, mind and ego, are derivatives of each other in the reverse order. From the ego comes the mind, from the mind come the senses and from the senses comes the body. Prana is the facilitator of all these, as electricity facilitates in lighting, heating and running a home. All these vehicles are an expression of the Jiva and its tendencies. This is why all these differ in different people, based on the nature of the Jiva, while the Atman is the same.

2. That fraction of the Lord (the Atman) who though pure and untouched, appears to be deluded through 'Avidya' (neiscience) and thus enveloped by the Karana Sharira (causal repository), the four Antahkarna-s (manas, buddhi, chitta and ahamkara), and the physical body is called the Jiva or individual. The Jiva is nothing but these four within the physical body around the pure Atman or Lord. The pure Atman within the Jiva, being the Lord does not undergo any change and never gets subjected to ignorance. The Atman, in it's apparent, individualized form is a witness to the happenings of the external vehicles and ever pure. Consciousness, when functioning in the Ego or I-sense (as in case of the unenlightened) due to ignorance, leads to the thought – "I am separate, different and an entity by myself". Since this is incorrect in terms of reality, it is prone to the fluctuation of happiness and sorrow. Hence it may be said that the presence of ignorance leads to formation of the Ego around the pure Atman which then becomes the Jiva that assumes doership.

3. When the Brahmachari is suffering from illness, disease or even a mental condition of weakness, vulnerability, anger or some other modification, his Prana is being heavily dissipated through these. The body of an ill man has to constantly spend large amounts of Prana to fight the illness and maintain life. This depletes the Prana available to the mind.

This is why an ill or diseased man has less mental conviction, courage, determination and such other mental faculties. All his Prana is being expended towards fighting the illness. Similarly, in a man experiencing anger, greed, jealousy and other negative traits, Prana is again being dissipated out of his mind and body in the form of energy required to sustain these emotions. Hence he too becomes weak and debilitated. When the mind reaches this state of depletion from energy, it loses the power of Dharana (concentration), Viveka (wisdom of discrimination) and becomes 'Ayukta' (unsteady). Such an unsteady mind then becomes the victim of the senses, (which are expressions of the ego) and are waiting for an opportunity to ensnare the mind in sense pleasure. The mind then loses its composure and falls into the trap. Brahmacharya then gets easily broken. This is the basis behind Swami Sivananda's statement.

Question
QUESTION: I had a dream within a dream that I was actually masturbating and then water came out. It felt intense and eventually I woke up. What to do in theses situations? Lord Shiva says one can eventually become like him- but that means many lifetimes of brahmacharya and not getting wet dreams- Is Lord Shiva even beyond the urdhavereta stage as he is above the realm of the celibate sages who are themselves urdhaveretas!

ANSWER: 1. Till one becomes an Urdhvareta, wet dreams do not stop. However, they become less frequent as one makes concrete progress. One should persevere In Yoga and Brahmacharya. That is the only method to eventually win freedom.

2. When one attains and masters the final stage of 'Savikalpa Samadhi' through intense efforts at a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya, one becomes an Urdhvareta. As soon as this happens, wet dreams stop (while desire still does not fully go away, though it becomes very weak). Hence it is incorrect to compare the status of an Urdhvareta to the state of Lord Siva. The status of an Urdhvareta is only a base for the attainment of self-realization and not realization itself. It is much lower to self-realization by a wide gap. Let this first be clear.

Lord Siva is a manifestation of the Almighty 'Parabrahman' [just as Brahma and Vishnu], yet not the Almighty himself (for all manifestations mean a veil of Maya or illusion, howsoever thin). Hence the Lords Brahma, Vishnu & Siva represent manifestations which are lesser in dimension than the Almighty Parabrahman (Nirguna Brahman) who is the highest and final with none above HIM. Now the status of only being an Urdhvarethas (and still unenlightened) is much, much inferior to the state of Lord Siva and really not comparable. It can be compared to a little hillock and the state occupied by Lord Siva to the Mount Everest. One who is an Urdhvareta is equivalent to a 'Deva' (celestial Gods, who are thousands in number); nothing more. Self-realized sages are those who have attained to freedom from rebirth in the physical, mental and causal bodies and will merge into the Parabrahman (in the Sathya Loka) upon discarding their body. The Sathya loka is the 7th, & final world, the highest of all loka-s (worlds), even higher than the Sadashiva Loka (which is the 5th world, much lower).

QUESTION: Isn't the Sathya Loka the same as Saket Loka- I read on another website it is the same as Lord Rama/Krsna and the bliss is infinite times greater in quality and intensity than Sadashivaloka- hence Lord Shiva chants Ram Naam!

Answer

There are various terms to denote a single concept in the different schools of philosophy. However, focusing on these names is of no use. One should work at achieving perfection through effort and regularity backed by honesty in this Earthly plane first. Then one automatically progresses rightly, reaching the highest, call it by what name you may. Thinking about the higher worlds/planes when one hasn't attained to self-realization is a complete waste of time. So for now, embodied in this body of flesh, let us work towards the required goal and not worry about the hierarchy of Gods and Lords which is of no use.

Question

QUESTION: Dear Brother, I have asked you queries several times and all your answers are read by me as gospel truth.As such, I request your help in this matter. I lost my father few days back. It has been a soul stirring incident for me. It has given me vairagya and taught me that in the end of the day, God's will happens. I hope you can answer me some questions related to spirituality.

I understand that death is to the body and not the souls, and that the jiva will be roaming after death.

1. Is there any form to the Jiva, can it be seen in any manner by the naked eyes?

2. How long will the jiva be in the house after death? Or rather, where will the jiva be after death? And what happens to the jiva after cremation of the body? Where will the jiva ultimately ends after death and this is after how many days from death?

3. For my community, we are supposed to fast for around 16 days and then at the 16th day we go to temple to offer atmasanthi poojai. Why 16 days? Is there any spiritual significance?

4. I was told that my prayer altar have to covered with no view of the deity and images and I am not supposed to go temple for 16 days. Will God consider us unclean if one's father passes away? Or does a family which has lost its loved one be deemed unclean to enter a temple?

5. Will taking a brahmacharya resolve and asking God to make my father's soul peaceful help, since Brahmacharya is the highest vow and nothing is above it.

Your answers will be deeply appreciated.

Thank you.

ANSWER: देहिनोस्मिन् यथादेहे कौमारं यौवनं जरा |
तथा देहान्तरप्राप्तिः धीरस्तत्र न मुह्यति ||

"Just as in this body, the Jiva (embodied soul) passes on from childhood to youth and into oldage,
It passes on into another body (through death and rebirth). The wise man does not grieve at it ".

- Chapter 2/ Verse 13 – The Bhagavad Gita

1. It is the law of nature that, that which has come into existence should one day cease to be. It is only the Atman, the true 'I' (Lord) who has no birth and no death. Since this body has a beginning, it should also have an end. Being a part of this world, it is unreal. That which is unreal cannot last forever. The Atman or soul being the only reality, alone does not have a beginning and hence does not have an end. Just as the Atman within witnessed birth, childhood, youth and oldage of the body, he also witnesses death and then takes another body to continue evolution of the Jiva. It is truly a joyous occasion when someone dear passes away, for the Jiva has completed its innings in this body and is going to take another body under different circumstances to continue his evolution.

When a student completes his education and stops his academic study to take up an occupation and pursue a career, do the inmates in the family feel sad and greive? No. They are happy and wish him the best for his future. Being a student was one stage of life. That stage is now over; he has to move on. The same is the case with death of this body. The Jiva has finished its work in this body (based on its Prarabdha karma) and has no further scope to evolve here. The body and life experiences as regards this birth are done with and are over. For further evolution, it needs another body under different circumstances. Hence the Atman discards this covering of flesh and gets ready to take up another. One should not grieve or mourn at the time of someone's death. One should wish the Jiva best of luck for its future journey and act in this direction. This is the only purpose of the after-rites performed on the body and later. All the rituals (starting with the cremation/funeral rites) are meant to help the Jiva move quickly into another body that will soon become ready for it in the womb of a woman who is destined to be its future mother. Just as the student was wished the best for his future journey through a career, it is an occasion of joy and well wishing where the Jiva is to be given a happy farewell.

The Jiva can neither be seen with the naked eyes, nor should one attempt to connect with it. Moaning, crying, wailing and other acts of sorrow become an impediment to the further journey of the Jiva. Soon after discarding the Sthula sharira (physical body), the Jiva will be in the Linga sharira (astral body) and Kârana Sharira (causal body) in a state of confusion. The Atman (Lord) pulled the desire-filled Jiva out of this body. It cannot understand what is happening. It is disoriented and hazy in understanding at this stage. It is called a 'Preta' (one who has gone to the other world). If people indulge in sorrowful reactions, the Jiva also adopts these emotions and wails for the separation from the people it lived with. Then the further journey becomes difficult. It might be forced to lament and stay here itself turning into a 'Bhuta' (estranged spirit or a ghost). If such a thing happens, then the life of the Jiva without a physical body, yet full of desires in the astral body becomes full of pain and sorrow. Hence one should not grieve. One should take the next appropriate action that will help it continue its journey into a new body. This is the correct course of action.

All the after-rites from cremation onwards with the relevant Mantra-s (incantations) are meant to serve this purpose. When all these are rightly performed with an attitude of love and a well wishing intention for the departed one, its journey becomes easy and smooth. It will go through the next process without trouble and becomes ready for rebirth, based on its past karma. This is the purpose of the after-rites.

2. The 'Videha Jiva' (Jiva without a physical body) stays around the place of death this way for a period of 11 days. On the 11th, 12th, 13th day, ceremonies are performed, where the required Mantra-s are chanted and rites carried out to help it proceed further. All these including the 16th day represent various stages in the progression to further. The related ceremonies are meant to help this progression. It then takes flight into the nether regions; a journey that lasts one full year. Based on the good or bad deeds committed while on Earth, it passes through much difficulty and pain in this journey. Those with good karma do not suffer much. The rites carried out after death for one full year are meant to ease this journey. This is the importance of the after rites lasting one year. It then reaches the plane of Yama (Lord of death) where it is taken to trial for its karma. Those Jiva-s with positive karma enjoy in the heavens till that karma is spent and then return to Earth. Those with negative karma return after suffering in the hells. Those with mixed karma enjoy and suffer accordingly in these two places and finally come back to Earth in a new setting through rebirth, dictated by past karma. This is what the scriptures say.

3. Different communities practice this process of offering oblations and performing rites in different ways. The intentions however are the same. They are all meant to help the Jiva quickly progress in this journey and take up rebirth for evolution to continue. It is the good intention and respect for the departed one, shown through these ceremonies that matters. The means do not matter much. Fasting is only a symbol or sign of commitment and respect to indulge in the after-rites meant to help the Jiva proceed further. It does not have any other meaning. The common man always has his mind on the senses and enjoyment. When he fasts, his mind withdraws from the senses to a certain extent. This then helps him focus on the after-rites. It is a gesture for concentration and one pointedness. There is no further significance to this practice. If the process of well wishing can be carried out with love, without fasting, there is no need to fast. It is only a physical gesture.

5. Most people become highly sorrowful and loose their mental equilibrium after the death of a near one. Their minds and bodies go out of control and they become high on negativity. A temple or the Pooja room with idols or photos of deities is a place of positive vibrations where people congregate to offer prayers and enrich themselves positively. People who are grieving and lamenting after death have a tendency to spread their negative vibration and may spoil the atmosphere at these places of worship. Hence they are abhorred from visiting these places. To a person who can maintain a state of equillibrium by taking death in the right spirit and wishes well for the departed soul, this rule need not apply. Such a person who is calm, controlled and wise can visit any temple even at such a time. It is only a general pointer for the public.

6. There is nothing unclean or unholy about death. This is a wrong apprehension that comes from ignorance. It comes from the people who do not posses 'Gnyana' (knowledge of reality). Death is divine and an occasion of respect. It is the time of farewell and well wishing. Non one is unclean because of death in the family. It is a time when the concerened people should be left alone so they can concentrate on the after-rites with love and respect.

Ignorant people without true knowledge label death as impure and unholy.When God (the Atman) himself has decided to move the Jiva to another body, what business is it of ours to make foolish comments regarding this natural and divine occurring? God loves all souls equally and works for them. None are unclean. The Atman within is always pure. It is the Jiva who is subject to impurity due to his desires and even this Jiva merges into the Lord in the case of a sage who has attained to complete purity through self-realization. If one's mind is full of Viveka (wisdom) and is untouched by this Maya (illusion) called Janana (birth) and Marana (death), going to a temple makes no difference at the time of birth, life or death in the family.

6. A life of unbroken Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed accompanied by honest and sincere Yoga (for self-realization), with devotion and surrender to the Almighty is the highest of all spiritual or religious practices. There is no path which is higher. Such action always gives the best results in any situation. It is such a Yogi alone who can see things clearly as they are and be untouched by happiness or sorrow. Such a Yogi alone considers "Sarvabhutâni âtmani" (all living beings as a part of his own self) and practices Ahimsa with true love for all beings. Such a one becomes capable of overcoming the false grief further to death. It will help one proceed rightly and do what is required as regards concentrating on the right action required at such a time. This is the best way of showing respect to the Lord and to one's parents.

QUESTION: Dear Brother,

I thank you for the effortful replies on the queries. I have some pressing queries on the points above:

1) For instance, the buddhist says hell and heaven are states of mind and not physical places? How true is this and what does hindu scriptures say? Are hell and heaven real places? Is there a figure called Yama?
And no matter what a sinner or puritan one is, is the period thru hell and heaven only one year?

For this one whole year, I was told I should do monthly atma santhi poojai for my father. Will this be enough? Is there anything more I should do?

2) Some people in the funeral mentioned we should cover the altar with a cloth stating, if the altar of god is opened, the jiva will be afraid to come inside the house. Is there any basis to this? Will the jiva without a body be afraid of deities and the poojai room in general?

3) After one year will the jiva automatically take birth? Cos from Swami Sivananda's article, I remember rebirth depends on karmas and last impression at death.

Thanks alot.

Om.

ANSWER: 1. Where do you experience the events that occur in a dream? Which is that world? A man can experience extreme happiness or torture in a dream lasting much of the night. Are they real places? Yes in terms of working of the mind and No in terms of the physical world. The dream world is the ‘Astral plane’. It is not physical in nature. It is a world made of thought and not matter. The Jiva is in the astral world when in a dream. It is not in the physical body. It is in the astral body, in the astral world. The state of the Jiva after death is similar, except that it can never return to its physical body. After death, the Jiva acquires what is called ‘Yâthana Sharira’ which is made of astral or mind matter. All these higher and lower planes of enjoyment (heaven) or suffering (hell) are astral planes. The Earthly plane is the only physical plane. All other planes are astral or causal in nature, while the 7th or final plane of the Parabrahman (Almighty) to which self-realized beings go is beyond physical, astral or causal, being 'Shunya' (void). Unlike what people assume, heaven and hell are not physical places with lands, rivers or oceans. They are states of mind of the Jiva without the body. Pain or pleasure in these astral planes is more pronounced than on Earth.

Where do these planes exist? They exist everywhere, beside my hand which is typing this answer, beside your face which is looking at the screen and at all other places. The mind can move anywhere, hence these planes exist everywhere. An ordinary man cannot experience or see these planes because they operate at a different frequency. It is exactly similar to the microwaves emitted and received by a cell phone. Waves of different mobile networks and service providers are all around us. Yet we do not feel them. Why? Because our mind is not at that frequency. These waves are carrying the voices of millions of people, right next to us, all around us. Yet we cannot hear anything. We can hear something, only when we ourselves receive a call and start speaking and hearing. We then hear because the mobile handset is at that particular frequency and receives those waves. In this way, there are different planes or worlds all around us, each at a different frequency. When we are on the frequency of Earth (awake), we cannot experience the astral plane of the dream. And when we are in the astral frequency of a dream, we do not know anything about Earth. The dreamer is not aware of his physical body or other Earthly objects. His body is frozen because the Jiva has left the physical body and is functioning in the astral body as long as he is in the dream while asleep. As soon as he wakes up, the Jiva comes back into the physical body.

Lord Yama is an entity (soul) who is assigned the task of a judge as regards pronouncing the verdicts of Earthlings. Yamaloka is another subtle plane, where this activity is carried out. One year is the general period that takes to reach Yamaloka, not heaven or hell. Heavens or hells are other planes to which the Jiva goes later, after Yama’s verdict. These are astral planes where pleasure or pains are extreme, much higher in degree to what one can experience on Earth with the limitation of the physical body. The duration of stay of the Jiva in heavens or hells can be as short as a few months or hundreds/thousands of Earth years, based on the karma, positive or negative. Imagine the pain you experience in the most frightening nightmare at night. It might last for a few minutes or an hour. That is a kind of hell. Now multiply that pain by a thousand times, lasting not a few minutes as in a dream but lasting hundreds or thousands of years. That will give an idea of what these hells (other worlds/planes of pain) are all about. This is how man suffers in the hells further to evil deeds on Earth.

Follow the rituals prescribed for a year with love, and respect for the departed soul. It will be sufficient and will make the soul’s journey easier.

2. Was the Jiva afraid of coming into the house when alive in a physical body? No. Then why will it be afraid of coming inside when in the astral body? This is the only difference to the Jiva after death, till it takes flight forever. Except for the fact that it has lost the physical body, there is no difference. The normal astral body dissolves after a few days and is replaced by another astral body ('Yâthana Sharira') as mentioned earlier. The Jiva can move very quickly in the astral body, many times faster than light. Its speed cannot be estimated or imagined by the human mind. It is pure imagination and foolishness to say the Jiva gets afraid or will feel safe if the altar is covered. Covering the altar is an act done on the physical plane with a cloth. How can it affect the Jiva who has left the physical plane and is in a subtle plane? Like a dreamer who does not know what is happening beside his bed, the departed Jiva is not aware of anything on the physical plane. It cannot make out if you are wearing a green shirt or a white shirt etc. It can only receive thought waves in the astral body. This is why one should wish it well and help it take flight quickly. It can receive the thoughts and feelings of those with whom it lived and reacts to these waves for 11 days. Hence such fanciful statements of covering the altar don't hold meaning and are the result of ignorance.

3. The Jiva can take rebirth in a year, sometimes even before or sometimes hundreds or thousands of years later. It all depends on past karma, which decides where and to whom it will be born. Sometimes, it waits for its future parents to receive it (as they may not yet be married or destined for a child) at that point of time.

QUESTION: Dear Brother, Thanks alot for your insights this far.

All these experiences has given me the vairagya to be even more serious in following my brahmacharya regime.

Pertaining to one's death,
1) Can I as a son do anything to prevent my father's soul from going to hell? Or help to reduce the pain and suffering of my father's jivatma?

2) If the jivatma is in the astral plane, there has been incidents where the death has come down and have spoken to loved ones. Not sure how true is this but I have heard it. How does these happen?

3) Some say I should keep my father's personal belongings. Some say I should throw them away. But I believe since my dad has become a jivatma, keeping it does not matter. Pls advise on this.

4) Can my father's altar be kept side by side with God's altar?

5) Also, we had offered coffee to my father for a past week. We have seen a decrease in the coffee level by about an inch atleast. What does this mean? Can the soul consume liquids?

Your advice will as ever be appreciated. Thank you.

Answer

1. Except for the after rites performed by the son with love, nothing more need be or can be done. One's destiny is sealed through past karma and the will of the Almighty. It cannot be changed. Neither is it necessary to worry about the matter.

2. A Jiva in the astral plane can sometimes connect to people through dreams etc. However, all this is a waste of time to both the Jiva and others related to it.

3. This world and its objects are of no value in the sense of absolute reality. Attachment to the belongings of the deceased is hence a waste of time.

4. The photographs of expired elders should not be kept along with those of God. Only those belonging to the self-realized are kept in the prayer room near God's altar.

5. The Jiva cannot consume physical solids or liquids. Nor are such offerings of any use.

Perform the after-rites as prescribed by your community and leave the matter there. One should not worry or think too much as regards these matters as that is of no use. Nothing will be gained through unnecessary contemplation and involvement as regards the dead. Such involvement beyond the required degree does not change anything by the least and is a waste of time & resources. It leads towards more ignorance/attachment and not towards the knowledge of reality.

Life is short and meant for self-realization. Every moment is precious and is to be used towards this objective. So let us persevere in this direction and not get involved in things which are beyond our control.

Question

Dear Mr.Dhananjay,

Much thanks for your service here. I have read all your past answers. Even though, there is no scientific proof for the evolution of a special medha nadi, at some deep subconscious level, it all makes sense to me.

I am 25 yrs old and I am curently in my first week of Brahmacharya and intend to proceed to become a Urdhvareta yogi.

But I beleive I have another far reaching ambition/ desire to fulfill, and that is to build a economic superpower out of my company and focus that financial/economic power into improving the condition of our morally corrupt society and influence the political Government to do what is right and what is dharma. In short, I have made my life a mission to mould and have an impact on our country's future for the good and to use all that I amass to improve and help the life of men who cant do it for themselves. This is a long and arduous journey but this is what consumes my inner fire day and night.

This constructive desire naturally leaves me very little room for negative thoughts and makes my pursuit in Brahmacharya very easy. But I have not been stricly celibate in the past and have been involved in recreational sex with a number of women who were attracted to me, in the past.

My question is whether if I start practicing now,would I be able to develop a "Brahmacharya" strength strong enough to enable me to achieve this huge and Gargantaun task that I have taken up as my life's mission. I have come to understanding that I need very little materialistic things to live happily but I want to amass a great ecnonomic and financial power and use it to wipe away corruption and greed in the Indian society.

Kindly guide me with your knowledgeable advice

Answer

1. Modern science has not reached perfection as it is purely physical in nature. It has no idea of the meta-physical and subtler forces of the universe. The things claimed by modern science a few decades ago are now refuted by science itself. Similarly, many observations which are proclaimed today will be stated to be incorrect a few decades down the line. This occurs due to lack of true knowledge and understanding, which doesnot come as long as the physical plane is not crossed.

Yoga on the other hand is a perfect science. The Science of Yoga is based on direct perception/realization of the ancient sages who derived this knowledge in the state of Samadhi (super-consciousness). This science is sure about the facts garnered and has irrevocably adhered to the same without any change from the past thousands of years. The Yogi-s never go back on what they proclaim and say that these facts hold well unto eternity. They are sure about what they say and never withdraw their observations. The books on Yoga written by the ancients are testimony to this fact beyond doubt. They stand strong and firm to this day without the slightest change. This is so because the knowledge derived in Samadhi is perfect in nature and free from defect or limitation. The normal intellect in the waking state of consciousness cannot discern facts to the degree attained in Samadhi. This is because the intellect and mind are limited in nature, unlike the Atman who is infinite and unlimited. A Yogi who connects to the knowledge of things directly from the Atman gets perfect and final knowledge which cannot change any further, while that developed by the intellect of a scientist is imperfect, limited and always subject to change since it is not final and complete. Hence, trying to correlate the science of Yoga with modern science will not be of much use. Modern science is still at the tip of the iceberg, while the science of Yoga has reached the bedrock, is complete and has no further to go.

2. Take up the practice of honest and sincere Yoga & Brahmacharya as suggested in past answers with devotion to God. There is no means higher than Brahmacharya as regards attainment of the highest degree of human potential. This energy can then be used in the field of one’s choice.

3. Completely give up all forms of recreational sexual activity (including related thoughts/fantasy) and practice perfect, unbroken Brahmacharya to the best possible degree. It will take a few years for the past Vasana-s (impressions) to dissolve to a considerable extent and then only will the true, priceless benefits of Brahmacharya actually start shining. One should be patient and very tenacious in this practice with absolute reverence and belief to the concept. Then alone is progress possible.

4. This is as much as one can do. If God's will is concurrent with one's will as regards the objectives you have mentioned, it will translate into reality. Ultimately, what HE wills alone transpires, for this world and its people are his creation. There is however no harm in putting our might in the required direction with a selfless and well wishing objective.

Question
Dhananjay, hi
Hope you are well? Dhananjay, summing up from a few of your last posts:

- Jiva is manas, buddhi, chitt, ahamkar, senses, & 5 prans. The Jiva is encased within 3 bodies, sthul sharir, ling sharir & karan sharir, hence karan sharir, ling sharir and sthul sharir are all home to the jiva? Pran is the force which moves everything in a human except the atman? The atman in itself is a force and does not need facilitating?
- The Atman is the innermost core and is surrounded by the jiva and this is a result of avidya i.e. presence of avidya/ignorance around the atman leads to formation of ego around the atman which then becomes the jiva that assumers doership. Is the atman beyond the karan sharir? I am presuming it is but want to be clear, apologies for so many questions
- So, based on the above, jiva and atman are 2 separate and distinct entities? On death, the jiva is pulled out of the sthul sharir, but still resides in the ling and karan sharir. The atman is beyond the karan sharir and it is the atman which pulls the jiva out of the sthul sharir?
- If I also throw in the Koshs, I believe the following to be the progression in ascendency:

Sharir - Annmay Kosh – PART OF STHUL SHARIA
Pran – Pranmay Kosh and is in between Sharir & Manas i.e. facilitator/link between Sharir & Manas -PART OF LING SHARIR
Manas – Manomay Kosh - PART OF LING SHARIR
Buddhi/Ahamkar – Vigyanmay Kosh – PART OF LING SHARIR
Chitt – Annandmay Kosh – PART OF KARAN SHARIR
Atman - SELF
From Sharir to Chitt above is the JIVA?
Another thing I wanted to ask is about pret & bhoot, from pret, the jiva will ideally and in due course of time look to progress into a sthul sharir of course based upon the command/will of the atman? Is it the atman again which decides whether the pret stays on as a bhoot? If so, is that also a result of karm?

Apologies for such a long query, thanks once again, Manish

Answer
1. That entity which uses the 4 'Antahkarana-s' (Manas, Buddhi, Chitta, Ahamkara [me, mine concept]), the 5 senses of perception (sound, touch, sight, taste and smell), the 5 senses of action (functions of: speech, locomotion [of the hands & legs], regeneration, and excretion) and the Kârana Sharira (causal repository that stores the seeds/impressions of past karma) is termed as the JIVA or Individual. Since all these enevelop the Atman (soul), the resulting combination of such an Atman enveloped by these is called JIVATMA. Hence the term Jivatma in total represents the embodied soul subject to ignorance. The term Jiva has been used as a short-form for the term Jivatma on this portal, while the term Atman refers to the inner soul (or God) in particular, within this very same combination, which is always pure and unaffected though enveloped by these (as a piece of gold is unaffected and does not change in the least inside, though covered by mud & slime from outside).

2. The three bodies Sthula sharira (physical body), Linga sharira (subtle body) and the Kârana sharira (causal repository) are the accessories of the Jiva, through which it works out karma in Samsâra (trans-migratory existence)

3. Prana is the life force or energy emanating from the Atman which propels the Jiva. Prana exists both within and without the Jiva.

4. The Atman is infinite and all pervading and is only a witness to the happenings in the Jiva. He has always existed and will always exist. He was never born, nor shall he ever die. He has no beginning and no end. He is the source of everything, while he himself has no source, always having existed. Being integral with the Paramâtma (Almighty), he is not subject to the modifications of body or mind experienced by the Jiva. The Atman is the true 'I' or us. The Atman himself is the Almighty, though as long as self-realization is not attained, this cannot be understood. All things other than the Atman are 'Unatma' (non-Atman), hence Asat (unreal) and false in terms of absolute reality. This entire universe of Âkasa (space) is filled by the Atman and nothing else. The world of objects is unreal.

5. The Kârana sharira is nothing but the storehouse of the seeds of past karma that support Ahamkara (I-ness or Ego), condensed by past karma. The Atman is beyond and completely unaffected by any of these 3 bodies.

6. The white screen in the cinema theater is the Atman; the ever changing images which are super-imposed on the screen represent the modifications subjected to the Jiva. As long as consciousness is centered in the Jiva, he has to experience pleasure or pain. The moment consciousness merges into the Atman, one realizes he is neither the doer nor the experiencer but only the witness (just as the cinema screen is unaffected by the scenes of happiness or sorrow in the movie, knowing fully well that it is not the character experiencing pleasure or pain but only the white screen supporting the image). However, till self-realization is not attained, it appears as though the screen itself is experiencing the scenes in the movie and hence subject to pain or pleasure. Hence this world is an unreal illusion of images which does not exist in reality.

7. Just as the movie is a super-imposition of images on the screen, the Jiva is a super-imposition of characterstics on the Atman. Since the movie does not exist in reality, but is only a set of moving images, the experiences of the Jiva (being of this world) are also illusionary experiences that are unreal, while the Atman (like the screen) alone is real and completely unaffected (what ever be the kind of movie played on the screen)

8. The Atman being a constituent of the Parabrahman (Almighty) knows everything. Hence he also knows the exact time when the Jiva will have to be moved into another body for another set of life experiences, so as to help the Jiva evolve further to finally realize his non-existence. At the time of death, the Atman moves out, followed by the helpless and ignorant Jiva which does not understand what is happening, but is forced to follow like a little ant which is tied by a rope to a powerful railway locomotive.

9. The Kosha-s (sheaths) are the Vedantic classification of the vehicles surrounding the Atman.

- Annamaya Kosha: - (Annam – Food, Mayam – filled with, Kosha – Sheath or covering, meaning that covering which is filled with the derivative of food namely flesh). All that has come from food constitutes the Annamaya Kosha. The Annamaya Kosha cannot exist without food and will dissolve without it. It is the same as the Sthula Sharira or gross body.

- Pranamaya Kosha: - That covering of Prana (vital force) around the Atman which controls the Annamaya Kosha is the Pranamaya Kosha - A part of the Linga sharira or subtle body.

- Manomaya Kosha :- That covering consisting of the Manas (mind) and the five senses of perception around the Atman is the Manomaya Kosha - A part of the Linga sharira or subtle body.

- Vignyanamaya Kosha: - That covering around the Atman consisting of the Buddhi (intellect), Chitta (contemplative faculty), Ahamkara (I-ness or Ego) - A part of the Linga sharira or subtle body.

- Anandamaya Kosha: - That covering of bliss around the Atman which whose manifestation can be obvserved very clearly at the time of some pleasurable experience. It is a part of the Kârana sharira or causal body, the storehouse of the seeds of past karma.

10. The Jiva which has become a Preta (one who has gone to the other world after death) will be made to take up a body and other vehicles based on its past karma and based on those requirements necessary for it to evolve further. Since the Atman (who is nothing but the individualized concept of the Almighty) is the observer, he decides the next course of action. The transtition from Preta to Bhoota (estranged soul) is caused by the karma of the Jiva (an example being the act of suicide which invariably leads to transformation into a Bhoota). The Atman takes the next course of action based on such karma.

Question
Dear Sir,
How r u? This query is for my freind
He is very interested in Brahmacharya after reading your posts. But last week he faced a minor surgery for his testicles due to vericocele vein. After that operataion he told to me that my preserved semen lost due to operation. Sir I have doubt that ,is the preserved semen will loss due to the operation in testicles? How the semen situating in testicles? Sir in your previous post , I saw that after death the Jiva will become Preta, but I heard in a speech that the "Preta" is the sanskrit word of "Dead body" , Please clear my doubts

True is only the Self

Answer
1. Varicocele surgery to correct entangled blood vessels in the scrotum does not lead to loss of semen. Semen is secreted under sexual impulse and not due to surgery!

2. The word 'Preta' in Samskrut refers to a Jiva that has entered another plane/world, being bereft of a physical body through death. 'Shava' is the word used to denote a dead body.

QUESTION: Om shri Hanumante Namah !!
Dear SIr,
My self Pranav Bhardwaj pursuing MBBS from China and i'm 21 yrs old.
Sir i am practicing Yoga from last 3 months and following strict brahcharya. i have deep interest in yoga and deep faith in Lord Hanuman.My grandpa is the inspiration to me for turning my life and practicing yoga and though i am doing it feeling great pleasure in it. But i want to grow more and more in this aspect of life and want to achieve kaivalya but my grandpa is not ready to guide me and teach me more about this aspect of yoga because i am from other field and he thinks if i will indulge in this more i will be deviated from my goal and dream of life to become a good surgeon.

So any guidance from you will be very helpfull for me to grow in the yogic aspect of life. As i am a raw material who wants to transform my self in a yogi..what practices should i do to become a oordhvareta step by step progressing towards kevalaya ...

Please Hold my Hand and Guide me through your Experience...

Regards
Pranav

ANSWER: 1. The practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya does not in any way become an impediment to materialistic success or career growth. Rather, one will have a mature and dispassionate attitude towards desire and attachment, which will help prevent the trouble arising from attachment and clinging to desires. The conservation of Veerya will give much strength, concentration, memory and willpower which will help one to perform better in all fields of life. Only that which God has destined to be worked out by this body and mind of ours in this life will transpire, try how hard we may to do the opposite. Hence it is incorrect to think that the practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya will come in the way of materialistic success. The true Yogi is neither attached to materialistic success, nor affected by failure. He neither looks for pleasure, nor for pain. He rises BEYOND these opposites, fixes himself in his Atmic state of 'Sat-Chit-Ananda' (knowledge-existence-bliss) and remains a witness to the happenings of this illusory world.

2. Go through each and every past answer to get clear with the methods required to succeed in Brahmacharya. Apply these practices for a complete year with faith and devotion to God, seeking Kaivalya (liberation). Then, you will get a foot hold in this path and build a foundation for further progress. All the practices and the necessary lifestyle required to reach the state of an Urdhvareta and proceed further are available in these past answers. These guidelines are based on the advice from the scriptures written by liberated, self-realized masters and backed by study, application & personal experience from my side.

QUESTION: Om Shri Hanumante Namah !!
Pranamm Dhananjay Ji,
Thank you very much sir for your guidance and answer..
Sir as i told you that i am following strict barhmcharya from last 3 months...and practicing asanas and bandhas.. But in this week i had nocturnal emission twice .does it mean my vow of brahmcharya is broken and i have to start from the beginning...what should i do to stop this problem as allopathy consider this incident as normal happening....but i am not willing to loose a single drop.. so please guide me and the the possible solutions and also about the continuity of the vow...really i have to start from the beginning ??

With Regards
Pranav Bhardwaj

ANSWER: An involuntary emission in the dream state while asleep does not amount to a break in vow. However, the true Brahmachari takes all effort to never, ever loose even a single drop of his vital fluid, for any such loss leads to dilution of practice. At the start of Brahmacharya, the flow of semen is downwards (from many years and births of such habit). It takes time for the body and mind to start redirecting semen upwards through transmutation. As the process of transmutation becomes more efficient, wet dreams will gradually reduce in frequency. Read each and every past answer slowly and get clear with the mthods that are to be employed.

When the Yogi becomes an Urdhvareta after many years of honest and unbroken practice, he gets completely free from wet dreams. Semen itself does not get formed when Bindu (seed) becomes steady in the region of the brain in such a Yogi. Such a Yogi is most of the time in the thought of God, swimming in the bliss of Brahman, through meditation. "Urdhvareto bhaved yasya, sa Devo na tu Maanushaha" - "One who has become an Urdhvareta is then the equivalent of a 'Deva' (celestial God) though possessing a human body and is no longer a man" - say the scriptures. Such an Urdhvareta Yogi becomes very powerful and can do various things using this power for his own good (self-realization) and for the good of others as a representative of the Almighty.

Persevere in the direction described with honesty and dedication. Meditate much, whenever possible. One's attitude should be – "I will give up anything and everything but not Brahmacharya (which is the highest way of prayer and sacrifice to show love to God). Brahmacharya is my life, my blood and my very being. Never shall I indulge in those activities that lead to loss of the divine and precious Veerya which is the representation of the Almighty Brahman himself". Then, after many years of such unbroken practice, Brahmacharya becomes effortless and natural.

Answer
1. Since you are a student, there is no question of marriage till completion of studies and the advent of a job. Make this clear to yourself and your family. Donot think/keep any contact (even mental) with any woman on a regular/relationship/frequent basis. Contact with women should be limited to absolute necessity and never more. Else, it will end in sorrow. It is a waste of time and efforts and leads to unwanted karma. For now, focus on your studies, a life of Yoga & Brahmacharrya and maintain purity and calmness of the mind. The past, present and future are all the result of our own karma. Hence the wise donot waste time/energy in despairing about what has happened but act correctly in the present and future. When the time is right, the Lord sends the right woman as the wife. Donot worry or think of these things. Your duty as a student is study and building strength and character only.

2. One should never watch porn. It equals a willful break in Brahmacharya. All divinity and progress will be lost. Karma and sorrow gets thickened. The ways of the Lord are mysterious and powerful. HE knows everything and watches us all the time. One might not even be allowed to continue Brahmachaya if such activity persists. The Brahmachari should be very careful about what he does and should never commit actions that amount to failing/cheating God. Keep this in mind and persist in honest and sincere Yogic practice.

3. Various changes and effects occur in the body and mind as one practices a Yogic lifestyle. Simply ignore these and adhere to honest and sincere practice.

Question
QUESTION: Does the use of allopathic medicines/surgeries cause any impediment in the pursuit of Brahmacharya or God-realization in general?

ANSWER: Most Antibiotics and other potent Allopathic medicines cause serious side-effects giving rise to new problems. They snub the immune system from functioning naturally and instead kill both the harmful as well as benefic bacteriums within the body. In addition to these side-effects, various other complications can arise through prolonged use of such strong allopathic drugs as has been accepted and proven by science itself. Inundation of the body with the strong chemical/synthetic formulations present within these drugs toxifies the body. Hence these are to be taken as a last resort, only if the problem is serious and allopathic treatment unavoidable.

Till the time the Brahmachari does not become an Urdhvareta, he is prone to illness and disease like the ordinary man. Illness also manifests in the course of Brahmacharya when toxins of past karma surface whilst being vacated. The best method of action at such times (as regards karmic illness) is to bear the illness without any medicine and let the body fight it out naturally, though this approach is not everyone's cup of tea. By medicating oneself, one interferes with the expulsion of negative karma which is meant to give some pain and then vacate. This karmic toxin has embedded itself with a purpose (further to wrong action), and the correct way out is to let it work through the related illness, suffer the pain and thereby get rid of it. Karmic illnesses occur further to the presence of past karma and not accidentally. The human body has been designed by the Almighty with perfection. It is not a medium that is prone to disease or illness. Illness occurs despite this because of our own mis-doings (past karma) of this or a previous birth. These karma-s have to be worked without choice. Knowing it to be such, Yogi-s do not medicate themselves at incidences of illness or disease involving purification, and even if they do, resort to simple, natural home remedies made from herbs, spices etc. These natural remedies do not interfere in the expulsion of karma (unlike antibiotics which snub the symptoms but do not weed out the cause, thereby making recurrence of the condition more probable), but gently strengthen the immune system to help fight the disease.

This approach involves complete surrender to God. Only a Brahmachari who has strong belief in God and has surrendered can bear such an approach. It is a tough and testing method which requires much will power & determination to bear the pain. But it is a method that gives the best effects ultimately, for the Yogi dissolves his karma without interfering in its removal.

This is done with constant reminder of the attitude –
"God resides in this body. I am really the Atman and not the Ego. However, due to Avidya (ignorance), I committed many mistakes and accumulated negative karma. Now I have realized those mistakes and am following the correct mode of life. But the karma accrued has to be settled. The all merciful Lord is vacating these chunks of karma through these illnesses/diseases which appear now and then. Pain and suffering are to the body & mind and not me (for I am the Atman). Let that which happens happen. I will undergo any amount of suffering, for that is the best and fastest way of erasing karma and attaining to liberation. Karma clears through as much pain as is required for its removal and not more, for the laws of karma are always fair. The Lord will remove all these karmic causes in course of time. I bow to that Supreme being with all humility, and accept that which he does with surrender. He will take care of this body."

Such an attitude may not be possible for one and all. It calls for much 'Titiksha' (endurance to pain & suffering). If this approach is not possible, medication is the next solution. Those who cannot bear such an approach have to take recourse to allopathic or other remedies which give some relief (the fact remains that karma always makes man suffer as much pain as is destined, try what method he may to escape). No one can escape karma. These are the two methods of handling illnesses. One can choose, based on his choice.

The silver lining to these dark clouds of illness that occurs in the initial stages of Brahmacharya is the fact that after a few years of Yoga & unbroken Brahmacharya with much God-meditation and complete surrender, the Yogi becomes a complete Urdhvareta (non-semen producing state) and no longer gets any illness. When 'Bindu' (seed) becomes steady at the Ajna Chakra as 'Soma' (divine nectar) and does not come down to form semen, the 'Vajra' (diamond body) is formed. Unto him does not come disease, neither debility of oldage, nor death due to such causes says the 'Svetashwatara Upanishad'. He gets blessed with the 'Divya Sharira' (divine body) that is immune to all abnormalities (from simple cough, cold, fever to other more serious illnesses). His body becomes extremely fresh, full of health, strength and vital energy. It emanates a mild, yet pleasant fragrance. No disease can touch him then. He requires little sleep, little food, does not get fatigued easily, and has perfect vision (without any eye defect). The mind is cheerful and full of the innocence of divinity, wishing good to all and in the thought of God. All this is stated from personal experience, further to having suffered various karmic illnesses and ordeals before reaching the above described stage by the grace of the Almighty.

Sometimes, past karma is so strong that one meets with accidents or has to undergo surgeries for removal of tumors and the like. At such times, there is no other way but to go through systematic medical treatment and bear the side effects of strong medication/invasive surgery. This body & mind are afterall the mediums of the Jiva for working out karma and this is one of the ways of cleaning karma to attain liberation.

QUESTION: Thanks for the detailed reply!
I also just wanted to know if there is any karmic connection for diseases such as dust allergy, and life style diseases such as diabetes, etc, which seem to be the norm now a days for every body and not for some few people. Isn't the polluted environment and water/food and the reason for this rather than karma?
Appreciate if you can throw some light on this and also any material which can help us find out the root cause for our physical illnesses, etc, and also methods which can help to overcome them...

Answer
1. All diseases/abnormalities are the effects of karma in one way or the other. This karma could be accrued from various causes such as overindulgence/overeating, lack of proper health care measures in one's lifestyle (like deficit in exercise, sleep, stress etc.), hereditary reasons, excessive loss of vital fluid leading to debility and many more. Some deviations in health occur due to recent karma while others are from past karma of previous births. Wrong lifestyle which is rampant in society at present is the primary cause for most conditions.

2. While pollution is no doubt on the rise, it has not reached levels of becoming a universal and general health hazard. This is proven by the fact that people who lead a regulated lifestyle with correct diet, sleep and exercise are very less prone to such conditions. In the casae of Yogi-s who lead an absolute life of Brahmacharya and get established in this mode of activity, the incidence of disease is almost nil, despite consuming the same food, water and air. This shows that the reason for susceptibility to illness is more internal than external. Strong immunity and resistance guard one from pollution to a large extent.

The root cause for all illness is karma. Eating wrong food and leading a wrong lifestyle also generates wrong karma. In other words, indulging in any action not favorable to health and well being can also cause such karma. A life of Yoga & Brahmacharya is the best solution.

Question
QUESTION: Can the karmas or sins of one person transferred to another person knowingly or unknowingly?
To put in other words, can we catch the karmas/sins(unwanted)of others, and if yes, how should we avoid them or be careful about them?

ANSWER: While the entire karma of another person doesnot get contracted, one gets influenced/affected by anothers karma under conditions such as:

1. Close physical, mental or verbal contact.
2. Eating the food cooked by another, wearing the clothes worn by another etc.
3. Relationship/sexual contact/marriage.
4. Constant contemplation/thoughts about that person or his/her nature, activities etc.
5. Stealing/ receiving/ taking money, gifts, belongings, wealth in kind or any other favors without justification (without giving something of equal value in return) or unlawfully.

6. Giving something to another with the thought – " I have done him a favor and hope to get something in return" (or in other words assuming doership as a result of which karma involving the Ego is produced, which makes it longer to dissolve karma and attain liberation)

Under such cases, there is a possibility for some part of anothers karma to get transferred. Hence Yogi-s do not accept any favor (and thereby make themselves liable to karmic debt), if they are not able to return the same. They also do not bestow favors upon others with the thought of 'doership'. When they help others, it is with the thought –"I do nothing. The Lord is working from within me and making me help the other. I do not want anything in return as it is not me who is working but the Lord. All these actions of mine, I surrender to the Lord as his medium and not the doer". For the same reasons, they also talk less, maintain minimum direct contact with people and stay aloof, concentrating on their practices.

Avoiding all these points mentioned to the best possible extent or indulging in interpersonal relationships with a selfless perspective (where it is impossible to completely avoid contact) are some of the methods of avoiding unwanted karma.

QUESTION: Thanks for the reply... While I appreciate your answer I am not able to refrain myself from asking another question about your answer in point 2.
Can we get the karma from even our loved ones such as wife/mother, etc also, if we eat the food cooked them?
In such cases whom should we accept the food from or do you suggest the best way for a brahmachari is to prepare his food himself?

Answer
1. These very relationships such as that with one's mother/wife/family etc. are the result of past karma. In reality, the Atman has no relationship with anybody, being single, without a second. It is the Jiva which has karmic connections with other Jiva-s. All these relationships are thus the means of working out karma (and also adding more karma) leading to this endless Samsâra (ocean of trans-migratory existence).

माता नास्ति पिता नास्ति नास्ति बन्धु सोदरः |
नास्ति अर्थं नास्ति गृहं तस्मात् जाग्रत जाग्रत||

"O deluded man, there is nothing called mother, nothing called father, nothing called relatives and nothing called siblings…
… Neither does wealth exist (in reality), nor your house. Hence be alert, be alert (from getting attached to these illusions)"

- Âdi Shankaracharya, a Self-realized Yogi and founder of the Advaita philosophy.

All these are illusory, transient and impermanent in nature. They are not entities or things of substance. Attachment to any one of them always ends in sorrow. Being unreal, they cannot give happiness. They are the result of past karma and will soon go away. For attaining to true bliss, one should become the Atman (through self-realization). That alone is the true state of substance.

Hence the wise Yogi wishing liberation from this Samsâra treats everyone with a selfless perspective and does not expect anything from another. He does not take anything belonging to another, nor is he attached to objects that belong to him. He treats all other beings as the Atman with impartiality and reduces the advent of further karma arising from attachment.

The act of cooking involves involuntary transmission of Prana, mental thoughts and karmic nature of the one who cooks into the food cooked. This is why womenfolk in the house are advised to cook for their family with a pleasant, loving and happy mind, for cooking with a disturbed or deranged state of mind leads to inundating of such qualities into the food which the eater then acquires and suffers. It is inevitable for a married man or one living in a family to eat food cooked by another, for it is his karma that has brought him into contact with these other Jiva-s through relationships. Hence such transfer of karma being a part of his destiny cannot be avoided. It has to be negated through the fire of Yoga Samadhi (super-consciousness) alone. However, it is best to avoid to the extent possible, eating food, cooked by others. This is the reason advanced Yogi-s sometimes cook themselves and avoid eating food outside of home.

If both the Yogi and his wife are in a Brahmacharya-marriage (a life of absolute & unbroken Brahmacharya in marriage further to the birth of a child without entertaining any sexual thoughts, words or deeds as regards each other), supported by a life of Yoga with a selfless attitude to the whole world, remnant karma between them gradually wears away and no new karma is formed. Such a couple live with the sole objective of realizing Brahman (Almighty) and not to sate desires. They are content with whatever wealth that comes lawfully to them through their 'Prarabdha karma' (karma working out presently). Such a marriage then does not become an impediment to Brahmacharya and self-realization. Food cooked by such a virtuous wife, being free from impurity (for her mind is pure in the thought of the Lord and service to her husband and family with love and selflessness), does not come in the way of perfecting Samadhi meditation. This is stated in the scriptures and is also my observation from personal experience, further to being blessed with a noble and virtuous wife by the grace of the Lord.

2. There have been cases of Yogi-s who were not fortunate to get such a wife/family. Such people were known to renounce the family or make alternate arrangements of living. While cooking food by oneself under such circumstances is no doubt the best option, it might not be possible for one and all. Under such cases, one has to soley depend on his Yogic practice and the grace of Lord for progress and persevere with a selfless attitude.

Answer
Your days of Abrahmacharya (incontinence) are over. From today, you will work honestly in taking up the practice of Brahmacharya and succeed in becoming an established Brahmachari whose sole aim is to attain to Brahman. You will take all the effort required to get established in this mode of life.

Go through each and every past answer slowly and carefully, absorbing the essence and apply the methods suggested.

Question
Dear Mr. Dhananjay,
Much thanks for all your previous answers.

I have a query.
Due to the nature of my job, I interact with quite a few beautiful women from time to time and have just started started on the course of Brahmacharya.

The last time when I was speaking to a very attractive woman, I realised I was getting aroused just being close to her and interacting. In that process, my penis released some lightly viscous fluids due to the arousal but was not orgasm.

I hope that is not a break in my Brahmacharya because then i would be out of a livelihood if I have to stop interacting with women.
Please give me an answer

thank you.

Answer
Simply adhere to the practices of Yoga & Brahmacharya as have been described in past answers with cent percent honesty and devotion. Never voluntarily initiate any sexual thought, word or deed with others or with yourself. The release of sexual fluids is due to incessant susceptibility to sexuality further to strong, past sexual karma that has lead to an enslaved mind which triggers at the slightest sexual stimulus. Simply ignore it and work at Brahmacharya as described in totality. This karma will slowly dissolve if all the practices mentioned are strictly followed with honesty and devotion to God, asking for establishment in Brahmacharya.

Within a year of such honest and unbroken practice, the situation will come under better control. Brahmacharya for self-realization should be made the very purpose of life through ‘Nishkama karma’ (activities carried out selflessly with the thought of God for self-realization, following which man becomes the complete tool of God who takes over the body, mind and ego)

Question
Good Morning Dhananjay,

How are you? Have some queries regarding asanas and meditation.

1.At present i am doing yogic practice in sukhasana and i tried padmasana and vajrasana but it is very difficult for me as i am not flexible to do padmasana and can't stay for longer period in vajrasana can you please suggest some other asanas or streches so that we can improve flexibility and perform those asanas easily.

2.while i meditate i saw that after 8 or 10 minutes i am unable to continue meditation.

3.while browsing i came across biography of Mahavatar Babaji and read that he was teaching sushumnanadi meditation to his followers can we practice it.

Thanks for the help you are offering.
Ganapathi.

Answer
1. Pratice Yogasana-s such as:
- Paschimnothanasana
- Padahasthasana
- Sivanandasana
- Dhanurasana

These will help improve flexibility. Perform stretches and warm up exercises before Yogic Asana-s if there is a severe lack of flexibility. Flexibility will improve once Padmasana or Sidhasana is mastered. Without mastering any one of these Asana-s, long meditation is not possible.

2. Meditation becomes longer only through practice. Hence one must practice as much as possible.

3. There is no meditation which does not involve the use of 'Sushumna Naadi'. All kinds of meditations use the Sushumna Naadi as a channel to raise Kundalini Shakti to the Sahasrara chakra in the brain. Follow the instructions that have been prescribed in past answers.

Question
Dear Bro,

I thank you for providing guidance on what happens after death. Your advice was deeply appreciated.

I am however troubled by something else in relation to brahmacharya. By God's grace, I have practiced brahmacharya close to a month.

1) However, the mind is starting to rationalize that sex or intimacy is ok as it is just a harmless game of youthful forces. This rationalization is going again and again in my mind and is endangering my vow. How to overcome this, despite calling on to God, the thought keeps on coming back. Especially in this period when I have fell asick frequently, my will power has gone down.

2) What are the karmic consequences for i)full-fledged sex? ii) mere foreplay with no penetration iii) masturbation only iv) watching porn?

I am sure there ought to be consequences apart from the waste of time and energy. If consequences await after death, then what will happen in the court of yama for the above 4 acts after death per sastras?

Why does the sexual thoughts keep coming back despite calling on to the lord?

Pls advice. Thank you.

Answer

1. One's rationalization against recreational sexuality should be based on the fact that it is Anatma (non-Atman) and Asat (falsity). Hence such indulgence takes one away from self-realization. Since the aim of the Brahmachari is to become the pure Atman and obtain liberation, he has to develop Vairagya for everything Anatma and concentrate only on Atmic attributes. This is why recreational sexuality is given up. The numerous methods to substantiate this fact are available in past answers.

2. Sex for procreation (for one or two wanted children) with one's legally wedded spouse does not have any negative karmic consequences. All other kinds of sexuality end in sorrow. Masturbation and pornography densify past Samskara-s & Vasana-s, weaken the body & mind and make the Jiva unfit for Kaivalya (self-realization), whereupon it has to suffer incessantly in the ocean of Samsâra in sorrow. Answer to the effects of wanton, recreational sexuality are available in the title: 'Effect of Sexual relationships' DT: 12/4/2010 in past answers.

3. The consequences of recreational sexuality are borne and suffered here on Earth itself in this or subsequent births. Sexual thoughts recur with force because the seeds of past Samskara-s & Vasana-s are very strong and potent. Just as the seeds of a plant sprout into saplings when conditions are favorable, the seeds of past sexual action sprout into sexual thought, word or deed when the conditions become favorable.

Merely calling the Lord's name is not of much use because past karma was committed by us and not the Lord. Hence we alone have to bear the consequences. However, intense Bhakti (devotion) to God can help subjugate these thoughts to some extent temporarily. The only way to burn these seeds of past karma permanently is through the practice of a life of Yoga and unbroken Brahmacharya. These then weaken and finally get roasted after many years of practice leading to Kaivalya (self-realization).

Question
hi dhananjay,

hope you are doing fine,

1.i have some query regarding wet dreams, yesterday i had one and i want to ask that even though we refrain from seeing women but while reading newspapers and t.v.(good programme), suddenly half dressed or revealing ads come before us just for a second and two, is there a chance of occurring a wet dream.

2.why is there a strong urge to have a voluntary slip after a wet dream, from that time till the next day and disappears afterwards. why is this strong urge taking on me even though i know that this sense pleasure is deceiving and ruining our own self and i have day long thoughts supporting and against it, can you please help in suggesting the behaviour during this weak time so that we should not give into sense pleasure and repent.

3.want to clarify that yesterday's was a wet dream or a voluntary slip. while i was asleep suddenly i got some thoughts i was stroking to bed, i realized in a second and to my knowledge i didn't have a discharge then but in the morning i got wet.do we consider this as a voluntary slip or a wet dream. Please clarify my doubt should i say to myself that i had a wet dream or i take it as a voluntary one and think this as my first day.please guide me.

Excuse me for such a lengthy query and thanks for everything.
Ganapathi

Answer
1. Any sexual stimulus (in the form of sight, smell, sound, touch and memory) which creates an impression in the 'Chitta' (contemplative mind) leading to fantasy/imagination/words/deeds can add to the chances of a wet dream. Hence an aspirant has to be very alert in not letting his mind focus on such stimuli. This is one of the challenges an aspirant has to face and overcome during the initial years of Brahmacharya. The technique to be employed at such times is to withdraw the mind and senses from such stimulus and remind oneself of:

- The falsity behind the beauty of the body (that it is a bag of filth containing undesirable waste which decays and fouls with age very soon)
- That this beauty is that of the Atman meant to aid creation (by attracting a mate) and not that of the body.
- That it is not worth wasting one's vital fluid (which is the representation of the Atman) on such a bag of refuse.

It will then be necessary to displace any residual sexual thought and replace it with another virtuous thought. This procedure is to be followed correctly, failing which fantasy can build up leading to sexual stress and a slip.

2. The sexual sensations produced by a slip sometimes cause a craving for repetition of the same in beginners. This is because past memories reactivate and induce such thoughts. However, in the case of one getting established in Brahmacharya, there is sheer pain, revulsion and distaste further to a wet dream. The way out is to remind oneself of the falsity of Mâya, logically reason out the cheating nature of sexuality and indulge in as much meditation on God as possible. This is a process in Brahmacharya that all aspirants have to go through without exception till self-realization. [Lord Buddha was tested by 'Kâmasena' (an army of female celestial nymphs with various seductive tricks) to abandon his efforts, even on the night prior to self-realization while he was in meditation. However, he ignored their advances through 'Viveka' (wisdom) and held firm his penance with determination, which finally lead to liberation].

3. A wet dream is that loss of vital fluid which occurs as the result of a sexually oriented dream while asleep. It might or might not involve physical movements of the body. The dreamer comes across a sexual situation in the dream, in which he participates, leading to the sexual act. As in the case of any other dream, he will generally not be aware that he is in the dream state and starts to realize this only on nearing ejaculation (when it is too late). The sexual thoughts leading to a wet dream are not voluntarily indulged in (they are done without awareness and without real perception in dream sleep), while in a voluntary slip, the person is fully awake, aware, and in knowledge of what he is doing right from the start. Such activity is carried out willfully and in full cognition of being stimulation/masturbation. It can now be decided whether it was a wet dream or not.

When past sexual Samskara-s and Vasana-s surface with strength in dream sleep, the sub-conscious mind is active, while Buddhi (intellect), Vichara (discernment) and Viveka (wisdom) are absent or very feeble. The Ahamkara (Ego) then tries to get what it is not getting in the waking state. If one is very vigilant and sincere about Brahmacharya, one can perform Mula bandha (as soon as awareness dawns) even in sleep to reduce the discharge, just before ejaculation.

Question
Hi Dhanvijay,

I am trying to follow celibacy for over a couple of months but yet to establish in it. I feel my mind is more repulsive to my vows and find it difficult to harness it towards celibacy. But, I will never fail to make my attempts. I also started to make my body fit by doing exercise and yoga. I think this would help myself feel better and divert my mind on something constructive. I am doing a evening shift and usually get home only by 11.30PM. So, I do not find convenient schedule to incorporate Jogging and Yoga into my lifestyle.

I wonder if taking breaks between my sleep would have any negative impact on my health or mind. I planned to get up 5am in the morning, go for a jog and do yoga immediately I return, have break fast and take a nap again for 2 to 3 hrs and start for my work. I have already started doing this, but need your advice if this would be beneficial. Expecting your insight on this.

With Regards,

Siva.

Answer
1. Continue the practice with undiluted efforts. Donot think of success or failure. Efforts and only efforts matter. Then the grace of God eventually shines without doubt. One should never worry about the results; that is not our concern. Our purview ends at honest efforts applied in the right direction with devotion to God. It is our own past karma that is acting as an impediment to Brahmacharya. As such karma dissolves and vacates through honest and sincere practice, Brahmacharya becomes easier. The way to ensure this dissolution is through unfailing and regular practice of a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya carried out for a long time.

स तु दीर्घकाला नैरन्तर्य सत्कार सेवितो द्रुदभुमिः

"That (practice) when carried out for a long period of time, without a break and with reverence (consisting of tapas [austerity], Brahmacharya (sexual continence), Sraddhâ [absolute faith] and Vidyâ [knowledge]) becomes firmly grounded and established"

– Chapter 1/ Verse 14, Yoga Darsana

- These are the requirements for success in Yoga (union with the Almighty through self-realization) as laid down by the realized Sage Pathanjali. Practice has to be carried out for a long period of time (since past tendencies dating to eons have to be negated), unbroken (for a break dissolves efforts) and with reverence to the principles with devotion and commitment backed by austerities (such as correct food, waking up at 4.00 A.M, Yogic practice, and the other disciplines involved etc.) Absolute faith in the process with the clear knowledge of what is to be done and what is to be not should be applied, following which, that (practice) becomes firm and established.

If one perseveres this way, constantly thinking of the 'Brahman' (Almighty), the state of unbroken Brahmacharya will eventually dawn in time. It will surely come to the one who follows these principles with his heart and soul. One's attitude should be –"I will give up food, water, sleep and even this life but not Brahmacharya for self-realization, for how can I cheat and fail the great Lord who has been kind enough to introduce me to this highest mode of spirituality which even the 'Deva-s' (celestial beings) crave for and envy?". Such commitment and innocent love is required for success.

2. An average of 7 hours of sleep/day (taken at a stretch without breaks between 9.00 P.M ~ 4.00 A.M) is the recommended sleep pattern for the health and well being of the beginner aspirant. Since this is not possible for those working irregular shifts, try to avoid taking naps in a random manner. Wake up as early as possible, even if sleeping late and make up for the lost sleep later. This is to be adjusted based on one's individual timings and schedule (depending on the wortk hours). To begin with, you can incorporate the schedule you have mentioned. The Yogic practices consisting of Asana, Bandha, Nadi Shodhana, Pranayama and meditation are to be performed twice a day without fail (at any two Sandhi-Kâla-s) which are convenient. One should think of the Lord as much as possible, performing all actions as an offering to him. If this much is done, things will improve gradually and become stable.

Question
Dear Brother,

1) In one of your posts, you had mentioned - "One's attitude should be –"I will give up food, water, sleep and even this life but not Brahmacharya for self-realization, for how can I cheat and fail the great Lord who has been kind enough to introduce me to this highest mode of spirituality which even the 'Deva-s' (celestial beings) crave for and envy?"

Aren't celestial beings enlightened and higher in status than human beings? Does being a celestial being have a fixed time period and not for eternity?

2) You had mentioned that one can take a vow in periods. Say if I follow brahmacharya for about 2 months, and at the end I somehow watch porn and masturbate. Will it destroy the saved divine energy of the 2 months in total?

3) Is there any proof that Lord Yama exists or is it some passed down folk stories to instill fear in people to follow the right path?

Thanks.

Answer
1. Deva-s (celestial beings without a physical body who inhabit the Deva loka) are not self-realized. They are spiritually advanced beings, though not yet enlightened. They occupy the higher astral planes and remain there until the strength of the good Samskara-s (impressions) which are latent in them last. Then, they have to come back and take rebirth on the Earthly plane to strive for liberation.

The Deva-s are much higher than the ordinary human. An Urdhvareta, though a human is the equivalent of a Deva in rank ("Urdhvareto bhaved yasya, sa devo na tu maanushaha" – "The Yogi who is an Urdhvareta is the equivalent of a Deva and not a human, though using a physical body" - say the scruiptures). These Deva-s who are in a state of bliss in the astral plane (as an effect of their past good deeds), do not however have access to liberation in that plane. For that, they have to wait till their good karma is expended and take rebirth here on Earth in flesh and blood. It is only the Brahmachari who is in the quest of Brahman through Brahmacharya who has this access. Hence it may be said that the path of salvation through Brahmacharya is 'Durlabha' (unavailable) even to the Deva-s. This is why one must make full use of this divine human birth which is the gateway to liberation without wasting time and energy on other useless pursuits.

2. After taking the vow of Brahmacharya, one must never watch porn/masturbate or slip voluntarily. Extending the vow in stages means increasing the duration of Brahmacharya gradually, on and on and does not mean willfully breaking it with sinful activity. If such voluntary break of Brahmacharya with full awareness and cognition were to be indulged in, all the divinity lost. The aspirant will realize what this means, on his own at the right time.

3. Is there any proof in physical terms that God exists? It is not necessary to prove any of these things. Those who believe accept it and those who don't reject it. What exists and what does not will finally be realized through experience.

Question
Thank You Dhananjay G...
you have taken away all my tensions and worries by your answer..
I have few more questions...
One is regarding to diet...I am vegetarian but i do consume garlic and onion which are considered as a tamsic food and is not good for brahmcharya..as i am am living with my roommates in china..and they consume each and everything except me and one fellow..so i have to eat whatever is in the kitchen(veg) and also sometime i drink tea...so should i leave the garlic and onion and also the tea

My second question is in my mind i am highly spiritual and only thought that crosses my mind is brahmcharya and god..and in these deep thoughts i am unable to pick my course (MBBS) books but my mind always like to read all the matter that is on celibacy and yoga each and every time..which will create problems for me as my career will not shine much..in short i think more and do less...

and the other is more personal problem rather than a question..
i am in relationship from last 4 year and i love her so much(she is in india)..but from last year we are having trouble in our this relationship and i found that she is not the right girl for me and she did so much damage to me emotionally and psychologically and now i want to leave her and move on to the path of celibacy ..because of these problem i am unable to meditate and study as i go to bed to sleep the thoughts of these pain full memories which she has given me starts to run in my mind and i find and feel my self so pain full and miserable and i cannot talk to anybody about this and feel helpless....whatever happened to me is so wrong and now i want to get rid of this....so please help me.....

as i am in brahmcharya from last three months and i consider it as a beginning i will keep asking you for your help and guidance time by time and step by step...

Thanking you
Pranav

Answer
1. Since eating food containing onion and garlic is inevitable in the present situation, there is no option for the time being. Gradually taper down on tea drinking and substitute it with milk or a malted beverage. Then, you can fully give up on tea.

2. One should first persevere in following one’s Dharma (duty). The duty of a student is to study and perform well in his course. Set aside a certain time of the day for Yogic practices and say 30 minutes to read material on Yoga/Brahmacharya. Brahmacharya is to be applied in reality and not merely read in theory. It is practice that matters the most. You can then focus the rest of your time on study related to your course. A student who does not strive honestly in his studies does not perform Dharma correctly. A student should conserve energy through Brahmacharya and apply this energy to develop physically, mentally, spiritually and academically.

3. A student should not get involved in relationships with the opposite sex. It becomes a distraction, waste of time and energy and finally ends in sorrow. The duty of a student is to strive in his field of study. Till one gets done with his degree, finds a job and stands on his own feet, one should not think or get involved in these matters. Even later, the woman who is involved in the man's life should be the wife and not others. Interactions with all other members of the opposite sex should always be to the point, brief, limited to necessity and never more. Any involvement beyond such limits always ends in sorrow. This is the truth & beyond doubt. Hence the wise man does not waste his resources on this path which leads to suffering.

Give up on all memories of your past associations with members of the opposite sex. All such thought/activity is a sheer waste in every sense. It will give nothing but pain and suffering. The man who craves/runs after a woman begets sorrow and nothing else. There need be no doubt about this. The wise man does not behave in this way. The role of a woman in a man's life is in the form of his lawful wife. Any involvement without/outside marriage can never bring happiness. When the right time comes, God will send forth such a wife. Till then, do not think about this topic. God has been kind to you by giving you a chance in the path of Brahmacharya. Persevere honestlty in this path and study well for your course. Only then will you shine well. Your parents have striven to accommodate you in the course. It is your duty to give your best and return their love with gratitude. Do not let the mind get distracted by anything or anybody else.

Question
Hi

I have this bad habit at staring women in the eyes and it seems like i am not able to control it. Most women are scared to look at me due to this. I don't want to be like this.... i want to be normal. Is there any way i can look at women in a non sexual way ?

thanks,
sH

Answer
Practice Yoga & Brahmacharya, so as to first overcome the need to stare at women. This need itself is a sign of sexual slavery. Do you stare at a tree, mountain or a cow the same way? The body of a woman is no different from any of these. It is a part of nature's creation and the need to stare is itself a deviation from the pure state of the Atman. This need arises because of the ignorance of associating sexuality for recreation and not limiting it to its true objective - procreation. As you get established in Brahmacharya, this need will dilute and gradually taper away.

Question
Respected Dhananjay ji,

Thank you very much for putting in so much effort to show us the right path of Yoga. I want to humbly seek your guidance regarding the problems I am having in practicing Yoga.

How is one supposed to feel after doing asans and pranayams? Good or bad?

I feel very sad, depressed, frustrated and lonely - much more than usual. I have learnt asans and pranayams from a well known teacher of my city and am quite sure I am doing them correctly.
I have also tried doing only pranayams or only asanas in my daily practice but the end result is the same. Because of the crushing depression that comes after yoga practice I invariably leave it after a few days even though I want to continue it.

I have become established in physical brahmacharya for about 3 months now. This means I don't feel any need for sex but random sexual thoughts do occur in my mind a handful of times a day. I have been weak in mind and body since birth. I had great hopes that Yoga would help me.

I have two more questions if you don't mind.

Q2. What should be the food of a person trying to become a brahmachari be like? Rich or simple? Won't a person weakened by years of masturbation need rich, energy giving food to recover?

Q3. Does idle compute use or internet browsing (not porn) for many hours a day cause significant loss of prana? If it does then can you suggest any alternate activity to pass the day? I am 36, unemployed & cannot work because I feel very weak and emotionally unstable.

Thank you very much for your help.

Answer
1. What would be the initial reaction of a thief leading a life of thievery when he is locked up in a prison for reforment? He would feel depressed, suffocated, claustrophobic and constrained. Having been used to his unlawful ways and having had his way as regards his wanton life, life in a reformation center appears torturous. However, if he were to apply his mind and body in the direction of reformation and correction, he will eventually emerge clean and free from the wrong belief of thievery being beneficial and would turn into an asset to himself and the society.

The practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya is very similar. During the first year or two of Yoga & Brahmacharya, the body and mind which had become accoustomed to years and past births of a life of Abrahmacharya (incontinence) resist and refuse to accept the changed lifestyle and discipline. The mind comes up with innumerable reasons against Yoga & Brahmacharya. The whole process seems contrary to one’s nature and flow. In addition to these mental challenges, past Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasana-s (tendencies) which surface while being vacated by the power of conserved Ojas, produce strong feelings of anger, frustration and misery. It sometimes appears as though life has become very tough and unmanageable.

This is the first test or barricade that the Yogi has to successfully overcome if he has to proceed in tasting the divine fruit of establishment in Yoga, leading to self-realization.

It does not come easily, this divine fruit of eternal release from the ocean of Samsâra. So only the very sincere and devoted have access to this shore of eternal realization, God has made a life of Brahmacharya full of difficulties and challenges. An ordinary, egoistic man can never hope to swim across this dangerous ocean of Samsâra and reach the shore of liberation. But to the one who is humble, who is devoted to the Lord with innocent love and has unfailing perseverance, success eventually comes. The first milestone of considerable achievement in this journey is the state where the Brahmachari develops complete freedom for the need to masturbate or have recreational sex. Brahmacharya no longer appears contrary to one's lifestyle from then on. He gets the mind to persevere with much zest, and the urge to meditate longer at this stage.

After the Brahmachari spends considerable amount of time in this stage and perfects 'Savikalpa Samadhi' meditation, he attains the next and very important milestone in his journey towards self-realization. This second milestone is the state of an Urdhvareta. Words cannot describe the sheer bliss and joy that one feels while occupying this state. One is happy and full of innocence and bliss for no reason (the qualities of the Atman). In this stage, the mind of the Urdhvareta, even while indulging in external activity, is constantly in the thought of God, craving to get back into meditation on the Lord. Just as two lovers constantly think of each other and cannot wait to become one with each other, the Yogi occupying this stage constantly thinks of God and cannot wait for the 'Sangama' (union) with the Lord through Samadhi meditation. Just as two lovers feel distressed and pained when separated from each other, the Yogi feels estranged and unhappy if he, perforce, due to some occurring, is unable to meditate on a particular day and merge with the Almighty through Samadhi. Union for recreation between man and woman leads to degeneration and bondage, while union with the Lord through Samadhi leads to eternal liberation.

At this stage, one does not feel like doing anything for oneself. The Yogi does all actions to please God and as a service to HIM, this body & mind being the tools of enactment of the Lord's Leela (divine play). One is content with whatever comes though one's Prarabdha (destiny of this life), be it poverty or riches, fame or obscurity. These things do not matter at all to the Yogi, for to what avail are these riches, name or fame when compared to the matchless and incomparable bliss of the Atman that has started to trickle into the mind of the Yogi? That feeling, that Supreme bliss, before which the pleasure of a sexual orgasm appears like stale and rotten food when compared with fresh, hot food. That Supreme exhilaration and 'Samadhana' (contentment) of knowing one's hard efforts and sacrifice as regards Brahmacharya have been recognized by the Almighty and HE is now allowing the Yogi communion with HIM through Samadhi. One must experience this for himself in reality. Words cannot do justice to description. I cannot find enough adjectives to even partly elaborate this experience. It is worth all the sacrifice and pain that were endured initially.

Then the Yogi with tears of devotion and innocent love for God feels as though God is telling him – "You strived hard, made many sacrifices, endured much pain and honestly adhered to the principles of Yoga & Brahmacharya with devotion to ME, with the sole objective of reaching ME. I am impressed with your efforts, dedication and love. Hence I offer you the ability to experience and unite with ME in Samadhi, to enjoy the constant bliss that comes from thinking of me this way, even in the midst of work. This is an important stage you have reached in the journey to self-realization".

Thus, it appears as though the initial years of Yoga & Brahmacharya involve more hardships and suffering and less happiness. This is because one is reversing the misdeeds of past karma. Though not contrary in terms of reality, such a life appears contrary to one's nature. The Yogi might feel depressed, angry, irate or helpless at such times. When one perseveres despite these challenges and finally emerges victorious, these things fade away for ever and things become easier. Hence one should persevere without slackness, with devotion and sincerity.

2. Always perform the entire set of Yogic practices consisting of Asana, Bandha, Nadi Shodhana, Pranayama & meditation, twice a day without fail. Never take short cuts. The depression will go away eventually. The first year is tough and daunting. Every aspirant faces these troubles of disharmony at the beginning when the body and mind are getting reset to a different frequency.

3. The fact of having achieved 3 months of physical continence is an indication that the grace of God is in place and higher things are in store. Persevere steadily knowing fully well that Brahmacharya is your default state. Sexuality for recreation is a disease. So we will remove this disease. Donot worry about random sexual thoughts. Displace these immediately on appearance and ensure that they donot flower into lust and passion. Stick to honest practice come what may. Such a stubborn and adamant attitude is required. Then, success slowly blossoms.

4. If these principles are applied in totality, you will one day acquire a body and mind that is strong, tough, graceful, free from illness/disease and full of health to the finest degree.

5. A glass of milk/malted beverage early in the morning, normal breakfast followed by a banana at 8.30 A.M, lunch before 1.30 P.M consisting of 3~4 wheat roti-s/chapathi-s with some vegetable preparation and dhal (or 2 roti-s and some rice for rice eaters) followed by another banana, buttermilk in the afternoon, and a dinner comprising of fruits and raw vegetables in the evening with a glass of milk will prove to be enough as regards nutrition and balance for the beginner. 6~10 glasses (2 litres) of water/day should be sufficient. At the advanced stage, the same menu is followed, in even lesser quantity. Rich and fatty food less on fiber and very high on protein is neither necessary nor conducive to good health and Brahmacharya.

6. It is best to limit computer use to necessity and not make it a pastime. The mind and Prana are interlinked and applying the mind randomly on all sorts of unnecessary thought dissipates mental energy and hence Prana. Aimless browsing can lead to idleness and make the mind prone to unrest thereby making it vulnerable to porn or sexual thoughts. When free and to the extent possible, use the computer for reading material related to Yoga/Brahmacharya and scriptures/matters related to self-realization. Also meditate whenever possible. Take to physical exercise/sports for an hour a day, whenever possible. Past karma in the process of expedition is the real cause behind the lack of employment. When this passes, you will get suitable employment and things will stabilize. Apply efforts in the direction of seeking a suitable opening as regards your career. Practice a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya to help build energy and strength. By the grace of the Almighty, the tough times will pass and become manageable.

Question
Dhananjay, hi
Hope you are well?
Dhananjay, I had a few doubts which I believe you will be able to help me with:
* Upon death, the jivatma is pulled out of the sthul sharir, and then it follows the atman to enter another body. does that mean that we carry over whatever is in the mind to the next birth? i.e. we have to deal with whatever's embeded in the mind from various past births?
* What are you thoughts on Taoist sexual practices. As far as ideology is concerned it is very similar to Brahamacharya i.e. conservation of life force [qi] and essence [jing], but they also believe that jing can be increased in a male from sexual contact with women [where men gain from getting jing from women] and they have various ways of controlling ejaculation as well. Retention of bodily fluids is fundamental to their practices, they believe the fluid that contains the maximum amount of jing is the semen hence the stress on its conservation. From one of your past answers, I do remember you saying that even if you dont ejaculate, the desire to have sexual contact remains which is contrary to the objective of a brahamacharya. I'd appreciate your thoughts on the above, thanks.
* One of my friends is having to move his country of residence to go back home to be an aid to his ageing parents. He is just a bit weary of the fact that he has lived away from home for a while, has not worked in the environment back home, the ways, the way people think are different, expectations are different etc etc. Although he is going back, he has a slight hesitation in terms of getting a grip on the ground reality. Do you think you might be able to pour out some thoughts which might help his transition? He is also an aspiring yogi and was concerned about the change in place, change in energy level etc. Is there anything an aspiring yogi should keep in mind or watch out for to ensure vital life force is not lost due to change in environment.

As before Dhananjay, I appreciate your responses to all on this forum.
Regards, Manish

Answer
1. All the latent seeds of impressions (which are the result of past karma, which determine the mental condition and which determine this and next existences) are stored in the ‘Kârana Sharira’ (causal body). The causal body is the only body which accompanies the Atman in its millions of births. The physical and astral bodies take form at birth and disintegrate at death. Hence these are not constant. All past desires of the mind from former births appear in this or next births and current desires of the mind are carried to the next birth (in seed form).

2. Taoist practices are similar to Vâma Marga (Left hand tantra). This path is dangerous and most often leads to a downfall. Most Taoists and left hand tantriks eventually forget the objective ‘Kaivalya’ (self-realization) and get attached to Bhoga (sense pleasure). Hence ‘Niskama Yogi-s’ (those wishing nothing but self-realization) stay clear from it.

3. Sexual activity for recreation involves deriving pleasure from the body and the senses which are Asath (unreal) and Anatma (non-atman). Hence one who practices non-ejaculatory relations and does not eventuallty take up absolute Brahmacharya can never rise beyond slavery to ‘Avidya’ (ignorance) – The cause behind embodification of the infinite Atman. For this reason, a non-ejaculatory relationship which is practiced by married, want-to-be Brahmachari-s before starting absolute Brahmacharya (to first overcome and become independent of the need to ejaculate in intercourse) has to eventually be put to an end and replaced with absolute Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed if self-realization is the objective.

4. If one's destiny includes relocation, none can prevent it. HE is the puppeteer and we are the puppets. Our duty is to follow HIS commands and be willful instruments in HIS hands. Such a one who constantly reminds himself of the falsity of the Ego and the reality of the Lord with the perspective – "I do nothing. HE works through me and I follow. I am always happy and content, contemplating on HIM. Let HIM do whatever HE wants with this mind and body". As long as one performs all actions keeping this in mind, nothing can become an impediment to Yoga & Brahmacharya. Nothing can disturb one's equilibrium and poise, whatever is the place of one's residence. All things eventually get harmonized and life sails smoothly.

Question
Dhananjay, hi

I had another doubt, when meditating, if one concentrates on the beat of the heart, does that in any way take away any benefits that would accrue or is that the right way to go or ? ?

From reading one of your past posts, you mention about karmic illness. How does one discern between normal illness and karmic illness?

Thanks Dhananjay, Manish

Answer
1. Merging one's lower self (mind, intellect, consciousness & Ego) into the Atman (individualized concept of the Almighty) is the meditation for Brahmacharya and self-realization. No other meditation need be practiced, for none is superior to this method.

2. A bodily illness generally occurs further to some external factor affecting the body (such as wrong food, wrong lifestyle or activity, contamination etc..) An example would be an upset stomach further to eating unclean/contaminated food.

A Karmic illness arises all of a sudden, with no apparent/noticeable reason, despite right food, lifestyle and activity. Here, the underlying 'Karmasaya' (seed of past karma) attracts the particular medium (bacterium/virus or some other causator) responsible to effect disease and suffering.

Question
Hello dhananjay

Much respects, in need of some advice into moving forward to a more pure being.

6 years ago i had a relationship with a girl which lasted about 2 years. It was a intimate relationship, longest relationship i have had. Only 26 now. Since then there has been only minor to zero sexual contact.

I have a feeling that the sexual energy create in that relationship is within this being. Think it may be the cause of some of the wet dreams i keep having. I have racked my mind to figure out ways of expelling but my knowledge is very limited.

So my question is can you carry residual sexual energy from past relationship 6 years into the future?

If so how does on go about expelling it?

No one i know seems to understand it like you dhananjay or they just may choose to keep us in the dark about all this information.
The service you provide is invaluable and you will be most highly commended.

James

Answer
The astral tubular connection that arises between a man and a woman further to the merger of their Linga sharira-s (astral bodies) during sexual intercourse lasts 12 years. Till this time, both are prone to receiving and transmitting thoughts and emotions via the astral tube (see: 'Effect of sexual relationships' Dt: 12/4/2010 in the past answers section). An honest life of Yoga & Brahmacharya if carried out with devotion to the Lord will help one come to better terms with the condition and eventually win freedom from the same.

Question
Namaste Dhananjay,

You are doing great service to mankind by your contributions. I have a few questions to ask on brahmacharya.

1) I am approaching 30 years old. I have wasted almost 16 years to pornography and masturbation. I must have lost terrible amounts of semen. I am 29 now. If I start brahmacharya, is there any possibilty of recuperation, or the damage done due to so much waste of semen is irreversible?

2) For past 2 years, I have been reading on and off on brahmacharya from Swami Sivananda. I have experienced that for about 14 days, I am able to control myself, 15th day onwards, I get super restless and am unable to concentrate on God. However, If i release the tension by masturbation and porn again, I am able to concentrate on God. Can this be done? Or is it sinful?

3) Swami Sivananda recommends japa mantra to aid in replacing evil samskaras. Can I seek advise if I can chant japa on 'Saranam Ayyappa' as my favourite deity has been Lord Ayyappa. (It's an irony that a devotee of Ayyappa like me has been drenched in the cesspit of masturbation and pornography despite being to sabarimala for 2 years).

Awaiting your spiritual advice.

Rgds,
Saravanan

Answer
1. Take up a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed. The ill-effects of your past lifestyle will slowly unwind and help you come out of the trap. The results will depend on the honesty with which Brahmacharya is practiced.

2. Gradually increase the period of Brahmacharya and strive for longer and longer periods of practice. Donot indulge in a willful break of Brahmacharya. Our efforts should be cent percent. Willfully breaking Brahmacharya amounts to failure indulged with full cognition & awareness. This should be avoided.

3. A life of Yogic practices and lifestyle will be required if Brahmacharya is to become established and natural. Mere Japa (chanting the Lord's name) will not suffice for a beginner, as his Bhakti (devotion) is obscured by past karma. The complete Yogic lifestyle and practices are necessary to break and dissolve this past karma. Go through each and every past answer slowly and absorb the essence. Applying these principles and methods with devotion to God will help one to make Brahmacharya the default mode of lifestyle.

Question
Namaste sir,i am a daily viewer of your website and i have a question. Sir, can yogic practice with vow of brahmacharya cure fatal ailments like cancer? Thank you

Answer
A life of Yoga & Brahmacharya is the best means to speedily work out & dissolve past karma. Most diseases/deviations from health are the by-products of past karma. Diseases such as cancer occur further to the presence of very strong negative karma. Depending on the magnitude of this karma, one might or might not be able to weed out the karmic cause in a single birth. However, the practice will surely lead to as much exhaustion of karma as is possible in the current birth (based on one's Prarabdha or destiny). If the volume of karma is very immense, it might take more than a single birth for its removal. In such cases, the disease may not be cured in a single birth.

thanks for your support.

Answer
1. The practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya results in an increase of 'Jatharâgni' (gastric fire). This is the first sign of development of good health. An increased gastric fire helps digest food very easily and helps the body draw out the most essence from food.

When the gastric fire increases and whenever he feels hunger (apart from his regular meals), the Yogi should feed the stomach with small quantities of food (healthy, nutritious, home preparations, and not junk/oily/outdoor food). Such hunger generally occurs to the beginner, when his body is recuperating from the debility caused by many years of seminal wastage. Since the body is in refurbishment mode, it is natural for the Yogi to feel a little more hunger than normal when Yogic practices start getting established in the early stages. Later, with advancement, this condition will subside and taper away. If the stomach is kept hungry and the condition ignored in times of hunger, the 'Jatharâgni will devour the body itself and vitality will be lost. Hence a Yogi should never stay hungry but take small quantities of cooked food/milk/fruits etc. when he feels the burning of hunger. This does not mean one should overeat, for overeating can also lead to gastritis (as this causes excessive release of acids). The Yogi should never overeat or load his stomach like others normally do. 'Mitâhâra' (moderate diet) is the secret behind success in Yoga. Yoga should never be performed with a burning stomach; neither should it be performed on a loaded stomach. Yoga should be performed with a pleasant and lightly filled stomach.

It appears that you may have a gastric problem as the condition you describe does not generally come to one without a history/tendency for gastritis. It is also possible that the acidity is the result of some karmic, physical toxin being vacated through Yoga & Brahmacharya; if there has been no other apparent cause. In such a case, the problem is unavoidable and should be worked out. Gastritis can be controlled/prevented by:

1. Avoiding alcohol, tobacco, spices, meat, sweets, and strong tea/coffee.
2. Taking regular/timely meals in the right quantity and not keeping the stomach empty when hungry.
3. Consuming bland/mildly spiced food and avoiding strongly spiced food.
4. Taking a syrup made by mixing crushed ginger, lemon and honey thrice a day (2 spoons each time).
5. Taking small quantities of cold milk, a few times a day.
6. Drinking 10-12 glasses of water a day and drinking water as soon as the feeling of acidity appears.

If the problem is troublesome and unbearable, the following remedy will prove helpful:-

1. Live only on coconut water and pure water for 2 days. Donot eat or drink any other food. During this therapy, coconut water is to be drunk as often as possible, whenever hungry.

2. From the third day, live only on fruits and water till the 5th day. Eat juicy fruits such as apples, pears, grapes, oranges, sweet lemon, pineapple, peaches, watermelon and raw vegetables such as potato juice and cucumber.

By the end of these 5 days, the toxin responsible for the acidity will get removed. The above procedure will help one come to terms with the situation.

After the problem is cured, ensure to adopt a mildly spiced diet free from meat and other oily food. As the body of the Yogi purifies through Brahmacharya, God will not allow him to eat all kinds of foods which he used to eat before (since such foods are opposite to the purity attained). He then has to limit himself to a Sâtwic diet.

2. Ashwagandha, if taken for the problem you described should be limited to small, medicinal doses.

Question
QUESTION: Namaskaar Dhananjay,
It is by reading your answers regularly that I have been practicing celibacy for about two and a half months.The effects are showing now.I'm more inclined now towards reading spiritual treatises like the bhagvad gita and bhagvad purana.But I had one question.

Is it worth to read novels and magazines in pastime when they do not pertain to your work?I now think that all these years I wasted my time on useless books instead I should've read religious scriptures.Kindly remove my doubt regarding this.Also kindly suggest me some books worth reading not only related to brahmacharya but also on other religious matters.Thank you ANSWER: 1. A Brahmachari who is serious about achieving unbroken Brahmacharya for self-realization and is intent on Yoga & meditation will generally not get the mind to spend his time reading novels. Cessation of the fluctuations of the mind to achieve Samadhi and thereby the greatest bliss, knowledge and finally liberation is Yoga; while novel reading leads to more fluctuations of the mind (thereby taking liberation farther away) and creates unrest and excitement, which are not the objectives of the Brahmachari. Excitement is no match to the contentment and happiness that comes from the bliss of Samadhi. Hence such hardcore Yogi-s have no time or mind for novel reading.

2. Some material worth reading for the aspiring Brahmachari:

- Life stories of Yogi-s such as Bhagavan Ramana Maharishi, Paramahansa Nityananda of Ganeshpuri, Trailinga Swami, Lahari Mahasaya, Ramakrishna Paramahansa, Mahavatar Babaji, Raghavendra Swami, Milarepa, Sivabalayogi Maharaj, Hariakhan Babaji. (Life stories of all these Yogi-s are available through google search)

- Books:

The Yoga sutra-s of Maharishi Pathanjali (by Dr. I.K Taimni)
The 108 Upanishads
Hatha Yoga Pradipika (by Svatmarama Yogin)
Siva Samhita

Question
Dear Dhananjay Ji,

I thank you for your previous replies. I have some further questions which I need you input:

1) In one of your posts, you mentioned that when the human being is born, he is endowed with a pre-set amount of seminal energy by God. This energey onces lost in sexuality, can never be regain (if I am not wrong about that post).

For people like me who have lost tremendous amt of semen by masturbation, how can there still be any hope? Is it going to be a downside path as too much of semen has been lost with no reprival?

2) In today's world, even in 'cultured' india, pre-marital relationships has become the norm. Woman are also lying about their past so that they can get a good groom. Having a bf has become like a norm and must to get social acceptance.

It is difficult to find a pure, single noble indian cultured woman. Also, adultery has become rampant.

Yogic culture is non-existent or is vanishing in modern society. Divorce, remarriages, cohabitation and all are becoming the new indian culture. No one seems to keep themselves pure and dignified with no relationships before marriage. Many indians have stooped low and are on par with westerners in terms on living culture. They go wild and havoc during their college days and lie and put a cultured face during marriage time.

With such an emerging culture, how can God help me? How to deal with such people? How can beginner yogis survive amidst such people, who have no qualms about losing physical dignity and do not uphold true indian culture.

3) For serious porn/masturbation addicts, can they seek western treatment or yogic lifestyle is enough? Yogic lifestyle seems to be slow and gradual. For someone like who have strong urge to masturbate every hr, watch porn in public places, and has become a terrible sexual addict, will yogic lifestyle change them soon? Is it even possible?

Thanks for your inputs.

Answer

1. The earlier the practice of Brahmacharya is taken up, the better and faster are the results. The possibility to achieve the state of Kaivalya (self-realization) through a life of unbroken Brahmacharya and Yoga in the current birth becomes strong if such practice is started before the age of 32~34 say the scriptures as a general pointer. Beyond this age, the quality of Prana in the vital fluid starts rapidly reducing and conservation and transmutation may not yield the results which accrue from starting earlier. The past is gone and beyond change. It is the present and future which are to be remodeled for maximum benefit. Hence Brahmacharya should be practiced as soon as one gets to know of the same and work honestly with devotion to God. There is neither a need nor any benefit by thinking of the past. If one's efforts are honest and sincere, God sends his blessings.

2. While the degradation from correct moral culture and ethics is no doubt on the rise, this is not a new phenomenon. Even during earlier times, only a handful of people took to the practice of Yoga (union with God) while the majority took to Bhoga (union with sense pleasures). The scriptures written tens of thousands of years back say – "An established Urdhvareta is one in a billion". This statement points to the rarity of finding one who is established in Yoga. So Samsâra (world of dualistic existence) continues as long as willed by HIM, HE (God) has made Brahmacharya and Yoga very difficult and unreachable. Only the very deserving and honest succeed. This world being HIS Leela (divine play), HE does not confer such progress or knowledge to one and all. That Jiva which has a few or possibly one last birth remaining here on Earth, alone progresses tirelessly and attains the objective. The virtuous and pious have thus always been a minority. Hence there is no need to worry regarding the reverse ways of the world. This world and its temptations are a test for the Brahmachari, for how can accomplishments be certified without tests under real conditions?

Neither is it necessary for an honest and sincere Brahmachari who has taken to the path of 'Saranagati' (complete surrender to the Lord), to worry about his environment, future, wife etc. A few hundred years back, people might have appeared more pure and less polluted than people of today. At the same time, these same people might have appeared wayward and culture-less in comparison to the people who lived a few THOUSAND years back! Does this mean there weren't people who attained liberation a few hundred years back? Even in the 'Mahabharata', the 'Pandava-s' representing virtue were only five in number, while the 'Kaurava-s' representing evil were hundreds in number. Good and bad are relative and wholly within us. Both good and bad have always existed from time immemorial. It was neither easy to maintain a life of Yoga a few hundred years back, nor is it difficult to maintain such a life today for the one who is determined and devoted to his objective. Easy and difficult depends on our efforts on which depends the grace of God.

If one's commitment and determination to unite with the Lord is rock steady and tenacious, one gets blessed with a supporting and virtuous wife who will not be an impediment, however modern and bereft of culture the world gets. If by some past karma one does not get such a wife, it is better to part ways with a wife who is a Bhogi and does not ever want to become a Yogi. Such should be one's commitment. Then things slowly fall in line and the woman herself may get 'Gnyanodaya' (dispellation of her ignorance through knowledge bestowed by the Lord) that makes her realize her mistake. These things are all ultimately taken care of by the Lord to the extent the devotee surrenders to him with love and devotion. What is important is to give up on the 'I' (Ego) and surrender to HIM (Lord) with the attitude – "I am nothing. You are everything. Lead me in the right way my father. Let Mâya (illusion & ignorance) not trouble me. Give me 'Gnyana' (knowledge of the Supreme).

In the Bhagavad Gita, Lord Krishna describes the attitude of his devotee Yogi who is always protected by the Lord as:

ब्रह्मण्याधाय कर्माणि सङ्गं त्यक्त्वा करोति यः |
लिप्यते न स पापेन पद्मपत्रमिवाम्भसा ||

Chapter 5/ Verse 10, The Bhagavad Gita.

"He, who performs all actions offering them to Brahman (Almighty), by giving up desire & attachment, does not become the victim of sin; just as a lotus leaf stays dry despite being surrounded by water on all sides".

This is how the Yogi should behave. The Lotus leaf here represents the Yogi and the water surrounding it from all sides represents the world with its temptations and dangers. What is the way to stay unaffected from these dangerous waters of Mâya (illusion)? The method is complete surrender to the Lord with devotion and love, which then makes the Yogi perform all actions thinking of HIM, for HIM and as a service to HIM (without attachment and desire). Such a Yogi is always content in HIS thought, and performs actions only because he is the medium through whom the Lord works HIS Leela. He is never worried about the fruits of his actions and limits himself to honest effort only. Then, he accepts the result which is a product of his efforts, past karma and the will of the Lord, knowing fully well that this life is a drama. Such action helps one stay riveted to the path of virtue and attain speedy liberation.

When such an attitude is coupled with a life of Yoga & unbroken Brahmacharya, the Yogi, after a few years of practice, eventually becomes like the lotus leaf which is immune from becoming wet.

3. "Nâsti yoga samam balam" – "There is no strength equal to that which comes from Yoga" says the Bhagavad Gita. This refers to mental and spiritual strength of the finest degree which is refreed to as 'Veerya'. Hence it follows that there is no treatment or rectifying process that can be more thorough and lasting than Yoga. When a life of Abrahmacharya (incontinence) has been indulged in for decades and millions of births, is it not unreasonable to expect speedy results in a few days or months? Does this not defy the laws of nature? One should first develop patience and perseverance and surrender to the Almighty through diligent practice. Then, success slowly dawns after many years. Since the path of Yoga goes to the very bottom of the cause behind 'Abrahmacharya' which is 'Agnyana' (ignorance) and roots it out completely, it also follows that the process is slow. Western treatments do not root out the cause, but only the effects, leading to temporary and impermanent solutions, and so it follows that the problems donot get cured but soon recurr.

Question
Thank you for your enlightening answers which had thread many people to right path.

I would like to know how the dream we get irrespective of its nature relates to our past samskaras. Can we assume that dream is a subconscious mind which is formed by our past life Karma, and to certain extent impression created in this life.If this is the case how to eradicate the dream weather its good or bad. For example I tend to get some dreams which totally does not make sense, they are not perverted dreams nor some kind of incident I encountered in this life, they are totally vague and I am not able to make any sense of it.

Answer

1. Past Samskara-s (impressions) & Vasana-s (tendencies) act as the founding cause for our present state of body, mind and psyche. Governed by these, one gets tendencies towards or aginst certain actions in the present birth. Such actions performed in this existence then create further Samskara-s & Vasana-s, which might strengthen the already existing ones or create new ones. The sub- conscious mind gets the chance to throw up and indulge in these impressions as the 'Buddhi' (power of intellect) and 'Vichara' (power of discernment) are very weak or absent in 'Swapna' (the state of dream). Thus the events which unfold in a dream can be the results of actions of this or previous births.

This statement is proven by the fact that even newly born children who are just a few days old experience dreams and react to the same. Since the worldly experience of such a new born is nil, it can safely be assumed that there are no Samskara-s & Vasana-s pertaining to this birth, the child just being a few days old. Yet the child smiles, laughs or cries in fear in dream sleep. How is this possible? It hence follows that there must already be the causing impressions and tendencies responsible for such reactions within the mind of the child in a dormant state. These latencies which surface while in dream can alone be responsible for the reactions of happiness or fear in the child who knows nothing about the world, its workings and experiences.

This is one of the best supporting proofs for the existence of past births and future rebirths. The Samskara-s & Vasana-s which the Jiva had acquired peviously are stored in the 'Kârana Sharira' (causal body). This causal vehicle is the only medium which accompanies the Atman in its millions of births from animal life to that of a human being. Just as the hard disk of a computer stores all data & actions performed using the computer (even if the data is deleted), all the impressions and tendencies of these millions of past births are stored in the causal body. When some of these impressions blossom in dream sleep, the child reacts with the corresponding emotions of happiness, sadness or fear. The same holds good as regards adults.

2. The pure state of the Atman has no impressions and tendencies. Being pure, unalloyed and completely clear, the Atman is the purest, cleanest and no different from the 'Parabrahman' (Almighty). Such purity results in 'Sat-Chit-Ananda' (knowledge-existence-bliss) of the highest possible degree. This is why the Atman is always in bliss, being a component of the Almighty, if it might be said so. The Jiva (individual) on the other hand, being degraded through 'Avidya' (ignorance) has forgotten that he really is the Atman (in union with the Lord) and instead assumes himself to be separate. This causes great misery and suffering, which the Jiva then tries to negate through sense pleasures, but to no avail. If the Jiva can succeed in reverting to his pure state of the being the Atman (in union with the Almighty), all the Samskara-s & Vasana-s which are the cause behind his suffering and encasement in this physical body will get negated and roasted. They will then be unable to surface and manifest in the form of 'Chitta Vrtti-s' (modifications of the mind) in the waking or dream state, where upon dreams taper and gradually disappear. When such a state is attained, the Jiva is no longer the Jiva but the pure Atman even in the waking state, free from all desires or wants and in complete bliss eternally.

This process is achievable by no other method but by Yoga & Brahmacharya. The conserved Rethas (sexual fluid) when transmuted into Ojas, among its many effects, slowly starts weeding out the substratum of past karma stored in the causal vehicle. The eight anga-s (limbs) of Yoga help direct this power in the direction of cleansing the causal repository of all its material from the past. As the causal medium becomes cleaner with lesser active impressions, the mind gets closer to the Atman and assumes the pure qualities of the Atmic state both while in the waking state and in dream. Eventually, upon 'Kaivalya' (self-realization), the Jiva might be assumed to have dissolved for all practical purposes and the Atman alone remains. The Yogi is then a 'Jivanmukta' (liberated while alive). He is then the very manifestation of the Almighty in the human form. "He is the very Brahman in flesh and blood" – say the scriptures. The purpose of the human existence is then over for him. He has no further work to do, except guide others towards liberation and work for their welfare if so wished by the Almighty. Upon giving up the body (at his will which is the will of God), he becomes 'Aikya' (unites) with the Universal Almighty through 'Videha mukti' (disembodied liberation). Then he is gone forever, into the infinite Brahman through eternal union, never to return.

Question
Hi dhananjay,

Hope you are doing fine.i am now completely well without having any gastric troubles thanks for your remedies. I have some queries regarding yogic practice.

1.I completed 1month and a week in brahmacharya, so my question is why is life seeming a burden to me as if every door is closing, even though i want to practice sincerely some kind of obstacles are coming my way while practicing and i am tempted some times to eat meat and watch porn even when i remind me it is just temporary pleasure which were not there in me last month and i am not feeling the bliss and peace which i used to in last month, can you please give some advice and help me get over this.

2.In the yogic practice you mentioned to swallow twice after inhaling and retaining breath, are you mentioning the whole 16 sec including swallowing or excluding swallowing because swallowing twice makes 2-3 seconds and 16sec make to 19 seconds as i just want to make sure i am doing everything right. please help me clear with this doubt.

thanks for your guidance
Ganapathi.

Answer
1. Past Samskara-s (impressions) & Vasana-s (tendencies) which are very dense and strong at the start of practice cause impediments. The process of their removal and cleansing can also cause sorrow and painful life situations. The initial 2 years or so of practice are difficult due to this reason. Efforts should be Herculean with surrender and devotion to the Almighty. One wishing progress in Brahmacharya should never watch porn as this equals a voluntarily break in practice and creates bad karma which becomes difficult to remove. Persevere in Yogic practice with determination and complete sincerity. Do not cheat yourself with porn. God has let your progress for a month. Watching porn after receiving such grace from the Lord amounts to cheating HIM. It is unpardonable. If the bad habit is reverted to, all bliss and advancement will get reset to zero with more negative karma than before and Brahmacharya will break without doubt, leading to sorrow.

2. Breath retention and the time taken to swallow are separate. Counting starts after swallowing twice.

Question

Hello sir, i m practicing celibacy from last 4-5 months without any voluntary break and also experience some changes like my body temperature start rising , my veins start getting out and feel less hunger but still my m very skinny. My height is 6.3 but my weight is much lower. Look very skinny even my head size is also small. I do weight training but it dose'nt make me feel good. So, what to do to get normal healthy body weight... Thanx for your help :))

Answer

Simply continue with the practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya with complete honesty and sincerity. Always practice Yoga twice a day comprising of Asana, Bandha, Nâdi Shodhana, Pranayama and meditation. After a few years of unbroken practice, the body becomes lustrous and completely free from all defects. It will then be strong, fit, healthy and immune to the advent of disease.

One should however remember that every person has a body type and constitution given to him by the Almighty further to past karma. Some are wiry, while others are naturally plump (obesity is not being referred here). These things are a part of the individual nature and cannot be changed. Neither is there a need to change the basic body type, nor will such attempts bear fruit. Rather, they will lead to ill health and disease. Each body type has certain specifications which cannot and should not be changed. Wiry people should hence not try to put on weight unnaturally. Nor should naturally plump people try loosing weight through harsh and artificial methods. A life of Yoga and Brahmacharya will ensure that the best possible outcome as regards health, weight and constitution is naturally awarded to the Brahmachari, based on his individual body type and constitution. One should then be content with this superior state of well-being and concentrate on the purpose of life namely self-realization.

Question

QUESTION: Namaskaar Dhananjay,
I've been into weight training and running for the past 4 yrs.Since practicing brahamacharya now for almost three and a half months,I've started to incline more towards yoga and its philosophies.I've lately realized that bodybuilding works only on the physical level as it values only the 'aesthetics' of the body & is a mere exercise at the physical level & not much helpful in my journey on the path of self realization.although I practice pranayam & bandh almost regularly in the morning,I still lack a systematic schedule.I request you to kindly outline a program comprising asanas,pranayama & bandh so that it can replace my existing gym schedule.I really want to practice yoga systematically & leave my gym life behind.I had two more questions-

1.I'm in a habit of consuming protein shakes in morning & evening as instructed by my gym instructor.I want to stop this also. kindly advise me what should I drink to replace them?

2.Should I continue running even after I start my yogic schedule?

3.Can we wear 'langot' in the night while sleeping?

4.Also,what is the criteria in determining the sequence in which the yogasanas are performed.I searched the internet but could not reach a definite answer.

Thank you :)..you are the medium through which God is finally helping me maintaining my brahamacharya & striding towards the path of self-realization.

ANSWER: 1. Wake up at 4.00 A.M, drink a large glass of water, get fresh & immediately have a bath (cold or warm water but not hot) and prostrate before God requesting him sincerely to guide you towards self-realization. If feeling hungry, drink some milk and eat a fruit.

2. Wear a 'Langot' (traditional Indian loin cloth) and perform a few stretches to get the blood circulating. Then perform these Asana-s in the given order:

- Padmasana
- Vajrasana
- Ardha-Paschimothanasana
- Paschimothanasana
- Halasana
- Sarvangasana
- Dhanurasana
- Chakrasana
- Shirshasana

All these should be performed slowly and smoothly without jerks. 'Rechaka' (exhalation) is performed for downward movements and 'Puraka' (inhalation) for upward movements.

3. Now perform the 3 Bandha-s, followed by 'Nâdi Shodhana' as described in past answers.

4. Perform Pranayama as described in past answers.

5. Sit for meditation as described in past answers. The Yogi should not desire any want/wish except self-realization while meditating. Then everything will be taken care of by God and speedy progress occurs towards Kaivalya (self-realization). Repeat this same procedure at sunset.

6. Replace the ready made protein shakes with Ragi/Wheat & milk malt sweetened with jaggery (Gud – in Hindi). This is excellent for Yogi-s and can be drunk twice a day. The procedure of making this malted beverage is easy and is described in past answers.

7. Gradually taper down body building and running to replace them with this schedule. If the workouts and running are now on a daily basis, make them alternate days for a week. Then make them once in 3 days and so on. Donot stop the workout and running all of a sudden. In a month, the entire workout and running can be completely stopped to be replaced with Yogic practices. After taking up the complete Yogic schedule, the Yogi will gradually need lesser food.

8. The ‘Langot’ should NOT be worn at night while sleeping. The loins and genitals should be let loose so blood circulates freely and rejuvenates these organs. Wear a loose fitting garment while going to bed at night.

QUESTION: Thank you very much for your kind reply.I did not get your answer for my 4th question.As you outlined a yogasana sequence for me above,Can you please throw some light on the procedure of determination of sequence of the above asanas and also if I want to modify or make a new program what sequencing should I follow?
Thank you :)

Answer
1. The order of the above sequence of Yogasana-s is designed to help raise ‘Kundalini Shakthi’ from the Muladhara Chakra to higher chakra-s to help attain Samadhi for self-realization.

2. This sequence should not be modified.

Question
Hi dhananjay
1.please explain trinity of experience Rishi Devata chhandas,esp the devata & chhandas.I can not make a good discrimination between these two.
2.do mistakes & misdeeds that we have committed or bad incidents have happened to us have been avoidable or they have been our destiny?

Answer
1. In reality, there is one absolute Supreme and nothing else. The true ‘us’ (Atman) is no different than this Supreme, just as drops of sea water are no different from the ocean. By the ‘Leela’ (divine play) of the Lord, is created ‘Prakriti’ (energy of creation) who effects manifestation through Mâya (cosmic illusion). While the Lord remains unaltered and unaffected by his Leela, those constituent extensions of the Lord which get subjected to this illusion become ‘Jiva-s’ (embodied soul’s)

Then it appears as though there are three processes namely the ‘Drsta’ (seer), ‘Drsti’ (seeing) and ‘Drsyam’ (seen). However, all these three are the result of the modifications of the mind due to ‘Agnyana’ (ignorance around the atman). These three are also referred by the names ‘Rishi’ (knower), ‘Devata’ (knowing) and ‘Chhandas’ (known) in vedic literature. In reality, there is only ONE namely the Brahman or Lord and the concept of this trinity is false, for what is there to be known by HIM who knows everything and who exists everywhere and who does not have a second? (“Prathamo Brahman Dvitheeyo Naasti” - The Lord himself is first, there is no second – meaning there is nothing but HIM). These three thus represent the manifest part of creation which is unreal in terms of absolute reality. All these three disappear after 'Kaivalya' (self-realization), when the Atman (seer) is established in his own self.

2. Karma accrued from those actions already committed (in this or previous births) which will fructify in this birth (Prârabdha Karma) is unavoidable. Karma which one has a tendency to commit in the future due to the presence of such seeds in the Kârana Sharira (Âgama Karma) is avoidable by burning such seeds in 'Samadhi (super-consciousness) and through a life based on the Yama-Niyama-s of Yoga. Thus the misery which would accrue due to further acts of ignorance in the future is avoidable through realization of 'Gnyana' (knowledge of reality)

Question
Dear Sir,

I am very thanksful for your very valuable informations, The following queries are for my spiritual friends and well wishers,:-

1, Pranayama and brahmacharya can reduce the Ashtma symphtoms?

2, If a break occured, there is any restrictions to visit temple?(for my friend Dipin)

3, Brahmacharya can reduce the lifestyle diseases like B.P,Sugar (improve the energy of Pancrease)?

4,Is bath in the hot water is not good for celibacy?

5,Brahmacharya in the thought and deed can be maintained but in the words, it is very risk because the all people dealing with in these days are very crazy in the sexual matters, please point out a remedy for keeping brahmacharya in words?

Thanking you my respected sir
Vijith

Answer
1. Yes

2. There are no such restrictions. However, one should analyze the mistake that lead to the break and not repeat it.

3. Brahmacharya will gradually make all organs tend towards well-being and excellent health.

4. Cold or lukewarm bath/shower water is best suited for optimum health and Brahmacharya. The lower the temperature of water, the more is the percentage of 'Prana' within it. The true Brahmachari eventually has so much heat and life energy within his body (due to conserved Ojas), that hot water becomes unnecessary. He finds comfort in the coolness of lower temperature water. In very cold climates, one can opt for lukewarm or slightly warm water and avoid hot water.

5. When Brahmacharya is maintained in thought, the words and deeds automatically become pure. Words and deeds are only the result of thought and are not independent. Pure thoughts cannot lead to impure words or deeds. Similarly, impure thoughts will always lead to impure words and deeds. The honest Brahmachari is polite, pleasant, and courteous. He is full of energy and unexplainable happiness, wishing good to all (including those who wish him bad) and talks as much as necessary but not more. He maintains silence the rest of the time, delighting in the thought of God with the knowledge "Brahman Satyam Jagan Mithyam" – "The Brahman (Almighty) alone is real, the world is unreal," and drinks the nectar like bliss that follows.

Question
QUESTION: Hi dhananjay,
how are you? hope you are doing fine.

I have some queries please can you clarify them. In one of satsang i came across some words which i do not understand they are,

1.What are pancha indriyas,gyana indriyas,mind and the person was saying that we should control them in order to gain self realisation can you please elaborate this.

2.In one of your posts you were saying that at beginning of brahmacharya we should exercise,do intellectual work with god devotion in order for transmutation so my doubt is, do we consider walking,some stretches,basic asanas enough as physical excercise. Is practicing some logic solutions,reading autobiographies of famous people come under intellectual work.

Thanks for your support,
Ganapathi.

ANSWER: 1. The mouth, hands, legs, genital organ and excretory opening (anus) are the five 'Karmendriya-s' (5 organs of action)

The senses of eyes (sight), nose (smell), ears (sound), tongue (taste) and skin (touch) are the fiven 'Gnyanendriya-s' (5 senses of perception).

The mind is the 11th entity which is independent of all these, yet controls each one of them.

'Indriya Nigraha' (control of these 10 Indriya-s and the mind) is necessary for Brahmacharya and self-relization, for unless there is control, man goes on indulging in wrong activity and becomes prone to bondage. Also, lack of their control thickens past Samskara-s and Vasana-s.

2. A person should perform the complete set of Asana-s described in past answers along with other Yogic practices. Those who in the habit of working out in the gym/sports/other exercises should gradually develop prowess in Asana, so that a complete shift to Asana can be undertaken in due course of time. This shift will be necessary in the advanced stages when the Yogi will need to give up body building for advanced meditation. However, this rule need not apply to beginners.

Any constructive and productive mental work carried out for a sufficient duration that rigorously makes use of the brain constitutes mental activity. It can even be derived from a thinking game such as chess etc..

QUESTION: Hi dhananjay,

thanks for your reply, i got some doubt about "indriya nigraha". Please can you elaborate on this topic for all aspirants and please suggest ways to take control of them.

Answer
'Indriya Nigraha' represents all those efforts carried out to prevent attachment of the mind towards pleasure derived from the above described senses. It is attained through restraint from getting addicted to sense pleasure. Such control automatically comes from the regular practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya.

Question
Dear Dhananjay Ji,

I have followed brahmacharya for close to 2 weeks. I have felt that whenever sexual thoughts build up and I try to replace them with Godly thoughts, there is a buildup of semen waiting to be ejaculated. Can these gross semen which is waiting to be ejaculated be transmuted back to subtle form and turned to Ojas? This build up of semen is causing more and more sexual thoughts.

Pls help.

Thanks.

Answer
Indulge in regular Yogic practice (twice a day) with adequate physical and mental activity. Keep the mind pure to the best extent possible by averting sexual thoughts and situations. Follow a Yogic lifestyle consisting of 4.00 A.M wakeup, correct satwic food etc.. In course of time, the build up of semen will reduce through transmutation. Semen build up is an initial reaction of the body as the body has been used to producing semen (further to constant seminal wastage) since the past many years. It takes a few months for the body to reset itself to a life of Brahmacharya, following which the condition disappears.

Question
Hello Dhanajay,
It was great to visit your site as I learned new things which were not known to me before.

I also have a query
Actually I want to start form beginning.I am the person who is feeling lustful thoughts right from when I remember my early childhood.
I started doing masturbation at a very early age.My childhood was very tough.As I remember,My world was full of pain and sorrow.I was having troubles from everywhere.In studies in I was considered a problem.I was getting insults from everywhere at that time.My career was a Horse with broken legs.This goes on until I reached the age of 23 where I met a person from whom I got some knowledge about self control.After that I reduced my masturbation habit from twice in a day to twice in 3-4 months.There I felt my world upgraded from Mr nothing to Mr Someone.I saw respect for me in the eyes of people.Now I have reached 31.So this is going on in my life from that time, whenever I go towards sensuality I feel my outer world conditions,relationships suffer,my career starts falling down and when I come back to Purity slowly everything in life starts upgrading.Still I will say I try my best but I am unable to cross 4-5 months.

So my question to you is 1)Is Lustful thoughts,masturbation ,pornography,sexual sin is the real cause of all the troubles,pains,sorrows,Failures in career and accomplishments in one's life and worldly conditions in this world?

2)If a person like me still took a oath a vow for brahmacharya vrata for 12 years Is it still possible to get self realization.
And if not realization should I expect that my worldly conditions and my career will reach its peak.Can I expect to achieve great materialistic life?

Please help me to clear my vision by putting some light on it.

Waiting for your reply Sir,

Answer
1. One’s present state of affairs is the result of past karma. Since sexual sin drains all of man’s energy and fills him with negative Samskara-s (impressions), he becomes more prone to sinful thought & activity in all fields of life. This inturn makes him stoop to performing more sinful acts, thereby thickening such impressions. He thus starts attracting negative energy and bad luck. A life of Yoga & Brahmacharya carried out with God-devotion is the best and most correct form of life that helps man slowly unwind from sin and establish himself in his true state of the ever pure ‘Atman’. It is the way of life for one wishing liberation.

2. After the Yogi becomes an Urdhvareta (non-semen producing Yogi), impediments that were blocking progress materialistically and spiritually start dissolving and the Yogi is assured of name, fame, wealth and recognition (if he so desires). Past karma which has been blocking his life accomplishments starts breaking down and helps him take flight into success. There need be no doubt about this statement.

Go through each and every past answer on the means to achieve perfect Brahmacharya and apply the same.

Question
QUESTION: Hello
I have a few follow up questions wrt to some of your past answers:
1) If one is not able to maintain a pure lifestyle and absolute purity of food(eg: eating out, meeting different kinds of people), due to his nature of job or business travel,etc, then is it recommended to continue what ever little sadhana that he has been doing? and don't give such an importance to the practice of brahmacharya till the time he arranges/attains the above conditions? What do you suggest some one who is caught up in such a prarabdha in his current life stage?
2# In your earlier answers, you said there can be an involuntary transfer of prana/karma from the person who cooks the food.. I am just wondering what will be the state of food that is machine generated as is the case with lot of food items now a days#automatic, un touched by human kind of processing), etc?

ANSWER: 1. One should follow the tenets of Yoga & Brahmacharya to the best possible extent. When cent percent practice of the rules is not possible due to unavoidable worldly situations/work conditions, one should practice with devotion to whatever extent possible within one's reach. In the Bhagavad-Gita, Lord Krishna describes this with the statement – "Swalpamapyasya dharmasya traayate mahato bhayaat" – "O Arjuna, even a little bit of this dharma (Yoga) will help man tide over great suffering".

Due to one's 'Prârabdha' (past karma bearing fruit now), one sometimes may be placed in unfavourable conditions against Yoga & Brahmacharya. This is only a divine test to check the honesty of the devotee. Under such conditions, one should always continue to think of God, surrender all actions to HIM with love and devotion and persist with honesty to the best extent possible as regards Yoga & Brahmacharya. Karma then slowly starts dissolving and better conditions blossom in course of time without doubt.

We are afterall the instruments through whom HE works HIS Leela (divine play). If a man is a fisherman who has to spend his whole day at sea, that is also God's Leela. That great being (Almighty) is working through each and every embodied soul. He who forgets the Lord and performs actions for himself misses out on Yoga, while he who performs all actions rightly and surrenders all actions as a service to HIM with love gains freedom, and is eventually released from rebirth.

2. A machine only processes the food in part. Who handled the preparatory process of readying the raw materials that went into the food machine? Who is operating the machine? Who is handling the processed food for packing/serving etc..? The Prana-s (and thereby vibrations) from all such sources act on food.

QUESTION: Thanks for the replies!
Regarding answer to question 2, lot more doubts spring in my mind.....
1)Is there any way we can remove the negative vibration from food if we don't know the source? and make it positive and fit for consumption....
2)How do we know if the impurities in us are due to food consumed by us or due to our past negative samskaras?
3)Also does following these type of food restrictions show up as anti-social and narrow behaviour on our part, which is damaging for some one living in a society with all kinds of people...?
3)And is this something to be worried about by only advanced yogis, or is it something which even a beginner has to cultivate right from beginning?

Thanks for your patience

Answer
1. The practice of Yoga & Unbroken Brahmacharya with regular meditation creates a strong Aura around the Yogi (in his 'Linga sharira' or astral body) after a few years of such practice. He then becomes immune and untouchable to the effects of impurtity to a large extent through the divine protective force surrounding him.

2. When food is high on impure vibrations, there is a feeling of unease, unrest and mental unhappiness after consumption. The person feels violated and uncomfortable. Such vibrations then trigger the negative Samskara-s in the 'Karana Sharira' (causal body) and may make the person prone to such traits/acts. In case of past negative Samskara-s already present, the feelings of sorrow appear as though they are a part of oneself (as they are already present since birth or since the time of committing wrong actions).

3. Food is a personal choice. Hence there is nothing unsocial about wanting or not wanting a certain kind of food. However, one may sometimes have no choice but to eat outside food due to unavailability of home food.

4. Advanced Yogi-s are less prone to negative vibrations as they have come very close to God (hence very few things affect their poise). It is the beginner who easily gets affected by negativity.

Question
Namaskar sir, i'm trying to observe brahmacharya and my humble request is that please explain the vedic concept of GOD. Thanks from Palash

Answer
In the Vedas, God is worshipped through various facets, each representing a particular feature and function and called by a different name. The Vedas contain the means to attain Earthly pleasure and success. The end of the Vedas or ‘Vedanta’ (Upanishads) contain the means for liberation. Here the Lord is termed by the name ‘Parabrahman’ (absolute Supreme) and ‘Ishwara’ (not the trinity Siva).

While the Lord has many names, HE is one and only one. Nothing more needs to be known jai shri krishna, sir ,I am 19yrs. Old and never had sex but i masturbated a lot. Now i am trying my best to be a brahmchari. But sometimes there is feeling that i never had sex and i should try it atleast once before choosing the path of lifetime brahmcharya. And there is also another question what is the difference between a brahmcharya before marriage and brahmcharya after marriage. And is medha nadi destroyed or somewhat if i someone marries after 12 yrs. Of brahmchary. Plz. Help sir i am in comlete confusion.

Question

Answer
1. When sexual relations are limited to one's lawful wife for the sake of progeny (children) only, it is Brahmacharya in marriage. Any other form of sexual contact outside the precints of marriage/ or before marriage will end in sorrow and unwanted karma. Hence one should not indulge in sexual activity of any kind with any woman other than one's lawful wife and that too for progeny.

When Brahmacharya is practiced in thought, word and deed with all women, taking them as mothers or sisters before marriage, it is Brahmacharya before marriage.

2. Yogi-s generally donot opt for children after the completion of such 12 year practice as they would have finished their fathering objectives before the start, early in marriage. However, 'Medha Nâdi' cannot get affected through procreational sexual activity with one's lawful wife even after 12 years of unbroken Brahmacharya

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

I am a 29-year old student from India. Have been able to practise celibacy for last 7.5 months (and hope to keep it under complete command for life). It definitely has given a good boost to the quality of my early morning meditation. (I wake up daily at 4 am - in fact, only due to early morning routine which I developed after many years' tormenting struggle, my celibacy practice succeeded).

My question is: I read the following in Swami Sivananda's book -

"There is another sect called "Dhiryaretas", or those persons, who, previously a prey to lustful thoughts and deviated from Brahmacharya, later take to the practice of strict celibacy. Such a person, if he practices strict celibacy for twelve years, can acquire superhuman powers. Medha Nadi or Buddhi Nadi is formed in him. By means of this, he can have retentive memory of anything as long as he lives, and he will be in a position to learn all kinds of subjects.By observance of unbroken Brahmacharya in thought, word and deed for a period of full twelve years, one is bestowed even with the vision of God, if one aspires for it. He can solve the most abstruse and complicated problems easily. But, this kind of observance should commence before the thirty-second or the thirty-fourth year."

I know that there are many who were not practising celibacy earlier, but started lifelong celibacy in teens or 20s, and got full illumination. Examples include Buddha, Mahavira, Swami Brahmananda (Vivekananda's gurubhai), Bhartihari. But, I have never read about even a single person starting lifelong celibacy in 30-33 range and yet attaining full illumination despite Swami Sivananda's writings above.

Also, one more thing that alarmed me is Ramakrishna Mission's rule that an aspirant for monkhood should be under 30 years' age.

So, my question is:

1) Do you know any example of a person starting celibacy at or after 30 years rather than in teens and 20s and still being fully illumined? Such examples will give a lot of confidence to serious spiritual aspirants who may want to have a family and yet good shot at Self-Realization (these days, someone from middle class family generally marries in late 20s or early 30s due to long periods of education and then earning money for family).

2) If you don't mind, at what age did you start your lifelong celibacy practice? Since you are married, did you follow some special regulations or code of conduct in sync with your spouse as in a married life, celibacy is bound to be more challenging than in a bachelor life (other things remaining the same)?

3) How long does the "troublesome phase" in celibacy practice remain? I have read in a book by Swami Brahmananda that first 3 years are most challenging and things become relatively cool afterwards on spiritual path. What is your experience/understanding on this as celibacy practice seems an off-and-on challenge even for the seriously determined - sometimes going very smooth, somethings testing the very limit of one's determination.

Thanks for your time and help.

Regards,
Gopal

Answer
1. Lord Buddha took up his quest for self realization while nearing his 30th year. Swami Sivananda was himself in his early thirties when he took to Sanyas for enlightenment. There are innumerable examples of people having taken up Brahmacharya in their early thirties and having attained to the final goal. The period of 32-34 is a general pointer for the same. Hence those wishing for liberation should try for marriage as soon as they start earning through a job and get done with fathering a child, following which the path becomes clear to practice unbroken Brahmacharya. The earlier this is got done with, the better.

When one’s devotion to the Lord is genuine with complete surrender and honesty, it leads to unbroken Brahmacharya with deep God mediotation. Self-realization comes not merely by one’s efforts but by the grace of God, for HE is the doer and not us. The honest Brahmachari should not worry regarding the results/fruits of his practice. Our right is to the effort alone and never to the fruits. That, the Lord delivers, based on one’s efforts, past karma and HIS own divine will.

2. Till one attains ‘Kaivalya’ (self-realization), one should not reveal/proclaim specific details of one’s practice. When one’s efforts are sincere, when there is much weight of positive

Samskara-s from previous births towards the attainment of liberation (meaning the Jiva has striven much in this direction previously), the Lords grace shines in plenty and marriage does not become an impediment to unbroken practice. Even an unwilling wife, eventually becomes willing and helpful. The way to achieve such an environment is through dedicated effort at Yoga & Brahmacharya and through sincere devotion to God. Then, favorable conditions come without doubt in this very birth or in next successive births.

One's attitude should be – "Nothing is more important than devotion and respect to the Lord through Yoga & Brahmacharya. Never shall I fail HIM through 'Abrahmacharya' (incontinence). I donot perform any actions for myself but only as a token of service to HIM. I will accept whatever HE offers as my destiny, constantly in HIS thought, all the while working to please HIM and stay true to my 'Dharma' (the attainment of liberation). Let it take as long as necessary, I will not worry about time. The ever just and merciful Lord never fails HIS sincere devotees and always awards them with liberation at the right moment".

3. The troublesome phase remains till one becomes a complete Urdhvareta. After the Yogi reaches this rank, he becomes relatively immune to the vulnerability experienced as a beginner. However, other dangers then blossom as he acquires siddhi-s, name, fame, wealth etc.. and becomes exceedingly attractive in the eyes of the other gender. While the earlier troubles disappear, these offerings of Mâya then test HIM in more subtle ways. Only one who constantly reminds himself of the falsity of 'Ahamkara' ('I-ness'or Ego), the reality of the Lord and stays fixed to HIM with complete surrender and devotion can stay afloat from here on. Arrogance or a feeling of superiority will bring the Urdhvareta down to square one in no time (as in the case of Sage Visvamitra). One is prone to downfall via such subtle tests till self-realization, as stated by Lord Krishna in the Bhagavad-Gita.

Question
Hi Dhananjay,

In general, wet dreams are also considered a break in celibacy, though not as injurious as intentional break in celibacy.

I have found that when one is on the verge of losing vital elements in wet dream, one wakes up. In such a condition, trying to stop the loss of vital elements using will power never worked for me.

Few days ago, when I was in similar situation, I did external retention along with simultaneously pulling up the sex centre upward. It did not stop the loss fully, but reduced it by a great degree. I am wondering whether there is any other technique which may be even more effective than this or whether with time, more application of this technique will stop the loss of vital elements completely in the long run and one will have perfect physical celibacy.

I am aware that one has to purify the mind also, otherwise wet dreams will probably continue to happen. But, I was wondering whether some yoga techniques can stop them fully even when mentally some lustful desires are present. The reason is I am not sure, whether one can fully finish off lustful desires from mind in teens, 20s and 30s - the nature does not seem to support it due to biological reason. At the most full physical celibacy and a substantial level of mental celibacy seems to be in the range unless someone is a born Siddha like Raman Maharshi.

Also, I have read in biography of Ramakrishna Paramahansa that wet dreams do not do any harm: "The loss of reproductive elements dissipates a person's strength. But there is no harm in nocturnal emission. That reproductive element is from food. After nocturnal emission, a man retains enough to succeed. But he must not lose it voluntarily. What remains after nocturnal emission is very refined. The Lahas stored pots of molasses[18] with holes in the bottom. After a year it was found that the molasses had turned into crystals, like sugar candy. Whatever liquid there was had come out through the holes."

On the other hand, Swami Sivananda seems to be suggesting that wet dreams will substantially harm spiritual growth. What's your understanding on this?

Thanks,
Gopal

Answer
1. Practicing 'Mula Bandha' the moment before one realizes the culmination of a wet dream in sleep is the best method at such times. It prevents copious loss. Wet dreams occur due the presence of strong past Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasana-s (tendencies) in the Kârana Sharira (causal body). These are slowly burnt in the course of time through a life of Yoga and unbroken Brahmacharya. Wet dreams then reduce in frequency with advancement. After the Yogi becomes a complete Urdhvareta, they stop forever. There is no other method of complete cessation of wet dreams.

2. Age has nothing to do with Brahmacharya or wet dreams. It is the degree of purity attained by the Jiva (from past births) that matters. Very advanced Jiva-s hence have very few or no sexual urges even in their teens or twenties and show a natural inclination towards God and spirituality. Others reach this stage after a few years of Brahmacharya.

3. Shri. Ramakrishna Paramahansa is referring to the inevitable wet dreams that occasionally occur in the first few years of practice (as and when certain past samskara-s surface or as the result of excess food). Such wet dreams are beyond one's control. There is no other way but to go through the suffering.

Swami Sivananda is referring to those increased wet dreams which tend to occur if a Brahmachari is not honest in his practice and resorts to sexual stimulus and fantasy. This indicates lack of sincerity in practice. It becomes detrimental to Brahmacharya. This is the difference.

One should exert with utmost devotion, sincerity and honesty in a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya with God-devotion for self-realization. Till certain very strong sexual Samskara-s are not cleared and burnt, wet dreams continue, though occasionally. The only way to burn these is through correct Yogic lifestyle with deep and regular meditation. After the Yogi masters 'Sasmita Samadhi' meditation, 'Bindu' (seed) stabilizes at the Ajna Chakra in the region of the brain and does not flow down to form semen. He then becomes a complete Urdhvareta and wet dreams cessate fully.

Question
Namaskaar Dhananjay,

It is by reading your answers that I've been practicing brahamacharya for now about three months.You are a godsend for me.During this practice some questions have cropped up in my mind.

1.My diet is sattwic & constant & I'm regularly exercising & doing pranayama but as I'm marching forward in brahamacharya,pimples have developed on my face for no good reason.Mouth ulcers have also occurred.Also,I have caught cold & sore throat in this summer season.I'm suffering from all of this together.It has never happened like this before.You said that in the starting months of brahamacharya,the causal body cleanses itself.Is the same process happening with me?Should I use medication or let it pass as the redemption of my karma.

2.I now have less frequent wet dreams but when I have one,it occurs without any visuals.It is when I wake up after one that I realize what happened though the amount of loss is very minimal.Is it normal?

3.When I eat fruits in the evening,I develop gas.What should I do?When is the best time to eat fruits & vegetable salad?

4.I read in one of your answers that after long period of brahamacharya practice,one develops siddhis.suppose someone with his siddhi predicts something to happen & it does happen.then,if he claims that-"see,i said that it will happen",thereby proclaiming it,does it amount to loss in his powers or is it ok?

thank you very much for your guidance.

Answer

1. The symptoms you describe are the result of the purification of the physical body. Toxins that are embedded get vacated through such symptoms. The Brahmachari also falls ill when dense toxins get leveraged through Brahmacharya and surface. There is however no need to worry. The initial years of Brahmacharya involve such purification on a dense footing. Simply ignore the same and carry on with honest and sincere practice. Medication should be avoided to the best possible extent as it interferes with the cleansing and shorts the process. Simple herbal, home medication may be used if the problem becomes severe.

2. Wet dreams occurring occasionally need not be of concern as long as the discharge is not copious. With advancement, wet dreams reduce in frequency.

3. Eat a little cooked food with fruits and raw vegetables in the evening. Then drink a glass of cold milk. This will solve the problem.

4. Who said – " See, I knew it would happen and it happened?" or in other words claimed doership? It was the 'I' in terms of the Ego (lower self). From where did this knowledge of the future come from? It came from the Atman (the true self or the Lord) and not the Ego. Hence it is incorrect to say – "I said so and hence I know the future". It is the Atman, a part of the Lord and the true self which has 'Trikâla Gnyana' (knowledge of the past, present and future). When the power of the Atman shines through the Yogi with greater intensity than before further to advancement and Siddhi-s, it appears as though the Yogi himself in terms of the individual or Jiva has the knowledge; while in reality, this is untrue.

Just as a mirror cannot be the source of light but only reflects Sunlight (whereupon it erroneously appears as though the mirror itself is the source of light), the mind of the Yogi though not the source of the knowledge of future appears as though it has such knowledge upon advancement. The truth of the matter is that the Lord alone exists in reality, and we as individuals' donot exist. It is because we think we are separate and we exist as individuals that we lack self-realization and have to bear these hardships. Hence the wise Yogi does not take any credit for such powers of the Lord which shine through him but resolves – " I as the Ego and body am nothing and am wholly unreal. It is the blessed Lord whose powers (through the Atman or true self within) have started shining through me. Hence I am not the source of such powers. Therefore, I take no credit".

If he were to think on the contrary and assume doership, it would eventually lead to blossoming of the Ego followed by a sense of superiority, arrogance and false self worth leading to overconfidence. Such traits always make man indulge in foolish and unwise actions. The result of actions carried out bereft of wisdom is downfall in every sphere of life with the accumulation of much karma. There will be a break in Brahmacharya without doubt and all the years of practice will vanish into thin air. This is the truth. Hence one should never claim doership, but always remind himself of the fact that it is the Lord who is the doer while we are only the witnesses.

What are the difference between Kapalabhathika and Bhastrika Pranayama?

Sarvam khwalidam Brahma

Thanking you Sir

ANSWER: 1. In Kapalabhati, Puraka (inhalation) is slower and gradual compared to Rechaka (exhalation) which is forceful and fast with abrupt abdominal contraction. There is no Kumbhaka (retention).

2. In Bhastrika, one first practices Puraka and Rechaka a number of times in rapid succession with force and speed. Then, a slow, deep Puraka, followed by a long Kumbhaka and a slow, deep Rechaka. This is one Bhastrika.

Question
Dhananjay, hi

Hope you are well? Dhananjay, is there a physical location for the Linga Sharir [subtle body]?, I read somewhere in your post that it surrounds the Sthul Sharir [physical body]? Is that true i.e. it is outside the Sthul Sharir and surrounds the Sthul Sharir like an aura etc. Do Nadis flow through the Subtle body [Linga Sharir]? Also, is there a physical location for the Karan Sharir? Is it inside the Sthul Sharir or?

Also, on the course of following Brahamacharya, there will be various instances where a person will be tested etc in terms of introduction of women [as opposed to introduction to women]who would suggest an interest in the person or likely surfacing of high incidences of provoking scenes etc, how should a Brahamachari approach these situations. One also realises, on the course of Brahamacharya that one is constantly apprehensive of provoking scenes, one tries hard not to look at women wearing provoking clothes, or tries to stay away from the company of women etc, dont you think this kind of behaviour is wierd? shying away from people, women, trying to avoid eye contact, not letting one's feelings being expressed etc. I do understand the argument that one on the path of self realisation needs to constantly dwell on the fact that the world is illusory and also that it takes time for one to feel the wonderful effects of such abstention at all levels...one tends to get confused of the whole leela that is being enacted if you know what i mean, what is right, what is wrong, if you think something is right is that really right etc. HOw does one constantly [24/7] deal with such temptations, i do understand that the grace of God will shine upon the deserving person but in the interim how does one manage the overload of suppression/repression of sensory stimuli. Suppression or repression of the senses, does that not lead to any harmful effects for example suppression of the sex feeling, does that not lead to any harmful physical or mental effects?

Thanks, Manish

Answer
1. Thew Linga sharira (subtle body) surrounds the Sthula Sharira (physical body) as an aura of energy. The Nâdi-s (subtle energy channels) exist in this subtle medium through a fine merger into the physical medium.

2. The Karana sharira (causal body) extends beyond the Linga sharira (subtle body), beyond which is the infinity of the Almighty Brahman as empty space. The consciousness of a Yogi in Nirvikalpa (Nirbija) Samadhi merges into this empty space, following which he experiences his true self extending to infinity and occupies the entire Universe.

3. One should carry out 'Indriya Nigraha' (restraint of the senses) to the best possible extent along with a life of Yoga & unbroken Brahmacharya with regular meditation. This will gradually dissolve the false concept of sexuality for recreation and establish the sense of reality free from the same. Also, a mind kept occupied with constructive work and a body subjected to the Yogic lifestyle help break even the situation. The initial period has to be approached with firm determination and belief in the fact that recreational sexuality ends in sorrow and is Mâya (illusion and unreal). There is no other method. If a person cannot accept this truth, he will realize it the hard way. Also, it is to be remembered that the purpose behind limiting interaction with the opposite gender in the initial stages is to prevent the flaring up of past tendencies (such tendencies still being live and strong). The intention is not to run away from life situations but only to restrict downfall. Just as an ill person has to stay clear of conditions which might aggrevate his illness till he becomes healthy, the Brahmachari has to the best possible extent stay clear of situations/actions which trigger the disease called recreational sexuality till he advances towards immunity from the same.

When this lifestyle is adhered to for a few years, the Yogi slowly develops 'Rtambhara Prajna' (truth bearing intellect supported by correct morality) after mastering Sasmita Samadhi and becoming an Urdhvareta. He will then not be easily tempted sexually in the presence of women as his discriminative ability superceeds the sexual samskara-s which have weakened. He can then function normally without sexual response in situations where there is the unavoidable company of women. Unless he willfully lets his guard down forgetting the Lord and Guru, he is immune to downfall from this stage onwards.

Question
Namaskaar Dhananjay,
Thank you very much for your kind reply to my previous query.
I had some more doubts relating to your previous answers I read.Kindly spare me for asking too much but I've been wanting to ask these queries for such a long time & I found you to be best person to guide me.

1.Why has the Almighty,in the first place,separated us from HIMSELF that we have to travel back to reclaim our lost glory by merging with HIM?

2.In the Kathopnishad it is written that-

Nityo nityanaam cetanas cetananam.(katha upnishad 2.2.13)

(As we all are individual living beings and have our individuality,the Supreme Absolute Truth,is also,in the ultimate issue,a person....the complete whole is not formless).

But in your previous answers you said that that HE is formless.Kindly throw some light on it.I'm confused.

3.In one of your answers you said that interaction between a boy & a girl before marriage is to be avoided.But what if the boy & girl want to know each other for the sake of compatibility,especially in arrange marriages.Also,based on your view,is the concept of love marriages completely baseless?

4.Also,I read in your answers that the Satya Loka is the highest.Where is Brahma loka in the order?Also,what about Goloka(abode of Lord Krishna),which is said to be the ultimate abode & situated in the spiritual world,separated from the material world?

5.In today's times,how can a brahmachari who himself being virgin till marriage find a virgin wife?Is this expectation realistic?

6.Does sperm donation,being the process of helping a childless couple,also be considered a break in brahamacharya?

7.I read in one of your answers that if a movie actor is strictly professional & does not involve himself with the opposite sex,he's just doing his duty towards god.But what if a person works in adult entertainment business?Obviously he/she heavily loses of his vital energy.But it is also his profession.What are your views regarding this?

Thank you very much for your precious time.

Answer
1. As per scriptures, the deluded Jiva is timeless and has always existed. It overcomes this delusion upon self-realization. Just as God is timeless, the Jiva has also been this way, independent of time. This is the Lords Leela (divine play). There is no why.

2. HE is both formless and with form (when HE assumes it). In HIS true, unmanifest state HE is always formless (as in the state before creation). Form represents the physical, subtle and causal manifestations within which also HE exists. Since all matter and manifestation is the result of the Lords will, HE pervades all these as pure consciousness. This is the meaning of saying HE takes form. In reality, HE is always formless, else how could HE be within different objects as consciousness?

3. Such interaction, if carried out, should lead to marriage at the earliest. If not, it will end in sorrow and unwanted karma. It is marriage and the responsibility with which one handles it which matters. Arranged or not arranged is immaterial.

4. Brahma Loka & Goloka are the same as Satya Loka.

5. That woman, who is destined to be one’s wife alone comes as the wife, whether one likes it or doesn’t.

6. Yes.

7. When one’s profession (which comes inevitably, despite all efforts against it) is carried out as one’s God given duty surrendering all actions to God, there is no sin. If such a God given occupation goes against Brahmacharya, and if the aspirant performs his duty solely as a service to God, he eventually gets relieved of such harmful professions by the grace of the Lord and attains better placement, following which better conditions prevail.

Answer
Practice a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya as described. Go through each and every past answer to get clear with the same. This will prevent and eventually reverse the harmful effects of masturbation. Hey Dhananjay, Sincere gratitude to you for providing this service.

Am interested to hear what you would say about a man getting a Vasectomy for the purpose of the saving the vital fluids.

I know the yogins where very enlightened when it came to solving phyical problems. Could this be a another positive way to help achieving Samadhi .
Keeping in mind we would be practicing following yoga.

Answer
Not even the least benefit will be attained by such methods. Rather, it will lead to complications and health problems. The human system has been devised with great accuracy and perfection by nature. It is nothing but foolishness to tamper with the working of the anatomy.

Does sexual desire originate from the physical body? Which is the source of sexual desire? Where from does this desire originate? It is the mind with its past tendencies and impressions that is the source of all ignorance and thereby recreational sexuality. The body and its organs donot have a will or mind of their own. They are only servants of the mind and are wholly dependent on the mind. Even if the entire sexual system in man were to be surgically removed, there would not be the least decrease in desire for sex at the mental level, for the mind with its Samskara-s (impressions) & Vasana-s (tendencies) remains untouched. Unless and until this ignorance that is coloring the mind is not got rid of, there will not be any change in one’s thinking and actions. Samadhi will not be possible.

Hence those wishing to conserve and transmute their vital fluid should gain mastery over their mind through reduction of ‘Avidya’ (neiscience) wound around the Atman. As such ignorance starts to reduce in volume, the mind starts to shine more and more with 'Sat' (truth of the absolute reality - the Supreme), transmutation occurs naturally and the body eventually stops the production of Rethas (sexual fluid).

Question
Thank you for continuing to share your knowledge. My query is on which meditation visualization to use. Do I attempt to empty the mind with letting the thoughts rise and fall, or do I visualize the lord in whatever terms that my human mind can relate? I also understand that one can meditate on the guru however I don't want to become attached to the visualization. Thank you once again sir Dhananjay

Answer
One should visualize the empty space that results on closing the eyes and focusing at the 'Thrikuti' (inbetween the eyebrows) as representing the infinite, empty Universe completely filled by the formless Almighty. Then one should merge onself into this infinity and think – "I am a part of the Lord occupying this infinity and no different. I as a person do not exist. I am the formless and all pervading, infinite Atman, completely merged in the formless Lord". As and when thoughts crop up, they are to be displaced and this concept replaced. When such efforts are carried out regularly for a few years with unbroken Brahmacharya and a life of Yoga, the mind of the meditator becomes completely empty and the Yogi merges into the Almighty through 'Samadhi' (super-consciousness). He will then not even be aware that he is meditating, cannot hear any sound, feel touch etc. His breathing and internal organs, including the heart stop (he cannot know this but a person observing him can). In other words, he is dead to the external world perceived through the senses. He then experiences himself as the Atman (pure soul). In this state, the Yogi expands to the infinity of the Universe. Then there is only the reality of the infinite (Almighty), extending endlessly like a limitless ocean of bliss. It cannot be described. It should be experienced.

This is how meditation is to be carried out. Nothing more needs to be done.

Question
Namaskaar Dhananjay,
Thank you for your kind servive to mankind.
I've been following the yogic schedule as outlined by you.But I had some questions-

1.I realized that naadi shodhana & the pranayama following it are almost same in the technique(identical to anulom vilom).Is it or is it not?

2.what should be the duration of one asana & one bandha?also,how many sets of asanas & tribandhas should we perform?

3.Can I incorporate pranayamas like bhastrika,kapal bhati,anulom vilom,bhramri,ujjayi,chandrabhedi etc.(as explained by swami ramdevji) in the schedule? If so,where?

4.Is Pranav pranayama same as meditation?

5.Swami Ramdevji has explained naadi shodhana which includes bandhas also.Is this also correct?

Answer
1. Nâdi Shodhana is a process meant to clear the Nâdi-s (astral energy channels) through Puraka (inhalation) and Rechaka (exhalation) from alternate nostrils on a continuous basis. It does not involve Kumbhaka (retention) of breath. Pranayama involves Kumbhaka. This is the difference. Hence the two are not the same

2. An Âsana should be performed slowly and smoothly with proper breathing and the final pose maintained for as long as possible. The time taken varies, depending on the type of Âsana. The breath retention in Bandha-s is 3~5 dseconds. Each set of Thribandha can be performed three times.

3. The Pranayama-s you have mentioned are preliminary to actual Kumbhaka Pranayama and are to be performed prior to it.

4. No

5. Since I donot have knowledge of Swami Ramdevji's techniques as regards Âsana, the query is out of purview.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

Thank you very much for such a kind service of yours.I've been practicing the asanas & paranayamas for about a week.I had some questions regarding this-

1.When I practiced halasana,I had a little pain from lower neck towards middle back.what should i do?any alternative to this asana?

2.Can I do Surya namaskaars instead of asanas?

3.What is the concept behind swallowing two times in pranayama?I have difficulty doing it.Can I do without it?

Thank you

Answer
1. Asana-s are to be performed slowly and smoothly, gradually exerting more and more to achieve perfection in the final pose. Experiencing pain is common during the initial stages and eventually goes away with regular practice.

2. Surya Namaskara is also a kind of Asana which has its benefits. However, it cannot substitute all Asana-s. Hence other Asana-s are also necessary.

3. Swallowing helps close the larynx and thereby lock breath within the lungs. Gradually develop the ability to do so before Kumbhaka.

Question
Dear Sir,
I had been trying to follow the path of celibacy since last 3 years, in the first year i was able to continue it for 6 months, and then fell down, since then each time I decide to continue it, but every time the mind creates some illusions and forces me down.
My question is how can one be helped to stay celibate without falling?

Answer
Strong Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasana-s (tendencies) which are embedded due to past karma are the predominant reasons behind downfall. The only way to weaken these is through the regular practice of a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya carried out with cent percent determination and honesty. Donot worry about failure. Simply apply sincere efforts with devotion and complete surrender to the Lord. As an when such karma weakens, Brahmacharya becomes longer and finally life long.

Question
QUESTION: hello dhnanjay,
I have been trying to achieve brahmacharya from three months when i first came to know it from a elder student at my college.i m 17 years old boy. i have been trying it but at best i could maintain it for only 1 to 1.5 weeks,which i have achieved for 4 to 5 times after which i usually make mistake.i have begun eating sattwic food and started waking up at 4.40 am since last 7 days and do mula and uddiyan bandha , sarvangasana and meditation for upto 45 min before which i run in the morning for about 10 mins. i am in 12th and as you are a fellow indian you know the importance of 12th class and the entrances which follow it so i have to attend classes in the evening from 3.30 so i meditate at 3.00 pm before going to the classes and can't do evening meditation at 6 or 7 pm .
I have a few queries.

1)After a few days of brahmacharya i get a very strong attack of lust due to which i have lost after reaching a week of brahmacharya.
so i would like to know how to win over this strong bout of lust.
i really want to become a brahmachari and feel deep remorse the moment attack is over, only to succumb to it after some days again.i have recently 2 days back suffered from a loss.

2) i have realised the importance of sattwic food and the trouble which rajasic and tamsic food causes, but when i say no to such food articals like onion my parents get very forceful. i will be going for holidays for 3 days so my question is what should i eat when i m not at home but at some hotel. please suggest some food which i can eat there which will keep my mind calm and not induce turbullence in my mind.

3)As i said my parents got angry when i was saying that oninon, garlic and fish are bad for health.they said that onion was anti inflamatory and fish contained omega nutrients.when i told them that i need to stop eating these as these induce thoughts they told me its normal to have such thoughts and there was no need to do food and mind control at the age of 17.they said that such things should be done after one has grown old.they say that we should enjoy when we have the time as even if you do all this and your life ends in some mishap then all this will go waste in my attempt to try and convince them i gave them the book called 'youth and vitality' written by Swami Purshottamanda from Ramkrishna math. you might have also faced such problems at home.

4) i have read your past answers and got very inspired from them.i have one doubt on one concept.you had said that atma which is god itself reflects in a young maiden then why is that it is called lust and termed as bondage when we get attracted to it. also if god is present in everything then why is that lust exsists in this world ,and why some people try to hurt others when god is present in them.this question was hurting me recently.

sorry to ask so many questions but they are really troubling me .your answers have been very helpful to people , please help me too and if you think there are some of your past answers where you have covered these topics then please name the title of those answers and also tell which past answers are very important for me to read. i have very limited time on the computer.
may you be successful in your attempts

thank you
a very struggling student aspiring brahmachara

ANSWER: 1. Conscious and relentless efforts at a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya are the only ways to get established. As and when strong sexual Samskara-s (impressions) from past births get weakened from such practice, Brahmacharya becomes longer.

2. To the extent possible, one should avoid strong, Rajasic & Tamasic foods. Sometimes it might not be possible to get the required type of foods when outside home. At such times there may not be much of an option. Fruits and coconut water can be added to the diet in a larger volume at such times so as to reduce the volume of cooked outdoor food.

3. The power of the Atman or the Lord shines in the form of 'Maya '(cosmic illusion) in a young beautiful woman so as to attract a mate to form a family. This is the source of the beauty (not the body which is a medium). This effect of Maya makes one mistake the body itself to be beautiful (which is an incorrect assumption and ends in bondage & sorrow as the body is impermanent). Hence a person involved in lust and passion is under the effect of Maya that has convinced him of the false perception that the body itself is the source of ultimate pleasure. Since this perception is erroneous, it pushes the Jiva further into the realm of Avidya (ignorance). It becomes bound by more such karma and cannot attain liberation. Eventually, such a sense bound Jiva slips into deep sorrow. Hence one should stay clear of the effects of Maya (even though the Lord himself is the master of Maya).

Why are difficult questions given to a student in an exam? Why do the very teachers who taught him trouble him with confusing choices through objective questions in the paper? Why does a teacher who tells the student –"Study well and succeed" fail the same student when he does not give satisfactory answers in his answer sheet? Are these actions not contrary? In reply it can be said that all these actions are definitely contrary. However, if such actions are not taken, and all students are promoted without testing their knowledge, these very same students would never take the effort to indulge in indepth study of the subject to gain knowledge. Lack of knowledge would then make them unfit to tackle future challenges and requirements. It would be an all too easy task to graduate and yet not have the least knowledge of the subject in terms of reality. This is why a student has to appear and pass his tests and exams, for they are the means to certify his knowledge.

Maya (cosmic illusion) is exactly similar. It is the means of testing the Jiva which is appearing for the exam that confers Kaivalya (self-realization). Maya acts as the means of testing the aspirant who is striving to revert to the default state of purity and divinity of the Atman. Had there been no Maya, there would have been no means to certify the level of purity that an evolving Jiva has attained. The Leela (divine play) of the Lord enacted through Samsara (dualistic world) would loose meaning. Hence the Lord has made Maya into a very strong barrier. It is not easy to win over Maya. Only honest efforts with complete surrender and devotion to the Lord make it possible after self-realization. Only when man completely realizes the falsity of his I-ness (Ego) through liberation does he win over Maya. Duality itself means the presence of equal and opposite forces. Hence good and bad co-exist in Samsara. This is the purpose behind Maya which tends man into ignorance and sin. A man under the grip of Maya forgets his divinity (of the Atman) and assumes the ignorance stemming from his ego. This makes him commit wrong deeds, despite the Atman within always being pure.

QUESTION: thank you a lot for answering in such a nice detail and with examples
i will give complete efforts from my side from now onwards i forgot to add in a small doubt there are many nutrient additives like complain in milk which are dietary supplement.i would like to know whether it is good to eat them at the initial stages of brahmacharya and if yes then for how long and whether if they have any undesirable effect to brahmacharya
thank you
may god help you succeed

Answer
Avoid commercially available dietary supplements. All these contain chemical/synthetic additives which toxify the body and reduce the power of digestive assimilation. To the best extent possible, home made, natural food should always be preferred. Opt for a Ragi/wheat malt mixed with milk. Drink this twice a day. The process of making such a malted milk beverage has been explained in past answers.

Question
How much life essence do I lose in a Lucid wet dream? Why is it so violent and why do I awake in tears:/? I know my failures, yet I remain an enemy of my own evolutionary gift of the ego.

Answer
1. The essence lost in a wet dream is much lesser as compared to a voluntary release.

2. Consciousness in the astral plane suddenly enters the physical plane at the time of release. This sudden shift is abrupt and emotionally disturbing when one becomes aware.

Practice a life of Yoga & unbroken Brahmacharya. Wet dreams will gradually reduce and taper away after a few years of such lifestyle.

ॐ तत् सत्

Question
Hi dhananjay,

I have some questions please can you clarify them.

1.If a wet dream occurs some times we feel as if something is lost and we feel weak and some times we feel a state of calmness and at peace what is the difference that we experience like this even though in both the cases wet dreams occur.

2.I successfully completed my 2 months of brahmacharya and i am getting attracted to girls even though i don't have any lustful thoughts i cant control my eyes now as i was able to control them earlier can you say what is the problem and give some remedy.

3.Today in a paper article i read about a swami who's quote was saying that if you contain anger it will go directly into subconscious mind and it will grow large what is he referring to.

thanking you,
Ganapathi

Answer
1. When a wet dream is the result of sexual impetus (received while being awake or through past actions), it is violent and emotionally disturbing. When there is a release only at the physiologival level, it is accompanied by less or no emotions since the mind does not play a major part.

2. It takes many years of unbroken Brahmacharya whereupon ‘Indriya Nigraha’ (sense restraint) reaches a state where one is not subjected to the need to stare at the opposite sex. Till then, conscious efforts to prevent the same will be necessary.

3. One should first learn not to become angry by reminding onself that this drama called life is unreal. Merely subjugating emotions that have been let to flower will not be of much use.

Question
Dear sir,

What is the measure of semen producing in the body by each day? After 1 or 3 month brahmacharya , how it is stored in the testicles/ body?

Sarvam Kwalidam brahma

Vijith

Answer
1. As per the science of'Ayurveda', it takes about a month under normal conditions to produce a single ejaculate of semen.

2. When the production of semen is continuous (as in the mature, adult male), it cannot be stored. It either has to be expended or transmuted. In an Urdhvareta, physical semen is not formed.

ॐ तत् सत्
(That Supreme being is the absolute truth)

Question
Dear Sir,

I have few questions regarding Urdhvareta Yogi and Brahmajnani.

1. Brahmajnani is one whose kundalini reached Sahasrar. What about Urdhvareta yogi - has his/her kundalini reached Ajna or Visshuddhi?

2. I read in one book that brahmacharya breaks happen only till kundalini is in Anahat or lower chakras. Once kundalini reaches Visshuddhi, the seed formation itself stops and one has no chance for downfall. What is your information on this? I read in one of your reply that this is true for Ajna and not Visshuddhi.

3. Can a Brahmajnani produce children? I assume here that a Urdhvareta yogi has no business with producing children as (s)he has still not realized Self and any brahmacharya break will be only a downfall. But, can a brahmajnani do so as he is already done with the goal of spiritual realization? Does his/her system not stop production of reproductive elements completely? I have not seen any instance of any brahmajnani producing children except in mythology like Lord Krishna producing 100 children - householder yogis like Kabir seemed to have produced children before they attained brahmajnana. Your take?

4. I read somewhere that a special spiritual period starts from 2012 onward - do not know how long it will stay, but it is said that from 2012 onward, chance for success in Self-Realization is very high for spiritual aspirants. One of my friends saw my birth chart and predicted that I have a very good chance for Self-Realization in 2014-15 and that I should avoid any brahmacharya break till that period meaning no marriage till then. Your take on these things?

Thanks for your clarifications - they help a lot.

Regards,
Gopal

Answer
1. When there is complete purification of 'Ajna' by Kundalini, the Yogi masters 'Sasmita-Savikalpa' Samadhi and becomes an Urdhvareta. He is now the equivalent of a 'Deva' (celestial) in rank and no longer a human. 'Bindu' (seed) becomes steady at this chakra as 'Soma' (nectar) and no longer flows down to the Svadhistana. Hence semen production stops (as long as he does not become a victim of sexual stimulus, but it can restart if he willfully gives in to sexual urges)

2. A break in Brahmacharya can occur even after Kundalini reaches 'Sahasrara'. One whose Kundalini has reached Sahasrara chakra through Nirvikalpa Samadhi is a Brahmajnani (one who has tasted the knowledge of Brahman) but not yet a 'Jivanmukta' (one who is liberated through 'Kaivalya' while in this body and for ever). This is proven by the fact that the Yogi exhibits slight emotions after he comes down from Nirvikalpa. Till all the seeds of past Samskara-s that are alive in the 'Karana Sharira' (causal body) are not fully burnt through 'Dharma-Megha Samadhi' and complete self-realization attained leading to the state of liberation, one is still prone to downfall (though the chances are less). Sage Visvamitra had reached Ajna and was an Urdhvareta when the Menaka episode lead to a break. Lord Buddha was tempted by 'Kamasena' trying to break his practice even the night before he attained 'Kaivalya' (liberation) [despite the fact that his Kundalini had reached Sahasrara many years before he attained liberation]

3. One who has reached 'Nirvikalpa Samadhi' (a Brahmajnani but not yet a Jivanmukta) has many siddhi-s under his control. If it is in the destiny of such a Nirvikalpa Yogi to beget offspring, he can do so by transferring the concerned soul into the body of his wife without physical contact through his 'Ichha Shakti' (power of will) alone. Physical contact or semen are unnecessary (as semen is only a medium of transference for the soul in case of the ordinary man).

4. Predictions concerning self-realization are known only to realized souls who donot divulge such facts. The correct way is to put in one's best efforts without attachement to the fruits. At the right time, the Lord sends forth that which one deserves.

Question
QUESTION: Namastey,

I tried to practice brahmcharya to improve myself and to get a better grihast life when i would be married .But due to some confusions i always failed.To the max i could observe 10 days of ejaculaion control.

MY CONFUSIONS

1] Sexual excitations and incomplete ejaculations(very little secretions due to massage of the sexual organs) contaminates the purity of the sperms.So ejaculation becomes necessary,inorder to prevent impurity.

2] Having sythetic foods or commercial foods which includes chemichal contents(cold drinks,etc) would effect the purity of sperms formed after the food converts to sperms.So ejaculation is necessary after a period from the day on which we had toxic food.

SO THIS IS MY innocent QUESTION :

Do i need to ejaculate for the time being ,and observe new brahmcharya without repeating the above conditions/mistakes again?

And can i practice brahmcharya by watching porn also, as ultimately,the goal is to conserve sperms.So while watching porn i would take strict care that i do not secrete any sperms/sexual fluid at all?

Kindly clear all my doubts and if possible with scientific(biological) logics. I wud be very thankful and please tell how can i find you on facebook

ANSWER: 1. One should never indulge in a voluntary break. There is no reason which can justify the same. Justifications are only excuses.

2. Watching porn equals a break in Brahmacharya. He who watches porn cannot be a Brahmachari.

If each and every past answer is slowly gone through and the essence absorbed, the reasons behind the above statements become clear.

Answer
1. Good and bad days are observed by people who seek worldly comforts. Such rules do not apply to people who are in the quest for truth. All days and times are auspicious for the Brahmachari aiming self-realization. Horoscopes and birth charts are not of any use in the path of self-realization.

Question
QUESTION: Namaskar Dhananjay,
1.I read in a book that there are seven stages of self-realization. There's a sixth stage called padarthabhavani or untainted awareness of the self. How many years of sadhana takes for a yogi to reach this state?

2.There's also a stage after this called Turiya which is known as the final stage. Is it possible to reach at this stage in kali-yuga? I read that it took sometimes millions of years for an honest yogi to reach this stage.
Your thoughts on this topic would be very beneficial for me and many other aspirants.

ANSWER: 1. There is no fixed timeframe as regards spiritual advancement. Each Jiva takes its own time, based on its past karma and evolutionary attainment. If unbroken Brahmacharya with deep God-meditation and devotion is practiced sincerely, there is a bright possibility to accomplish the same in 12 years. However, even for such 12 year practice to succeed, the Jiva should have struggled and put in great effort towards Yoga & Brahmacharya in its previous incarnations,

2. 'Turya' is not the final stage. 'Turyavastha' (the state of neither being awake, asleep nor in dream) refers to 'Nirvikalpa Samadhi'. Turya alone does not confer self-realization. There is another state beyond Turya called 'Turyateeta' which dawns to the Yogi only after attaining self-realization, whereupon he goes beyond the Guna-s (traits). This is the final state.

As per scriptures, it takes around 7 million incarnations in the animal form for the Jiva to get a human body. It then takes around 1.4 million incarnations in the human form to attain self-realization. Brahmacharya becomes possible and successful only near the end of this period when the Jiva has a few births remaining. After a few births trying to establish in Yoga and Brahmacharya, the Yogi succeeds in attaining Nirvikalpa and finally liberation.

The state of liberation has nothing to do with the Yuga (time period), as time itself is unreal and non-existent. It is the Lord alone who is real. Everything else is false and an illusion which is the product of his Leela (play). There have been thousands of Yogi-s in the Kali Yuga who have attained liberation and are still attaining it even in this moment.

QUESTION: Hello Dhananjay,

I just had one more question i was curious about.

Q.Does one who attains the sixth state which i mentioned above really becomes dissolved and established into God to such an extent that he becomes unaware of his surroundings and only notices them when someone points them out to him?

Sorry to take your time but people inside the 'box' i live aren't the type to appreciate the questions or discussion of this type at all. Thanks again.

Answer
The sixth state or 'Turya' is similar to deep sleep but with full consciousness. The highest form of 'Para-Vairagya' (dispassion towards the world) dawns here which makes it appear as though the Yogi is unconnected with his surroundings. The Yogi occupies the state of uninterrupted bliss in continuum. It is a state of object-less awareness where there is no perception of 'I' or 'Non-I' but only reality.

It is not that the Yogi cannot make out details concerning the world or surroundings, but only that his focus and depth of involvement with the absolute reality is such that he gives no attention to anything else.

1. There are basically two kinds of Samadhi. Savikalpa (Sabija) and Nirvikalpa (Nirbija) Samadhi. These have been explained in past answers.

2. Practice Dharana & Dhyana for a few years (as explained in past answers) with unbroken Brahmacharya. You will then reach Savikalpa Samadhi which has 6 stages. The answer will then become clear. It should be experienced. It cannot be described.

3. Shri. Lahari Mahasaya was an established Brahmachari and Yogi even before he met Mahavatar Babaji.

Question
Hello Sir,
I want to ask you about the difference between kundalini awakening and Partial Kundalini awakening.

what are the benefits of Partial Kundalini awakening?
Is medha nadi formed in Partial Kundalini awakening?

Thankyou

Answer
1. Complete Kundalini awakening occurs when Kundalini reaches the 7th 'Sahasrara' Chakra' in Nirvikalpa Samadhi. In others, there is only partial awakening limited to the remaining 6 chakra-s, based on one's spiritual advancement.

2. Complete awakening leading to Nirvikalpa eventually leads to liberation. Partial awakening awards preliminary benefits in terms of spiritual and materialistic growth.

3. No. Medha Nâdi is formed only after one reaches Nirvikalpa.

4)Please tell me something about 8 (animadi) supreme siddis and can it possible only through brahmacharya?

Thanking you Sir

Answer
1. A detailed description of 'Mahabandha' and 'Mahavedha' has been dealt with by Swami Sivananda in his book – 'The science of Pranayama'.

2. Breath held in Kumbhaka works at clearing the Nâdi-s and is not injurious. The Yogi develops much Prana and can sustain with lesser air.

3. The Yogic routine should not be stopped.

4. Donot think much about siddhi-s. They are a waste of time. Those siddhi-s which are destined to the Yogi will come by themselves at the right time if the practice is correct. It is not meaningful to spend time and energy on the same. Descriptions of Astasiddhi-s are available on google search.

Question
Hello sir, I always read you, hope you are fine.

You answered a question of mine months ago about Siddhi-s (super-human powers) of the Yogi (2012-02). In that answer you claim the following: "They [the Siddhi-s] do not help him [the Yogi] transcend the planes of worldliness nor help merge into the final plane of pure consciousness [...] Such activity poses a very real risk of breaking his practice for attaining 'Kaivalya' [...] Hence the wise Yogi does not take pleasure in claiming to possess such powers [...] for he knows the dangers of such unjustified use."

After reading your answer now I ask: why does the Yogi adquire Siddhi-s then if they represent a risk to him and his practice? Are the Siddhi-s then a method of the Lord for testing the will and worth of the Yogi? why is the Yogi granted Shiddi-s?

In a similar fashion, you claim in some of your answers that the Yogi eventually can acquire fame, wealth and 'Ojas and Tejas' that give him a divine, charismatic aura that can attract people. Why does this happen? Doesn't all this (fame, wealth, etc.) represent more risk to the Yogi? He may succumb to worldly pleasures, to Maya, develop an unhealthy ego and much more. Is this another way of the Lord for testing the Yogi or is part of the Lord's Leela? Why would a Yogi want wealth and fame and recognition? Why are those granted by the Lord?

Thank you so much.

Answer
Both Siddhi-s or super-normal powers and the attractive qualities that accrue from transmutation of vital fluid into Ojas are the by-products of a life of Brahmacharya. These results of advanced practice can be made use of by the Yogi under justified conditions, for select, positive purposes. If used in an unjustified manner, without proper warrant, they work negatively and lead to his downfall.

Evolution of the Jiva (embodied soul) always leads to the manifestation of better faculties and abilities. Just as the abilities of the Jiva were limited in animal form, but have become pronounced in human form (ex. an animal cannot use a computer, while a human being can), the advanced Yogi who has gained certain siddhi-s can do some things which the ordinary man cannot. This is a very natural phenomenon considering the fact that the powers of the Atman are manifesting themselves to a higher degree in the Siddha-Yogi.

Greater power also acts as a means to test the character of the Yogi. Any man will be humble and meek under impoverishment. The true character of a man is testable only when he is under the influence of great power and reach. Give power, name, fame and wealth to a man, and even the most saintly person starts showing his lower traits and tendencies under the sway of his Ego which inevitably kindles under such circumstances. In the same way, the ascending Yogi is tested by nature as regards his true worth. While one who is still under the influence of his ego gets carried away with the euphoria of power he accesses further to the floweing of siddhi-s, the wise Yogi always remains calm and unaffected, knowing that the powers he has are not his own but that of the Lord shining through him. He firmly rests in the fact that the effects of such power are in effect the results of Maya (cosmic illusion). He does not give the least importance to their effects but continues to function as an ordinary man, full of devotion and love for the Lord.

QUESTION: hello sir, i when i practice brahmacharya, after 2 - 3 days i start having sexual thoughts but if i think that sex is disgusting as it involves the parts of a woman's body used for passing filth like urine and stool, i don't have any sexual thought again. But i want to know if this way is correct or not as it creates negative emotions in me and repulsion towards women. Thank you for your precious time in advance.

ANSWER: During the initial years of practice, one has to develop distaste for the body of a woman using the analogies you have mentioned. There is no other way. This is because the beginner is not advanced enough to separate the body of a woman from the Atman. He considers the body itself to be the person. Later, after many years of advancement, the distaste drops by itself to be replaced by the reality of the fact that the body is only a covering of flesh around the soul and that this world is only an illusion or Leela (play) of the Lord.

QUESTION: sir,thank you very much for your answer. Now i know that i am on the right track.i have 2 more questions for you. I'd be very grateful if you answer them - 1) whenever i indulge in sexual activity of any kind, after it i feel tremendously weak and become below average in studies and sports both and become emotionaly unbalanced but a mere 15 days of celibacy makes me emotionaly balanced, enthusiastic and i become good in studies and one of the best in football in my locality. Do other brahmacharis experience such poles apart results ? If they dont then why me?
2) why dont gurus like ravi shankar preach about celibacy? They teach about breath and how to manage your emotions and how to be in the present etc but i feel that all these things happen automaticaly when one practices brahmacharya . In my opinion brahmacharya is the main thing. So why don't modern gurus teach about it alot ?
Once again thank you for your valuable time in advance

Answer
1. The difference between a life of Brahmacharya and Abrahmacharya (incontinence) becomes apparent only after one practices it for some time. If your friends practice it for a few months, their experiences will also be the same.

2. This question should be posed to the concerned Guru-s.

Question
Hello Sir, A am very thankful to you for the previous answers. I have one more question. Is Microwave food good for Celibacy. Is it harmful to the same or more extent than Mobile radiations.

Answer
It is a scientifically proven fact that food cooked in microwave ovens undergoes degeneration and loses its nutritive value. The molecular structure of microwaved food gets destroyed and becomes useless to the body. It has been seen that plants watered with water heated in a microwave oven and cooled die very soon. The same applies to food. Hence microwaved food is best avoided.

Question
hari om dear, my question is that i am able to observe brahmacharya at physical level but find it extremely difficult at mental level. i have tried the mother, sister and daughter bhav towards the opposite sex but all in vain. hope u can give me a useful advice...

Answer
Simply persevere in a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya with the complete Yogic lifestyle, with devotion and surrender to God. There is no method greater and higher than Yoga. Lord Krishna reiterates the same in the Bhagavad-Gita with the words, "Nâsti Yoga Samam Balam" (There is no power equal to Yoga). In course of time, after a few years of such effort, things will fall in place and turn better.

Continue with the unbroken practice as described. This is the remedy. After the Yogi becomes an Urdhvareta and attains to 'Divya Sharira' there will not be any illness.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

Can you explain the significance of following wrt Brahmacharya & Self or God Realization? How we can include them in our day to day practices?

1. Suryanamaskar
2. Gopi chandan (a paste which to be applied on body)
3. Eating the food coocked on a coal stove.

Haro Om

Answer
1. 'Surya namaskar' is a physical posture which is conducive to good health & well being. It is a form of worship to the Sun God who is the representation of the Parabrahman (Almighty). It can be performed with devotion and prayer to the Lord, before Sunrise & at Sunset.

2. 'Gopichandan' is a symbolic representation of the divinity of Lord Krishna in soil form. Worshippers of Lord Krishna apply this to the body as a token of his remembrance and blessings. However, there is no use of mere application if one's lifestyle is not based on purity and virtue. For the one who is pure, virtuous and a true Brahmachari, no external religious mark or application is necessary. He is much above religion and rituals.

3. Food cooked on firewood or coal gets inundated with much Prana. Also, it does not get toxified (as food cooked on microwaves, gas stoves etc. does). Such food stays fresh longer and gives more energy. It is the purest and most hygienic form of cooking.

Question
Pranam,

I was reading somewhere that our diet should have at least 60g of protein everyday, and considering other nutrition aspect(Vitamin, Carb, Fibers etc) the food intake would be too much. However, Ayurveda mentions of mitha Ahahara, they don't distinguish anything as to be protein or vitamin as such(atleast as my understanding goes, and I might be wrong). Can you please elaborate on how once diet should be, elaboration nature of food, quantity of food etc which enhances Brahmacharya.

Tat Tvam Asi
Harsha

Answer
The rules set down by modern medicine as regards the quantity of nutrients apply to those leading a life of 'Abrahmacharya' (incontinence), as the concept of Brahmacharya does not exist there. For one leading a life of incontinence, large volume of food becomes necessary as semen is continuously being wasted. The opposite is the case with Yogi-s practicing absolute Brahmacharya. A balanced and nutritious vegetarian diet as has been outlined in past answers suffices.

Question

Hi Dhananjay,

I am a 31 years working and unmarried man. All these years I have never read or come across any discourse on following a life of Brahmachari. Coming under peer pressure, I have been regularly using masturbation as a way to vent out my pent up tension, sexual urge and anger.

After reading through many of your answers to others' questions in this forum, I have got a clear message that come what may, Celibate-Absistent-Yoga-Brahmacharya life is the real essence in life, I have questions to put up:

1. Can we follow Brahmacharya even after returning home late, or waking up not so early that we usually do.
2. Is it possible to control semen formation, even if we continue eating non-veg?
3. Do we need to strictly follow the yoga of brahmachari exrcises for maintaining the same
4. How can we control excitement at the sight of a beautiful lady?
5. Can it harmful to control sexual urge and

Please do answer these questions as they keep coming to my mind - and are a hindrance to practising Yoga....

Regards and lots of thanks..

Answer

1. Brahmacharya is one's default state of the Atman. It can and should be followed at all times, immaterial of work habits.

2. No

3. Yes

4. A life of Yoga & Brahmacharya when practiced for many years leads to 'Gnyana' (knowledge of reality), following which dawns 'Vairagya' (dispassion) towards this impermanent and false illusion called woman and world. Go through all past answers on how to achieve the same.

5. Sexual energy cannot be controlled. It should be converted into something higher through transmutation.

Question

Thank you for your humble grace. My query rests upon the matter of music. Obviously music is a sense based pleasure which is outside of us and ultimately Maya. However we are vibratory by nature. Can music be used as a tool or medium to reach altered states and be used for healing?

Answer
While positive, soothing music which calms the mind and inspires spiritual feelings of awe and love for the Almighty has its benefits, one has to ultimately succeed in cleansing the mire around the Atman, if higher states of consciousness are to be reached and permanently resided in. A life of Yoga & Brahmacharya as has been described is the best method to succeed in the same. Vibration applies only to Prakrti (the manifest form of creation), while the true us namely the Atman is completely still and in indescribable bliss. Appropriate external music (which inspires divine feelings only) and the internal Nada (inner sound that springs from the Almighty) can be taken recourse to occasionally if one likes.

Question
i m presently preparing for iit jee ,i wanted 2 know wether i can study while listening to songs and is there any harm in listening 2 romantic music while practicing bramacharya?????

Answer
The beauty and allure of music stems from the Lord who is the source of all energy and power. However, till one becomes very advanced, it is not possible to realize this when one see's the beauty of the Lord shining in various things such as a woman, music etc. (it is not the body or the woman who is beautiful, but the power of the Lord who shines from within that temporary encasing of flesh). Until a certain degree of spiritual illumination is not reached, an individual cannot segregate between the two. He gets carried away by Mâya (illusive power of creation), thinks the impermanent visual objects themselves to be the source, and ultimately falls prey to lower emotions.

Hence it is unadvisable to listen to romantic music in the midst of study, which ultimately flowers desire from within and will not only reduce focus and concentration but also impede Brahmacharya.

After a few years of unbroken Brahmacharya, the Yogi reaches a state where he realizes the beauty of music to be nothing else but a minute part of the Lord's great power. He will then not be easily carried over by desire, lust etc. which blossom in an ordinary man upon the advent of music with an undercurrent of Maya. Also, the bliss he tastes through Samadhi will be so great that he will no longer have interest as regards pleasures derived from the senses.

Question
hello this would be my first question to you I have read the paramount importance of brahmacharya and also understand intellectually that bramacharya is essence of pure living I m 23 years old and have been striving hard but in vain I got this evil habit which lurkes me in private I tend to avoid sexual indulgence but it overpower me everytime I try to compress it or avoid it often I get provoked in watching porn and consequently I lose my mind and masturbate I think now I m addict IT took me great courage to admit this but how can I hide truth It is easy to say then to practise in real sense please guide me I will do as you will guide me also I want to techniques of brahmacharya in day today life please answer and reply what can be done often I repent a lot afterward this seem to ruin me from inside this

QUESTION: hello sir
during meditation I do not feel my body after some time of starting the meditation,for how much long should I hold this stage.
thank you for your time in advance.

ANSWER: Meditation is to be practiced as long as possible. The longer, the better. One eventually loses all awareness and goes into Samadhi.

QUESTION: thank you sir for answering.
I feel myself above head.
1Is it related to kundalini which stage is this,when to know I am in samadhi.
2how to progress from sabikalpa samadhi to nirbikalpa samadhi.
3will these affect day to day work,job etc in any way.

Answer
1. Practice unbroken Brahmacharya with surrender to the Lord and much meditation. At the right time, the Lord takes the Yogi to Savikalpa Samadhi.

2. How does one know that he fell asleep and slept the whole night? It is known only after one wakes up in the morning . The same is with Samadhi. In Savikalpa Samadhi however, there is an awareness of the pure I-ness or pure Ego (leading to duality). Nothing else exists here. It will be understood only by experience.

3. One becomes better in all fields of life and starts developing 'Vairagya' (detachment) as he progresses in Samadhi.

4. It cannot be explained or understood as to how ones goes into Nirvikalpa Samadhi, for it is not in one's hands but the Lord's. It comes only to that Yogi whose current birth is the last on the Earthly plane. When 'Savikalpa Samadhi' is practiced for many years with complete surrender to the Lord, his blessings alone lead to that state.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

I have some questions regarding your Q/A regarding Sleeping positions (http://en.allexperts.com/q/Celibacy-Abstinence-3564/2011/3/Sleeping-positions.ht)

1. Should practitioners always use pillow to sleep? Or is it better to learn to sleep on left side without pillow?

2. Which position should the top of the head face while sleeping? (North - South - East - West)?

3. While meditating which position should one face? (North - South - East - West)?

Thanks

Pulong

Answer
1. It is preferable to use a pillow as this maintains the head in the right posture (at right angles to the shoulder)

2. South is the best, followed by West & East. North is to be avoided.

3. North or East are preferred.

Question
hello sir,
i am continuing my attempts to get established in brahmacharya.i had asked you a question earlier regarding success and samsara and i m really grateful for your answer.i have started reading bhagwad gita for 25 mins daily before going to sleep. your method of not worrying about the result and keep the efforts going has really helped me and i will keep trying my best.
my questions are:
1)After waking up and doing yoga and meditation there is no drowsiness at all but in the odd hours of 7 to 8 am and 10 to 11am i get drowsy and feel like sleeping, this lasts for about 10 to 20min.Can you give some advice on how to avoid this drowsiness.
2)i wanted to know whether it is good to eat home made laddo of wheat with less sugar?
3)in swami sivanada's practice of brahmacharya ,in the end a few books on brahmacharya are given,one of which is a book titled 'the creative power of continence' by Swami Jagadishananda .do you know where to find it?

Answer
1. Keeping oneself occupied with constructive activity is the alternative.

2. Home made sweets can occasionally be consumed. However, the same should not become a habit.

3. Sorry, I am not aware of this book.

4. The Bhagavad-Gita & Pathanjali's Yoga Sutra-s (see past answers for the downloadable

Question
sir, What role does prarabdha has in life of a human and how does manda, teevra and tarteevra prabdha effect one?

Answer
'Prarabdha karma' refers to that part of accrued karma which works out in the current existence. It cannot be negated or burnt. 'Agama karma' refers to that karma which is still in seed form in the 'Karana Sharira' (causal body) and which will flower in future existences. The Yogi who practices Samadhi meditation eventually acquires the siddhi of burning 'Agama' so as to annul subsequent births. But he still has to go through Prarabdha. As long as Prarabdha is not exhausted, the physical body cannot be discarded even by a self-realized and liberated soul.

ॐ तत् सत्

Question
hello sir ,
thanks a lot for your previous replies, i had a small question.this question is not directly on celibacy. ahimsa is a part of the yama and niyama and i was having some trouble in practicing it.my question is that what should we do when mosquitoes and insects start biting us , even if we move the mosquito it still comes and bites again. if we use some chemical repellent they are harmful to us also as they contain toxins.this gets really trouble some when in meditation.also what to do when a cockroach or other such insect is present in areas where you keep your toothbrush and other things with which you interact directly.

Answer
1. To the best extent possible, one should not hurt any other creature or being (even if they hurt us). When hurt by any other creature or person, the Yogi should think – " My 'Prarabdha' (past karma) is such that such pain was due to me. I forgive the creature/person who has caused this pain and wish it good."

2. When such an attitude is developed & practiced by the Brahmachari over a period of many years, a great power envelops him.

3. A mosquito curtain/net can be used during meditation.

4. When possible, creatures such as roaches or other insects are caught with a broom and released outside.

This is the general attitude of the Brahmachari striving for Ahimsa, wherein he desists from the least injury to any other creature. When such Ahimsa is established, Brahmacharya becomes easier and successful. Even if it is not possible to relocate the concerned creature in such cases, the power of Ahimsa when established ensures that the population of such creatures does not increase beyond a limit (They may be eaten by other creatures etc. thereby regulating the numbers) This is true because, the Atman (soul) within all creatures is none other than the Lord and HE HIMSELF eventually takes care of the situation as regards the Yogi established in Ahimsa.

Question

Dear 'Dhananjay',

Pranaams.

- I am a 41 yr old serving officer of the Indian Army.
- Certain plans have been coming thru me by the grace of HH Sri Sri Ravi Shankar (Founder of the 'Art of Living' – AOL) for raising the agricultural production of India thru the fertile plains of Bihar state since I did the Basic Course of the AOL in Apr 2002 (that is these plans have evolved thru me over more than 10 years).
- The plans envisage effectively saving upon the post harvest losses in Bihar state; and encouraging the residents of the state to raise their own agribusinesses in the state.
- The Indian bureaucracy is notorious across the world for its corruption; and so, though a large amount of funds are available (waiting to be tapped).
- The general plan is to ensure the objective thru a SOCIETY of retired officers of the Indian Army from Bihar.
- The SOCIETY would be HQ in Patna in Bihar; and would consist of THREE Departments; with well defined tasks and charter of duties.
- All the Depts would be staffed by recently retired personnel of the Indian Army and suitably modified systems as practiced in the Indian Army would be followed.
- Details of these plans in their various stages of evolution can be easily found over Internet by typing the keywords "plans for enhancing the food security of India" "Arun" "Bihar" "Art of Living"
- I have had a highly spiritual upbringing; because my father, after completing his M.A., PhD in Sanskrit in 1969 from Darbhanga in Bihar; had moved to work in the 'Kaivalyadhama' Yoga Research Institute in Lonavla in Pune district of Maharashtra state.
- I was born in Lonavla (in Jul 1971) and studied in Don Bosco, Lonavla and in Fergusson College, Pune before going for my Military training.
- In Kaivalyadhama; I was exposed to Vedic Chanting and prayers in the (then) calm and serene environment of the (Yoga Research) Institute from my childhood.
- After completing my Military training; I was sent to the 'Siachen' Glacier and after that, for the Infantry Young Officer's Course in Infantry School, Mhow (MP).
- While doing this Course; I survived a SEVERE Head Injury in which I was in Coma for 20 days because my SKULL was fractured in 23 places in a Road Traffic accident on night 12-13 Nov 1993.
- Still, I have survived; and retained all my earlier abilities (including my physical fitness and my facility in the English language).
- The Basic Course of the AOL that I did in Apr 2002 gave the required direction to my life force.
- I had the following nagging query:

o In this Human life; we have to pacify our Rajo Gun (hamen apna rajogun shaant karna hota hai).

o The mind gets 'agitated' due to passion. (kaam se rajogun badhta hai)

o I have found that I get greater focus in the direction of planning the finer aspects of these plans when I indulge in thoughts of passion (or after acts of discharging of the veerya).

- In such an event, will it be proper for me to break my Brahmacharya after some periods?

Answer
1. Such upraisal of Rajas (activating nature) which one might experience from loss of 'Veerya' (seminal fluid) is temporary, non-self sustaining and the result of an undercurrent of anger and inadequacy (that springs further to loss). Veerya is soul force and he who loses it loses a part of himself. He cannot succeed in any endeavour beyond a limit. Get established in Brahmacharya through a few years of unbroken practice. The difference and meaning then become s clear.

2. All energy and power in the seen and unseen universe stems from the Lord alone. It is this energy alone that can create and help things grow, be it in the material or spiritual world. Veerya is the representation of this divine force in gross form. The power and ability that an established Brahmachari carries cannot be described. It is a power that is above the body, mind and the psyche. It is the power of the very Lord himself. Even his Sankalpa-s (wishes) bear great strength when focused right. Hence one should not loose the creatiuve fluid at any cost.

Sage Pathanjali states the effect of unbroken continence in the 'Yoga Darsana' Chap II, Verse 38 :

| ब्रह्मचर्य प्रतिष्टायां वीर्य लाभः ||

"Upon establishment in Brahmacharya comes the gain of Veerya'".

The word Veerya here refers to a multitude of qualities that include valor, bravery, strength, persistence, tenacity, efficience, grit, determination and many other related qualities. In other words, Veerya represents the net sum of all energy that man makes use of to succeed in any given task. Hence its gain portends success and loss eventually leads to failure. This is the truth.

Question
Respected Dhananjay,

I am 31, and have failed to achieve things to my full potential in career and personal life. Consequently I remain unhappy and unsatisfied. As I analyse things around me and reflect on my past I find few paradoxes to the belief of Brahmacharya.

In school I was considered very timid in terms of knowledge of sex and allied topics, I was more of a kid till class 12 since most of my classmates had experienced physical intimacy with opposite genders by then.
Though I longed for a girl-friend but it was more for an emotional support than for physical interests. When I look back, all my batchmates, who would never even believe in an iota about Brahmacharya are the ones who are more successful in life today.
They always were good in studies than me. I fail to understand that if I was so naive about sex and hardly had any sexual thoughts hovering on my mind then , WHY WAS I WEAK in studies? Why I had always struggled to make it to be good in studies and they had breezed through. Were these due to my past Karma? My parents did everything for me, and I am so grateful to them but I could never repay back to them.

Even girls in my class (11th std) used to mention to me that I lack Manliness in terms of physical and emotional strength, and these thoughts have till today lingered on my mind.

Even today, I see my close friends, blatantly getting into extra-marital relationships, having sex with multiple partners, but they are the ones who are more happy and full of vigour than me, when I had tried to justify the cause and effect of such behaviour with them they laughed it off as immaterial. To be frank, they are the ones with better jobs, they are the ones with better partners, they are the ones with better skills in language, memory and sports. If you give us puzzles to solve they will come up with the solution first. They are the ones who keep more cool. Though they are the ones who always throw glances at women, they enjoy pornography. Sometimes I feel that the feeling of having everything done gives them mental power whereas I repent of not having done anything. Few don't believe in God, Karma and believe that this life has to be lived to the fullest.

The same facts I find in my workplace.

Why such Paradoxes Dhananjay?

Answer
1. Self-confidence, determination, an ability to succeed etc. are the result of past deeds from former births. Every child is born with a set group of qualities which increase or decrease based upon current actions. There are children who become chess grand masters at the age of 6 or 7. There are others who become excellent painters at the age of 4 or 5. How does this happen? Why can’t all exhibit such powers? This phenomenon is nothing but the result of past efforts of the Jiva in these directions. It has already striven and reached a level of excellence in the particular field which makes the talent shine very early. There is nothing more to it. Similarly, a lack of self worth, timidness and inadequacy since childhood is also the effect of past karma. With proper efforts, one can negate and overcome the same in this birth to a large extent.

2. One lacking these should develop these qualities by reminding himself that he is the Atman who is all powerful and capable. Mere abstinence from interaction with the opposite gender with a contrary indulgence in self pity, inferiority and lack of self worth is not Brahmacharya. Real Brahmacharya involves developing confidence to the highest level by reminding oneself of his Godliness, impermanence of the world and staying calm and powerful by reminding oneself that this life is a drama enacted by the Lord where we are only actors.

3. During youth, the inherent power of veerya that has been conserved naturally and automatically till puberty shines in most people. Based on their individual nature and acquired abilities from past karma, this power shines in different ways. If Brahmacharya is properly practiced, such abilities can be further pronounced and highlighted. Loss of veerya will eventually lead to diminishing of all such abilities in course of time. Take a relook at the overall state of the people you describe by the time they reach mid-life. This is the truth.

Donot worry or get affected by such illusions of Maya. Every person is the medium of the Lord who is enacting his Leela from within. One need not be like another. Each Jiva is unique and special. If your friends exhibit certain strengths, there are other qualities within you waiting to be tapped that they lack. You can do this if you make up your mind. All this is the Lord’s Leela. Simply follow a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya with complete surrender to the Lord and much meditation. In course of time, you will know the purpose of your life and destiny.

Question
Although this topic has been discussed previously I am sure, could you please elaborate or give me direction on how to deal with the discomfort of prolonged periods of sexual abstinence?

My problem is that after a few weeks, I develop discomfort in my testicular region due to the seminal build up from either thoughts or a non-vegetarian diet. It seems the only way to help is through sexual release.

I want to take my brahmacharya as far as possible but it gets very painful. Is this where the bandha exercises come in play? I am working on slowly becoming vegan. Will it be impossible to extend my periods of abstinence without completely eliminating meat from the diet?

नमस्ते

Answer
1. One should indulge in adequate physical exercise/sports or Yogasana, mental work and spiritual meditation if semen is to be transmuted effectively. Build up of semen is an indication that there is an inadequacy of either of the above mentioned activities. When the body, mind and psyche are subjected to such activity on a daily basis, Veerya (semen) gets transmuted. A life of Yoga as has been outlined in past answers is to be properly practiced. Else Brahmacharya will not be possible beyond a limit.

2. Gradually reduce and finally give up meat. Meat is not conducive to Yoga & Brahmacharya. Drink milk & dairy products.

Question
Respected Dhananjay,

These questions arose from your explanation of difference between being celibate and following a life of Brahmacharya. Could you throw more light on this aspect. Is it enough to be celibate and not follow the practices of a Brahmachari? There are many scientists who have been celibate and they exuded superior intellect so it might be true, kindly corroborate.
Is it harmful to remain celibate and not transmuting the sexual force, can such a practice lead to emotional or psychological disorder or genital cancer? Is following Brahmacharya the ONLY WAY to attain the Real Truth?

Regards
Protonuleus

Answer
1. Mere celibacy (abstinence from sexual intercourse) is of no use. It becomes harmful and dangerous to the body and mind. It is unnatural and goes against nature. Brahmacharya is a special mode of spiritual life where energy which is being dissipated as lust and passion is transmuted into something higher. It gives the greatest strength, bliss and ultimately liberation. The scientists you describe attained an automatic state of partial Brahmacharya by concentrated focus on their work. Their energy which might otherwise have dissipated as lust was channelized into scientific work. This resulted in an automatic form of partial Brahmacharya.

2. It is not possible to realize the ultimate truth without absolute Brahmacharya.

Question
Dear Sir,

Your answers in the previous posts is greatly helpful to me for maintaining absolute brahmacharya . Your words is like a sword to improve 'Vairagya' (Detachment) in mind. I took the printed copies of all the past answers and maintained it like a book. I must read it before to sleep and at morning. Please clear my some of doubts:-

1. If a person carried out Brahmacharya in word and deed up to 6 years and wants his own child, is it is a break between 12 year practice?

2. After waking up on 4.o clock when it reach at 6 o clock feeling heavily sleepy mood , How can I get rid off it?

3. Can I include 'Tratak' between Pranayama and meditation?

4. Can I become slim only by doing Banda, Pranayama and meditation, Bz of my belly is quit big but after doing yoga practice the tightness of belly is reduced by its heat

I' m very sad that can't see people like you and big masters.
I have an hope that we can meet if have God blessings

'Sarvam Khalvidham Brahman'

Answer
1. The Brahmachari is allowed to the extent of one sexual ejaculation per wanted child with his lawfully wedded wife. Since the purpose of the sexual act itself is procreation, such activity is warranted and does not cause any impediment. If it is so destined (as per the Lord’s wishes) that the Yogi has to beget a child, it happens. It is HE (Lord) who decides these things and not us. Yogi-s who are high on Vairagya however donot have interest in worldly things such as woman and son and hence donot opt for more than one child, thererby limiting the valid expenditure of semen for procreation to one single ejaculate.

2. After a few years of unbroken practice, when Kundalini ascends to Ajna and beyond, the urge for sleep during morning hours (caused by Tamas or inertia) goes away and the Yogi gets submerged in Samadhi during meditation. He will then become unaware of time and gets lost in 'Paramananda' (infinite bliss of the absolute). Till then, one has to strive much. Reading spiritual literature or getting busy with constructive activity is a good option to ward away sleep.

3. 'Trataka' (gazing at a fixed point with the thought of the Lord) can be incorporated as a preliminary activity for a very short period before meditation if one wishes. However, meditation alone matters.

4. Persist in the unbroken practice of Yoga & Brahmacharya with the complete Yogic lifestyle and 'Mitahaara' (moderate diet) as explained. After the Yogi becomes an Urdhvareta, his body slowly starts becoming wiry, tight and fresh (like that of a child). By the time he attains to 'Divya Sharira' after 'Bhuta-Jaya' (mastery over the elements), it will be full of lithe strength, tough, free from all disease and akin to 'Vajra' (diamond) in toughness. He then feels the greatest strength and bliss from within and cries with tears of devotion to the great Lord.

1.after 3months and a week of my brahmacharya practice i had a voluntary break and from yesterday i again started brahmacharya is it ok if we start as soon as we had a break.

2.why we are unable to control our body (hands while bathing) which caused me a voluntary break. i was about to watch porn but i thought of your answer you gave some days back as we watch porn it is like cheating god and i want to clarify that even we had a break we should at any cost watch porn even though it is voluntary.

3.some elder people say that if our mind is somewhere and we are practicing the opposite it is not a full fledged practice (eating meat in case of myself) i control myself not to eat and my mind is always behind eating it mentally and some other things in others.

Answer
1. Yes

2. Past Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasana-s (tendencies) which exist in seed form within the causal body are the cause behind sexual thoughts and actions. These slowly dissolve after many years of unbroken Brahmacharya and meditation. One should never resort to watching porn. It equals a break

3. Such logic is akin to a man who commits a murder out of anger because his mind thinks on the lines – "It is of no use to physically refrain from committing a murder when my angry mind wants to kill that person. Since my mind wants to commit the crime, I shall as well kill him and be true to my mind". Does this make sense? While it is no doubt wrong to think of murder, the thought when converted into action becomes a crime in actuality. Nothing more is then left behind. It is necessary to first develop physical abstinence so as to support mental abstinence as regards both meat eating and Brahmacharya.

Question

Dear Dhananjay Guruji,
You have great patience and personality to answer the same questions again and again.Hats off to you guruji,

I have read through most of your answers every one of those are detailed and to the point.I really admire and respect such people who strech themselves to solve other's problem and guide them in the right path.

My name is Vijay ,29 years old.

My initial experience were similar to others I used to have wet dreams, semen leakage in urine due to excessive mastubation for 17+ years ,I came to know very late the ill effects of masturbation though I firmly decided to stop masturbating 2 yrs ago recovered to some extent after I took to yoga and learnt about bramhacharya.

Though I have recovered I am not there yet [I have look younger, my face and skin are brighter, I feel a lot confident than previous years] but I still have pot belly and face problem with premature ejaculation(for which i am taking ashwagandha).

Like to inform that I practise following asanas Ganesha- namaskara,Suryanamaskara, shalabhasana, dhanurasana,vayumuktasana,thribandha,shirshasana,sarvangasana,matsyasana,halasana,ardhamatsyendrasana,garudasana,ushtrasana.
[I learnt most of asana's through internet research]

I just got married and I want to increase quality and quantity of my sprem and also like to have a ojasvi, tejasvi and varchasvi child by next year.

I know that you assist on issues related to bramhacharya only incase you feel that question is outside your perview, atleast guide/refer me to the person who can help me.

Please help me guruji.
Awaiting your reply.

Vijay

Answer

1. In the path of Yoga, one who has attained 'Kaivalya' (self-realization) alone befits to be addressed Guru or take such a title. Since my journey towards this state is not yet complete, I do not deserve to be addressed Guru.

2. Continue with the Asana-s. Consume a healthy and nutritious diet with adequate milk, curd and dairy products. Sleep early (by 9.00~9.30 P.M) and wake up early (4.00 A.M Brahmimuhurtham) to perform the Yogic practices which have been described. The correct practice of 'Tribandha' will root out pre-mature ejaculation.

2. This will gradually increase the power of Veerya for successful conception. Gradually limit and reduce on sexual activity (to the fertile period of the wife's monthly cycle/once a month). The less frequent the expenditure of semen, the better becomes its quality for progeny.

Before indulging in sexual contact for progeny, the husband and wife should sit in 'Padmasana' with the spine straight and meditate for a few minutes on the Lord with the thought - "O Lord, we shall now indulge in the divine union to beget a healthy child. Thou reside within me and within my wife as the Atman. Thou resides as the Atman in that Jiva which will come to us as our child. You occupy everything and all this is your 'Leela'(play). Kindly bless us with a healthy, virtuous, divine and noble soul who will tread the path of righteousness. May we be blessed and may our child be blessed".

The sexual act for progeny is carried out with this divine thought. Such a union is auspicious, divine and blessed by the Gods. At the right time, the Lord arranges for a Jiva which is karmically destined to come as the child. If both the husband and wife are into a life of Brahmacharya with much God-meditation and by limiting sexual contact for offspring, a highly evolved and noble soul will come to them as offspring. It will bring them much happiness and be of great worth, both to them and to the society. Further to conception, unbroken Brahmacharya for self-realization can be taken up.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

This morning I reread a religious scripture I have not been reading for the past 10 years. What strikes me is that yesterday I could not remember any details of it, yet today when I start to read it, I immediately recall the content of the next paragraphs.

This implies that the knowledge obtained in the past was not lost, but stored somewhere in the brain, however seems a human being can't hold access to it... he "forgets" it.

It reminds me of the following quote about Swami Vivekananda's life: "Once Swami Vivekananda was reading the volumes of 'Encyclopedia Britannica'. His disciple associate (Sharatchandra Chakravarti), seeing those twenty-four volumes, remarked, "It is difficult to master the contents of so many volumes in one life." He did not know at the time that the Swami had already finished ten volumes and was reading the eleventh. "What do you mean?" said Swamiji. "Ask me whatever you like from those ten volumes and I can tell you all about it." The disciple, out of curiosity, brought down the books and asked Swamiji many questions on difficult and varied topics/subjects, selecting one or two from different volumes. Swami Vivekananda not only replied each correctly, but in many instances he quoted the very language of the books!"

My question if two-fold:

How can a human being remember all past knowledge? Is it by the practice of brahmacharya, or specific meditation techniques?

2.
Swami Vivekananda said that concentration is the essence of knowledge; nothing can be done without it, and that 90% of thought force is wasted by the human being.
How can concentration of the mind be improved and become very strong, so that little thought force is wasted?

Answer
1. The human brain has photographic memory and retention in its state of complete potential. Loss of vital energy minimizes this potential while conservation and transmutation of the same into Ojas over a period of many years leads to maximum potential. Also, since the Brahmachari comes closer and closer to his Atmic soul state, he develops better access to knowledge, the Atman being omniscient (all knowing). Meditation rejuvenates and strengthens the faculties of the brain.

2. When vital force is transmuted and converted into Ojas without being dissipated through lust and passion, concentration and focus automatically improve. After a few years of such unbroken practice, the Brahmachari develops the faculty of powerful concentration which he can use at his will.

Question
Dear Dhananjay,

After almost two months or really strict brahmacharya where I had only one night emission, I had a major slip yesterday and day before. I just returned from a spiritual retreat for guru poornima. Before going, I was really debating with myself because after every travel, I have had a brahmacharya break. So this time I was wondering whether to go or not, and considered just staying home and doing yoga/meditation every morning/evening as usual. However I am glad I went as I learnt a lot about the ego, the spiritual teacher mentioned that some people develop a big ego after staying home and meditating, and start to think "I know something" or "I am special" and take credit for the positive experiences from the meditation and their ego rises. He said it is important to maintain a very humble attitude and think that the grace is coming from higher power and not take credit for anything. Also, during the guru poornima I felt a lot of grace pouring in and was very thankful for it.

HOWEVER, my daily yoga schedule and diet changed as I had to adjust to circumstances. When I came back, I had several vision related mistakes (my eyes kept getting pulled towards certain women). I kept asking for strength from higher power to overcome these temptations. However when I came back home I was browsing youtube and suddenly a catchy scene in a new article about an upcoming movie caught my eye, one thing led to another and I ended up watching porn and masturbating. I felt good for a few minutes. But now, I wake up in the middle of the night and my whole body feels horrible. I feel some kind of yuk energy inside my body especially from 3rd chakra to heart chakra. I feel really horrible physically. Looks like something changed within. 2 months of brhamcharya has completely gone down the drain. This has happenned at least 10 times where I reached 2 months and screwed up. However usually i never felt this horrible physically after a slip. Now it is like a 100 hungry wolves have woken up inside my body and they are demanding more indulgence through more self-stimulation, I am having to put up a major fight using all my reasoning power to say NO to this urges within because I realize that I don't want to be a slave to lust anymore.

Did I commit a major sin as I had a relapse after attending a spiritual event? Why am I feeling so horrible within physically? NOw that I am back home I have restrated my yoga sadhana including pranayama, meditation and bandhas and also sattvic raw vegan diet. Can you please help me get back on track? I don't want this slip to become a relapse, and I would like to regain my connection and get rid of this bad energy and horrible urges in my body.

May God bless you ,

Answer
1. The beginner is susceptible to downfall from mixing much with people. During the initial stages of practice, one is vulnerable to the onslaught of lust and temptation that inevitably arise from mixing with others. This is why the scriptures suggest aloofness. In the 'Shiva Samhita', one of the qualities for an ideal Yogi is – "Janasangadooraha" (one who shuns people and maintains solitude). Lord Krishna re-emphasizes this in the Bhagavad-Gita. Hence it is necessary to limit contact only to absolute necessity. After a few years of advancement, further to the Brahmachari becoming an Urdhvareta, this rule can be relaxed to a certain extent with discretion and caution.

A break reflects that efforts are to be more precise and accurate. There is always something for the aspirant to learn from a break. He should learn it and never repeat the mistake.

2. Watching porn inundates the 'Linga Sharira' (astral body) with astral toxins contained in the objects of porn. The viewer connects to the astral body of the concerned person through the image. There is a mental sexual union between the two. When many different people are viewed, there is a mental union with the astral bodies of all those people. It is just short of actual sexual intercourse with the concerned people. The astral bodies of people who do porn for a living are highly toxic with dense sexual karma and perversion. Demonic entities rule such bodies. They are home to very base karma of the lowest and most fetid order. The viewer starts inundating himself with this karma through the union. It is a remote process of degenerating oneself with foul and evil energy.

When this process takes place, it takes many months of unbroken Brahmacharya to overcome such affliction. It might even take many years if the indulgence has been very strong and regular. The demomic entities that rule porn-artists induce the mind of the Brahmachari to revert. They attack him both while awake and in dreams to repeat the acts. It becomes very difficult for the beginner to counter such forces. There is a strong chance that he will give up and slip into the dungeons of porn forever. If such a thing happens, he will encounter untold agony & suffering. Hence porn should never be viewed. It equals a break and worse.

Make a mental prostration before the Lord that you shall henceforth never repeat the act. Donot ever break the oath. Lead a life of Yoga and unbroken Brahmacharya as described. This is the way out.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,hope you are well
1.I am in 21th month of absolute celibacy & partial brahmacharya. sometimes I follow moderation in diet & sometimes overeat.what should I do to overcome overeating ?
2.I think Pran Mudra which can be used in any situation induces vajroly kerya (esp when it's done with both hands).although it can never be replaced with your instructions you have mentioned in your answers but it can save practitioners from fail in crisis if it's applied immediately. do you conform it ? do you know any other easy method for such situations ?

Answer
1. Opt for many small meals instead of single large meals. Spread the quantity over a period of time. This will help overcome the issue. After the Yogi becomes an Urdhvareta, he will require lesser food and the craving will taper away.

2. Prana Mudra can be a precursor to the Bandha-s. However, it cannot substitute the Bandha-s since it is only a preliminary technique. The Tribandha-s are unparalleled in their ability to drive Prana into the Sushumna channel and help rise Kundalini for Samadhi meditation

Question
Respected Sir,
i am an aspirant in path of self realization and abstinance.

i wish to ask about mental connections that one forms with person of opposite gender without ever getting into physical realationship.

There is a girl in my batch with whom i have never talked but we both liked each other from start and attaraction was really strong (that was before i started thinking seriously about abstinance)

Even after 4 years we never talked but there seems to be some mental connection that seemed to have formed and it feels like we are able to talk subconciously and maybe this is what people refer to as 'astral tube'

My questions are:
1) Do such connections form out of some previous karmic debts or just intense attaraction?

2) Are mutual sexual thoughts and attaraction as bad as actual physical relationship?

[I have already witnessed the barrier they pose in path of self realization and mental peace. It feels like a responsibility/guilt to have created such connection in first place which cause suffering to both of us.]

and most important:
3) Is there any way to get out of such 'bandhans' particularly to dissolve those so called astral tubes ?
Also how can one prevent oneself from getting involved in further bandhans ?

Please forgive me if i wrote something wrong or outside my understanding but this is what i feel and curious about .

Answer
1. It could be either or both.

2. No. However, an aspirant in the path of Brahmacharya doesnot indulge in these as they become impediments to self-realization.

3. Focus on a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya as described and make conscious efforts not to think of the person. With effort and the grace of God, such attractions will gradually taper away. When the Brahmachari constantly reminds himself that attraction is to the impermanent body and mind and not him (Atman), it becomes easy to stay unaffected.

Question
Hello Dhananjay,

I recently read your past answer on pornography. I am addicted since 7 years and trying to give it up completely. You mentioned that demonic entities prevent us from recovering. I am slipping twice or thrice on the same day every month. Is this because of those demonic entities? I always slip when I am in front of my computer. I chant Lord Ram's names and hear Vishnu sahasranama everyday. What can I do further to completely give up this evil?

Thanks,
Amit

Answer
You have not given up porn. The efforts are insufficient. First give up porn & persist in a life of Yoga & unbroken Brahmacharya twice a day.

Question
QUESTION: Pranams!

I have read in this portal and also elsewhere that it takes 12 years of unbroken brahmacharya to become an urdvarethas. I am a 35 year old unmarried man who is going to get married very soon. It is not possible for a married man to be a celibate but I really look forward to take up the path of brahmacharya by the age of 45. Is it possible for someone to become an urdvarethas if he takes up brahmacharya with complete dedication for the prescribed 12 years from the age of 45?

Eagerly waiting for your answer...

Regards,
Anoop

ANSWER: 1. It need not take 12 years for attaining to Urdhvaretas. It can occur within a few years of honest and unbroken practice with the correct Yogic lifestyle. Everything depends on sincere and unbroken efforts coupled with the grace of God.

2. When sexual contact is limited to progeny and unbroken Brahmacharya practiced, one has a bright chance of progress. It cannot be conclusively said whether one can become an Urdhvareta after 45 years of age. The earlier the practice is taken up, the better are the chances as virility reduces after the mid thirties.

QUESTION: Pranams dear brother Dhananjay!

Thank you so much for your prompt answer. I would like to have a few clarifications as well.

1.) Is it possible for you to kindly explain the anatomical/biological explanation of the functioning of an 'urdvaretas'? I mean how this works exactly in scientific terms.

2.) I have recently came across a particular kind of people who are 'asexual'. Asexuals are those who have no inclination towards sex. It's fairly a new phenomena. They do not have any disorder and are completely normal people. They just do not experience sexual attraction. They like the human form, appreciate beauty and like good- looking men and women but they just don't want a sexual relationship with a man or a woman. They can have a married life and have children as well. Please google it for more information if you need. They sound like blessed people to me. Do you think they are naturally 'urdvaretas'?

3.) My understanding of brahmacharya is completely transcending body consciousness. Even sex which is highly ojas depleting can be made ojas increasing if made into a meditation, or an act of ritual worship in a legitimate relationship/marriage, performed as a sacred duty.

Kindly let me know your thoughts.

Anoop

Answer
1. The subtle most form of Bindu (seed) is Soma (nectar) which is stored in the brain. At the onset of puberty, this Bindu flows down to form gross Veerya (semen). The gates for the downward flow of Bindu are then thrown open for ever. With every ejaculate, much Bindu is lost. In the normal adult, Bindu continuously flows down to form semen which has to be expelled. This causes rapid ageing and debility as Soma confers immortality and its loss causes rapid ageing and death. Bindu when conserved and transmuted back into Soma gives immortality. Such a body cannot age in terms of debility. It involves the internal union of Shukla (male seed) with Rajas (female seed present dormant within the male).

It is very, very difficult to revert Veerya into Soma. It is possible only through Brahmacharya carried out with Samadhi meditation, blessed by the grace of the Lord. When the Yogi advances and achieves this after many years of unbroken practice beset with difficulties, he becomes an Urdhvareta. Physical semen is no longer formed in his body as Bindu remains as Soma at the Ajna Chakra in the region of the brain. Such a Yogi is then the equivalent of a Deva (celestial) and not a human in terms of his evolutionary progress.

2. Not necessarily.

3. Sexual enjoyment cannot take place without the use of the mind/body. One has to transcend both the body and the mind if he has to reach the Atmic state (soul state). The purpose of the sexual act is procreation and not recreation. Hence all forms of sexual enjoyment have to be eventually given up in course of time if self-realization is desired.

Question
Dear sir

Clear my some more doubts please:-

1. Is night emission is a break of brahmacharya ? (as per Sri Swami Shivananda sayings:-" night emission is not as voluntary ejaculation) please clear my doubts

2 All preserved semen (Veerya) will lose during wet dream?

3. A per Hindu scriptures Lord Ganesha is the God for remove obstacles in life, but after my brahmacharya life , I think that "Lord Ganesha is the God of remove obstacles in brahmacharya life . Please correct me if I am wrong

Thanking u sir

Sarvam Khalvidham Brahman
Vijith

Answer
1. An involuntary night emission is not a break.

2. No. However night emissions cause some amount of weakness due to loss of Prana. They should be overcome through perfect Brahmacharya which leads to the state of an Urdhvareta. One can practice 'Mula Bandha' even in sleep as soon as he becomes aware of the culmination into a wet dream to reduce emission.

3. There is only one absolute Lord of the universe who has no form, no gender and no name. It is people who give HIM different names based on their religion and belief. When an aspirant devotes his life to this Lord (represented by non-violence, truth, forbearance, Brahmacharya etc.) and loves him with devotion, austerity and surrender, the great Lord showers his grace. It does not matter what form one worships HIM or what name he is addressed by. Honesty and love for HIM alone matter.

Question
I would like to know what are the effects of a long term abstinence for a mature male.It can affect the size of the genitals?

Answer
Long term abstinence won't affect the size of a male's genitals, but it can disaffect his internal genitals. The genitals work best when they're exercised frequently. The prostate and seminal vesicles need to be flushed out. Most younger males ejaculate daily. A mature male is seemingly in even more need of regular ejaculation because he is at risk for prostatitis and worse prostate conditions.

I would recommend against long-term abstinence for mature males and in favor of regular ejaculation, at least three times weekly.

Question
Dear Sir,

With God grace and your valuable help(There is no mistake to denote You as a 'Guru' bz you vanished the dark of several mind) I can keep my brahmacharya in every aspects of life , I have doubts regarding Yoga, Please clear it:-

1 When I can increase the number of 'Tribanda' and 'Pranayama'?

2 At the time of doing Tribanda, Jalandar banda and Moolabanda (Kumbaka) can hold with 15 Oms easily but In Uddiyana banda by doing Rechaka I can go around 8 Oms only , How can I improve it?

3 Please describe about the ratio calculation of Pranayama (like 4:6:6)?

4 Some of days after doing Yoga, have a feeling like caught fiver with high body heat in body and tongue , why is this?

5 In the book " Autobiography of a Yogi", Yogis like Sri Pranavananda(Banaras's saint with two bodies) and Sri Ram Gopal Majumdhar (sleepless saint) meditating several hours like 8 and 18 hous, is it possible by an ordinary man ?

again thanking you

Sarvam Khalvidham Brahman

Vijith

Answer
1. It will suffice to perform 3 sets of each of the Bandhas & 3 sets of Tribandha. The duration of Pranayama is to be gradually increased based on one’s comfort and ability (refer the post of Pranayama)

2. None of the Bandha-s should involve kumbhaka of more than 3~5 seconds (or 3 OM’s). Donot hold longer

3. It is not necessary to employ a ratio in the Pranayama described earlier. The counts in kumbhaka alone matter. Puraka and Rechaka are to be gradual.

4. As the body purifies through Nâdi Shuddhi (purification of energy channels), such symptoms sometimes appear.

5. When the Yogi who was earlier ordinary advances and reaches the stage where his Prarabdha karma necessitates such long hours of meditation, the Lord makes it happen. Such Jiva-s have finished their worldly duties as a result of which the karma to indulge in Samadhi meditation for long hours alone remains before self-realization and final departure.

Question
Respected Sir,
I had a question which is i'm sure, quite common with people pursuing the path of brahmacharya. It's that the more we progress, the more we are vigilant and careful, the more we are honest towards ourselves, our effort, the god and our goal. The more opposite and oppressive the outside world becomes. Why it tries to call us back to the same pit we are trying to escape? It is very difficult to avoid or confront such a situation.
Brahman Sarvam Prajayate.

Answer
The external world and its people are in the grip of Maya (cosmic illusion). Maya makes wrong appear right and right appear wrong. Hence in the scriptures, the world is compared to the inverted image of an object seen in a mirror. Just as the image of an object in a mirror appears inverted and opposite in perspecticve, this world governed by Maya is contrary to reality.

The rules that govern Brahmacharya are the rules that take man to his Atmic (soul) state, his true and real state of being. As the Brahmachari embraces these rules and puts them into effect, his actions appear contrary and unattractive to the world for the reasons described above. For this reason, the Brahmachari should never advertise regarding his practices and lifestyle, for these cannot be understood or appreciated by the common man. Silence and a smile are to be his assets. The purpose of Maya is to tempt man towards downfall as a test of his progress. Had there been no test at every step, all would have attained liberation. Maya is the tool of the Lord to test man’s evolution. One who is committed and devoted to God and Brahmacharya alone gets the ability to eventually transcend Maya.

hello sir,
in the last few days (10-12 days) my brahmacharya resolve got too weak and hence i ended up with 5-6 breaks in a very short time period after having brahmacharya for 22 days.my morale got down and hence the downfalls occurred.i wanted to know how can i keep up my morale for brahmacharya as it gets down after some days. secondly, after having these breaks my mind has found a new incorrect reason, it says that since you are not the body then why are you bothered about brahmacharya, how does it matter if you loose your vital fluid if it affects the body and so this was the reason for successive downfalls in the last few days.i tried to reason but cant find a good strong reason.please help me get over this misunderstanding. due to breaks now i have created more problems for myself.i will ask them in a separate question as they are personal.

Answer
1. Veerya is life and its loss is nothing short of death. Everything is gained by Brahmacharya and the converse by Abrahmacharya. This is the first reason for maintaining continence.

2. Yes, we are not the body or mind but only the Atman. So tell the mind to stop feeding the body with food from today. Let the mind be free from this botheration called the body as we are not the body. Let us see what it says …

Namaskaar Dhananjay,
Thank you for your kind service towards mankind.

I read in one of your past answers that body hair are important to us in respect that they protect us from outside negative vibrations.

But,I had some doubts.

1.Of late I have stopped trimming my pubic hair and hair in armpit.As a result I occasionally have a lot of itching in the pubic region although I bathe properly and keep that area clean.While tying the langoti,some hair are pulled which also cause pain.What to do?

2.Also,due to the growth of armpit hair,my body odor has increased.I don't use deodorant too.What should i do?Kindly help.

3.Since I've started wearing langoti the whole day,I've noticed that I've developed small pimple like projections in the anal region.What should I do?

Kindly spare me for asking such questions.Thank you.

Answer
1. It is only a matter of getting used to it. With time, things will become allrite.

2. Body odor gradually reduces with progress in Brahmacharya coupled with a sathwic vegetarian diet. Deodorants are toxic and are best avoided or used very sparingly. An alternative is to wet sponge the body in the course of the day.

3. Various bodily toxins start surfacing whilst being vacated through a life of Brahmacharya for the first few years. This is not the effect of Langoti but expulsion of inner impurities. Also it takes a month or two to get used to wearing the Langoti. Persisting in a life of un broken Brahmacharya will wash out all such impurities in course of time.

Question
Hi Sir - Hope you are going good...

I have several of queries on which I would like your guidance:

1) What are the characteristics of a person who has got a "Kaivalya" gyan and how does he conduct himself in his day to day affairs
2) During the on-going observance of Brahamcharya, is it possible that resultant benefits would "accrue" for a certain period of time (for few months) before being manifested in totality. Because, sometimes we do not see any visible changes for a fairly long period of time, and it causes a confusion of whether things are being doing properly or not. I agree that we should not be worried about fruits of our actions but sometimes it affect our morale, although there is never a question of running away from this mode of life. But, truth is that sometimes benefits / visible improvement makes us eager to work even harder
3) In many of your past posts, you have mentioned about advent of illness during the completion of first 3 - 4 months. This is absolutely correct, and like me many other aspirants would have experienced this. If possible, could you please now tell us the things that is observed / felt / experienced when someone is nearer to completion of the first year in Brahamcharya

Thanks & Regards.

Answer
1. Words cannot adequately describe the state of such a realized Yogi, for that state is beyond human comprehension. Only a feeble attempt might be made to point out a few facts as regards that state. One who has attained to 'Kaivalya' (self-realization), though residing in this body of flesh feels himself present as the soul in all beings and see's all other beings as no different from his own self (Sarvabhutastha Atmaanam, Sarvabhutaani cha Aatmani) . The concept of 'I' 'you' and 'he' does not exist for him in terms of reality. Everything has become the one single absolute truth namely the Lord (Sarvam Khalvidam Brahman) . Having lost his sense of 'I-ness' or Ego, he is in indescribable bliss (true state of the Atman) and see's the same everywhere. With no desire or aversion to the opposites, he remains inwardly calm and anchored to the absolute at all times, having realized this world as a dream and unreal. He is liberated even while in this body and forever with no rebirth. Lord Krishna has dealt with extensively on this subject in various places in the Bhagavad-Gita (especially in Chapters 5 & 6).

2. It is one's past karma represented by Samskara-s (impressions) and Vasanas-s (tendencies) that prevent one from reverting to one's true soul state. Through the correct practice of a life of Yoga & Brahmacharya, these gradually start getting deactivated and one makes progress. These impressions and tendencies, many of which are dense and heavy as a result of repeated indulgence from millions of births take time to get immobilized, based on their magnitude. Imagine a huge hillock of stone which is being broken down while constructing a road. Till the last piece of stone is not removed, a clear path is not available. Till the complete mass of obstruction is not fully got rid of, the road cannot be laid.

The practices involving the attainment of Kaivalya (self-realization) are very similar. It takes millions of births for the 'Jiva' (embodied soul) to tide across animal births and finally attain the human birth. After a more than a million births in the human form, the Jiva which is nearing liberation gets the mind to pursue the absolute truth through Brahmacharya. Here again it spends a few births unsuccessfully treading the path of spirituality, unsure of whether it is worth the trouble, for the senses constantly tempt it to give up and failure often occurs. Finally, the Jiva in its last few countable births gets the certain knowledge and conviction that there is no other path but that of self-realization for eternal bliss and liberation. It then strives very hard under the grace of the Lord and attains to liberation. This is why the human birth is very precious. It should not be wasted forming new, unwanted karma. It is meant for liberation.

During this process, one has to constantly strive and persevere with unbroken determination and zest. Some of the past karma-s are so dense that long years of practice are required to annul them. At such times, it appears as though no progress is being made. The going appears very slow and almost bereft of direction. The aspirant gets a doubt whether he is making any headway at all. Everything appears to have almost come to a standstill despite regular practice and efforts. In reality, as long as the Yogic practice with devotion to the Lord is unbroken, progress does not stop even for a minute. Dense layers of karma are always slowly dissolving through correct practice. When a block of such karma finally vacates, the aspirant suddenly finds himself pushed into the next level all of a sudden. He then has to work at new layers of karma, next in the line.

An example to this fact from my personal experience is outlined below. During the first 2 years of unbroken Brahmacharya, It was very difficult to attain to long meditation. After sometime in meditation, the mind used to wander and become incapable of further concentration. Despite strong efforts at a sincere life of Yoga with unbroken Brahmacharya and devotion to the Lord, it was impossible to concentrate for long periods. There were constant efforts from my side to attain to 'Savikalpa Samadhi' with much zest, but to no avail. Let alone the advanced state of Samadhi, even ordinary meditation used to sometimes become unreachable.

For 2 years of practice, such was the state, appearing as though there was no progress. It was like a road block. While Brahmacharya and Yogic practices (twice a day) were unbroken and complete, there was no progress in meditation, though the efforts were sincere. Doubts arose as to whether there was any progress at all and the cleansing of karma involved frequent bouts of illness and ill-health which caused much weakness, discomfort and pain, some of them being very severe. The hardships faced during those first two years with much suffering were very intense and de-motivating. However, a life of Yoga and Brahmacharya (with 4.00 A.M wake up and Yogic practice twice a day as has been outlined) was honestly adhered to with the sole hope & belief that the Lord never disappoints sincere devotees. If not for the grace of the Lord, it would have become unbearable.

A month or so after completing these 2 years, meditation became deeper and one day, there came the state of 'Savikalpa Samadhi' all of a sudden. It lasted for one complete hour, where there was no distraction but only bliss of the stillness of the Supreme with almost no awareness of anything external except the pure 'I-ness' in meditation. After coming down, the joy at reaching the state and experiencing it was beyond words. Tears of gratitude and devotion to the Lord flowed uncontrollably. There had been much torture for 2 years with no apparent progress and suddenly it was like the gates had opened. From then on, Samadhi became reachable and slowly progressed into the next stages as time went by. This example from personal experience has been mentioned so that it helps beginners to have hope on the Lord and never give up on honest practice.

3. Till one becomes an Urdhvareta after mastering 'Savikalpa Samadhi' through may years of practice, various illnesses can manifest. After reaching the state of an Urdhvareta, the Yogi becomes almost free from ailments and diseases, though not completely. The complete state of freedom from all imperfection or illness occurs only after attaining to ‘Bhuta-Jaya’ around the time of establishing in ‘Nirvikalpa Samadhi’, whereupon comes the ‘Divya Sharira’ (Divine body or Diamond body). The Yogi is then a perfect Urdhvareta and spotless with various siddhi-s, he is then nearing ‘Kaivalya’ (self-realization).

Illnesses and ailments that manifest whilst purification during the initial years differ from person to person and cannot be generalized.

Question
Thank you for enlightening answers, and god bless you for your omen deeds.

As I understand Savikalpa Samdhi is meditation of forms on great lord, and you select an object of meditiation, as Advaita says the meditation of Ishwara(I mean supreme lord). While I do sandyavandhana I meditate on "Satyam Jnanam Anatham" tatva of gayari which I just do it concentrating on that aspects, so is this a right way. Or I should start meditating on form attribute of god and later on moving on formless.

Thank You,
Shriharsha

Answer
1. Savikalpa can start with meditation on the Lord with form, however it progress to formless meditation eventually. The final stage and real Savikalpa Samadhi called - 'Sasmita Savikalpa Samadhi' is always meditation on the formless. It is this meditation that finally makes the Yogi an Urdhvareta. Those who have the tendency and ability to start meditation on the formless can do so right from the start.

2. The meditation you describe can be used during the initial stages to get used to the concept of meditation and build a grip. However, one should meditate on the meaning of the ‘Mantra’ and not merely on the words. (The meaning in the case of the mantra you have mentioned is – “The Lord himself is the all pervading truth, he is the only true knowledge and he is infinite, occupying all space”)

3. As the aspirant becomes capable of meditating on this meaning which signifies the infinite Lord, the words get discarded and meditation on the formless starts automatically and eventually.

ν The meditator then visualizes with closed eyes, the infinite and empty universe (as objects themselves are unreal, being forms of energy and nothing else) as being filled by the infinite & formless Lord who is the only truth.

ν Next, he, being the formless Atman (and not the body, mind etc.) visualizes himself as no different from this formless infinity called the Almighty Lord who extends endlessly.

ν When the Yogi attains to proficiency in such meditation after many years of practice with unbroken Brahmacharya, he eventually passes into the final stage of ‘Savikalpa Samadhi’.

Question
I have just begun practicing celibacy since two days ago. I am 30 years old. I just need to ask if we lose energy by being in company of others? I am a student and since last semester I had friends, mostly girls. And I began observing that i was spending a lot of time with them laughing and talking to an extent that by the end of the semester I began feeling drained of energy. especially I began finding that when ever i spoke to this girl, my whole day was wasted as I felt energy-less after talking to her. secondly, sexually I am gay. My experiences of life has been quiet trouble some and I have survived to date. from extreme violence in school (in India) while growing up to my parents rejecting my whole existence, i have tolerated it all. Plus the gay world isnt good either where people only want to have sex with you and there is no acceptance of any kind. So I keep masturbating or having sex with other men constantly. men have sex and never look at me again...that makes me frustrated as well. Thirdly, I am addicted to internet, becoz i feel very lonely in life. I am always on chat rooms , facebook, gaychat rooms etc. pornography, sex talk, sexual organs (male and female) do not interest me though. Yet my loneliness takes me to keep browsing the internet (it has become like a buddy now). This internet exposure also makes me dull and lethargic. such that all my work remains pending.

Since three days, I am following celebacy. This was after I hadly got rejected by a man on a gay website. I felt it as a waste of time and decided to do some housekeeping for myself by following spiritual path. I have also stopped going out and meeting those girls. can you advice me as to how can i take things forward, especially focusing on my work better and also getting out of internet addiction. secondly, does spending too much of time with opp sex make you lose energy?

Thanks.
Rigved

Answer
1. Addiction to anything including the net is dangerous. One should never get caught in any addiction or pattern.

2. Any tendency to spend time with people beyond necessity (work etc.) should be curbed as this leads to loss of mental focus & Prana (vital energy) .

3. Go through each and every past answer to get clear with how to get established in Brahmacharya. As one gets established, all these addictions will be easier to get rid of and the bliss of the soul slowly surfaces leading to freedom from slavery to the non-self.

Question
hi dhananjay

some questions from the side which you may guide me

1.even though we think of keeping absolute brahmacharya we have either voluntary or involuntary slips, in some posts you said that voluntary slip is rising of past samskaras to surface so it is compulsory to vacate it (2step forward and 1step back) and is some posts you disscussed that a voluntary slip thickens the past samskaras i am confused in this.

2.in one article i read it is said that maya is satisfying our sense pleasures and if we refrain from sense pleasures we overcome maya or is there any broad meaning of maya.

3.in a satsang teachings i came across words nirvanam, parinirvanam, mahaparinirvanam can you please explain about these.

thank you
ganapathi

Answer
1. Past karma (impressions and tendencies) are the cause behind the present existence which might include voluntary/involuntary slips. This does not mean one has to relax or slacken one's present efforts. One's commitment to attain absolute Brahmacharya should always be maximum. When such effort is genuine, voluntary slips lessen and finally disappear. When a voluntary slip is carried out intentionally with full cognition, desire and awareness of wanting sexual enjoyment, the Samskara-s get thickened. This is the difference between an inadvertent slip and one that is intentional.

2. Maya is the illusive power of creation that makes the non-existent appear existent. An example is the beauty seen in a woman in her prime which disappears as the woman ages and finally vanishes at death when the Jiva has left the body and it has become a dead body. Since the beauty waned and finally disappeared (impermanence) it was not real, for that which is real does not decrease or increase but is ever full & complete. Hence it was non-existent. Though being non-existent, the beauty did appear at one point of time and appeared existent and real. This is called Maya.

It has made that which is unreal appear real. It is an illusion and false just as the mirage of an oasis in a desert is false. The mirage appears to look exactly like a pool of water that is refreshing and promising to the thirsty desert traveler. It has all attributes of a real pool of water. But it does not exist in reality. It is only an illusion, a play of light and nothing else. When the Jiva gets entangled in Maya, this belief in the unreal as being real traps it in bondage and takes it into the realm of suffering. Hence the power of Maya should be consciously fought against and won through the use of Vichara (discrimination of reality arising from the Atman which comes from Yogic practice & Brahmacharya).

3. These are words describing the various stages of liberation attained by the Buddha upon leaving the physical body.

Question
Dear Sir
How are you? My brahmacharya is going smoothly by God grace and Your valuable hel, please clear my some more doubts:-

1) If a person carried out a long brahmachrya and willfully made a voluntary break , what happens to his body I mean newly changed toxis? and his all semen will lose by a single break after a long periods of brahmacharya?

2) When I am sitting on mediation, my concentration is always on "I" or "who am I", is this is a correct method?

3) My meditation is going only for 10 mints , how can I improve it?

Thanking You sir

Sarvam khalvidam brahman

Vijith

Answer
1. A voluntary break resets spiritual advancement.

2. One should eventually forget the 'I' & merge it into the thought of the all pervading 'Lord' (by realizing that the I is a part of the Lord and no different)

3. By long practice and unbroken Brahmacharya.

Question
Hi Bro,

I have been practicing celibacy for more than a couple of weeks now after a chronic masturbation phase in my life for more than 10 years. I'm 26 now and was really serious about shaping my life after I was almost done with the dreadful life I have had so far. I'm pretty strong after 2 weeks and now my mind is completely free of those nasty thoughts which have always lingered in my mind all my life.

My concern is that the first week was pretty good and I felt really confident about myself. But after that, my energy level has gone down and I really cant feel my back now which makes my upperbody very slump. This really affects the way I look and my posture. Also, my face is kind of lifeless even though I'm pretty occupied with my job and with my life than ever.

I kind of down spiritually and need your motivational words to put me back on track. Also, please explain the reverse effects after the fantastic first week where I felt very confident and full of life.

Answer
1. The first week of abstinence results in increased testosterone along with other hormones which gives the high feeling. As these stabilize and settle down, the artificial high also comes down.

2. Slumping of the body and Brahmacharya are unconnected.

3. Go through all the past answers and get clear with why Brahmacharya is worth the practice. One should practice unbroken Brahmacharya for a few years with much effort to start realizing its true benefits.

Question
QUESTION: Is a life of brahmacharya and God-centric life doomed to be lonely?
Many times I am not able to mix with people freely and also form new close relationships as I don't find any truthfulness or purity in them.....Is there any such thing as a pure relationship at all in the world?
Is the loneliness a result of some of our own short comings or due to the brahmacharya practice? Or is this only a passing phase.....
Please advice....

ANSWER: 1. A completely pure relationship can exist only between two Jiva-s who are very spiritually advanced and see each other with pure love as embodiments of the Almighty, expecting nothing in return from each other. With all others, relationships are driven by need, expectation, profit or some other benefit and hence cannot be termed pure.

2. The sudden loneliness that one encounters during the first year or two is a reaction and a passing phase. After one gets established in unbroken practice and meditation, the aspirant derives great bliss in solitude and wishes to spend such time in meditation. Then, one craves for such solitude and constantly wishes to get back to deep meditation.

---------- FOLLOW-UP ----------

QUESTION: Then what about such relationships with parents, wife, son , daughter, brothers, sisters,friends,etc, etc.
Are they also not true or there is no love in them?
These people matter more to one than some remote God or some advanced spiritual beings, who don't care for you or you cannot even talk/see them.

ANSWER: | रुणानुबन्धरूपेण पशु पत्नि सुतालयः ||

" Runa - (Past debt) takes the form of animals (which one owns), wife, children, house (property) etc."

Based on one's past karma and karmic dues that are to be settled with other Jiva-s, these Jiva-s appear in one or more lifetimes through various relationships. Once the karma is settled, they leave (out of one's life through separation, death etc.)

1. Knowing it to be such, one should develop an attitude of pure love towards everyone, trying not to expect anything in return. In other words, one should remember that God is serving and supporting us through the near and dear ones.

2. When the mother carries, delivers and brings up her child, the Lord is serving that Jiva (child) through the mother (while she herself does not know it).

When a person on the street helps us get up when we slip and fall offering us a glass of water, the Lord is serving us through that person etc. (while that person himself does not know it)

3. When such an attitude of seeing the Almighty behind each and every force is developed, one never feels lonely, for he eventually develops the ability to see God in all animate and inanimate objects. Neither does such a person get attached to people, for he see's through the impermanent body, mind, ego of the other person etc. (which are all false) into the everlasting and Godly Atman within.

4. The relationships involving people (such as with a good wife, parents etc.) are a mix of 'Avidya' (denoted by attachment, possessiveness, selfish needs etc.) and 'Vidya' (pure traits which come from the Lord within). When people knowingly/unknowingly connect to the other person with a pure and non-expecting perspective, pure love from the God within that Jiva flows out. When the lower traits surface, lower emotions take charge and it can be assumed that the individual ego is at work. This explains the varied behavior of the same person at different times.
